while extolling the principle of negotiation, refuse to talk with the Government of the People's Republic of China, justify their position? They say that when the United Nations was founded there was a different Government in China. But can it be said that China has become a less important country than it was under Chiang Kai-shek? No, no one says so. The Americans say that they do not like the Government of Mao Tse Tung, and that's why a conference of the Five Great Powers is impossible. Does the Chinese Government refuse to negotiate, saying that Eisenhower's Government is not to their liking? The Americans say that, since the San Francisco Conference, there has been a change of Government in China. That is true. But do the Chinese refuse to negotiate on the pretext that the Republicans have replaced the Democrats? The Americans stress the fact that the new regime in China was born in battle. But was it not out of battle that the United States itself was born? The Americans refuse to negotiate with the Government of the People's Republic of China, calling it aggressive! As far as I can remember US bombs have often fallen on Chinese towns, but not a single Chinese bomb has fallen upon American towns. Let us however suppose that for many Americans the Chinese are aggressors. For many others—among them the fairly large population of China—it is the Americans who are the aggressors. Nevertheless the Chinese people do not say that they refuse to negotiate with US representatives because they are aggressors.

Perhaps I shall be accused of being biased. I should like to quote statements emanating from circles which no one could suspect of sympathy for the Soviet Union or for Communism. I shall start with the French Press. "L'Aurore" writes: "Can one speak seriously of peace in Asia without listening to the voice of China?" "Paris-Presse l'Intransigeant" and "La Croix" also declare themselves in favour of the participation of the People's Republic of China in negotiations. Several Labour M.P.s, criticising the Government in the House of Commons, stated that without China it would be difficult to lessen international tension. Krishna Menon, India's delegate to the United Nations, has said: "We must recognise that the Peking Government represents China. It is the real Government of China whether we like it or not. If you want to open talks on disarmament it is no good talking to the Taiwan people. We must talk with people whose words carry weight."*

The Soviet Union has conclu with the Government of the German Democratic Republic directed against the security of France, Great Britain or the USA. There is no military agreement between the Soviet Union and the Government of the German Democratic Republic. The Soviet Union has not revived a German Army to increase its power, nor has it used German territory to instal either atomic or other types of aggressive bases. For its part, the Government of the German Democratic Republic has carried out a series of political and economic measures which can facilitate the unification of Germany. This Government has never declared that its aim is to liberate the people of Frankfurt-on-Main or of Munich. Its Ministers do not say that they want to change the political or social systems of Denmark or Belgium and that when such changes have taken place they will be ready to discuss the question of the joint administration of the Danish part of Schleswig or the district of Malmédy.

What has the behaviour of the other side been like? It has in every way supported the revenge-seeking elements in Western Germany. It has helped to revive military and paramilitary organisations run by Nazis. It proposed that the Government of West Germany conclude a military treaty directed against one of the Great Powers which, together with other Great Powers, won the victory over fascism. This other side has turned the territory of Western Germany into an aggressive bridgehead, into an arsenal of atomic and other weapons. The Government of Western Germany, for its part, has openly launched slogans of revenge. It has laid down claims to the territories of States who were allies of the USA, Great Britain and France. The leader of the West German Government has rejected the idea of negotiating with the Government of the German Democratic Republic and has declared that one of his aims is the "Liberation of the inhabitants of Dresden and of Weimar." The Ministers of this Government speak of the need to change the political system of Poland and Czechoslovakia. With the tacit approval of the representatives of Great Britain and France, they call upon the citizens of West Germany to recreate divisions which will make it possible to alter existing frontiers. Yet agreements exist between Great Britain and the Soviet Union, and between France and the Soviet Union, which can prevent any possible repetition of German aggression. The three occupying Powers and the Government of West Germany are striving to deepen the division between the two parts of Germany thereby making impossible the unification of the country.

I shall quote politicians and newspapers whose views usually differ greatly from those of the Soviet Union. The Labour M. P., Gordon Walker, says: "To persist in organising the European Community and rearming Germany while trying simultaneously to organise talks with Russia is the gravest of errors."* A similar declaration was recently made by Edouard Herriot, the eminent French statesman. Another French politician, M. Daladier, declared that to propose to the Russians the unification of Germany together with the formation of the European Army, means asking them to forget the sacrifices they made in the struggle against invasion. In the United States itself, many people feel embarrassed by this crude camouflage. "The Wall Street Journal" writes: "The creation of the European Army is incompatible with the reunification of Germany. The last thing the Russians would agree to would be the inclusion of East Germany, as well, in a defensive alliance directed against the Soviet Union."*

I shall also quote the words of Mr. Warberg, an American banker, as given in the "New York Times." He declared: "It is quite useless saying that we want to unite Germany while at *the same time we insist on a German military contribution to Western defence . . . It is absurd to believe that Russia would give up East Germany only to see it swallowed up in the Western Alliance."

Thus the duplicity of certain statesmen who propose negotiations on the German question, while insisting on the speedy ratification of the Bonn and Paris Agreements, is clear to everyone.

I want to dwell on another question, that of disarmament and the prohibition of those weapons which represent the greatest threat to civilian populations. As is known the Soviet Union has submitted to the United Nations a proposal for a reduction of armaments by the Great Powers, for the prohibition of atomic and thermo-nuclear weapons and for the creation of a system of international control to ensure the application of these agreements. By refusing to examine this problem—the most important for all peoples—the representatives of the United States not only oppose public opinion in Western Europe, but also in their own country. When, contrary to what they have been told by their leaders, the citizens of the United States learned that their country did not have a monopoly of the hydrogen bomb, more and more insistent became the voices raised in favour of negotiation with the Soviet Union to ban this weapon of mass extermination. This issue, says the New York Times, has become critical since the discovery that the Soviet Union has broken the US monopoly on the production of the atomic and hydrogen bombs. Mr. Walter Lippmann wrote in the New York Herald Tribune that the resistance of the countries of Western Europe to United States policy is completely justified because Europeans fear atomic war, while Washington does nothing to avoid it. "There," says Mr. Lippmann, "is the main reason for the continual growth of anti-American feeling in the world."*

Now look at Korea. Here we find the same statesmen using the word negotiation on every occasion, while themselves putting obstacles in the way of negotiations. After having concluded a military treaty with Syngman Rhee on the eve of the armistice they did, and continue to do, everything to prevent the armistice from becoming Peace. They refuse to allow the presence at the Political Conference of a State which has done so much to stop the bloodshed, I mean India, that great Asian State which is directly interested in a peaceful solution of the Korean problem.

* Retranslation.

At the beginning of my speech I pointed out that many statesmen have changed their vocabulary and have begun to speak as if they had studied, or even learned by heart, the Budapest Appeal issued by the World Council of Peace. Since our last Session these statesmen have made a whole series of declarations on the need to lessen international tension. During the same period, however, they have taken measures that can only aggravate international tension. They declared that the time was ripe to conclude agreements but the one they concluded was with the spiritual heir and former ally of Hitler, making of unhappy Spain an armed base for future aggression. They spoke of the need for negotiation while negotiating the transformation into military bases of Scandinavia and various countries of the Near and Middle East. They declared that they were animated by a sincere desire for Peace while they revived the Wehrmacht and brought very strong pressure to bear on the States of Western Europe in order to accelerate the creation of the "European Army."

The British people do not approve of the support given to the revenge-seeking elements of Western Germany nor the conclusion of military agreements with Chiang Kai-shek or

Syngman Rhee. Taking the aspirations of their people into account, certain British statesmen have tried to put forward conciliatory proposals. The leaders of the United States have done everything to prevent these overtures from being followed up and have put forth all their strength to contradict the calendar so that the month of May should usher in Winter instead of Summer. Furthermore, the US leaders constrain their British partners to support the idea of the "European Army." We have even heard a responsible representative of Great Britain trying to convince the French that they should put their faith in the Generals of the Wehrmacht. Certain British Conservatives probably still put their faith in the Channel and while they ask the French to open their door to German divisions, they prefer to keep the Channel to themselves. I must not omit the following avowal made by the Daily Express:

"If the French want to ratify the Agreement on the rearmament of Germany, it is their business. It will probably be their funeral too. As for Great Britain, she must not take part in such a mad adventure." * Yet the existence of the Channel is not enough to calm the fears of all the British. The Evening Standard writes:

* Retranslation.

*"There are many people in France, in Great Britain and other countries, who think with horror of the day when the desire to reconquer the lost territories in the East will become so strong in Germany as to provoke war."

In France, the movement of opposition to the ratification of the Agreement, which would mean suicide for the country, has become so broad that we can really call it a national movement. It embraces all social strata and all political groups.

Allow me to make a brief digression of a personal nature. I have lived in France for many years and I love the country. I love her people, her traditions, her literature and her art. She is a country dear to me, and I share her fears. Have I not twice lived through the hours of invasion with her? That is why I would like to remind all Frenchmen—not only those in our movement but all who are haunted by the thought of the ratification of documents which would have terrible consequences for their country—that the history, the traditions and the geographical location of my people have twice brought them to fight alongside the French people against the armies which had invaded our countries. I would also like to remind them that the Treaty of Mutual Assistance, which was concluded to prevent a third invasion from ever happening, was ratified in the blood of the best sons of our two countries who fell in the struggle for independance and Peace. I listened with great attention to M. de Chambrun's speech and I can make him the reply that the Soviet people are not in the habit of going back on engagements to which they have pledged themselves. If the Treaty of Friendship and Mutual Assistance is observed by the two parties it can become a guarantee of security for our two countries and for the whole of Europe.

The States with an interest in the preservation of Peace are today much stronger than they were nine years ago. They can cause revenge-seekers and aggressors to think again. I believe in France. The people who fought at Valmy and Verdun, the people of the Maquis, will find a way out which is consonant with their traditions and their good sense. Let my words be understood aright; they have their source not in political considerations but in the heart.

Five years ago, a certain French newspaper put the following questions to a number of public figures:

"What will you do when the Red Army occupies Paris?" Nowadays some of them who, at that time, took this frivolous question seriously, ask themselves in horror: "What shall we do when the Wehrmacht occupies Paris again?" No one, either in France or in the other countries of Western Europe, dares any longer speak of a Soviet threat. Even the US General Gruenther, Commander-in-Chief of the NATO Forces, publicly admitted that, in his opinion, a Soviet attack on Western Europe or on America had no basis in reality. It is a curious admission because General Gruenther's Army was created solely because certain statesmen are, day in and day out, frightening the citizens of many countries by talk of an imminent "Red" attack. Now, all of a sudden, the Supreme Commander of this allegedly defensive army no longer knows against what enemy he is supposed to be defending himself. "Why then," the Italians, the Norwegians, the Icelanders and the Greeks will ask, "must our cities be used as bases by a foreign Power?" "Why then," the French will ask, "must we put ourselves at the mercy of the gentlemen of the Oberkommando?" "Why then," the British will say with a sigh, "should we deprive ourselves of everything in order to spend our money on Atlantic defence?"

Certain statesmen say that increasing armaments consolidates Peace. But the peoples are not scatter-brained; they have a memory. They know that an armaments drive, the monstrous stock-piling of lethal devices, and sabre rattling have invariably led to catastrophe. Every country still has its eye-witnesses of the First World War, that deadly apotheosis of the "Armed Peace." The number of simpletons is decreasing as rapidly as armaments are increasing. The American paper, the "Christian Science Monitor," admits: "There is a tendency in Europe to explain America's lack of enthusiasm for negotiation by her desire to unleash war."*

That is why certain statesmen hypocritically declare their desire for talks while they go on increasing armaments. That is why the wolf in Perrault's tale starches up Granny's bonnet every day.

Realising the need of reassuring public opinion, certain statesmen have begun to speak of "guarantees". One of them had recourse to history and declared himself in favour of "a new Locarno." Locarno is a picturesque place and many tourists retain pleasant memories of it. But the pacts concluded at Locarno have not left happy memories in the minds of the peoples of Europe. Indeed, they helped the German revenge-seekers to rearm, to violate existing agreements with impunity, to annex neighbouring States and to unleash the Second World War.

Can the Atlantic Military bloc guarantee the security of Europe? Would not the renunciation of all military blocs provide a more real guarantee of the security of Europe? Can the European Army guarantee the security of Europe? Would not a Great Power agreement on progressive disarmament provide a more real guarantee of security? Can a European Community, one of whose members is to be a rearmed Western Germany, openly declaring its aims of revenge, give a guarantee of security? Would not the creation of a Government for a united Germany so that there might be no revival of militarism in the country and so that it could not enter into any military coalition—would not this provide a more real guarantee of the security of Europe? Lastly, has a State which has set up a number of military bases in foreign countries and on distant continents, any right to speak of guarantees of security? Would not an end of the Cold War and the opening of negotiations between the Five Great Powers, sincerely desirous of reaching, on every point, a solution acceptable to all—and without this there can be no settlement of differences, either between individuals or between States—would not this provide a more real guarantee of the security of the whole world? The Soviet Union is ready to open negotiations between the Five Great Powers immediately and to discuss any question whatsoever, raised by any one of the participants in the conference.

We consider that the best guarantee of the security of all States is honest adherence to the principle and the spirit of the United Nations and its Charter. The Soviet Union will do all in its power to diminish international tension.

It is because our task is noble and arduous that I have taken the liberty of claiming so much of this authoritative assembly's time. We are witnessing an attempt to deceive the peoples, to increase international tension once again under cover of the word "negotiation." Once, when we spoke of Peace, the enemies of Peace spoke of war. When we demanded the prohibition of atomic weapons, they extolled them. When we emphasised the necessity of putting an end to the war in Korea, they replied that they would fight it to the end. When we proposed a pact of Peace, they rejected any suggestion of negotiation. At that time they had as yet no need of camouflage. Now, they speak of negotiation. They hope to gain time, to lull public opinion and then, at the desired moment, breaking off a tirade on Peace in the middle of a word, to recommence openly their Atom Bomb diplomacy and their Hydrogen Bomb policy. They have learned nothing—and forgotten nothing. They have admitted that in the peaceful Isles of Bermuda they will discuss new methods of conducting the Cold War. This will not, of course, prevent them from speaking warmly of Peace. It will not prevent the Three Occupying Powers, who intend to settle the question of Germany's future over the head of the fourth, from still speaking of the unification of that country. It will not prevent the rulers of the USA, who are busy extending their military power and transporting atomic weapons to other continents, from swearing that no one desires Peace as much as they.

The decisions that this Council will take must shed clarity on the problem of negotiations and agreements. They must contribute to the easing of international tension and must be acceptable to all Peace-loving men whatever their views, to the patriots of all nations, be they American or Chinese, British or Russian, German or French. The peoples await our decisions; they know that to-day the statesmen of all countries must reckon with us.

We have already caused many of them to alter their talk and to speak of Peace. We shall likewise cause them to act in a new way —to make Peace.

PUBLISHED BY THE CONFERENCE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

THE BEIRUT CONFERENCE

Following a call made by prominent figures in Iran, the "Conference in Defence of the Rights of the Peoples of the Middle East" was held in Beirut, December 17th-19th, 1953.

Many delegates from Egypt, Iran, Iraq, Syria, the Lebanon, Jordan, Saudi Arabia and the principality of Hadramaut took part and unanimously and enthusiastically adopted the Declaration and the Resolution.

It was the first time that representatives of this group of countries with a total population of more than 60 millions had met at a conference of such importance.

These men and women were the delegates of the various nations of a region where Africa, Europe and Asia meet. It is one of the richest in the world, thanks to its important natural resources, especially oil, and in the past it had a flourishing civilisation.

But for hundreds of years these countries have suffered enslavement and exploitation.

Today, all the countries of the Middle East are, politically and economically, under a foreign yoke and some of them are still occupied by British troops.

So, for several years, this part of the world has seen the growth of powerful action by the people against aggressive military pacts and the setting up of strategic bases; to win national sovereignty and the evacuation of foreign troops; for the nationalisation of the natural wealth; and for the relaxation of international tension and the establishment of lasting Peace.

These struggles, in which men of the most varied political, religious and philosophical views are taking part, are winning important victories. They were able to prevent the signing of the Middle East Pact which the United States wanted to force through.

But the imperialists, have not yet disarmed.

They are camouflaging their war preparations under the pretext of an alleged "danger from without." Under cover of Point Four of the Truman Plan and "technical aid", they are interfering in the internal affairs of the countries of the Middle East.

They still hope, by devious means, to grab Iran's oil again and to perpetuate the occupation of the Suez Canal and neighbouring countries. The USA is striving to organise an aggressive military bloc with Pakistan, Turkey, Iran and Iraq. They are also trying to conclude bilateral military treaties with other countries of the Middle East.

The vast popular movement for national independence — the strongest guarantee of Peace — is growing and bringing fresh forces into united action against US plans for war and the establishment of US hegemony.

The "Conference in Defence of the Rights of the Peoples of the Middle East" was a reflection of this struggle. The representation at the Conference, the way in which it tackled its work, the support given to it by all sections of the peoples, by important public figures and the Press, are evidence of the popular will to put an end to foreign interference. This unity which is being achieved by the peoples of the Middle East opens further prospects for the defence of their rights and for the winning of a free life in a world at Peace.

APPEAL FOR THE CONVOCATION OF THE CONFERENCE IN DEFENCE OF THE RIGHTS OF THE PEOPLES OF THE MIDDLE EAST

"The countries of the Middle East have lived for a long time in conditions of extreme poverty and ignorance, due in large measure to foreign interference in every sector of their national life.

"The sacred right of our peoples to decide their own destiny in sovereign independence is continually in jeopardy.

"This situation is marked by the presence of occupation troops and the setting up of military bases on most of our territories.

"Many and varied attempts have been made on our Governments to drag them — against the will of our peoples — into military pacts which are both a threat to our sovereignty and a danger to Peace.

"Our national wealth is pillaged and our national cultures are in danger of being stifled by oppression and the barriers raised against trade and cultural relations with other countries.

"These conditions can be found in each of our countries in various forms. Faced with this common danger, it is our duty to meet and together find ways to save them.

"We speak to every man, woman and national body, calling upon them to support and spread the idea of calling a conference to this end.

"The setting up of National Sponsoring Committees seems to us the best way of achieving success.

"We are convinced that at such a meeting the aspirations of our peoples for a free and happy life in Peace will receive fitting expression."

We give below the names of some of the prominent Iranians who called for the Conference and the personages in the various countries of the Middle East who subsequently supported their appeal.

CONFERENCE IN DEFENCE OF THE RIGHTS OF THE PEOPLES OF THE MIDDLE EAST

DECLARATION

The peoples of the Middle East live in similar conditions and suffer from similar difficulties and dangers. This makes it necessary that they unite their forces in the struggle for the fulfilment of their aspirations and the attainment of their national aims.

While this conference is being held, the peoples of the Middle East are being aggressively attacked by imperialism and their national, political, economic and cultural welfare is in jeopardy. The British imperialists, with the support of international imperialism, are adopting an aggressive attitude to the people of Egypt.

In the Arab countries, Iran and North Africa, imperialism is a united front to destroy the liberation movements of the people of these countries.

Groups with various leanings and national standpoints participated in the discussions that took place in the course of the preliminary contacts and broad meetings and also during the conference itself. These discussions showed that our peoples are threatened by more or less identical imperialist plans aimed at dragging them into adventures which are not in their interest; these plans are also helping to aggravate international tension and are a danger to the Peace of the world.

At the top of the list are the projected system of joint defence, the Pakistan-Iran-Turkey-Iraq-USA pact and other open or concealed imperialist plans, such as Point Four, the Johnston plan etc.

Certain of our peoples are still held down by oppressive treaties which prevent them from enjoying their national independence and sovereignty.

Foreign troops - a threat to the security of the Middle East - still occupy military bases in North Africa, Libya, Egypt, Jordan, Saudi Arabia and other parts of the Arab peninsula. The imperialists are exerting increasing pressure on our peoples in order to force them to accept unequal, bilateral treaties, to extort economic concessions by which to exploit them, to intensify imperialist intervention in the internal affairs of our countries, to hamper our free trade relations, to paralyse our independent economic development and to pillage our natural resources to an even greater extent. All this has resulted in an increase of poverty, ignorance and disease in our countries and has made them the victims of imperialist competition.

These actions of the imperialists are accompanied by a campaign of misleading propaganda and by trends of thought which lead to despair and resignation; of attempts to distort, weaken and suppress our national cultures and to stifle everything in them which is favourable to progress and freedom.

The delegates agreed that the Palestine problem was created by imperialist domination and that its solution is bound up with the elimination of this domination.

The delegates of Jordan, Iran, Hadramaut, Syria, Iraq, Saudi Arabia, the Lebanon and Egypt, with the support of the peoples of North Africa and the Persian Gulf, decided to strengthen their solidarity in the struggle by a united front in order to attain their common desires, as expressed in the following Resolution.

RESOLUTION

The delegates from the Middle East present at the Conference unanimously adopted the following programme:

1. Non-participation in any treaty or military pact, with any State or group of States, likely to infringe on our sovereignty or to drag us into warlike adventures. Resistance to the setting up of any imperialist bloc which is a threat to Peace and the security of our peoples.
2. The annulment of all military, political, economic and cultural treaties or agreements which are harmful to our national sovereignty and independence and prevent us from exploiting the natural resources and riches of our countries.
3. The evacuation of all foreign troops from our territories and the absolute prohibition of their return.
4. Support and help for the Egyptian people in their struggle to expel the British troops from the Suez Canal. These troops are a threat not only to the Egyptian people, but to all the peoples of the Middle East and to world Peace and security.
5. Put an end to imperialist domination of our economies. Free our natural resources and riches, and our public services, in order to raise our peoples' standard of living. Refuse to allow our countries to be exploited by foreign imperialist capital.
6. Support and assistance for the people of Iran in their struggle against imperialist plots to re-establish the exploitation of their oil resources and to abrogate the nationalisation decree.
7. Liquidation of Point Four of the American Aid Programme and similar programmes aimed at exploitation; they have proved to be integral parts of the imperialist plans for the creation of military bases and aggressive blocs. Refusal of all American aid or any other imperialist aid.
8. Call for non-co-operation between the Arab Governments and peoples and the imperialist Powers in order to bring about the solution of the Palestine question and related issues; for joint action by all Arabs to recover the annexed part of their homeland, together with the affirmation that the final solution of the Palestine question is closely bound up with the fight to destroy imperialism.

9. Support and assistance for the peoples of the Arab Magreb (North Africa - translator's note) and for the Southern part of the Arab peninsula in their struggle against imperialism.
10. Establishment and expansion of commercial relations with all countries, on a footing of equality and reciprocal advantage and irrespective of their internal regimes.
11. The strengthening of our national cultures and help for the development of cultural relations and exchange between our countries and the other countries of the world without discrimination. Care for our national languages as fundamental elements of our intellectual heritage and our cultures. Struggle to liberate and protect our cultures from imperialist pressure.
12. Associate our peoples' national struggle with that of all peoples fighting against imperialism in Africa, Asia and throughout the world, and with anti-imperialist trends in all countries. Demand of the United Nations respect for the independence and security of nations and their right to self-determination. All States to be admitted to UNO - represented by their real Governments.
13. Action to lessen international tension by peaceful means such as negotiation and to solve international differences on the basis of respect for the sovereignty and independence of the peoples.
14. Conference to set up an Executive Committee whose task shall be to disseminate and apply the conference Resolution and to prepare for the convening of large, popular conferences to carry further the action begun here.

Our demands are legitimate, vital rights. Our peoples, with their glorious history, rich cultural heritage and ancient civilisations, are sure of victory in the fight for liberty, independence and the freeing of their natural resources and wealth from imperialist domination.

There is no doubt that by seeking a relaxation of international tension by peaceful means - such as the negotiated settlement of international differences on the basis of respect for the sovereignty and independence of the peoples - the realisation of our national aspirations will be facilitated and the excuses advanced by imperialism for occupying our countries will be weakened.

These demands will have the support of all honest people throughout the world, for national independence is the greatest guarantee of Peace. It is cherished by our peoples and by the peoples the world over.

The Arab and Iranian writers, poets and men of letters present at the Conference in Defence of the Rights of the Peoples of the Middle East are aware of the important role they play in the struggle of the peoples of the Middle East for their national independence and of their great responsibility for the defence of human values, above all the ideals of liberty, civilisation and Peace.

We have seen in this Conference, which has received the heartfelt support of the peoples, an opportunity to declare our unanimity in the effort to further our national struggles and destroy the false conceptions fabricated by the imperialists in order to weaken them.

EXTRACTS FROM THE PRINCIPAL SPEECHES

Doctor Georges Hanna
(The Lebanon)

After greeting the delegates on behalf of the Lebanese Preparatory Comittee, Dr. Hanna explained the meaning of the heroic struggles of the peoples of the Middle East:

"The battle imperialism is undertaking is a decisive one and our peoples have decided to face up to it. We shall enter it united and confident and there is no doubt that we shall come out victorious, no matter what difficulties we may come up against and what sacrifices we may have to make. This is so because our battle is that of faith and right, while that of imperialism is a battle of force and tyranny. There has never been in history a tyranny that lasted more than a certain time or that did not recoil on its creators in curses and maledictions..."

Then Dr. Hanna drew a picture of the present struggles of the peoples of the Middle East:

"It is obvious to an attentive observer that, after the last war, that part of the world called the Middle East became a target for imperialism.

"However, the desired awakening is growing and is known to all. Thus, Egypt will not cease her struggle till the day when her aspirations are realised, when foreign armies evacuate her territory and she becomes mistress of her destiny...

"The Arab Magreb is also writing one of the most glorious pages in its history. The people are fighting heroically for freedom and independence in spite of the atrocious crimes imperialism is committing in their countries and which put the civilised world to shame...

"The Three Power Declaration, which our peoples opposed and on which our Governments made no comment, was one of the traps imperialism is always trying to lay for us.

"Their plans for defence, trade and charity are nothing but traps aimed at worsening our position, exploiting our resources and dragging us into military, aggressive plans which they are keeping up their sleeve for the day of general mobilisation now being prepared...

"As to the tragedy now being played out in Iran, it is a living picture of the colonisation of the East by the West...

"The sorry tale begun in Iran has not yet ended; it can only end in a victory for Iran as long as there exists an enraged people who will not yield..."

Dr. Hanna ended with a description of the prospects opening out before the peoples of this region:

"Allow me to say, too, that the East has never had a better opportunity of freeing itself from imperialism than that which exists today. On the one hand, there is an ever-growing understanding; while, on the other, there is a conflict of interests between the various imperialist States and a great number of conferences being held by their leaders to try and solve the disputes arising between them. They go into conferences divided and come out of them with even greater disagreements. Lastly, there are the victories won up till now by the popular forces of liberation and Peace and which they will go on winning on an even greater scale. All this, Gentlemen, is the harbinger of certain, inevitable victory if we continue our struggle without counting the cost.

"If there is a call to be made to the Governments of the East it should be to invite them to take up the struggle of the peoples, and to draw inspiration from this struggle in all their actions; not to be taken in by lying promises, to abandon the policy of submission and not to act in opposition to the popular will. The will of the people is more imperious than any other. Woe betide the man who bars the way when the tocsin sounds, for he is digging his own grave!"

Professor Said Nafisy
(Iran)

Professor Nafisy gave many examples of the imperialist Powers' aims in Iran:

"It is superfluous to point out that everywhere and all the time the imperialists are united and help each other whenever it is a question of smashing the peoples' drive for liberation...

"In Iran the imperialists, although divided over the sharing out of our wealth, are united and act in concert on the following points:

— Smashing the Iranian people's national movement for liberation.
— Exerting pressure on Governments to ensure their joint interests.

— Solving the oil problem to their advantage and in opposition to the interests of the people of Iran.

— Dragging our country into bilateral and multilateral military pacts.

— Constructing aggressive strategic bases in Iran.

"Already, during the Second World War, the imperialists tried to strike a blow at our national independence and territorial integrity by a secret treaty aimed at dividing Iran into zones of influence. It was to have been put into operation in 1945 through the medium of the 'Hakimi' Cabinet. It was brought to nought by the categorical refusal of the Soviet Union to whom the treaty had been submitted. At that time newspapers of all tendencies demonstrated their gratitude for this noble gesture...

"According to information frequently printed in the Iranian and foreign Press, the Americans, in agreement with their associates, have often advised the Iranian Government to take more drastic action to crush the popular movement in Iran. They carried their intervention to such lengths that Mr. Henderson, the US ambassador, stated that, if the Iranian Government wanted to benefit from American 'aid', it would have to take more savage action against the so-called Communist elements. This story was even printed by the Teheran newspaper 'Ettelaat'. The Americans always speak officially of 'military aid', to hide their strategic plans which are detrimental to the people of Iran. In the same way, they subsidise parties and groups subservient to them through the intermediary of the bodies administering Point Four of the American Aid Programme. These latter are veritable nests of espionage in the countries where they operate and tools for planting US intervention in the economic, political and cultural affairs of the country..."

Then, after giving a picture of the Iranian people's struggles, Professor Nafisy pointed out the prospects opening before them:

"But the people continue on their glorious way and carry on their struggle; they are withstanding all these ephemeral events like a block of granite. The world Press tells of their ever more valiant and victorious struggle.

"The people of Iran are thus certain of final victory in this fight for freedom and national independence which is also a guarantee of Peace.

"They are sure that they will be supported in their patriotic struggle by the peoples of the world fighting for Peace and liberty, as they are supported by the peoples of the Middle East who share a common destiny with the people of Iran, both in their political and geographic situation and from the cultural point of view..."

(Egypt)

"This Conference — the first to be held in the Middle East which authentically represents the national interests of the peoples of this region and their need to organise and unite their struggle against imperialism in all its forms, to link this fight with the movements for national liberation in Africa and Asia and with all anti-imperialist trends throughout the world — is a faithful reflection of the duties of the peoples to whom we belong and a sincere attempt to fulfil their aspirations..."

Dr. Rashad then detailed the questions considered most important by the Egyptian delegation. He quoted the situation in the Suez Canal base, taking into consideration the continual threat to the national movements in the Middle East and to world peace and security; the growing menace of the Point Four programme to national independence as a result of the modifications recently made in it; the importance of expanding free trade relations with all countries, irrespective of their internal situation, with particular reference to strengthening the industrial and agricultural renaissance and to gradual liberation from the imperialist grip on the national economy. Dr. Rashad then analysed each of these questions. Dealing with the use being made of the Suez Canal base, he said:

"The Suez Canal base is not only a threat to Egyptians but also to all who are fighting imperialism in the Middle East and Africa...

"It becomes clear that the base is a threat to the security of the world when we consider that it is not for defence but for attack, as the British leaders themselves admit..."

Dr. Rashad continued:

"The Point Four programme, which used to be described as a programme of assistance to under-developed countries, does not seem to have produced the desired results. So the USA decided to bring it into what is today called the US Foreign Operations Administration, directed by Mr. Harold Stassen, who visited the Middle East during Dulles' tour last May. This means that Point Four has become an integral part of imperialism's plans to make treaties, obtain bases for aggression, use its investments to dominate our economy and intervene in the most private political, economic, social and cultural questions affecting our internal affairs..."

He then dealt with the question of trade relations:

"The extension of commercial relations with all countries, irrespective of the kind of Government they have, is closely linked with our fight for liberation from imperialism... The Egyptian Government has felt this need and has concluded commercial agreements with the Soviet Union, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary and the German Democratic Republic. It is now negotiating a similar agreement with Rumania. These agreements are made in order to free our country from the necessity of always relying on the imperialist States for her supplies of oil and oil products... Since trade has no homeland, it would be good commercial policy to establish friendly political and diplomatic relations with countries which want to expand their trade relations with us, on the basis of equality, mutual interest and respect for the political situation in each country..."

In conclusion Dr. Rashad stressed his delegation's solidarity with the other peoples of the Middle East in their struggle:

"The Egyptian delegation especially supports the demand of our brothers in Palestine that the decisions of UNO should be applied... Similarly, it gives its full support to the struggle its brothers in Iran are conducting against imperialist plans to deprive them of their former gains... The delegation affirms its support for its brothers fighting French imperialism and the new US imperialism in Morocco, Tunisia and Algeria; for our brothers in Libya resisting the last British treaty; for our brothers in Iraq opposing the Anglo-Iraqi treaty; and for our brothers in Jordan who are not afraid of imperialism. It declares its support for all peoples who, like us, are fighting imperialism..."

Munir Rayes
(Syria)

The Syrian delegate pointed out how the Conference could help to unite the peoples of the Middle East in their struggle for freedom.

"It is a happy occasion that brings us together in the pursuit of common national objectives. Could there be a happier one than this meeting between the best representatives of the peoples of the Middle East, in order to reach a union of hearts and minds corresponding to the determination of the peoples of this region to defend their life, liberty, independence and happiness...

"What happier occasion could there be than this expression of the understanding of peoples who have suffered for so long in their struggle against the colonialists and their plans. This understanding is made concrete in the decisions taken by the delegations of these peoples. They are the beginning of a movement towards unity in their battle to win freedom...

"We realise how serious is the danger hidden behind the plans for military, defensive and economic treaties and the technical and material aid. We see that the path we have laid down for ourselves and that we have followed — that of combining the efforts of the peoples to meet the danger to which they are directly exposed — can protect us from the misfortunes of the war for which the imperialists are preparing and can guarantee our peoples an honourable life...

"The voice of the peoples will ring until they have won their right to life."

Kazim al Samawi
(Iraq)

The Iraqui delegate greeted the delegations from brother countries present at the Congress. He then said:

"The main problem confronting us, Gentlemen, is based on the mad desire dominating the imperialist countries to subjugate and humiliate the peoples and rob them of their wealth.

"The duty of solving these vital problems devolves in the first place on the peoples who are suffering from the evils of imperialism.

We consider it a sacred duty to eliminate these evils and free our countries from the claws of imperialism, with its plans and plots."

Mr. Samawi described the difficult living conditions of the 5,000,000 people of Iraq; this in spite of the wealth and resources of the country. He then explained the causes of this situation:

"Iraq's wealth is kept from the people and is stolen by the colonialists. Foreigners own our soil, our foreign trade is hampered by imperialist restrictions and colonial monopolies dominate the market for Iraq's agricultural produce."

After speaking of the incidence of contagious diseases, diseases of malnutrition and the high rate of infant mortality, the Iraqi delegate described the extent of illiteracy in the country. He said that 98 per cent of the population in the countryside is illiterate and that only 20 per cent of children of school age are accepted in the primary schools.

In conclusion he said:

"Like other oppressed peoples, the people of Iraq are well aware that imperialism is the only reason for the continuation of the present state of affairs. They have fought and continue to fight heroically to expel British colonialism, for the evacuation of the military bases of Shu'aiba, Al Habbaniyah and other secret bases, for the abrogation of the unequal Anglo-Iraqi treaty of 1930, for the nationalisation of their natural resources and for the rejection of all Anglo-American imperialist plots, such as the plan for joint defence and Point Four of the American Aid Programme. They are also fighting for the closing of the American offices belonging to the latter...

"The people of Iraq stand by the side of the peoples of the Middle East fighting for liberation and a decent life. They will fight with them for the application of the conference Resolution."

Abdul Kader Bey Al-Saleh (Jordan)

The delegate from Jordan began by showing that the many trials undergone by the Arab peoples and all the other peoples of the Middle East during their long struggle have taught them that they cannot solve their national problems by collaborating with imperialism.

The free people of Jordan have fought and continue to fight to destroy imperialism root and branch. They draw ever-growing faith and confidence from the fact that they are not alone in the battle, that they have allies in the other Arab and Eastern peoples and all others fighting against imperialism.

The evil of imperialism which is crushing Jordan is a general evil from which all the Arab peoples and the peoples of the Middle East are suffering. To fight this common enemy it is urgently necessary to form a vast common front.

For this reason the free peoples of Jordan welcomed the news of the holding of this Congress, in the hope that it will give rise to similar congresses in the future which will unite the efforts of the peoples of the Middle East and consolidate their general front of struggle for independence and sovereignty and to raise the flag of liberty over their countries.

He stated finally that the people of Jordan, in their unceasing flght against imperialism, know that the peoples' struggle against their oppressors, against imperialism, its agents and lackeys, will be victorious in the last resort.

The peoples of Jordan reach out a hand to free militants in every country in the world who are resisting imperialism and the exploitation of man by man.

Thus Jordan's slogan is: The fight against imperialism and solidarity with all peoples in their fight against the common enemy.

Dr. Osman Amin
(Egypt)

Dr. Amin brought the greetings of Egyptian university men and intellectuals o this popular conference, the first of its kind in the history of the Middle East. He then decribed the part played by Egyptian intellectuals in the people's struggle.

"The role of academic people in Egypt's struggle against imperialism has been positive and vital. It has been closely bound up with the battle for freedom and democracy, especially since the Egyptian people proclaimed their revolution in 1919...

"Egyptian university men know the reasons for imperialism's opposition to the extension of education, its attempts to destroy Egypt's culture and her true national heritage. Imperialism knows that science and culture heighten the people's awareness and their understanding of the true political, economic and social problems of the nation; and cause them to heighten the struggle for the defeat of imperialism and all its works, especially the reactionary laws which limit freedom of thought.

"Egypt's university teachers know that Egyptian educational programmes still bear the marks of imperialism. Indeed, many branches of learning, including medicine and the sciences, are still taught in foreign languages.

"In the same way, imperialism's attempts to destroy our national economy and our young industry have prevented the University and scientific research in general from playing their part in the elevation of our country's economy.

"Further, we are faced with grave threats to our culture. For we still remember Mr. Dulles' statement saying that it was necessary for the USA to get a grip on the culture of the Middle East to facilitate the setting up of strategic bases... This recommendation is now being put into operation and we are faced with a vast campaign of printed propaganda given away free on a large scale. The US Franklin Institute translates vulgar American books and sells them at ridiculous prices, very much lower than cost. This seriously endangers the diffusion of our national culture.

"We must not forget to mention the Fullbright Institute's plan. The least that can be said of it is that it is an attempt to buy over intellectuals into the service of US imperialism and its agents and also to injure university life and scientific research by putting in professors who are devoted to the Americans and act as their spies. These are a few of the dangers threatening our University and our national culture. Hence the need to expand education, to create universities and faculties to strengthen and defend our culture and our contact with modern ideas in the world, as a means of combatting imperialism."

Abdel Hadji Saleh
(Saudi Arabia)

After greeting the conference and noting that it was being held at a grave moment in the history of the Arab peoples, the delegate from Saudi Arabia went on:

"The various Arab countries are faced with many social, political and economic problems. There is poverty and famine, disease and misery, and also the continual struggle for freedom and independence..."

The Saudi Arabian delegate then went on to speak of the growing awakening of the people in Saudi Arabia and the national, democratic struggle. He alluded to the glorious strike of the oil workers against the US company, "Aramco." He said that today the oppressed peoples, in order to live in happiness, relied on their own struggle to expel the imperialists who were stealing their national wealth and using their territories as military bases. This threatened their countries with destruction and their sons with death.

Abdel Hadji Saleh expressed his confidence in the future struggle of the Arab peoples and stated that the Conference Resolution would have the full support of the people of Saudi Arabia.

LETTERS, MESSAGES AND TELEGRAMS SENT TO THE CONFERENCE

EGYPT:

A letter from Mr. Abderrahman Azzam, former Secretary General of the Arab League, says that "Western imperialism is a social disease which is bound to disappear."

The letter continues: "Our present battle against imperialism is the final stage on the road to deliverance from these ills.

Wherever there is a people desiring liberation from this tyranny, we must help them..."

His Eminence, Ibrahim Hamroosh, former first Sheik of Islam and former President of the Azhar Mosque, Cairo, the biggest Moslem University in the world, said in his message:

"I support this Congress with all my heart and I ask God to make it a success, so that it may result in the unity of the peoples of the East in their resistance to Western imperialism and their efforts to rid themselves of aerodromes and military bases. And though, through ill health, I cannot take part in the Conference in person, I shall pray and my colleagues and I shall read Al Fatiha (introductory prayer to the Koran) after Friday's prayers, asking God to guide the conference, to crown the efforts of the peoples with success and to bless their struggle against imperialism."

Letter from His Excellency Bayumi Radwan, leader of the Union of Ulemas of Egyptian mosques.

"Illness has prevented me from playing my part in this splendid Conference which aims to discuss the problems common to all the peoples of the Middle East.

"On behalf of a number of Moslem religious leaders in Egypt, I wish that God, Blessed and All Powerful, may bring you success in your action to unite the ranks of all the sons of the Orient, regardless of their religious and communal views or their race, in the struggle to expel the hated imperialists from our countries. Thus will we win our right to govern ourselves and our freedom to establish friendly relations, on a basis of equality, with all the peoples of the world, as our interests, our hopes and aspirations demand. Thus will we resist the hypocritical plots woven by imperialism with the aim of dragging us along with it into wars of aggression which are not in our interest. All this will be our contribution, together with all other peoples, to the enormous efforts that have been made for many years to prevent the outbreak of another world war, to establish Peace and protect humanity and civilisation from destruction and ruin..."

Message from Hussein Fahmy, writer and Editor of the newspaper "Al Gumhuriya," organ of the Rally for National Liberation.

"The newspaper 'Al Gumhuriya' believes in right, justice and liberty. All who believe in and work for liberty in any part of the world are its brothers, whatever their nationality, colour or religion.

" 'Al Gumhuriya' greets the Conference in Defence of the Rights of the Peoples of the Middle East because it supports all movements for liberation throughout the world...

"Therefore 'Al Gumhuriya' supports your efforts to unmask imperialism's plans in the Middle East and to organise action to bring them to nought..."

Hafez Mahmud, Secretary of the Egyptian Union of Journalists, sent a letter to the conference in which he declared his support for it and said that the Arab peoples want liberation politically, economically, culturally and in all fields of social life. He hoped that the Conference in Defence of the Rights of the Peoples of the Midde East would be successful.

Message from young Egyptian Doctors:

"We support your recommendation that we resist the imperialists and the stationing of foreign troops on our territory. We are amazed that these troops are still here; we do not accept them and we do not want them. They are allegedly here to defend us... We reply: Who asked to be defended? We strongly declare that we do not want any defence from them...

"Foreign troops are kept on our territory with the aim of setting up strategic military bases for the war for which the imperialists are working out the details and the starting-point. They are thus creating an atmosphere of widespread political tension and are making concrete preparations for a world war which will destroy modern civilisation and the human race. Shall we sit back and fold our arms with this prospect before us? We must expel the imperialists in order to protect our peoples and the whole of humanity. That is the noble aim for which the Conference was held."

The Conference received many other telegrams from Egypt — from Abdelhamid Waly, barrister, Dr. Said Zeky, and so on.

SYRIA:

Abdul Wahab Homad, former Minister of Education and one of the leaders of the People's Party, sent a letter in which he said:

"It is with pleasure that I greet your Conference in Beirut. I wish you the success the nobility of your aim and the greatness of your objective deserve...

"The imperialists have directly occupied our countries, or indirectly, as in the case of the countries from which they have evacuated their troops but where they have made a comeback by means of their local agents. They attack our peoples' right to a happy life, seek to drag them into a complex of problems which are foreign to us and which would have dire consequences for us.

"Arabs have no interest in any war and it is our duty to see to it that our countries resist those who call for war and aggresion, so that we may not become the victims of their greed."

Muzaffar el Jabiry, a big landed proprietor in the Alep region, made a statement greeting and supporting the Conference and all movements based on the sound principle of struggle against imperialism and its plans of occupation.

He said: "War is threatening the world; it threatens with destruction our fields and our means of production. The problems of the world are in need of a solution; their examination in big conferences, their elucidation for the benefit of the public and also negotiation for their solution are the best means of warding off the catastrophes threatening humanity."

Nadim Istambuliyeh, President of the Defence Committee of the region of Alexandretta, sent a letter welcoming the Congress and wishing it success in its work to eliminate the poverty, ignorance and flagrant imperialist intervention from which the countries of the Middle East are suffering.

Mr. Istambuliyeh then castigated imperialist war policy which makes a gift of whole regions taken from countries under its yoke to certain Governments which are being towed in the wake of imperialism.

His Eminence Sheik Mohamed Said al Naasan, Mufti of Hama, declared his support for the Conference and welcomed the contribution it made to the struggle for the liberation of the Arab countries from imperialism.

Nassuh Agha Al Fadel, Deputy in the Lebanese Chamber.

"I believe it is urgently necessary to hold this Congress at which the delegates will be able to exchange views on questions affecting the Lebanon and the other Arab countries, in order find the means of solving the problems confronting these peoples and to safeguard their national sovereignty and independence against the various attempts of imperialism to implicate them in plans which are a threat to their peace and security.

"I agree with the idea of the Congress because it is noble, patriotic and useful."

Statement by His Eminence, Abdel Hussein Sharaffeddin, the Grand Mujtahed (religious and theological head) of the Shiites:

"Greetings to all believers, our brothers and children, may the grace and blessing of God go with them.

"I warn you and all the peoples of the Middle East against enslaving, foreign imperialism and the deadly danger of its intervention in all fields of our life. This has gone to such an extent that it has robbed us of our right to self-determination.

"This has resulted in the creation of military bases in most of our countries. Ward off this danger to the East by holding a general Congress the aim of which would be to rid our lands of these dangers! Work, because God and his prophet and all believers will see your action!"

The religious leaders, Hashem Maaruf and Khalil Yassin, said in their statement:

"In the name of Almighty God!

"We men of religion of South Jebel Amel give our consent to the holding of a Congress of qualified men and patriots to study the questions of full independence and the rejection of foreign interference in national affairs in the Middle East. This interference is seen in the existence of foreign occupation troops and the creation of military bases in most of our countries; it also consists in attempts to conclude military alliances which are a danger to our sovereignty and security.

"His Exellency the Imam Said Hussein Sharaffeddin has already given his support to this noble idea.

"May God bring success to those who work for the good of the nation and who unfailingly seek to create a united will and firm ranks. God is the guarantee of victory."

Forty public figures of Baldeck, including doctors, barristers, chemists, engineers, regional representatives and notable people who took part in the armed struggle against foreign occupation, greeted the Conference in the following words:

It is only through the co-operation of the various strata of our peoples and our various political parties that we shall finish once for all with imperialist slavery and build a happy life."

Sheik Habib al Ibrahim, the Mufti of Balbeck, greeted the Conference and wished it every success. He said: "It is the first move which gives us a hope of life in the Orient."

"On behalf of the defenders of Peace of Constantine we greet you and wish every success to the Conference in Defence of the Rights of the Peoples of the Middle East."

JORDAN:

Telegram from Kadri Hafez Tukan, Member of Parliament for Nabloss

"Special circumstances have kept me from being present. I hope that the Conference will result in resolutions which will press the Arab Governments to follow the true path in the struggle. I hope, too, that you will make the peoples understand that imperialism is the cause of the East's backwardness and the source of all the ills from which Arabs suffer; and that it is the fight against imperialism which will put an end to this backwardness and enable us to advance towards liberty and progress. I support the protest of those present at the conference, their opposition to imperialism's economic and military plans in the Arab countries and their support for Egypt, Jordan and the Magreb in their struggle against imperialism...."

THE LEBANON:

The Lebanese Press gave whole pages to the procedure of the Conference. "Al Telegraph" printed the Resolution, extracts from speeches, the Declaration of the Conference and photographs.

"Al Hadaf" and "Al Tayar" gave information, favourable comment and the text of the Resolution.

Two numbers of "Al Shark" gave the Resolution, an appraisal, extracts from messages and photographs.

Under the headlines "Support the people of Egypt and Iran, oppose all attempts to bind the East to military pacts", "Al Yom" printed an article on the Conference together with the Resolution.

"Al Sakafa Al Wataniyah" devoted two pages to the cultural aspects of the Conference. It published the writers' appeal and the speech of Dr. Osman Amin, Professor of Philosophy at the University of Cairo. The speech was dedicated to Gamal El Din Afgani.

"Al Sarka" printed the Resolution, messages, speeches and the names of the signatories to the appeal. It is still giving information on the campaign of popular support for the Conference. In an editorial dealing with the question of the bilateral treaties with the USA and the peoples' struggle against them, it says: "The Conference in Defence of the Rights of the Peoples of the Middle East has clearly demonstrated the growing strength of the peoples' national struggle against the attempts to shackle them by bilateral agreements which at best are only different roads to the same catastrophe — occupation, war and destruction."

IRAQ:

"Saut Al Ahali", organ of the National Democratic Party, devoted three columns of its front page to the Resolution of the Conference. It continues to print statements and information on the campaign of popular support which is being conducted everywhere in Iraq.

"Al Hiyad", a newspaper belonging to the former Minister, Sadek al Bassam, gave the full text of the Resolution.

JORDAN:

The delegate, Subhi Zeid al Keilani, described the proceedings of the Conference in his review, Haoul al Alam:

"We discussed the opinions of all in detail and with sincerity until we reached the point of passing the Resolution unanimously. We did our work with the desire to achieve the liberation of the peoples of the Middle East and abolish every trace of imperialism."

The article was followed by the full text of the Declaration and the Resolution.

OPENING ADDRESS

VIENNA SESSION OF THE WORLD
COUNCIL OF PEACE
NOVEMBER 23rd-28th, 1953

I should like to begin by thanking President Brandweiner for his greetings addressed to us on behalf of the Austrian Peace Committee, and I also take this occasion to thank our Austrian friends and the staff of the World Council who have again zealously devoted themselves to the technical preparation of our work.

I greet the personalities who have responded to our invitation as well as all the World Council members who have come from so many countries to take part in the work of this session. I would also like to thank the many gentlemen of the Press who have come here.

Friends, we are met once again to examine the development of the struggle for Peace in all countries and to find, by a study of the present situation, new means of making this struggle still more successful and unanimous.

In opening this session I am profoundly conscious of the value of the ties uniting us, ties which have their origin in a unanimous desire for Peace and which are being constantly strengthened in the course of a struggle which is often hard but always inspiring. We have always striven, with a deep sense of our responsibilities to the noblest aspirations of the peoples, to develop, by correct and effective action, a great world movement to ensure Peace.

The hopes for Peace of the most diverse social strata throughout the world are expressed in all sincerity and with all clarity from the platform of the World Council and from that of the great congresses called by the Council. Thus we become acquainted with the difficulties encountered and the victories won in each country by all those who fight for Peace, and it is during these meetings that the close relationship which exists between the problems peculiar to the nations and to the great regions of the world appears most clearly. During these meetings the exact line of action emerges, a realistic line evolving in relation to present world conditions.

All peoples are faced with common responsibilities for changing the trend of international events in a direction favourable to Peace, while certain peoples are faced with particular responsibilities. These common responsibilities lead to common action, the purpose of which is to tackle the general causes of the situation which are the link between the specific problems confronting various parts of the world.

Our great campaigns around the Stockholm Appeal, the Appeal for negotiation between the Five Great Powers, our resolution on disarmament and, most recently, around the Budapest Appeal for settling differences by genuine negotiation, are actions of this kind. The international situation, following upon the events of the past few months, has made it plain that in addition to common responsibilities certain nations and their national movements have special responsibilities of great importance. These require immediate action, the success of which can be decisive for the maintenance and consolidation of Peace. The activity of the countries bordering on Germany against the European Defence Community or any other method of rearming a militarist Germany, the activity in the countries of Asia and lands that have an interest in the solution of the Korean problem, the end of the war in Viet-Nam, all these are activities which, in the struggle for Peace, place special national responsibilities in the forefront of the situation. But how encouraging it is for those who thus find themselves at the crucial points of the struggle to have the knowledge that they are not alone and that their efforts are followed and supported by all who fight in the same great cause in every country in the world. This solidarity, which we have cemented between men and women of widely differing opinions and which we must continually strengthen, is the guarantee of our success.

We have in the past co-operated—and we intend to continue in this way—with all organised forces working for Peace. We want to extend our activity and multiply our contacts. The vital importance of the problems at stake demands that we do not go into the struggle with our ranks thinned.

It is a fact recognised by everyone today that public opinion is a dominant factor in the conduct of international affairs. This extremely important fact is, for the most part, the result of our action. Has not the aim of this action been, since the inception of the World Peace Movement, to arouse in every human being a keener and more effective realisation of the problems of Peace? This in order to create a universal awareness powerful enough to put up a vigorous opposition to war.

This places a great responsibility upon us because as soon as public opinion becomes a dominant factor it is besieged from all quarters—sometimes with the object of dragging it along the most dangerous courses. Indeed, it is often difficult for many honest people—engrossed in the work and worry of daily life—to make a correct analysis of the international situation, to see where the responsibility lies and to work out their own line of action. Those seeking to carry out a policy of strength exploit these difficulties in order to mislead the public. One of our principal tasks is to enlighten opinion by correct and convincing arguments based on an objective study of the facts.

We have to deal with a strong opponent, with the perfected weapons of the cold war of the kind used with consummate skill by the "Psychological Strategic Office." We must erect a permanent wall against the lies and the manoeuvres.

Recent events provide good examples of the nature and variety of the manoeuvres set afoot to delay and prevent negotiation. They enable us to perceive that certain proposals for negotiation can be put forward with aims that are very different from those which the peoples so ardently desire—that is to say, a sincere search for agreed solutions acceptable to all. As we see it, the only successful negotiation is that which achieves Peace.

The aim of dividing the world permanently into two hostile blocs tied to the arms race which is ruining the peoples, is today clashing with the desire for negotiation. It is therefore convenient for those who find the fulfilment of their ambition to dominate obstructed by this desire for negotiation, not to make a frontal attack but, by exploiting this desire, to try and show that negotiation is impossible. They claim that they want to negotiate, but do not wish to carry this negotiation through except under conditions which make failure inevitable, thereby creating a situation more conducive to the use of force. The peoples see in negotiation a means of reducing and, later, of eliminating international tension, a means of stopping armed conflicts, of settling differences and of making possible the organisation of disarmament. There are others who wish, through negotiations undertaken with the deliberate intention of wrecking them, to dash the hopes of the peoples and remove the last obstacles which prevent them from cutting the world in two and thereby engendering war.

The main object of the manoeuvres carried out over the last months is to create utter disillusionment among the people who, since the Korean armistice, placed such high hopes on the success of future negotiation. Furthermore, knowing and fearing the great forces which the Budapest Appeal can bring into action, those who oppose an easing of international tension aimed at making the disillusioned public place responsibility for the failure. These manœuvres, which are—to put it briefly—intended to gain wide support for a tough policy, will disappoint those who instigated them. The hopes born of the successful action to stop the war in Korea cannot easily be destroyed. Aware of the dangers, have we not already put people on their guard against such manoeuvres by making known the resolution passed by our Bureau here in Vienna last September? By perservering in this way, so that none may fall into the dangerous traps which have in the past been set and which will continue to be set for the people, we shall succeed in making this great hope—honest negotiation—a reality. Negotiation undertaken in good faith should permit successful settlement of the main differences. All the problems cannot be studied simultaneously, but it must be clearly understood that the solutions adopted for each one of them are not independent of each other and that, in consequence, it is inadmissible that, prior to the consideration of a question, a predetermined solution to another question should have been arrived at by an intransigent group of Powers.

It is nevertheless in such a manner that we have seen the Western Powers proposing a Conference for the solution of the German problem after prior tri-partite conferences had laid down conditions accepted by Chancellor Adenauer and which envisaged, in one way or another, a rearmed Germany which would be drawn into the Atlantic coalition.

The problems of the Political Conference in Korea and those relative to the prohibition of weapons of mass destruction and disarmament are the object of similar manoeuvres.

A menace well-known to Germany's neighbours is reappearing in Central Europe, the menace of German militarism.

All the renewed assertions of the "defensive" character of the coalition in which they want the German militarists to participate, crumble before the fact that the present rulers of Bonn Germany, upheld and encouraged by the US Government, have already put forward territorial claims. The Bonn Parliament, on December 6th 1952, passed the following resolution:

"The Government is instructed to inform the parties to the European Army Treaty that the present frontiers of Germany, both in the East and in the West, in no way satisfy the Federal Republic."

Shortly after the elections, Chancellor Adenauer stated:

"This Europe will come about. When we have achieved it, then we shall give our young people what they need—more room for their expansion."

It is clear that the rearmament of militarist Germany is a part of the United States' policy of peripheral strategy. A rearmed Western Germany, out for revenge, is regarded as a first class strategic base. It becomes increasingly evident to the people of the Western countries bordering on Germany, that their own safety will be jeopardised if these projects are carried through, for such a Germany may well be tempted, as in the past, to start expanding in their direction. This whole aggressive policy is put forward under the cover of defence, whereas actually it compromises the security of the world. It attempts to ignore the Anglo-Soviet and Franco-Soviet Treaties. It wipes out the Potsdam Agreement of which the fundamental principles would permit the conclusion of a treaty between the Four Great Powers creating a united, democratic and peaceful Germany. All peoples have some responsibility for eliminating the danger of a rearmed, militarist Germany, but Germany's neighbour States bear a particularly heavy responsibility.

Never, perhaps, have so many dishonest tricks been employed to sow confusion in the minds of the people. For example, relative to the proposal of the Soviet Union for a Four Power Conference, the French Minister for Foreign Affairs, addressing the Council of the Republic on October 29th 1953, declared:

"We are still hoping for this Conference in which the Soviet Union can raise all the problems she wishes, in particular, the question of security. She will speak of hers. We shall speak of ours."

We should agree if, in the sentence just before, he had not spoilt in advance all the hopes placed in such a conference, by declaring emphatically:

"The European Defence Community and the Big Four Conference are complementary."

How can one qualify as complementary a Conference in which everyone may raise all the problems they wish, and a Treaty which sets up an armed force which cannot but be aggressive since it has already, in advance, been associated with territorial demands which, as everyone knows, can only be met through war —a Treaty rendering impossible the unification of Germany?

Addressing my fellow-countrymen, as President of the World Council of Peace, during the session of the National Council of the French Peace Movement, and sure that I was expressing your sentiments, I declared:

"At the present time, it is within the power of the French people to change the course of events in favour of Peace. And this is understood in all countries. The campaign which you are undertaking will be followed throughout the world with interest and hope . . . Be confident, we are not alone—the peoples of all countries expect much from the French people and are putting their confidence in us."

I have dealt at length with the rôle of France because circumstances, recent history and treaties in force place her in a strong position to put a decisive check on the race to war. But a great responsibility in this matter is also borne by the other neighbours of Germany; we follow their activities with the same attention and support them with the same strength and confidence.

The events in Asia, and particularly those in Korea, are a source of deep concern to the people of the whole world. An analysis of these events since hostilities broke out reveals that those who deemed it necessary to intervene in the internal affairs of the Korean people, believed themselves strong enough to impose victory by force of arms.

First of all they opposed the ending of hostilities and refused to allow the United Nations to examine the situation with the two Korean sides present. It was a great victory for the forces of Peace that they succeeded at last in bringing hostilities to an end by making the spirit of negotiation prevail.

Negotiation between Americans, Chinese and Koreans was proved to be possible and resulted in an armistice agreement. This is a fact of very great significance and it made a big contribution to the relaxation of international tension. But other facts—such as the behaviour of Syngman Rhee during the armistice talks and the conclusion of separate agreements between him and the United States and the sixteen Powers who took part in the Korean war under US Command—were fraught with future difficulties. These acts could only impede the future negotiations and in point of fact we have since seen manoeuvres similar to those we condemned in relation to the German problem.

The forces that fear the relaxation of international tension use the most diverse methods to prevent the holding of the Political Conference. The preliminary conference is continually coming up against difficulties.

The Korean and Chinese delegates have just proposed a new plan which tends to avoid "tough" policies at the conference table by bringing into the Political Conference neutral countries like the Soviet Union, India, Pakistan, Indonesia and Burma. This plan corresponds to the peoples' conception of negotiations and should be accepted by all the parties; pressure is being exerted to wreck it.

Does not Dulles threaten to disregard the armistice agreements regarding the liberation of prisoners if, after a certain date, the proposals of the mechanical majority at UNO for the composition of the Political Conference are not accepted as they stand by the Koreans and Chinese?

Those opposed to the relaxation of international tension act in a similar way wherever there is a question of negotiation involved. Though they are in a minority, they are still supported by many honest people and manage, what is more, to create confusion in others, thus rendering them powerless to act. It is all these honest people that we must convince. It would be vain to approach the minority directing this policy.

It is in striving to convince the honest people who support this "tough" policy, that we shall help to throw it overboard. Our immediate task is to call on the people to be vigilant so that hostilities may not be renewed in Korea and that the Political Conference may find a peaceful solution of the Korean problem.

There is another problem, of vital importance for the whole of humanity. It is the problem of the prohibition of weapons of mass destruction, and disarmament. Few questions have been the subject of so much discussion and negotiation since the end of the Second World War.

On each occasion the World Council has considered the problem with the greatest attention and we know the impressive demonstration of approval given to the Stockholm Appeal by the people of the whole world. The desire to ban weapons of mass extermination has become even stronger since then.

We know the great response that was given by public opinion to our proposals on the disarmament problem, and also by certain delegations to the General Assembly of UNO in 1950 and 1951.

While certain progress has been made towards the solution of this problem it must be recognised that today there is still a clash of ideas and that no effective decision has been reached up to now by the UN Disarmament Commission.

The same arguments are always put forward in order to make banning of atomic weapons impossible. In the most recent proposals put forward at UNO—those of the former French Minister Jules Moch—is repeated the fundamental contradiction of the Baruch Plan which stipulates that agreement on the ban should be preceded by a disclosure of all military forces and all atomic installations.

How can we believe in the sincerity of those who ask nations to reveal their defences and industrial structure in their entirety, without the others and themselves having first renounced the use of atomic and thermo-nuclear weapons? The only measure of this kind put forward in the French representative's plan is the prior banning of the use of chemical and biological weapons, though this ban, as laid down in the Geneva Protocol, has already been accepted by all the Powers, so far as chemical weapons are concerned, and by all the Powers except the United States, in the case of biological weapons.

Why not put forward the same proposal of prior banning in the case of atomic weapons? At the time of the Congress of the Peoples for Peace, I tried to give an argument for it derived from the United States' stubborness in upholding the article in the Baruch plan which provides for the creation of an international authority which would own uranium deposits and atomic installations.

Confident of a mechanical majority in their favour, the proponents of this plan insist that the decisions of this authority be taken by a simple majority vote; this would mean giving them a de facto monopoly of all atomic, industrial and economic activity in the world. Opposed to these designs are the proposals which demand a convention forbidding the use of these weapons and enjoining the organisation of an efficient system of control.

To object to these latter proposals would mean supposing that the signatories to the convention are not sincere in their desire to prohibit these weapons.

It would amount to an a priori decision that the signatures of States are worthless. So why should we attach so much importance to the signature by States of agreements, protocols or treaties?

The Baruch Plan or any similar plan, when dealing both with weapons of mass destruction and disarmament, provides, as I have just said, for a prior census and control without the nations pledging to reduce their armaments. Let us take a census, let us control, and then we shall see! That is the meaning of this plan. It is clear that in this taut international situation such a disclosure, without any other undertaking, is unacceptable, as it might increase the feeling of insecurity and would, in any case, be an encouragement for the policy of strength.

In this matter, I am, unfortunately, not sure that sufficient men and women are aware of the dangers threatening them. How can one be indifferent to the dangers of the atom bomb and the H-bomb? How can one work peacefully and draw up plans for the future without anxiety when around us pile up weapons capable of killing scores of millions of people in a few hours? I whole-heartedly support the proposal made to you to re-examine this problem, largely perhaps, because I am a scientist and realise the terrible dangers threatening humanity.

It is because, like most of my colleagues, I love science and know that it may bring happiness to mankind, that I would like, as soon as possible, to abolish the saying—"Science is leading us to destruction with its A-bombs and H-bombs"—so that we may work without fear and regain the pleasure of giving the world the inestimable benefits of science. I shall never weary of repeating it.

An analysis of the principal events characterising the world situation tends to show how difficult it is to obtain solutions to particular problems in an atmosphere of great international tension.

There are a number of reasons for this tension. I will raise here one which is I think important and which is the result of the frequently incorrect ideas held by certain people concerning the intentions of those whom they call "the enemy."

In order to carry out a policy which will protect their privileges, they deliberately attribute to this "enemy" intentions which they know to be false, in the hope that they will be accepted as true by many honest people. This policy leads large sections of the peoples to permit manoeuvres which, by all the evidence, cannot lead to any peaceful solution but will only increase international tension.

We must make it understood that it is as vain and dangerous to base judgements on intentions which are usually imaginary as it is wise to base them on facts. The scattering of strategic bases throughout the world, the supremacy which has been given back to the most aggressive forces in Germany and Japan, the support given to adventurers like Syngman Rhee and Chiang Kai-shek, are facts which enable all honest, sensible men to judge and decide on the proper course to take.

For decades people have been kept in a state of confusion and there is a danger that they may allow themselves to be carried away by the "crusading spirit." I should like to be able to speak directly to all these people and to say to them: "You support such and such a regime; you believe—so often has it been dinned into you—that someone wants to conquer you and force you to give up your way of life; that negotiation with the Russians will only be possible if they change their regime; and with the Chinese, only if they call back the Marshal of Formosa."

Do you think it would be reasonable to say that there can be no negotiation with the Americans unless they abolish capitalism? Do you think that Peace will only be established when all men have adopted your convictions? If this is not so, then should we not seek the means of bringing about a relaxation of international tension together with people as they are and in the world as it is today?

Is not a meeting between the representatives of the Five Great Powers (USA, USSR, Great Britain, People's Republic of China and France), since they bear the heaviest responsibility for the maintenance and consolidation of Peace, the best way of bringing about an easing of international tension?

Let the representatives of the Great Powers meet, let them exchange views on their interests, their fears and the problems which divide the world in general, thereby dispelling mistrust and clearing the atmosphere.

Though such a meeting might not necessarily reach definite solutions on any particular problem, it would have the great advantage of creating conditions favourable to successful negotiations on particular problems. Seen in this light, a meeting between the Five Great Powers would have, as we know, the support of many millions of men. It would restore to UNO the possibility of fulfilling its mission and of successfully bringing about disarmament.

In my opinion one of the essential tasks of our session will be to find the best way of bringing about this very necessary meeting.

In this exposé I have tried, by an examination of the most important immediate problems, to show that the objective we must attain in order to solve these and many other problems is the relaxation of international tension.

Further, do you not think that during the Session we should examine the best way of bringing about a world gathering for Peace in 1954 and the measures and steps to be taken? It would bring together qualified representatives of the most diverse political trends and religious creeds, from all walks of life and from every country. This gathering should have a single aim and, for myself, I would propose that it should be the relaxation of international tension.

We are aware that at this point in the evolution of the international situation the present session of the World Council of Peace assumes especially great importance. I am certain that our work and the conclusions we shall reach will have outstanding results commensurate with the events preoccupying the whole of mankind.

MG 170 ORGANIZATIONS WORLD PEACE COUNCIL PRINTED MATTER 1954 12/17

BULLETIN OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

INFORMATION BULLETIN PUBLISHED BY THE SECRETARIAT OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

Nº 5 JANUARY 1954

World tension can be eased in 1954

The information reaching us at the beginning of the new year and which we are passing on to National Committees in this Bulletin, shows that the campaign launched in response to the appeal of the World Council is at a new stage of development, particularly in the countries of Western Europe, South-East Asia, the Middle East and Latin America.

This campaign for peaceful objectives, closely related to the national interests of each people, is stimulating the great movement of opinion for solutions which will relax tension; this movement is continuing everywhere.

The new factors that have appeared during these last few weeks spotlight the need to pursue energetically the activity already begun. The most important of these events are: the pressure being brought to bear to accelerate the ratification and application of documents which would sanction the rearmament of West Germany; the opposition kept up to delay the settlement of the Korean question; the refusal to negotiate an end of the war in Viet-Nam; and the setting-up of foreign military bases in various parts of the world.

However, important victories have just been won through the pressure of public opinion. The USA and the Soviet Union have started preliminary talks on the question of atomic energy and the meeting of the Foreign Ministers of the Four Great Powers is being held in Berlin.

The announcement of this Conference raised a great hope in the hearts of all men and women. It is the first of its kind to be held for three years. By clearing the way to a peaceful settlement of the German question, it can take a first step towards eliminating the present international tension; it can also hasten the holding of a further meeting, this time of the Five Great Powers, in conformity with the wishes of all people.

But the hope awakened by the prospect of this meeting must, if it is not to be disappointed, be accompanied by great vigilance. We have heard certain intentions voiced which would create a deadlock at the meeting, as was the case at the preceding Conference held at the Palais Rose in Paris in 1951. Failure engineered in this way would prolong the Cold War and enable its protagonists to claim that direct negotiation between the Great Powers is useless and can be of no help in the easing of international tension.

Thus an attempt would be made to confuse the public and deflect it from the action necessary to bring about an eventual meeting of the Five Great Powers.

The Appeal to the Peoples, issued by the World Council at its Budapest session calling upon them to foil the manœuvres of those who wish to prevent or delay agreement, assumes its full meaning today because the success of all current negotiations as well as those about to begin are absolutely dependent on the action of the peoples.

Efforts to speed the peaceful settlement of the major international issues are today being made by the Peace Movement and by important groups of personalities and organisations who believe it is possible and necessary to reach agreements acceptable to all. These efforts have one and the same goal—to achieve a real lessening of tension.

In the months to come the International Meeting proposed by the World Council can and must become an important factor for a détente. The activities developing on the national level and the convergence of views resulting therefrom make possible the joint preparation of this great Meeting. They are preparing the ground for a victory whereby world tension can be eased in 1954.

GREAT & GROWING MOVEMENT

The campaign launched by the National Peace Movement in France is developing around the following objectives:

The rejection of the Bonn and Paris Agreements or any other form of the revival of German militarism and the victory of a negotiated solution of the German question by an agreement between the Four Powers.

An end to the war in Viet-Nam by opening negotiations with the Government of Ho Chi Minh.

French moves to get the Powers to settle their differences by agreements acceptable to all, thus bringing about a real easing of international tension.

This campaign has stimulated a great movement of opinion, as reflected in the ever more frequent declarations by elected bodies, big national organisations and various public figures.

Municipal councils and mayors

Hundreds of Municipal Councils of all political compositions have taken a stand on one or more of the three objectives of the Movement; they include those of big cities and towns like Paris, Nice, Cannes, Carcassonne, Narbonne, Belfort, Valence, Montélimar, Brest, Quimper, Saint-Etienne, Evian and so on.

Hundreds of mayors (50 in the Department of Loir-et-Cher, 30 in the Landes, 60 in Charente-Maritime, 53 in Lot-et-Garonne, etc.) and municipal councillors of all political opinions (485 in the Department of Seine-et-Marne, 105 in Lot-et-Garonne, etc.) have also expressed their agreement with these points.

General councils

Many General Councils—these are Departmental councils, also composed of members of all Parties—have spoken along the same lines. They include those of the Seine, Aisne, Alpes-Maritimes, Aude, Cher and Drôme Departments.

Big national organisations

The French Union of Ex-servicemen's Associations (UFAC), which has two million members, and 34 of its Departmental sections have announced their opposition to any revival of German militarism.

Many Congresses of ex-POWs have also taken this position. The recent Congress of the League for Human Rights declared its opposition to the European Defence Community and demanded the immediate opening of negotiations with President Ho Chi Minh.

Universities

80 famous university people, men of Science, the Arts and Law, Professors at the Sorbonne, at the Collège de France and at the Museum, including some of the most famous intellectuals in France, have just signed a Manifesto against German rearmament. More and more people are signing it every day.

Engineers and jurists

French engineers and technicians, including M. Bernard Lafaille, Jean Dourgnon, J. Dumas-Primbault and John Nicoletis have launched an Appeal for a National Conference against the EDC to be held in January 1954. It is gaining support every day. At a recent meeting in Paris eminent jurists gave the reasons for their opposition to the treaty setting up the EDC. Among them were M. Viraut, former member of the Bar Association; Professor Pinto of the Faculty of Law in the University of Lille; M. Auburtin, Vice-President of the Paris Municipal Council; and M. Moro Giafferi and M. Michel Bruguier.

Politicians

At the great rallies organised by the Peace Movement last Autumn politicians and Deputies of all Parties made a public declaration of their opposition to the Bonn and Paris agreements. They included M. Daladier, President of the Rally of Left Republicans (R.G.R.); M. Fromet, Secretary of the Radical Party; Messrs. Béné and Gaspard of the Radical Party; Messrs. Hamon and André Denis of the Popular Republican Movement (MRP); Messrs. Louis Marin, Moynet and Maupoil (Independents); Messrs. Michelet, Deliaune, Milh, Lyautey, Bignon, Brusset and Léon Noel of the Republican Union for Social Action (URAS); Messrs. Briffold and Gregory of the Socialist Party; and Dr. Rousseau of the Rally of the French People (RPF).

M. Edouard Herriot, President of the Radical and Radical-Socialist Party, was represented at one of these Rallies by M. Vienney, his Assistant, as Mayor of Lyons.

(The President of the Popular Republican Movement is M. Georges Bidault and that of the Rally of the French People [RPF] is General De Gaulle. The Republican Union for Social Action is composed of former members of the Rally of the French People. The Independents are conservative in their views.)

Among the peasants

On the initiative of the Peasants' National Committee for the Defence of Peace and Agriculture it was planned to hold 41 Departmental Congresses between November 1953 and March 1954. Some have already been held and others are in preparation. These events are prepared for by regional appeals from peasant leaders of all tendencies. For example, the Appeal launched for the Lot-et-Garonne Rally received the public support of 200 personalities, including 60 presidents of agricultural trade unions and co-operatives, 53 Mayors of rural communes and 105 Municipal Councillors.

Opening of signature campaign

A signature campaign against the Bonn and Paris agreements is going on at the present time in 70 out of the 89 Departments of France. Two million signatures had already been collected by the end of last year, while certain Departments—those of the Nord, Pas-de-Calais and Seine, for example—have set themselves a target of a million signatures by the end of January.

This campaign is being taken into the factories where it is receiving the almost unanimous support of the workers, whatever their trade union and even if they are unorganised. For example, between 90 and 100 per cent of the workers of 53 factories in the city of Marseilles have signed.

IN FRANCE

against ratification of Bonn and Paris agreements for an immediate end to war in Viet-Nam

Public figures of all opinions declare their joint opposition to Bonn and Paris agreements

The National Conference on the German Problem, held in Paris on November 8th last, called for "a great national awakening" against the Bonn and Paris agreements and resolutely condemned "a surrender which would have terrible consequences for Peace and for the country."

In addition to the personalities already mentioned, this Conference was attended by M. Etienne Nouveau, Vice-President of the French Union of Ex-servicemen (UFAC); M. Henri Bouret, MRP Deputy; M. Gilbert de Chambrun, a progressive Deputy; Professor Bernard Lavergne; M. Riès, Secretary of the Seine District of the League of Human Rights; General Le Corguillé; M. René Capitant, former Minister and member of the RPF; M. Pierre Villon, Communist Deputy; M. Charles Hernu, President of the Jacobin Club; Father Jutet; Professor Jacques Madaule; M. Jean-Marie Domenach, Editor of the review "Esprit," and so on.

Others demand end to war in Viet-Nam

The National Conference for Negotiation in Indo-China, held in Paris on November 22nd, adopted a resolution stating that negotiation between the French Government and the Government of Ho Chi Minh is necessary and possible. This resolution rejects any attempt to internationalise the war and "demands that the Government undertake the negotiations necessary to establish Peace and obtain an immediate ceasefire and armistice."

Besides the many people already mentioned, the following took part in the Conference: M. Maurice Lacroix, President of the "Young Republic"; M. Kriegel-Valrimont, Communist Deputy; M. Gilles Martinet, Editor of the "Observateur"; M. Jacques Mitterand, Counsellor of the French Union; M. Jacques Nantet, member of the Committee of Left Independents; Professor Marcel Ner, former Director of Education in Indo-China; M. Jean Pouillon, from the Editorial Board of the review, "Temps Modernes"; Pastor Francis Bosc, from the National Executive Committee of the Peace Movement; M. Louis Barin, Professor at the School of Oriental Languages; M. Belorgey, representing the Socialist Students, and so on.

National unity is being realised around a single objective

Two particularly significant examples show that France is on the way to achieving national unity in opposition to the Bonn and Paris agreements.

In the Department of Dordogne, where more than 100 meetings were held in preparation for a Rally which took place on November 22nd, an appeal to the people has just been issued for the collection of 120,000 signatures against the Bonn and Paris Agreements by March 1st. This Appeal was jointly issued by the Departmental Secretary of the Peace Movement, the District Secretary of the Communist Party, the District Secretary of the Popular Republican Movement (MRP), the Departmental Delegate of the Rally of the French People (RPF) and the Socialist mayor of an important town in the Department.

In Vendée, a Rally held in the administrative centre elected a Standing Committee to co-ordinate the activity of more than 200 localities against the Bonn and Paris agreements. It is composed of members of the Socialist, Communist, Radical and Popular Republican Parties, of the General Confederation of Agriculture and Associations of Ex-servicemen, POWs, etc....

Basing itself on these various activities and expressions of opinion, the French Peace Movement is now preparing to hold big regional assemblies in every Department. They will lead up to a great national demonstration to be held on April 24th and 25th.

The breadth of the movement of opinion around the various objectives for which action has been started assures us that there will be a broad French delegation at the great International Meeting proposed by the World Council of Peace.

Belgian people's opposition to EDC reflected in all political circles

The Belgian Union for the Defence of Peace is continuing its referendum on the question of EDC. It is being carried out in certain factories and districts, in many places in the form of a secret ballot.

The latest results come from 63 localities. Out of 30,871 voters 23,965 or 77.5 per cent voted against EDC. Only 698 voted for; the others abstained.

As part of this campaign demonstrations and meetings were held at which M. Charles Hernu (France) and Sgr. Giuseppe Nitti and Sgr. Giacometti (Italy) spoke. This shows the possibility of co-operation between the Peace Movements of the different countries of Europe.

When the vote on the ratification of the Paris Treaty was taken in the Chamber, 49 Deputies voted against and three abstained. They included Communist Deputies, half of the Socialist Group and Deputies of all parties.

The present President of the Senate, M. Paul Struye (Social Christian Party), has also stated his opposition to the ratification of EDC.

These facts are a reflection of the Belgian people's opposition to the plans for the remilitarisation of Germany. M. Henri Rolin, former President of the Senate, Socialist Senator and Belgian delegate to the Strasbourg Assembly, defined the reasons for this opposition in an interview given to the review "Defense de la Paix."

"Personally, I am opposed to the ratification of the EDC treaty. I can see in it both a terrible aggravation of the danger of war and a weakening of our means of defence...

"If the EDC were to come into force it would shut the door for a long time to any rapprochement between East and West."

M. Rolin then went on to show that the ratification of EDC would lead the German Federal Republic to try and win its territorial demands by force. He said:

"Already there are many statements by Americans and Germans proclaiming this aim. Such a situation would very likely lead to war in a very short time...

"The stationing on French, Belgian or Dutch soil, less than ten years after the occupation, of big German units and the welcome they would get from former collaborators can only arouse the hostility of public opinion."

"OUR TASK IS TO MAKE THE FOUR POWER TALKS SUCCEED"

Statement issued by the Executive of the British Peace Committee

The meeting of the Foreign Ministers of the Four Great Powers in Berlin on January 25th is a further, big victory of the Peace forces which ceaselessly demand the easing of international tension and the solution of differences by negotiation and agreement.

In an important statement which it has just issued, the British Peace Committee points out that this Conference is a tribute to the demand of the peoples and calls on the latter not to relax their vigilance in order that the meeting may reach a peaceful solution of the German question, thereby bringing about a real easing of international tension.

Here is the complete text of this important document:

"The agreement reached to begin the meeting of the Foreign Ministers of the Four Great Powers in Berlin on January 25th brings new hope for Peace to the people of the world.

"The decision to hold this conference is a triumph for all those who have been working for better relations between the Powers.

"It is a tribute to the strength of the mounting public demand for Negotiation and Agreement between the Nations to which the work of the Peace Movement has made so great a contribution.

"Now the task is to make the talks succeed. Again the success will depend on public opinion.

"The main obstacle is the openly declared intention, of the Government of the USA with British support to bring Germany into a Military Alliance with the West. This means reviving German Militarism.

"To seek to impose this policy against the wishes of the great majority of the people will endanger the success of this Conference. We must guard against attempts to poison the atmosphere by 'incidents' or the spreading of highly coloured stories in the newspapers of one side about the other.

"Britain's future demands an agreed peaceful solution to the German problem and the unification of Germany in a way acceptable to all Germany's neighbours and to the German people.

"This will open the way to Four Power Agreement and to a future of Peace for the people of Germany, of Europe and of the world.

"It can be achieved only by preventing a revival of German Militarism in any form.

"The Four Power Conference on Germany can lead to a meeting of the Five Great Powers including the People's Republic of China at which wider questions causing International Tension can be discussed.

"We call on all organisations and on every man and woman to take part in the greatest campaign the country has ever witnessed in defence of Britain's future and Peace.

"Pour in a flood of resolutions, postcards and telegrams to the Foreign Secretary and every Member of Parliament.

"Insist that the Foreign Secretary goes to the Meeting with the firm intention to reach agreement.

"Insist that the treaties setting up a European Army and reviving German militarism are scrapped."

PASTOR NIEMOLLER TAKES PART IN IMPORTANT WEST BERLIN DEMONSTRATION FOR SUCCESS OF FOUR POWER CONFERENCE

A meeting of importance for the success of the Four Power Conference and the peaceful solution of the German problem was held in West Berlin on January 7th. It took place in the Great Hall of the Prelates in Schöneberg in the American sector and because of the great crowd the police had the doors shut half-an-hour before the beginning.

During the meeting Pastor Niemoller spoke on the theme: "The Four Power Conference and the Future of Germany." After pointing out the threat to Peace of German militarism and the great anxiety that the remilitarisation of West Germany is causing to Germany's neighbours and to the world, Pastor Niemoller declared:

"The incorporation of West Germany in the Western world is not being carried out for love of the Federal Republic but because they need German soldiers.

"The aim of the Four Power Conference should be to eliminate this source of danger in the heart of Europe. Public opinion, which enforced the armistice in Korea, demands that the politicians make some progress at this meeting in Berlin. The common interest of the Soviet Union and France in preventing a German aggression is a factor of importance for the success of the Conference."

"It is important," Pastor Niemoller concluded, "to create, throughout Germany, an atmosphere which will facilitate agreement between the Great Powers on the unity of Germany."

The speech of the President of the Church of Hesse was warmly applauded by the audience. During the discussion which followed many Berliners, including young people, Churchmen and artists, voiced the opinion of the people which is that everything must be done to safeguard Peace and ensure the success of the Four Power Conference.

"THE FIGHT AGAINST THE BONN AND PARIS AGREEMENTS IS A COMMON FIGHT" says message from the German Peace Rally to Germany's neighbours

The above declaration was made in a message from the German Peace Rally to the countries bordering on Germany.

More than 1,200 delegates from all over East and West Germany attended the German Peace Rally held in Weimar from December 10th to 12th last, at which representatives of the National Peace Movements of 15 countries were also present. They included Belgium, France, Britain, the USSR, Czechoslovakia, Austria, Poland, Switzerland, Luxembourg, Finland, Denmark and Sweden.

In a message adopted at this important meeting the German Peace Rally expresses its gratitude for the efforts of the Peace forces in the neighbouring countries to bring about a peaceful settlement of the German question. It says:

"We German men and women at this meeting in Weimar understand the grave anxiety of Germany's neighbours at the revival of German militarism. We share their anxiety. The fight against the Bonn and Paris agreements, which are a threat to the German people, their neighbours and world Peace, is our common fight.

"It is our duty to let the forthcoming Four Power Conference in Berlin know that the whole German people ardently desire the re-establishment of German unity and a Peace treaty to ensure the peaceful and democratic development of our country. Such a Germany will serve the cause of Peace, eliminate tension in Europe and guarantee the security of the neighbouring peoples.

"We therefore ask the Peace-loving forces of all neighbouring countries to support this legitimate demand of our people."

Luxembourg - National Conference of Peace Movement decides to hold REFERENDUM ON EDC

The National Conference of the Luxembourg Peace Movement, held in Luxembourg on December 12th, passed a resolution protesting against the EDC and Luxembourg's incorporation in it. It noted that the Council of State had declared the treaty to be contrary to Luxembourg's Constitution.

The conference called for a campaign of referenda to be held in the factories and the big parishes during the month of January, in order to let the Deputies know the opposition of the people of Luxembourg to the EDC treaty. "This treaty," the resolution points out, "would seriously endanger our country, not only from the national standpoint but also on the economic, social and cultural planes."

In an interview with the Secretary of the Luxembourg Peace Movement, which was subsequently published in the Movement's bulletin, the great Luxembourg writer, Marcel Noppeney, takes a clear stand on the danger of the remilitarisation of Germany.

The author of "Against Them" believes that the EDC agreements would hurl the world into another war and states that he would, "before dying," like to warn his contemporaries of "the great German threat."

In the call issued for this campaign the Swiss Peace Movement declares:

"In our country's interest, in the interest of the German people themselves, we call upon all Swiss to exercise the greatest vigilance in order to prevent the return of disaster. United, they can frustate the plans of German militarism—by signing the petition we are issuing and in asking our authorities by this means to do nothing which might directly or indirectly help the remilitarisation of Western Germany (by the delivery of armaments, for example, or the investment in the German arms industry). They can do so by asking the authorities to place all our country's moral authority behind any effort to reach a peaceful settlement of the German question."

SWISS PETITION AGAINST REMILITARISATION OF WEST GERMANY

At the present time a petition campaign against the rearmament of West Germany is being carried on throughout Switzerland. The Swiss Peace Movement has made a pledge to collect 20,000 signatures by the time of the National Conference organised by the Swiss Peace Parliament. It will be held in Basle at the end of January on the subject:

"The German Question and Swiss Security."

THE STRUGGLE OF THE ITALIAN PEOPLE

against the European Defence Community

FOR AN EASING OF TENSION AND PEACE

Regional meetings for the easing of tension and Peace have been held in Milan, Bologna, Florence, Ancona, Genoa, Turin and Perugia. Among those taking part, in addition to the top leaders of the Peace Movement, were well-known people of various views and delegates from organisations and mass associations. They discussed the principles of an Italian policy for the easing of tension—peaceful trade relations with all countries; opposition to EDC and to US interference in Italian affairs. These meetings showed that the movement for the easing of tension and Peace is growing on the basis of the Italian people's desire for a peaceful life. We quote, as an example, an extract from the resolution passed unanimously by the Emilia and Romagna Meeting which was held in Bologna on December 20th:

"At a time when the World Council of Peace announces the holding, in 1954, of a world meeting of the representatives of all trends of opinion desiring Peace, we pledge that we, in our region, will strive for calm discussion and friendly agreement with all who sincerely want the principle of honest negotiation to prevail, while respecting absolutely the opinion of each."

Similar meetings will now be held in other provinces and districts of Italy.

The real cause of the Government crisis in Italy is the problem of the ratification of EDC. Therefore the Italian Peace Movement has decided to launch a broad campaign to warn the public of the danger to the country represented by the EDC agreements and to demand a solution of the crisis in line with the Italian people's desire for Peace.

In all the towns and even in the villages, the Peace Movement's speakers are holding meetings and taking part in big mass demonstrations from one end of the country to the other. This campaign led by the Peace Movement is everywhere meeting with the warm support of all sections of society and meetings, whether in town or country, factory or office, are adopting agendas and resolutions calling for a Government which will do something to ease tension and bring about Peace and demanding that Parliament reject the EDC treaties. Such resolutions are being sent in their hundreds to the President of the Republic, the Presidents of the Chamber and the Senate and the leaders of the various political parties. The wave of protest is increasing every day.

Another aspect of the Peace Movement's campaign in Italy is the struggle against military bases. In different parts of the country there are already naval and air bases in US hands. The recent decision to construct a huge military aerodrome near Ravenna in Romagna has met with the opposition of the overwhelming majority of the people. It is considered as a direct threat to this historic town which suffered so much in the last war. Its citizens and the peasants of the surrounding district have several times protested at the construction of this aerodrome for the US forces. At a big demonstration on January 3rd, Senator Emilio Sereni had this to say on the project:

"Our internal social conflicts are not so serious as to bring about the destruction of our country and civilisation. What really threatens our life and traditions is foreign military occupation, and this would be the natural consequence of the erection of this NATO air base and the creation of the European Army. The latter would deprive us of our national army. Now, US foreign policy consists in sending occupation troops to other countries. We must fear this policy and fight it because sooner or later it would plunge us back into the harsh experiences we went through in the past."

In his speech Senator Sereni showed the relation between the construction of the Ravenna air base and the vaster US plans for another war. At the heart of this policy of war preparation lies EDC and the consequent rearmament of Germany.

"Recent events in Korea have shown that the strength of the Peace Movement lies in our great numbers. We must be as strong in the coming weeks," M. Sereni concluded, to loud and long applause, "when the notorious EDC treaty is brought up for discussion in Parliament."

STRONG OPPOSITION TO US-PAKISTAN MILITARY PACT OF SOUTH-EAST ASIA AND THE

"Colleagues, friends and friendship with other countries not foreign armies" says Pandit Nehru

In the course of a speech in the Lower Chamber of the Indian Parliament in which he criticised any proposed military pact between the USA and Pakistan, Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru had this to say:

"The first thing that occurs to me when I think of any military aid freely given from a country of the West to any country of the East, is the past history of Asia—history of the past 3-400 years—the history of colonial domination gradually coming in here and establishing itself. Then I see after these 3-400 years the dominated countries of Asia becoming independent. Then I see some development which seems to me to reverse this process of freedom, which again brings to my mind the period when foreign armies came to Asia.

"I react very strongly against anything that brings back that process, even though it may be in a small measure. I do not want protection from others. I want colleagues, friends, and we have sought them, and we have worked for the friendship of other countries.

"We do not want any people to protect us with their armies, navies and air-forces, because we know by long and bitter experience that such protection becomes something else. Because, even the act of asking for protection—seeking it—makes us dependent. We seek goodwill and we shall continue to seek the goodwill of others, but we are not going to ask any country to defend us with its armies . . ."

The Premier of Kashmir

The Premier of Kashmir, Bakshi Ghulam Mohammed, stated at a public meeting in Bhadarwah (120 miles North of Srinagar), on December 15th:

"The United States is much mistaken if she thinks she will get a Formosa on the Indian sub-continent." The pending US-Pakistan military alliance "only confirms the US conspiracy in Kashmir which was exposed and nullified by the people here last August," he said and warned the USA that its "fresh attempt to grab Kashmir will meet the same fate as did the first one."

The Premier of Afghanistan

The Premier of Afghanistan, Sardar Mohammad Khan, said on December 31st that he considered the proposed US-Pakistan pact to be "a grave danger to the security and Peace of Afghanistan."

The C-in-C of the Egyptian Army

The Commander-in-Chief of the Egyptian Army, Major-General Abdel Hakim Amer, writing in the newspaper, "Al Goumhouria," recently, said:

"As to Pakistan, I believe no Islamic State would do something which might affect all other Islamic nations before measuring the extent of the harm and benefit which this act might bring to the Islamic peoples in general.

"Moreover, I am strongly of the opinion that co-ordination of policies of the Arab-Islamic nations is absolutely necessary if the honour and dignity of the Arab peoples are to be maintained. Any agreement or commitment not based on this principle will prejudice all these nations."

A great Arab poet

The great Arab poet, Mahdi Al Jawahiri from Iraq, a member of the World Council of Peace, in a signed editorial in the Baghdad daily, "Al Raie Al Am", on December 27th, wrote:

"...The nations such as Free India, which have tasted emancipation from the yoke of imperialism, will not submit to new military commitments nor allow themselves to be dismembered or destroyed by military rings approaching their frontiers."

Press reactions

Press criticism and downright condemnation of the projected military pact has been manifested, not only in newspapers of various political complexions throughout South-east Asia but also in those of the Middle East. For example, the following newspapers have condemned the proposed pact editorially:

PAKISTAN: "Pakistan Times."

INDIA: "Bombay Blitz"; "National Herald" and "Nay Zamana".

CEYLON: "Ceylon Times"; "Ceylon Observer" and "Thinakaran" (Tamil daily).

BURMA: "Burman" of Rangoon.

INDONESIA: "Abadi" (organ of the Indonesian Muslim Masjumi Party) and "Pamadangan".

SINGAPORE: "Singapore Standard" (influencial Chinese-owned daily).

AFGHANISTAN: "Anis."

TURKEY: "Yeni Ullus."

EGYPT: "Al Kahira"; "Il Mussawar" and "Al Tahrir".

Protests by various public figures and bodies

In India

At a meeting presided over by Dr. Saifuddin Kitchlew in New Delhi, on December 24th, any US-Pakistan military alliance was condemned in a statement which said that it would be "a flagrant violation of the UN Charter, would bring the Cold War right up to our borders and jeopardise Peace and stability in Asia."

Major-General Sir Sahib Singh Sokhey said that this project "has brought the Cold War to our very door and is fraught with great danger to the whole of South-east Asia including Pakistan herself."

Dr. Mulk Raj Anand, world renowned author and Vice-President of the All-India Peace Council, stated at a Press Conference in Nagpur, earlier in the month:

"The proposed US-Pakistan military alliance is a new threat to world Peace and a menace to India's sovereignty. We must work hard to foil this threat."

Statements have been issued by prominent local figures and large protest meetings held in Mandyi, Cutch District (North-west coast of India); Indore (central India) and in Pagwara in the Punjab.

In Kashmir

Mr. Sadiq, President of the Kashmir Constituent Assembly, stated on December 19th that such a pact would "compromise our liberty" and he called upon his people to be on their guard against "the new situation which would thus be created."

In Nepal

Grave concern has been expressed over the projected pact by the leaders of several political parties:

D. R. Regmi, President of the Nepali National Congress has declared:

"The US attempt to gain a foothold in Pakistan through military aid to that country does surely threaten the freedom of the entire South-east Asia and it will bring Nepal into the potential war zone . . . Pakistan's frontier is almost contiguous with Nepal's at one place. Nepal cannot sit by indifferent to these undesirable developments in Pakistan . . ."

Mahendra Bikram Shah, Vice-president of the National Democratic Party and Tanka Prasad Acharya, General Secretary of Nepal Praja Parishan (People's Assembly), has also expressed concern over the pact.

In Sind

Altaf Hussain, a trade union leader, has declared that the alliance would be a serious menace to the Peace and prosperity of Pakistan.

IN COUNTRIES MIDDLE EAST

Numerous protests in Eastern Pakistan

Meanwhile, throughout Pakistan itself the protests are increasing following the lead given by the Pakistan Peace Committee. Sahibzadi Mahmuda Decum, Chairman of the Pakistani Women's Peace Organisation called upon the women of Pakistan to oppose the pact, in a statement issued on December 14th. It was an attempt to "make Asians fight Asians," she said. The women of Pakistan must unite and oppose any attempt to turn their country into a battlefield or to pressgang their sons and brothers into the army to fight on behalf of foreign interests.

In East Bengal a number of well-known political leaders in Dacca, the capital of the province, sent a declaration to the Press calling upon the Pakistan Government not to conclude any military alliance with the USA as this would imperil the sovereignty and independence of the country.

"Such an alliance will entangle Pakistan in a devastating war," says the statement. "It will endanger Peace and prosperity and create serious obstacles in the nation-building works of our new State."

Among those who signed were:

Maulana Abdul Hamid Khan Bhashani, President of the East Pakistan Awami Muslim League; Professor Haji Muhammad Danesh, President of the Peasants' Association of East Bengal and Muhammad Shahidulla, Organising Secretary of the Peasants' and Workers' Party of Pakistan.

Early in December, a mass rally was held in Dacca demanding peaceful co-existence with other countries and no military alliance with any country.

A resolution was recently adopted by the Peace Committee of Barisal (at the mouth of the Ganges) protesting against any military alliance and calling upon the East Pakistan Peace Committee to organise a signature campaign in support of a Five Power Pact and the settlement of international issues through negotiation.

"WHOEVER AGREES WITH A SINGLE POINT OF OUR PROGRAMME CAN CO-OPERATE WITH US"

Statement of Japanese Peace Movement at its December Congress

The National Congress of the Japanese Peace Movement was held in Tokio on December 14th and 15th, 1953. It was attended by 740 delegates from all parts of Japan and all walks of life—workers, peasants, students, intellectuals, businessmen and industrialists. The various political trends were also widely represented; there were members of the Worker-Farmer Party, the Communist Party, the Socialist Party and well-known Conservatives like Mr. Akasi Kazama.

After Mr. Ikuo Oyama had presented a report on his several months of travel to various countries, Mr. Tokasaburo Dan reported on the work of the Vienna session of the World Council of Peace.

Many delegates spoke during the discussion, in particular Mr. Kihashiro Kimura, a Worker-Farmer Party M.P., Mr. Toshio Kuroda and Kozo Inomata, a Left-wing Socialist M.P.

The Congress adopted an important resolution opposing Prime Minister Yoshida's plan. It stressed the following three points:

Improvement of living-standards and transformation of the war economy into a peacetime economy.

Opposition to the policy of strength.

Solution of international differences by negotiation.

"We realise," the resolution declares, "that our present difficulties, the poor health standards of our people and the deterioration of our public education are the direct results of rearmament, the creation of mercenary armed forces, the increase in the number of military bases, the stationing of foreign troops in our country and the restrictions imposed on trade with the Soviet Union and China. It is in obedience to US demands that the rearmament of our country is growing daily, that the young people are drawn into the army and that there is an openly expressed intention to modify our Constitution in the only remaining articles safeguarding Peace.

"We know, too, that if war broke out, our country would be reduced to ashes by atom and hydrogen bombs and most of our families would be slain by them. We do not intend to await this event. We see the international horizon clearing. The war in Korea was ended by negotiations. The possibility of putting an end to the war in Viet Nam is growing as a result of President Ho Chi Minh's statements and public support for the ending of the war. These facts and the increasing number of voices demanding the solution of international differences by negotiation demonstrate the increasing power of the movement against the policy of strength.

"If we replace the policy of strength by negotiation, any country can live in friendship with other countries. Let us tomorrow start spreading this conviction among the masses of the people, calling on them to safeguard our peaceful life which is guaranteed by the Constitution, to resist the policy of military bases and the setting up of mercenary armed forces.

"The forces of Peace pledge that they will only cease their struggle when friendly co-operation between all countries has been attained. We call upon all Peace-loving people in our country to take up this struggle, whatever their political views, their profession or their religious beliefs, and to unite their efforts in the cause of Peace."

After elaborating the three main points emphasised by the Congress and stating that they "must be solved by negotiation," the resolution of the National Congress of the Japanese Peace Movement ends with these words:

"We are ready to co-operate with anyone who agrees with us on any of these points.

"Unite to prevent another war!"

National Congress for Safeguarding "Peace Constitution" opens February 15th in Japan

On December 19th, a few days after the Congress of the Japanese Peace Movement, 130 prominent citizens met to organise "A National Meeting for the Safeguarding of the 'Peace Constitution'" and adopted a resolution opposing any amendment of the constitution and thereby the Yoshida Government's plan for re-armament.

A preparatory committee presided over by a former Prime Minister, Mr. Tetsu Katayama, was elected to prepare for the holding on February 15th, of a "National Congress for the Protection and Safeguarding of the 'Peace Constitution'" at which the various ideologies will be represented and in which people of all political and social backgrounds will take part.

THE CONFERENCE IN DEFENCE OF THE

The first Conference in Defence of the Rights of the Peoples of the Middle East took place in Beirut on December 18th and 19th. The peoples of Iran, Egypt, Iraq, Syria, the Lebanon, Transjordan, Saudi Arabia and the Hadhramaut sent a hundred delegates from all walks of life—workers, peasants, students, women, intellectuals and scientists.

Public figures representing various trends of opinion—former Prime Ministers, former Ministers, Members of Parliament, religious leaders, tribal chiefs, delegates from the Nationalist, Progressive and Communist Parties, the Moslem Brotherhood and the Peace Movement—took part in the Conference which was called by a group of well-known Iranian citizens.

Peoples of Middle East forge united front to strengthen their co-operation

The Conference set up an Executive Committee to put into operation the decisions taken and issued a Manifesto which was unanimously adopted. The latter stressed the fact that, although the delegates held very different political views, they nevertheless reached the same conclusion, namely, that all the nations of the Middle East:

"are threatened by the same imperialist plans aimed at dragging our countries into adventures which are not in their interest. These plans are aggravating international tension and are a danger to the Peace of the world. The most dangerous are those for the creation of a system of joint defence and for an alliance between Pakistan, Iran, Turkey, Iraq and the USA, along with similar plans, open or concealed, like Truman's 'Point 4' and Johnston's scheme. The iniquitous agreements forced on certain of our peoples are still in existence and are throttling their national independence and sovereignty. There are still military bases and occupation troops in North Africa, Libya, Egypt, Transjordan, Iraq, Saudi Arabia and other parts of the Arab peninsula. They are a threat to the security of the Middle East."

"It is universally believed," the Manifesto continues, "that the Palestine problem is the result of imperialist domination and its solution is bound up with the elimination of this domination.

"The delegates of Transjordan, Iran, Hadhramaut, Syria, Iraq, Saudi Arabia, the Lebanon and Egypt, with the support of the peoples of North Africa and the Persian Gulf, have reached complete agreement on the need to strengthen their co-operation in the struggle by forging a united front."

A common programme for Independence and Peace

The 14 points of the common programme adopted include:

The rejection of any treaty, pact or military bloc which would threaten the Peace and security of the countries of the Middle East.

The annulment of military, economic or cultural pacts and treaties which are an infringement of the sovereignty and independence of these peoples.

The evacuation of foreign troops from the Arab countries.

The solution of all international conflicts and differences by peaceful methods and based on respect for the independence and sovereignty of the peoples.

The establishment of commercial and cultural relations with all countries irrespective of regime and on a footing of reciprocal advantage.

The solidarity of all the peoples of the Middle East for the successful realisation of this programme, and so on.

The Manifesto ends with the following words:

"These demands will have the support of all honest people in the world because national independence is a guarantee of Peace which is longed for by our peoples and by all other peoples."

The writers present at the Conference issued a statement emphasising their role in the battle for the independence of the peoples of the Middle East and their Executive Committee decided to commemorate, on March 9th, the 70th anniversary of the death of the great Middle East writer, Jamal el Dinh Afgani, one of the pioneers in the struggle for liberation from Ottoman domination.

In the Lebanese delegation: Antoine Tabet, member of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace; Georges Hanna, member of the World Council of Peace; Fuad Rizk, Vice-President of the Progressive Socialist Party; Ramadan Lawand, member of the Party of the National Appeal, etc.

In the Syrian delegation: Zeki Khatib, Deputy and former Prime Minister; Sami Kabbara, Deputy and former Minister; Munir Rayes, journalist, who made a speech on behalf of the delegation; Sobhi Khatib, President of the Federation of Syrian Trade Unions, etc.

Great response to the Conference

This Conference—the first of its kind to be held in the Middle East—met with a great response in the Arab countries and had many messages of greetings sent to it.

His Eminence the Grand Sheik Ibrahim Hamrouche, first Sheik of Islam and former President of the Azhar Mosque, the most important University of the Moslem religion, sent a message expressing his regret at being unable to attend because of poor health.

"I support this Congress," read the message, "with all my heart and I ask God to make it a success, so that it may result in the unity of the peoples of the East in their resistance to Western imperialism and their efforts to free themselves from aerodromes and military bases."

Another eminent religious leader, Sheik Bayomi of the Al-Azhar Mosque said:

"On behalf of a number of Moslem religious leaders in Egypt, I wish that God, the blessed and All-powerful, may lead you to victory in your attempts to unite the ranks of all the sons of the East, irrespective of religious, communal or racial differences... This will be our contribution, together with the other peoples of the world, to the great efforts which for many years have been made to prevent the outbreak of another world war, to establish Peace and protect mankind and civilisation from destruction and ruin."

Messages were also sent by Abdul Rahman Azzam, former General Secretary of the Arab League, Hussein Fahmy, writer and Editor of the newspaper "Al Gumhuriyat," organ of General Neguib's Rally of National Liberation, and Secretary of the Egyptian journalists' union.

A letter from M. Abdel Wahab Homad, former Syrian Minister of Education, greeted the Congress in these words:

"I have pleasure in greeting your Congress at Beirut and in wishing you the success merited by its great and noble aims...

"The imperialists... seek to drag our countries into conflicts which have nothing to do with them and the disastrous consequences of which they would have to suffer.

"Arabs have no interest in any war and it is our duty to see to it that our countries resist those who call for aggression and war so that we may not become the victims of their greed and their acts of aggression."

MESSAGE FROM YOUNG EGYPTIAN DOCTORS.

The Egyptian association of young doctors sent a message in which it is stated:

"By setting up military bases in our countries, the imperialists have created an atmosphere of widespread political tension and are really preparing for world war which would annihilate modern civilisation and the human race. Shall we be content to look on with this threat hanging over us?"

Before and during the Conference, several prominent Lebanese citizens expressed their approval of its aims. M. Nassouh Agha Al Fadel, Deputy, said: "I support the idea of the Conference because it is lofty, patriotic and practical." His Eminence Abdel Hussein Sharafeddin, Grand Moujtahed (religious and theological head) of the Shiites, together with two other religious leaders, Hashem Marouf and Khalil Yassine, declared their agreement with the Conference.

The President of the Lebanese Chamber, Adel Ousseiran, and the Deputies, Dr. Salim Haidar and Georges Hrawi, remarked favourably on the Conference and its aims.

The Algerian observers who were to have attended the Conference were not able to come to Beirut since the French authorities refused to allow them to leave the country. Abderrhaman Bouchama and Smaïl Bourguida sent telegrams regretting their enforced absence and wishing the delegates every success.

Press support

Many newspapers of all shades of opinion in Egypt, the Lebanon, Syria and Iraq also had favourable remarks to make on the work and decisions of the Conference.

The important Egyptian review "Rose Al Youssef" devoted a special article to it and "Al Gumhuriat" sent a special correspondent to Beirut, where the Conference took place, and published many articles and commentaries. Two other important Egyptian newspapers, "Al Misri" and "Al Ahram," also opened their columns to it.

Of Lebanese newspapers, "Al Hadaf," "Al Shark," "Al Yom," and especially "Al Telegraph" and "Al Farkah" which devoted even more space to it, gave their readers favourable news on the Conference.

So also did "Saut El Ahali," organ of the National Democratic Party in Iraq.

In Syria, "Al Liwaa" gave news and comment from which the following extract is taken:

"The will of the peoples was reflected in the Beirut Conference and its resolutions. It will be expressed again in the popular conferences which will be held, now that the Beirut Conference has shown the way. This Conference showed that the representatives of the peoples can meet and give a genuine expression of the popular will."

"Al Anbaa" of Damascus calls the Conference a "turning point in the history of the Middle East" and the review, "Al Sarkah," speaks of an "awakening of the peoples." The newspaper, "Al Tahrir Al-Arabi," organ of the party of the same name, which is now in power in Syria, printed the manifesto and the resolution in full. So did "Al Yom."

IN BRAZIL WIDE SECTIONS OF PUBLIC OPINION STAND FOR PEACEFUL SETTLEMENT OF INTERNATIONAL DISPUTES

The National Referendum which has been going on in Brazil since September 1953 has enabled wide sections of the Brazilian people to declare themselves in favour of agreement between States and for the peaceful settlement of international differences.

In the recent period more organisations and public figures have spoken in support of this campaign of the Brazilian Peace Movement or along similar lines.

Trade union leaders

Since the trade union leader, Astrogildo Ramos, said: "It is a highly patriotic step. Every citizen who loves his country must support the Referendum for agreement between the nations and vote for Peace," the President of the Confederation of Workers, leaders of national trade unions and leaders of Rio de Janeiro trade unions as important as those of the City Transport Workers and of the Food Workers, have issued calls to the working class to take part in the Referendum. This has also been done by trade union leaders in Sao Paolo, as for instance by those of the Metalworkers' Union. The latest to do so are thirteen Trade Union leaders of the State of Espirito Santo, who have signed an appeal for the peaceful solution of international differences.

Churchmen and students

The Methodist Church, in the person of one of its prominent leaders, Bishop Cesar Dacorso, has already signified its approval of the Referendum. And from Sao Luiz, capital of the State of Maranhao, comes the voice of a Catholic priest, Father Artur Lopez Goncalves: "I am in favour of peaceful agreements to settle international differences."

Two important student organisations, the Metropolitan Union of Students of the Federal District and the Extraordinary Students' Congress of the State of Bahia, encouraged young students to take part in the Referendum.

Representatives of the People

Finally, the campaign has made itself felt in political circles. In a declaration of their own, the majority of Deputies of the Federal Chamber pointed out that "there is no international issue in dispute which cannot be resolved by negotiation, understanding and agreement between the countries concerned." The Deputies who signed this declaration belong both to the parties of the Government coalition—the Brazilian Labour Party (the party of General Vargas), and the Social-Democratic Party—and to the National Democratic Union.

Many members of State Legislative Assemblies and Municipal Councils have taken up a similar position. The majority of the Municipal Councillors of Anapolis and Recife, and the Deputies of the Legislative Assemblies of the States of Pernambuco and Espirito Santo had already voted in favour of the Referendum; and now, a short while ago, the Municipal Council of the important town of Petropolis voted in favour with only one vote against.

Deputies of President Vargas' Party in the Federal Assembly came in person to the headquarters of the Peace Movement to cast their vote on the Referendum.

For a revival of trade with all nations

There is also a strong trend of opinion in Brazil which favours the re-establishment of normal commercial relations with the People's Republic of China, the Soviet Union and the countries of People's Democracy.

All strata of the Brazilian people, who are finding the economic crisis becoming daily more intolerable, are interested in this demand which was put forward in the first place by the Brazilian Peace Movement. Today, politicians in Government circles, including certain Ministers, declare themselves in favour and Press organs of the Government majority have started a campaign along the same lines. For example, the newspaper, "Ultima Hora," opened its columns to a group of Senators and Deputies to the Federal Assembly. Among the latter are Nestor and Samuel Duarte, both well known in Brazil; the former include the younger Artur Bernardes, Kerginaldo Cavalcanti and Mozart Lago. All support the re-establishment of commercial relations between Brazil and the Soviet Union.

The Bulletin of the Brazilian Peace Movement quotes other statements in support of this demand made by Members of Parliament and many prominent persons. They include the President and five Deputies of the Legislative Assembly of Parana; the Vice-Governor of the same State; the President of the Municipal Council of Curitiba; the Municipal Councillors of Nilopolis; the Director of the Commercial Association of Rio de Janeiro representing a big commercial firm and a group of Managing Directors of industrial and commercial businesses; and the President of the Rural Association of Saõ José do Rio Preto in the State of Saõ Paolo, etc.

In a Manifesto issued on December 31st 1953 and signed by its President, Abel Chermont, the Brazilian Peace Movement takes note of the wide support given to its campaigns by representative sections of public opinion.

The Manifesto sets the tasks for the Peace Movement and ends: "The World Council of Peace proposes that an International Meeting be held in 1954 permitting the free confrontation of all view-points on the possibility of the peaceful settlement of international differences. All organisations and citizens, desiring an easing of international tension should take part in this meeting.

"The Brazilian Peace Movement fully agrees with this proposal and will do all in its power to make the Meeting a success in Brazil."

Campaign in Uruguay for a negotiated solution of international differences

A campaign for the negotiated solution of international differences is now being conducted in Uruguay. It was launched by the National Peace Council with the support of the General Workers' Union.

Among the most recent organisations to join the campaign are the Housewives' Conference, called by the Women's Union, and the Leather Workers' Union. The Congress of Metal Workers and Engineers included in its programme the annulment of the Uruguay-USA bilateral military pact, the negotiated solutions of international differences and agreement between the Five Great Powers.

The football teams "Singer Athletics" and "Tiger Athletic" made a public announcement of their support for the National Peace Council's campaign before beginning a match.

Lastly, a great signature campaign has been launched by Peace Committees in the working class parts of Montevideo.

On his return from the Vienna Session of the World Council of Peace

Snr. Baltasar CASTRO

President of the Chamber of Deputies

IS RECEIVED BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF CHILE

On returning from his travels in Europe, during which he took part in the Vienna Session of the World Council of Peace and visited the Soviet Union, Snr. Baltasar Castro, President of the Chilean Chamber of Deputies and member of the World Council of Peace, was received by the President of the Republic. He gave the leader of the Republic of Chile an account of the Vienna Session and of the possibilities of establishing trade relations between the Soviet Union and Chile.

At the headquarters of the Chilean Peace Movement he made a report on the work of the World Council to a big audience. He said that, there, "Chile spoke for America, strangled by foreign domination. We were listened to because the tradition of struggle of our miners, men of the pampas, peasants, women and students, has won great prestige for our country."

NATIONAL PEACE CONFERENCE IN SWEDEN CALLS ON ALL FRIENDS OF PEACE TO JOIN FORCES

The national conference of the Swedish Peace Committee opened in Stockholm on January 10th under the chairmanship of Mr. Hjalmar Wermer and Mr. Humbert Hammarberg.

In addition to the delegates from local committees all over Sweden, this important conference was attended by many personalities representing the many pacifist organisations of the country. The conference adopted a resolution greeting the World Council of Peace's decision "to launch an Appeal to all Organisations and Personalities Desiring A Relaxation of International Tension for the holding of a great International Meeting in the near future."

"Sweden and its Peace-loving people," the resolution goes on, "could do great things for world Peace by maintaining a policy of absolute neutrality.

"The Swedish Peace Committee would welcome the holding of the meeting in Sweden as far as conditions permit.

"In order that the Meeting may gain the maximum support in Sweden, the Swedish Peace Committee calls on all local Peace Committees and all organisations and friends of Peace to join forces in arousing a powerful trend of opinion for:

The banning of weapons of mass destruction.

The peaceful solution of the German problem to allow the creation of a united, independent and democratic Germany and guaranteeing the peoples of Europe against the revival of German militarism.

The admission of the People's Republic of China to UNO, the first step towards ensuring Peace through Five-Power negotiation.

The expansion of trade and cultural relations with other countries.

"In order to win the widest support, the conference recommends the organisation of public meetings and petitions, the obtaining of declarations of support and the adoption of any other form of action for a broad mobilisation of public opinion, taking local conditions into account.

"The conference also recommends the holding of regional Peace Conferences and expresses its hope for closer co-operation between the Peace Movements of the Nordic countries."

Among those who took part in the conference were: Mme. Isabelle Blume, Belgian Secretary of the World Council of Peace; Mme. Andrea Andreen, member of the World Council of Peace and Bengt Gunnäs, Secretary of the Swedish Peace Committee. The writers, Sekel Nordenstrand and Peter Mathis, Professor Yngve Björnstam, Dr. Lars Ehrenberg and Mr. Torsten Lindqvist were present as were also Mrs. Greta Engkvist who plays an eminent role in Swedish pacifist organisations and Mr. Herman Backman, Secretary of the Swedish Quakers.

FIFTY-FOUR PUBLIC FIGURES IN INDONESIA CALL NATIONAL PEACE CONGRESS

In Indonesia, a National Peace Congress was held in Djakarta on January 24th on the initiative of a sponsoring committee composed of 54 well known Indonesian public figures in politics, religion, culture, education, and in the peasant and trade union movements.

The Committee also included 13 Members of Parliament amongst whom were:

Arudji Kartawinata, second Vice-President of the Parliament and President of the "Sjarikat Islam Party of Indonesia;"

Dr. Djody Gondokusumo, Minister of Justice and member of the "National Rakjat Party;"

Professor S. M. Abidin, Minister of Labour, member of the "Buruh Party;"

Otto Rondonuwu, Deputy of the P.N.I.;

Mr. Padang, Independent Deputy;

Mrs. Rasuna Said, member of the Peace Liaison Committee for the Asian and Pacific Regions, PSII Deputy;

K. Werdojo, trade union leader and "Buruh Party" Deputy;

Sidik Kertapati, leader of the Sakti Peasants' United Front, and Deputy;

Professor Prijono, historian and professor in the Djakarta Arts' Faculty and Professor Purbodiningrat, economist and Professor at the Gadjah Faculty, were also members of the Sponsoring Committee.

The call for the Congress states:

"...The most recent events have given rise to hope and have shown the possibility of settling all differences between nations through peaceful negotiations based on justice, mutual respect and understanding of the opinions, beliefs and political ideas of others."

The Congress was preceded by local and regional Peace Conferences at Semarang, Pemalang, Tegal, Solo, Jogjakarta, Sumbaja, Lamongan, Malang and so on.

At Bandoeng, Djakarta and Belikpapan, the oil centre, these conferences were markedly successful. The local Peace Committees of the islands of Sumatra and Sulawesi were also very active in the preparation of the Congress.

Lastly, in addition to the Peace Committees, various trade unions and peasant, women's, youth, student and other cultural organisations carried out intense propaganda for the Congress. Of the big unions which declared support for the Congress at official meetings, we may mention the Agricultural Workers' Union (Serbuksi), the Oilworkers' Union (Perbum), the Sugar Workers' Union (SBG), the Tobacco Workers' Union (SBRI), the Coconut-oil workers' Union, the West Java district of the Public Servants' Union and the Autonomous Regional Trade Union (Sebda).

Statements in favour of a Five Power Conference in Canada...

A resolution adopted by the 18th Congress of the Saskatchewan Branch of the "Canada Commonwealth Federation", which took place in mid-November, states that "the Canadian Government should work hard for a Meeting of the Five Great Powers ..."

"Lasting Peace and the end of the Cold War," the resolution continues, "are essentially dependent on strict agreements between the Great Powers."

The resolution also demands an agreement on the reduction of armaments and for the prohibition of rearmament in Germany and Japan.

In Calgary, the annual Congress of the Labour Federation of Alberta, which is affiliated to the Canadian Labour Party, made a similar call for a meeting of the Five Great Powers and, in another resolution, demanded that atom bombs be made illegal.

...and in Trinidad

The Peace Committees of Trinidad and Tobago and British Guiana have jointly issued an Appeal for a Pact of Peace between the Five Great Powers and the collection of signatures began immediately.

During a meeting held in the Town Hall of San Fernando (Trinidad), a number of citizens, including an Indian Municipal Councillor, a businessman, a trade union secretary, the Secretary of the Peace Committee and two leaders of the West Indian Independence Party, announced their support for the Trinidad and Tobago Peace Committee.

A MESSAGE FROM THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE TO ALL ORGANISATIONS AND PERSONALITIES DESIRING A RELAXATION OF INTERNATIONAL TENSION

The armistice concluded in Korea has given an uneasy world the hope at last of seeing a decrease in tension between the Great Powers. But the negotiations have come up against fresh obstacles.

Agreement is proving difficult on other questions of vital importance to the Peace of the world.

Yet the peoples long for a relaxation of international tension. The economic shackles and political pressures accompanying this tension are becoming increasingly difficult to bear.

We believe it is possible to rescue the world from this condition.

Today, a wide range of political and social forces in all countries are working for an improvement in international relations.

New voices among eminent men of science, religion and politics are raised in condemnation of the use of weapons of mass extermination. Public opinion is becoming alarmed at the growing accumulation of armaments of all types.

All reasonable people appreciate that it is not possible to settle problems of world importance or guarantee implementation of any agreement made, without the participation of the Government of the People's Republic of China.

Responsible representatives of all political groups in most of the countries of Western Europe have made a public stand against the revival of German militarism in any form.

In these circumstances, we think an opportunity should be given for all organisations or personalities who are striving for the relaxation of international tension, to concentrate their efforts on this question. Our own viewpoint on the problem is set out in the resolution passed in Vienna by the World Council of Peace on November 28th, 1953.

Joint preparation for a meeting allowing the free exchange of all viewpoints and the study of possible solutions is now needed.

An international meeting of this nature, held as soon as possible, would in itself be an important factor in the relaxation of international tension.

Public opinion supports the camp a relaxation of international t

The Foreign Ministers' Conference in Berlin is arousing great interest. The Press and radio are giving it wide daily coverage. From all over the world, messages are pouring in expressing the people's desire for Peace. It is the object of a real popular discussion.

These facts demonstrate the interest taken by the public in the present Four-Power Meeting and the important role they assign to it for the maintenance of Peace.

It is also worth noting that the Berlin Conference has had to discuss not only the peaceful solution of the German problem and European security, but the whole complex of problems on which world Peace depends and which are all tied to one problem—the easing of tension.

The World Peace Movement has done much to draw public attention to these problems.

The Stockholm campaign made plain the need to prohibit weapons of mass destruction and is echoed today in the opening of preliminary talks on atomic energy between the USA and the Soviet Union.

The world campaign for a Five-Power Meeting—and this is particularly evident at the Berlin Conference—shows clearly that it is impossible to solve major international issues (disarmament and international trade, for example) without the participation of the People's Republic of China.

The preparation and holding of the Congress of the Peoples on the initiative of the World Council of Peace demonstrated that it is possible to replace resort to force by negotiation.

To the Peace Movement's contribution must be added that of the other elements who have helped in their own way, to create an atmosphere favourable to negotiation between the Five Great Powers. Indeed, the salient feature of the current world campaign for an easing of tension is the growing unity of the efforts being made on the national level to attain the goal of Peace.

But, while there is a growing hope and better prospects for the easing of tension, there are still many difficulties and obstacles to be overcome. European security, far from being guaranteed, is gravely endangered by the persistent attempts to divide Europe and to rearm Germany; Peace has not yet been negotiated in Korea nor has there been any agreement on the composition of the Political Conference; hostilities are still going on in Viet-Nam.

This situation emphasises the importance of the World Council's proposal to hold, at an early date, an International Meeting of organisations and notabilities desiring a relaxation of world tension. It confirms the need for joint effort on a wor lessening who, up action fo

What the Press is saying ...

Public opinion is following with great attention the work of the Berlin Conference, as the following excerpts from the Press show.

If we compare the probable intentions of the Kremlin with the conditions which the British and American diplomats, at least, are bringing with them to Berlin, we may ask what exactly is the reason for a Four-Power Meeting at a time when Western Europe is much less integrated than Eastern Europe and when the Soviet Union does not yet consider itself in any way bound to withdraw from the heart of the Continent. The answer is, that Western statesmen, particularly those of France, Great Britain and Germany, have to take public opinion into account.

Though Molotov said nothing new, he nevertheless stated the literal truth when, in his first statement on arriving in Berlin, he declared that millions of people throughout the world hoped that the forthcoming Conference would strengthen Peace and lessen the tension in international relations.

In all countries, and more especially in Germany, broad sections of public opinion are following the Berlin Conference with great attention. The peoples' desire to find a way of lessening international tension is so great that they are demanding unremittingly that all obstacles be overcome.

The three Western Foreign Ministers are acting in perfect concert. Their experts, M. de Margerie, Mr. Douglas MacArthur and Sir Frank Roberts, work together every morning. The Ministers very often have lunch together. They assign the role to be played by each, while taking into account, as far as possible, the reactions of their respective peoples. Unfortunately the latter disagree on many points, thus obliging their representatives to indulge in a certain amount of acrobatics.

In the last few months, voices have been heard in France calling for a rapprochement with Russia. The French Parliament, beset with instability, has still not yet ratified the American-backed European Army plan for raising a large West-German military force. Many Frenchmen appeared to dislike the plan as much as the Russians do.

Eden's argument—that Parliamentary elections already give the Germans sufficient opportunity to state their opinion on the Bonn and Paris Agreements—proves that the Western Powers do not desire a direct consultation of the Germans themselves. They fear that a united Germany would not support the 1952 Agreements (i.e. of Bonn and Paris).

By letters, telegrams, delegations and resolutions

THE GERMAN PEOPLE MAKE THEIR OPINION KNOWN TO THE BIG FOUR

In a great variety of ways—letters, telegrams, delegations, meetings and statements by public figures—the people of Germany have intimated to the four Foreign Ministers their keen desire to see the Conference reach an agreement on the peaceful unification of Germany.

Here are a few examples illustrating the many methods used to make known to the Foreign Ministers the German people's desire for Peace.

• In Amberg, Fürth, Wuppertal and Nuremberg there have been demonstrations demanding the peaceful unification of Germany and condemning remilitarisation. In a resolution, the people of Nuremberg stated: "The German people do not want the EDC Treaty which holds over them the menace of the atom bomb; they want a Peace Treaty and the withdrawal of all occupation troops."

The representatives of 1,500,000 unemployed

On behalf of the 1,500,000 people out of work in West Germany, the Committee of West German Unemployed asked to be received as a delegation by the Foreign Ministers' Conference in Berlin.

This delegation was given the responsibility of describing to the Foreign Ministers "the results of Chancellor Adenauer's war policy on the situation of the unemployed in Western Germany," and of informing the Ministers of the hopes placed by the unemployed in the Foreign Ministers' talks.

• A demonstration took place in the "Casino am Funkturm" in West Berlin, on January 20th. People of all political views from East and West Berlin took part. They demanded a united Germany, condemned remilitarisation under EDC and called for the withdrawal of the motion on the Military Service Bill in the Bonn Parliament.

• Groups of young people in Munich, Hildesheim, Hamburg and the I. G. Holz of Wuppertal sent letters to the Berlin Conference informing the four Foreign Ministers of their opposition to remilitarisation and their great desire for a united, democratic and peaceful Germany.

• A letter from 60 West German intellectuals to the Ministers of Foreign Affairs of the USSR, the USA, Great Britain and France asks that "the Conference recommend to the two German Governments that they now facilitate" cultural relations between the two zones "by mutual agreements."

The signatories to this letter include:

Dr. Ackerknecht, Professor at the University of Ludwigsburg; Dr. Asam-Brückmüller, Health Service Inspector in Ansbach; Dr. Johann Aufhauser, Professor at the University of Munich; Dr. Johannes Hessen, Dean of the University of Cologne; Herr Eugen Kühlewein, painter from Karlsruhe; Herr Carlo Mense, painter and teacher at Honnef-on-Rhine; Pastor Herbert Mochalski, Editor of the Confessional Church's bimonthly magazine, "Die Stimme der Gemeinde," Darmstadt; Dr. Friedrich Müller, former Director of the Administrative Tribunal of Wiesbaden; Herr Heinz von Rebeur-Paschwitz, lawyer of Nuremberg; Herr Georg Schwartz, writer of Munich; Herr Ludwig Zimmerer, writer of Dusseldorf.

• Public figures in the German Federal Republic sent a message to the Foreign Ministers voicing the German people's desire to have a say in the Conference. "They rightly hope that it will result in an attenuation of international tension and efficacious preparations for the unification" of Germany. The signatories include the former Deputies, Herr Herman Etzel and Frau Thea Arnold; the publisher, Herr Ernst Rowohlt; the former infantry general, Franz Beyer; Dr. Georg Groot, Deputy in the Lower Saxony Parliament; the actor, Herr Georg Wahl and Pastor Kurt Essen.

• In an interview, Herr Alois Körner, Chairman of the Central Works' Council of the Saar Basin, declared: "The 58,000 miners of the Saar expect the Foreign Ministers' Conference to unite Germany, put an end to arbitrary imperialist policy and ensure the genuine sovereignty of the German people . . ."

Dr. Wehner, spokesman of the Social Democratic Party of Western Germany, declared, on February 5th, in Berlin where he is following the work of the Foreign Ministers' Conference: "By sticking dogmatically to the European Defence Community, the Western Powers are preventing a genuine discussion on the problem of European security and on Germany's position in a European system of collective security."

Religious authorities . . .

The Fraternal Council (Bruderrat) of the Evangelical Church has stated: "Millions of people look upon this Conference in hope and expectation. It can be decisive for the future of the peoples of the world and for our own future. We know the great responsibility incumbent upon the men meeting in this Conference. We therefore consider it our duty as Christians to pray for all those who are taking part in it."

The Federal Council of the Confessional Church of Germany, in a letter to sister Churches in France, Great Britain, the United States and the Soviet Union, points out the decisive importance of the Four Power Conference and calls upon the leaders of these churches to impress upon their Governments the heavy responsibility which lies upon those taking part in it.

In a pastoral letter the Catholic Bishop of Fulda urges all the faithful in his diocese to pray for the success of the Conference, so that it may serve to bring about the unity of the German people and a lessening of tension and Peace between the nations.

The "National Front," on behalf of 9,000,000 GERMANS . . .

A delegation from the "National Front of the German Democratic Republic" has handed to the Foreign Ministers' Conference a letter asking that representatives of the German Democratic and of the Federal Republics should take part in the discussion on the German problem. Here is the text of the letter:

"The National Council of the 'National Front of the German Democratic Republic' has the honour to inform the Berlin Conference of the Foreign Ministers of the USSR, the USA, the UK and the French Republic that the request that representatives of the German Democratic Republic and of Western Germany take part in the discussion on the German problem during the Foreign Ministers' Conference, is supported by the majority of the German people.

"Workers and peasants, intellectuals and scientists and representatives of all sections of the population of the German Democratic Republic and of the democratic sector of the German capital have sent messages to this effect to the National Council of the 'National Front of the German Democratic Republic.' They bore the signatures of 9,275,028 Germans . . .

"Many letters from all over Western Germany, and bearing a great number of signatures, have also been sent to the National Council of the 'National Front of the German Democratic Republic' . . .

"In response to the wishes of the signatories of all these letters, the National Council of the 'National Front of the German Democratic Republic' considers that its national duty is to forward these letters to the Berlin Conference of the Ministers of Foreign Affairs."

"Negotiations in the spirit of give and take"

EIGHTY prominent Americans issued a call for "negotiations in the spirit of give and take" on the eye of the Foreign Ministers' Conference in Berlin.

Announcing this, Mr. Thomas Richardson, national co-director of the American Peace Crusade, said that the US-Soviet talks on atomic energy and the Foreign Ministers' Conference were "important steps toward the achievement of world Peace through negotiations.

"Every thinking person welcomes these developments. We all hope for their success... An immediate step, pending the final solution of international control, should be agreement among all the Powers not to initiate atomic war. We should support our country's moves in such a direction."

Those who initiated the appeal were Professor Robert Morss Lovett, former Governor of the Virgin Islands; Professor Philip Morrison, nuclear physicist; John Gojack, President of the Michigan-Indiana district of the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers, and the Reverend Kenneth Forbes, director of the Episcopal League for Social Action, Philadelphia.

Among the 80 signatories are: Hon. Elmer Benson, former Governor of Minnesota; John T. Bernard of Chicago, a former Congressman; Russell N. Chase of Cleveland, attorney; Florence Converse of Wellesley, Mass., author; Dr. William W. Denton of Tucson, Arizona, educator; Fyke Farmer of Nashville, Tennessee, leader of the World Government movement; William Harrison, editor of the "Boston Chronicle;" Thomas F. Ogilvie, publisher of the "Jersey Times," Atlantic City, N. J.; Theodore Rosebury, bacteriologist and author of "Peace or Pestilence?;" Dr. Alva W. Taylor, theological professor of Nashville, Tennessee and Abraham Welanko, professor emeritus of psychology at Stanford University.

Holland: 1,500 delegates at National Congress for Vigilance against German Militarism

THE National Congress for Vigilance against the Revival of German Militarism took place in Amsterdam on Sunday, January 17th.

Nearly 1,500 delegates and visitors, representing the various political, religious and cultural organisations of Holland, took part in the Congress. An appeal was adopted calling on the Dutch people to unite in opposition to the revival of German militarism and the EDC.

"The EDC treaty violates the Dutch Constitution," says the Appeal, "it sacrifices the country's sovereignty and independence, increases military expenditure to an intolerable extent and paves the way for the revival of German militarism—a grave threat to Holland."

In her opening speech Professor M. B. Minnaert-Coelingh said:

"We expect the Four Power Meeting to put an end to German militarism once and for all."

During the discussion that followed, the representatives of the various trends of opinion put forward the reasons for their opposition to EDC from their point of view.

One speaker after another came up to the platform: Royalists, Christian pacifists, farm workers, housewives, representatives of the Dutch Teachers' Association, municipal councillors, trade unionists and members of the Labour Party, dockers, engineers, students, writers and artists.

France: The Berlin Conference must stimulate, not check, the national protest campaign

The Liaison Bureau of the "National Conference of November 8th, 1953" and the "French Committee for the Peaceful Solution of the German Problem" held a joint meeting on January 26th with Dr. Robert Monod, Professor of Medicine, in the chair, assisted by M. René Capitant, former Minister, and M. Michel Bruguier.

A unanimously adopted statement points out that M. Georges Bidault persists in presenting the EDC as an accomplished fact, and continues: "the opening of the Berlin Conference must stimulate, not check, our national protest campaign."

ITALIAN

European

THE Italian people's struggle is, above all, being waged in the form of conferences and explanations to the public. The most noteworthy of these was the debate on the EDC organised by the independent newspaper, "Milano Sera." The many public figures who, during the debate, denounced the EDC, included Signor Ferrucio Parri, former President of the Council of Ministers; Professors Augusto Monti and Enzo Enriques Agnoletti; Signor Paolo Pavolini, publisher, and the Deputy, Signor Tristano Codignola.

A debate on the EDC is being organised in Naples in which university students, journalists, lawyers and writers will take part. The best monographs on the EDC will receive prizes and their authors will read them in person at a public meeting.

In Milan, the Communist, Catholic, Social Democratic and Socialist workers of the "Tosi" factory united in commemorating the deportation of 4,000 workers to Germany. The workers gave to this ceremony the character of a demonstration against the EDC.

In Venice, a delegation from Western Germany presented gifts to the orphan children of people deported to Germany at the final demonstration of the "Week for the Relaxation of Tension and Peace."

The Association of Former Deportees to Germany is playing an important part in the campaign and has held meetings in Bologna, Florenco and Modena. It is planned to hold another in Rovigo.

In the province of Bologna, "Notebooks for Peace and National Independence" are at present being distributed. In them the people are writing down their experiences of and comments on the Nazi occupation in Italy—statements on the atrocities committed, the sufferings of the Italian people and their heroic fight for liberty. This campaign will be taken up in other provinces.

The latest demonstrations against the EDC are those that have just taken place in Reggio nell' Emilia and Mantua. Sig. Emilio Sereni, Senator and member of the World Council of Peace, was the principal speaker. He also spoke at Sienna at a demonstration which was preceded by 40 smaller meetings throughout the city.

Sig. Mario Berlinguer, Deputy, spoke at a public meeting in Cagliari and Sig. Umberto Terracini spoke at a meeting of the Peace Committee in Rome.

A delegation from the families of those slain in the Ardeatine massacre presented a petition rejecting the EDC to the two Houses of Parliament. It bore 45 fresh signatures of relatives of the victims.

The Peace Movement and the National Committee for the Peaceful Solution of the German Problem are leading this campaign.

During the campaign the Peace Movement is setting up new committees in the factories and localities, widening the influence and improving the organisation of those already in existence.

PUBLIC OPINION REJECTS Defence Community Treaty

The Italian people's struggle against the EDC and German rearmament is spreading to new sections and, as in France, is beginning to have strong repercussions in Parliament.

The Governmental programme presented by Signor Fanfani to solve the Parliamentary crisis included the early ratification of the EDC Treaty. Its rejection in Parliament was a defeat for the protagonists of a plan condemned by public opinion.

Unity At National Level

THE Peace Movement has made contact with various organisations fighting the EDC in order to co-ordinate all individual activities within a campaign of greater scope.

The Union of Italian Women, for example, decided that International Women's Day (March 8th) would be a day of opposition to the EDC in Italy.

It is the Peace Movement's intention to develop a campaign similar to those for the Stockholm and Berlin Appeals in its scope, continuity and strength.

At the same time, important declarations of opposition to the EDC have been obtained. That of Sig. Ferruccio Parri has already been mentioned. There were also those of Sig. Ettore Viola, Deputy, President of the Association of Italian Ex-Servicemen and Vice-President of the International Association of Ex-Servicemen, and of Social Democratic circles in the "Socialist Autonomy" group.

The Monarchist daily, "Giornale d'Italia," printed an article by General Vicenzo Petitti, in which he says:

"... Of what use would be an EDC, born with the aid of forceps, mothered by a Parliamentary majority under compulsion, child of a loveless marriage which is already a source of division and conflict? How, in these circumstances, can one demand, in an era as fast-moving as our own, an irredeemable mortgage on the rights and duties of a nation until the year 2004?"

In Milan, young Catholics and the leaders and the whole Milan section of the Young European Federalists have declared their opposition to the EDC. The National Congress of the Young European Federalists, held in Leghorn in January, revealed that the movement is going through a deep crisis, precisely because there is a growing number of Federalists who believe that genuine European unity is incompatible with German rearmament.

The Tenth Anniversary of the Resistance

THE tenth anniversary of the beginning of the Italian people's struggle against German militarism and for national liberation is being enthusiastically commemorated throughout the country. At a demonstration which took place in Rome in mid-January, Senator Emilio Sereni sent a message of greetings to Sig. Cervi, the father of seven patriots killed by the Nazis. Sig. Sereni sent the message in the name of the National Peace Committee of which he is Vice-President.

The Peace Movement is represented at all the demonstrations held in honour of the tenth anniversary of the commencement of the resistance, in order to emphasise the close link between the Italian people's struggle for national liberation and their present opposition to German militarism.

Against Military Bases

AT the same time, a campaign of opposition to the US plan to set up an atomic base in Naples is being carried on there. It consists of meetings in the working-class quarters, delegations and petitions. An important protest meeting took place and the Trades Council asked Deputies of all parties to oppose the threat hanging over the city. The former Senator, Sig. Arturo Labriola, said: "The setting up of an atomic bomb depot in Naples is a crime against our city."

A similar campaign is taking place in the province of Leghorn. At Novara, Senator Donini spoke at a demonstration protesting against the plan to construct a US military aerodrome in the region.

Similar activity by the people of Ravenna to prevent the construction of a US aerodrome in the province was the occasion for great activity by the Peace Movement. Some 150 Peace Committees, representing the great majority of the population, were set up.

Trade With All Countries

THE campaign for trade with all countries has had a wide influence throughout Italy. Italian industrialists are very discontented at the restrictions imposed by the Battle Act. Now that big British and French delegations are going to the Soviet Union to conclude trade agreements, they are rightly afraid of once more being placed at a disadvantage vis-à-vis their British and French competitors.

For this reason the "Congress For Trade With The East," held in Genoa on January 30th and 31st, had a great success.

Representatives of 30 Italian business houses and trading organisations took part; this had wide repercussions. The R.I.V. ball-bearing factories in Turin, which employ 10,000 workers and are meeting with serious difficulties in their export trade, sent a representative.

The "Fiat" works were represented by Sig. Giacomo Sosso.

The Congress was supported by the Genoa Chambers of Commerce and by the following public figures:

Sig. Ferruccio Parri, former President of the Council of Ministers; Senator Bertone (Christian Democrat). Vice-President of the Senate and former Minister of Finance; Dr. Carlo Bassi, Secretary of the Genoa branch of the Bank of Italy; Sig. Casella, engineer, member of the Board of Directors of the C.G.E. concern; Dr. Brumiati, Counsellor of the Italian Chambers of Commerce for Foreign Trade; Dr. Botti from the Parma Chambers of Commerce; Sig. Mario Cosulich, from the Trieste Chambers of Commerce and Industry; Dr. Stefano Luomi, Director of the Genoa Banca del Lavoro, etc.

"Ratification would increase the danger of a third world war"

declares Senator Kluyskens of Belgium

Prominent Belgians, who had not yet made public their opinion on the Bonn and Paris Agreements, have just joined those who have already condemned the EDC.

Among these are Professor Kluyskens (Christian-Social Party) and M. Vergeylen, both Senators of Ghent. They stated to a delegation that they would vote against the ratification of the EDC Treaty.

In the opinion of Professor Kluyskens, the ratification of the EDC would greatly increase the danger of a third world war and would destroy any possibility of negotiations between East and West.

Senator Vergeylen gave it as his opinion that 99 per cent of Ghent Socialists were opposed to EDC.

The referendum against the European Army is being carried out successfully throughout the country.

THE JAPANESE PEOPLE OPPOSE REARMAMENT AND MILITARISATION

The Japanese people's struggle against rearmament and militarisation has grown greatly since the beginning of the year, especially in these last few weeks which have seen a great deal of activity.

A new programme launching a campaign against rearmament and in defence of the Constitution was adopted at a meeting of the Standing Committee of the Japanese Peace Council on January 18th.

"The fight against rearmament is the present, central task of Japan's Peace Movement," it says. It calls for the restoration of diplomatic relations with China and the Soviet Union, the promotion of friendly relations and trade among all nations, the holding of a Five-Power Conference, arms reduction and the banning of atomic weapons.

It was decided to hold Peace Conferences from April 1st-22nd, in Tokio, Nagasaki, Kumamoto, Hiroshima, Kyoto, Kobe, Nagoya, Sendai and elsewhere.

Japanese Teachers Oppose Militarist Education

The struggle against the militarisation of Japan was also dealt with at the Third Educational Research Conference called by the 500,000-strong Japanese Teachers' Union which took place from January 25th-28th.

The 500 delegates present heard Mr. Shigeru Nambara, former Chancellor of Tokio University, condemn the attempt to revive militarist education as an adjunct of Japan's rearmament.

"Peace, not militarism, is the only way to guarantee Japan's security," he asserted.

Other Activities Against Rearmament

On January 30th and 31st, a National Assembly organised by the General Council of Trade Unions, took place to oppose the Government rearmament programme.

An inaugural meeting was held on January 15th of the "National Federation for the Protection of the Constitution," which has been joined by over 100 Japanese organisations and is presided over by a former Premier, Mr. Tetsu Katayama. As a result, a National Conference was held on February 15th to protect Japan's constitution against changes that would permit rearmament.

THE "GREEK UNION OF THE FRIENDS OF PEACE" which has recently been made legal

LAUNCHES APPEAL TO PEOPLE OF GREECE

THE "Greek Union of the Friends of Peace," set up a few months ago, has just been made legal. Its leaders include Nikos Bees, Academician; L. Manolides, Colonel and Brigade leader; Markos Avgheris, writer; Kostas Varnalis, poet; Ilias Bredimas, journalist; Kostas Sotiriu, teacher; Kostas Athanassiades, barrister; Assimakis Yalamas, writer; Felix Fikioris, barrister; St. Mastroyannakis, trade unionist, and J. Evangelidis, barrister.

At the New Year the "Committee of the Friends of Peace," the Union's leading body, addressed a message to the Greek people:

"...We call upon the Greek people to strengthen the ranks of the Peace Movement, to join pacifist organisations and to struggle for the defence of Peace in our country.

"We call upon intellectuals and our cultural institutions to realise their responsibility for the protection and development of civilisation and progress and to use their moral and spiritual authority to become the apostles and defenders of Peace in Greece.

"We speak to our country's politicians with the certainty that they will understand how terrible the results of another war would be. We call upon them to give every support to the spirit of détente in international relations, to friendly discussions between the Great Powers and the peaceful settlement of differences, particularly with our neighbours, to the condemnation and prohibition of all weapons of mass destruction. We call on them to support the efforts being made to establish a lasting Peace in the world."

"Negotiations must lead to agreement"

Says Dr. Endicott at the Canadian "Congress For Negotiated Peace"

The Congress for Negotiated Peace was held in the Massey Hall, Toronto, on January 30th and 31st, and was attended by 1,500 delegates elected at meetings in nearly every province of Canada. In addition, 1,154 people sent subscriptions and letters asking the Congress to consider them as delegates.

During the first session, Dr. Endicott made a speech in which he developed the idea that negotiations must lead to agreement and described the great strength of the Peace Movement and the growth of a world-wide movement for Peace.

Giving the Congress the results of the referendum organised by the Canadian National Peace Congress, he stated that it can be said that more than 80 per cent of Canadians expressed the sensible opinion that the representatives of the Great Powers should meet in order to solve international issues by negotiation.

The Congress asked the Canadian Government and Parliament to declare that Canada will not be the first country to use atomic weapons and announce her readiness to join in a similar declaration with all countries.

"THE PEOPLE OF VIET-NAM WILL CONTINUE THEIR EFFORTS TO BRING ABOUT THE NEGOTIATED SETTLEMENT OF INTERNATIONAL DIFFERENCES"—

General Secretary of Viet-Nam Peace Committee

At the extended session of the Viet-Nam Peace Committee on January 19th at which representatives of all the political parties and mass organisations were present, M. Xuan Thuy, General Secretary of the Committee, stated:

"We stand firmly on the side of the forces of Peace who have set themselves the task of reaching a peaceful, negotiated solution of international differences in order to lessen world tension."

Referring to the interview given by President Ho Chi Minh to the Swedish newspaper, "Expressen," last November, M. Xuan Thuy pointed out that these proposals had met with the warm support of Peace-loving people the world over.

At the end of the session the Committee expressed its eagerness to take part in the international conferences which will be organised this year to achieve a lessening of international tension.

In Pakistan and India

FURTHER PROTESTS AGAINST PROPOSED MILITARY PACT WITH USA

THE proposed military alliance between Pakistan and the USA continues to arouse a wave of anxiety and protest in Pakistan and neighbouring countries.

A resolution adopted by the conference of the All Pakistan Jamit I Ulema I Islam (Organisation of Preachers of Islam), held recently, declared that Pakistan's religious, political and economic freedoms are more important than any military aid and that no steps should be taken that might jeopardise them.

The Eastern Pakistan Youth League passed a resolution calling upon the people to organise themselves in opposition to it.

In India, there is a growing number of demonstrations and meetings called either by the Peace Movement, as in Delhi on January 10th, or by all political parties, as in Bombay on January 24th. In Allahabad, Uttar Pradesh, 10,000 followers of the Hindu religion held a mass meeting on the banks of the Ganges, on January 28th, at which similar protests were made. In Lucknow, Uttar Pradesh, many political leaders expressed grave concern over the proposed pact at a meeting on January 21st. Students and teachers held demonstrations in Amritsar, Calcutta and Patiala (capital of Pepsu). In Bhatinda, the first Conference of the Pepsu Girl Students' Association condemned the pact.

Jagat Narain, Education Minister in the East Punjab Government, warned a meeting, 10,000-strong, in Ludhiana, that the establishment of military bases in Pakistan would be a danger to Peace. Chandreshwar Prasad Narain Singh, Governor of East Punjab, condemned the proposed military pact, at Chandigarh, on January 26th, maintaining that it would deprive Pakistan of its sovereignty.

Say eminent British scientists, artists and writers

Men and women prominent in the British arts and sciences are putting their signatures to a declaration which is to be sent to their colleagues in the People's Republic of China. The declaration says:

"...We believe that the exchange of ideas and information between Britain and China can be fruitful for the future development of art and science in both countries, as such exchanges have been in the past. We believe that close cultural relations can do much to foster mutual understanding and friendship between our two peoples. It is our earnest wish to see an end to all the dissensions which at present threaten to separate us.

"With these aims in view we are determined to work for the fullest scientific and cultural exchange between our two countries. We feel sure that we can look forward to your co-operation."

First Indonesian Peace Congress in Djakarta

A reception given for the delegates by the President of the Indonesian Republic, Dr. Achmed Soekarno, on January 29th, closed the first Indonesian National Peace Congress which had opened in Djakarta five days before. Dr. Soekarno assured the delegates that he would study the Congress resolutions with great attention.

The Congress sent a message to the Foreign Ministers' Conference in Berlin urging that a Five-Power Conference be held. Such a meeting, the Message said, "would facilitate the speedy solution of international issues on a sound basis."

In a Message to the United Nations, the Congress called for an early meeting of the Political Conference on Korea, the admission of the People's Republic of China to UNO and respect for the right of self-determination of the peoples of Viet-Nam and Malaya.

At the end of the proceedings—on which a fuller report will be given in the next Bulletin—the Congress elected an Executive Committee of 56 members, including Professor S. M. Abidin, Minister of Labour; Professor Ir. Roosene, Minister of Transport; Mr. Djody Gondokusumo, Minister of Justice; Mr. Sadjarwo, Minister of Agriculture; Mr. Arudji Kartawinata, second Vice-President of the Parliament and many Members of Parliament, university professors, political leaders and leaders of workers' and peasants' movements, and so on.

Other public figures, such as the Mayor of Djakarta, attended the Congress or, as did Mr. Sartono, President of the Constituent Assembly, spoke in praise of the peoples' fight for Peace, freedom and independence.

Baltasar Castro reports back on World Council Vienna Session to

10,000 People in Santiago de Chile

In Santiago de Chile, on January 17th, 10,000 people crowded into the "Caupolican," the biggest theatre in the Chilean capital, to hear Señor Baltasar Castro, President of the Chamber of Deputies, give a report on the last session of the World Council of Peace.

Around the World

"We are here as businessmen..."

The growing trend of opinion for negotiation and Peace can have beneficial results for trade. It creates considerable possibilities for expansion.

This has just been stressed by Mr. J. B. Scott, sales director of Crompton Parkinson Ltd., who, after the great success of the recent Anglo-Soviet trade negotiations in Moscow, said that they were there as businessmen. They believed in the expansion of Anglo-Soviet trade and in Peace and saw no reason why the flags of the two countries should not fly together in the future.

USA

Dr. Kingsbury, President of the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship, stated to the Press:

"Our thoughts and hopes are at present centred on the Foreign Ministers' Conference in Berlin. We like to believe that, bearing in mind the true meaning of Stalingrad—its victory in war and its reconstruction in Peace—these statesmen will find the way to agreement that will realise the yearning of mankind for a world at Peace."

Britain

The British organisation, "Teachers for Peace," called a Conference in London on the theme—International Tension and Problems of Education.

Two hundred people took part, some of whom were from the Dominions and Colonies. They adopted a statement welcoming "the recent exchange of views between the Governments of the USA and the Soviet Union on the use of atomic energy" and "the coming Four-Power talks in Berlin."

France

The Executive Committee of the French Union of Ex-Servicemen's Associations, which has a membership of 3,000,000, urges the Four Foreign Ministers to put an end, once and for all, to the danger of German militarism and hopes that broader conferences will permit the foundations to be laid for a just, humane and lasting Peace.

According to a list drawn up on January 15th by the Peace Council of the Seine Department in France, 40 mayors out of the Department's 80, 39 Deputies out of 57, and 14 Senators out of 20 have declared their opposition to the Bonn and Paris Agreements.

Almost a thousand delegates took part in the National Conference demanding respect for the Oder-Neisse line which was organised by the Association of Polish-born Frenchmen. In the resolution passed on behalf of the 1,500,000 Poles living in France, the Conference demanded a united and peaceful Germany within the borders fixed by the Potsdam Agreement.

Many public figures sent messages to the Conference. They included Edouard Daladier (Radical), Etienne Nouveau, Vice-President of the French Union of Ex-Servicemen and M. Beuve-Mery, Director of "Le Monde."

Czechoslovakia

The Czechoslovak Association of Anti-fascist Fighters (S.P.B.) greeted the Berlin Conference in an address:

"We went through all the horrors of war and fascism. The best sons and daughters of our peoples, faithful to the cause of the people, died before our eyes. Today, we stand guard on Peace and watch over the life of our peoples on behalf of all our fallen patriots."

Scandinavia

The Gothenburg Peace Committee put the following two questions to people dwelling in a block of flats in Rambergsstaden in the district of Hisingen:

(1) "Must we allow the rearmament of Germany?

(2) "Would the unification of Germany be in the interests of Peace?"

The results, after 144 families had been consulted, were as follows:

(1) 113 "No"; one "Yes" and 30 had no opinion.

(2) 112 "Yes"; 32 had no opinion.

The Executive Committee of the Nordic Workers' Conference For Peace sent a resolution adopted by the delegates of the four Nordic countries to the trade unions of East and West Germany. It stated:

"We hope that the Berlin Conference will result in the peaceful unification of Germany, prevent the revival of German militarism and lay the foundations for a stable future for Germany and her neighbours.

India

Sardar Surjit Singh Mejitha, Deputy Defence Minister of India, addressing a public protest meeting in Amritsar on January 19th, said that "it was unwise for any Asian country to give bases to the USA and invite war in a peaceful region."

In its last session on January 24th, the 59th Session of the Indian National Congress unanimously passed a resolution expressing its grave concern at the proposed US-Pakistan military pact.

Egypt

General Neguib declared that his Government regards the proposed US-Pakistan military pact as a hostile move against the Arab countries and that there was a threat that it would isolate them and drive a wedge between them and the Asiatic countries.

Syria

The newspaper, "Al Tahrir Al Arabi," organ of the party of General Shishakly, President of the Republic, had the following to say on the proposed US-Pakistan military pact:

"The initiators of these plans would like us to believe that they are for our defence. But who told them that we were in danger? ... We are a people who wish to live in friendship, Peace and independence with our neighbours and the whole world."

Canada

In recent months representatives of some half-a-million trade unionists in Canada have expressed a desire to see negotiations take place between the leading Powers.

The outstanding example was the resolution passed at the Convention of the Canadian Congress of Labour, representing 375,000 workers, calling for Big Power talks.

Similarly, the Annual Convention of the Independent Federation of Labour, the TUC of British Columbia (70,000 members) and the Seventeenth Annual Convention of the International Woodworkers of America (CIO) have demanded a Big Five meeting.

Argentina

The Buenos Aires Peace Conference, held on December 20th, 1953 and attended by 300 delegates representing the people of 21 boroughs of the capital, marked the beginning of a series of local and regional Peace Conferences.

In its resolution the Conference calls on the people of Buenos Aires to fight for the protection of the national economy, for the reduction of war expenditure below its present level of 42 % of the budget and against the military pacts which tie the Argentine to the USA.

Regional Conferences also took place in the provinces of Buenos Aires and Santa Fé.

Uruguay

The campaign for peaceful negotiations is having marked success. "Popular Assemblies," convoked by the local Peace Committees, are being held in various districts of Montevideo. Eight hundred took part in the "Buena Vista" Assembly, 400 in the "Reconquista y Brecha," 300 in those of the "Nueva Paris," the "La Cruz y Camino Carrasco" cross-roads and the "Triunfo y Timote" and so on. Similar meetings have been held at factory gates, for example A.N.C.A.P., the "Aurora" in Uruguayana, and "Fertex."

Uruguayan notabilities, such as Señor Carlos Maria Gurmendez, lawyer and former diplomat, and Lincoln Bizzozero, have made public declarations very close to those of the National Peace Council on the subject of the US-Uruguay Bilateral Military Pact.

Nicaragua

More than a hundred Nicaraguayan notabilities have issued a manifesto for Peace.

The signatories describe themselves as Conservatives, Left and Centre Liberals, workers of all trades, agricultural workers, artists, students, barristers, writers, teachers, tradesmen, believers and laymen.

BULLETIN OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

INFORMATION BULLETIN PUBLISHED BY THE SECRETARIAT OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

No 10 MAY 1954

Demand without Delay an International Agreement Banning Weapons of Mass Destruction

On the threshold of 1954 the peoples had good reasons for hoping for a genuine relaxation of international tension, since there had just been a series of specific happenings favourable to the easing of tension. But recent events have shown once more that the ruling circles, whose whole strategy is based on a policy of strength, have no intention of giving way before the progress which has been made towards a considerable lessening of international tension.

The dramatic atomic explosion of Bikini on March 1st was followed, on March 26th and April 6th, by two further experiments, the consequences of which were even more unpredictable. This in spite of the many victims contaminated by radioactive ash as a result of the first explosion and in spite of the fact that it was universally condemned. Not in these inhuman experiments only, but also in recent official declarations renewing the threat to use the atomic bomb, the H bomb is brandished over the heads of the peoples like a modern sword of Damocles — a permanent threat to the Peace of the world.

But this blackmail by fear has suddenly awakened the conscience of still more millions of men and women throughout the world. In its Declaration, adopted on March 30th at its meeting in Vienna, the Bureau of the World Council, reflecting the general indignation, pointed out that the banning of weapons of mass destruction was now demanded by all peoples.

Great scientists have considered it their duty to give the world a solemn warning. The American physicist, Albert Einstein, had already given a first warning to the incredulous. In a recent public statement, Professor Joliot-Curie warned public opinion once again of the terrible danger of such experiments for the whole of mankind; they cannot even be controlled by those who are carrying them out. He pointed out that mankind can no longer tolerate the danger of atomic weapons but must urgently demand the signing of an international convention for the prohibition, under control, of weapons of mass destruction.

There is growing world-wide protest. The Japanese Chamber of Deputies unanimously passed a motion, for presentation to the United Nations, demanding the prohibition of atomic weapons and the use of nuclear energy for peaceful ends. The Indian Government has asked the United Nations to examine Prime Minister Nehru's proposal that experimental explosions should be stopped immediately and that there should be immediate discussion of an agreement to this end in the Disarmament Commission. The House of Commons unanimously adopted a Labour motion demanding a British initiative for a Conference between the heads of State of the USA, the Soviet Union and Great Britain on atomic questions and the reduction of armaments. In his Easter message, the Pope stated: "For our part, we will tirelessly endeavour to bring about, by means of international agreements — always in subordination to the principle of legitimate self-defence — the effective proscription and elimination of atomic, biological and chemical warfare."

Thus statesmen, great organisations and responsible authorities are today having to take up the solutions which the World Peace Movement has been putting forward for five years. This fact gives the people a further proof of the clearsightedness of the Peace Movement.

Before the danger threatening the very existence of man and civilisation an unprecedented wave of feeling has swept over the world. Also without precedent are the opportunities for a united effort for our common salvation. The World Peace Movement, which launched the Stockholm Appeal, is today playing its full part in this effort.

What the Press is saying...

The Geneva Conference is rousing considerable interest. In spite of reservations here and there, the following excerpts from the Press reflect the public desire that the negotiations result in a peaceful settlement of Asian questions.

What Asia hopes of Geneva is that it will show a Western world willing to admit the existence of, and the necessity to live with, Communist nations.

THE OBSERVER, April 25th

The negotiations will be long in any case... If they fail there will, no doubt, be others. In this sense, and as paradoxical as it may appear, the Geneva Conference will doubtless, in the long run, mark a stage on the road to pacification rather than the starting-point of increased tension.

The vital mission of the Chinese delegation will consist in helping to achieve a peaceful settlement of the Korean question and the restoration of peace in Indo-China...

Dulles' plan for a unified action in Indo-China in the event of failure of the Geneva Conference is regarded by political circles in New Delhi as hardly likely to help in the conclusion of a Far Eastern settlement at the forthcoming Five Power talks.

The views expressed by the Labour Members in the British Parliament are widely shared in the capital. India is inherently opposed to cold-war military alliances such as the new South East Asia security pact being mooted by the United States...

As far back as October, 1950, Nehru... had stated that India believed that any such move was not a right one.

And if it is true that Mr. Dulles is asking, on the eve of the Geneva conference, for threats to be made that might risk extending the war in Indo-China, then it must be made plain to him that the British people will not agree.

It would be unthinkable for Britain to agree to anyhingt that would wreck negotiations on Korea and Indo-China. Geneva is no pawn in politics.

The peace-loving peoples expect the Geneva Conference to take concrete steps to restore peace in Indo-China and the national rights of its peoples. Demand without delay an international agreement banning weapons of mass destruction

Already, particular actions have been taken. The Conference of the British Peace Committee launched an appeal asking the British Government to take the initiative in calling a meeting of the Five Great Powers with a view to the prohibition of all atomic weapons. The Swedish Peace Committee has taken similar action and appeals for great public campaigns have been launched by the American Peace Crusade and the Canadian Peace Congress. The Italian national committee has sent "to every Peace Committee, to every Defender of Peace" an appeal dealing with the particular responsibility of the Peace Movement at such a time.

These actions are part of the current world campaign for an easing of tension. Together with the many activities in other fields for the solution of the great issues dividing the world, they constitute an important contribution to the present talks between the Great Powers at the Geneva Conference which has just opened.

World Public Opinion Demands

THE BANNING OF WEAPONS OF MASS DESTRUCTION

In all countries there is a growing number of actions and statements in favour of the absolute banning of atomic and hydrogen bombs and other weapons of mass destruction.

The few examples given below show that the worldwide protest is growing broader and broader.

"THE BOMB IS A GROSS MISUSE OF SCIENCE"

At a Press Conference in New Delhi Major-General Sir Sahib Singh Sokhey, Vice-President of the All India Peace Council, declared:

"As soon as President Truman gave the directive to work to produce the Hydrogen Bomb, Albert Einstein declared:

"'The Hydrogen Bomb appears on the public horizon as a probably attainable goal . . . If successful, radio-active poisoning of the atmosphere and hence annihilation of any life on earth, has been brought within the range of technical possibilities.'

"It is a success, and we have already seen signs of that grave danger to all life . . .

"Scientific work done in the fission of the uranium atoms had great justification. The uranium atoms can be split under controlled conditions and thus become a rich source of energy for work of construction. There is no doubt that before long nuclear fission is going to play a great role in making this world really into a paradise.

"The use of atomic fission for destructive purposes as a bomb is a gross misuse of science. But in the case of the H-Bomb, the scientific process developed can serve no useful purpose at all. The fusion of hydrogen into helium cannot be carried out as a controlled process to yield usable power. The H-Bomb can be used only to destroy man and his civilisation and upset the balance of nature . . ."

PARTIES AND ORGANISATIONS

In Great Britain, the Scottish TUC unanimously adopted a resolution demanding the banning of atomic weapons in Aberdeen on April 9th.

The National Union of Miners – membership 700,000 – decided to call upon the United Nations to outlaw these weapons.

In the USA, the representatives of the miners', engineers' and foundrymen's trade unions demand, in a resolution, that immediate steps be taken to conclude an international agreement on the banning of atomic weapons.

In Denmark, the Union of Democratic Women adopted a resolution asking the Danish Government to make its own contribution to stopping these experiments.

The Council of the International Association of Democratic Lawyers, which will meet in Copenhagen, June 5th – 7th, has put on the agenda "experiments with weapons of mass destruction in the light of International Law."

In Sweden, the leadership of the Social Democratic Party has published a statement insisting on the need to make "supreme efforts to reach an agreement binding the signatories to work out an effective control of atomic energy."

PETITIONS, DELEGATIONS AND MEETINGS

In India, the All India Peace Council organised a meeting in New Delhi on April 9th to support the demand for the banning of atomic and hydrogen bombs. The chairman was Dr. Kitchlew, President of the All India Peace Council.

In Japan, a delegation of the Council of Japanese Women, which includes members of the Socialist Party, women's organisations and trade unionists, handed to all diplomatic legations in Tokio a petition demanding the banning of all atomic weapons. This was on April 5th.

The inaugural assembly of the Youth Section of the Association of Japanese Peasants issued a moving message:

"The Japanese people, which has thrice suffered from the atomic bomb, calls on the whole world to prevent the manufacture of these inhuman bombs."

In Germany, in two cantons of the German Democratic Republic which had been heavily devastated during the war, petitions were organised against the stationing of batteries of atomic cannon in West Germany.

In the Federal Republic, many local sections of the Social Democratic Party and many trade unions have also demanded that the atomic cannon be taken away.

POPE PIUS XII

". . . Before the eyes of a terrified world there is presented a preview of gigantic destruction, of extensive territories rendered uninhabitable and unfit for human use, over and above the biological consequences that can result, either by the changes brought about in germs and micro-organisms, or through the uncertain effect which a prolonged radioactive stimulus can have upon greater organisms, including man, and upon their future offspring.

"In this connection we do not wish to omit a reference to the danger that could result for future generations from mutagenic intervention – obtainable, or perhaps already obtained, by new means for the purpose of deviating the patrimony of man's hereditary factors from their natural development.

And this also for the reason that among such deviations there probably are not lacking, or would not be lacking, those pathogenic mutations which are the causes of transmittable diseases and monstrosities.

For our part, we will tirelessly endeavour to bring about, by means of international agreements – always in subordination to the principle of legitimate self-defence – the effective proscription and prevention of atomic, biological and chemical warfare."

MINISTERS AND PUBLIC FIGURES

In Australia, Mr. Herbert Evatt, leader of the Labour Party and former President of the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission, has urged an international agreement to put atomic weapons under strict control.

In Canada, Mr. Lester Pearson, Minister and former President of the United Nations General Assembly, stated that the horror of the H-bomb requires international action to prevent the use of atomic weapons in case of war.

In Egypt, Mr. Fawzi, Minister of Foreign Affairs, stated to the Press that Egypt disapproved of the hydrogen bomb.

In Indonesia, Mr. Ali Sastroamidjojo, leader of the Government, demanded that these explosions, which endanger mankind, should be stopped.

ELECTED ASSEMBLIES

In Germany, members of the Presiding body of the People's Chamber of the German Democratic Republic have suggested to the Federal Parliament in Bonn that the two Parliaments should take a joint decision for the banning of weapons of mass destruction. This proposal had wide repercussions throughout Germany. Practically the entire Press of the Federal Republic said that it corresponds to the public desire.

In Switzerland, the Grand Council of the Republic and the Canton of Geneva adopted a resolution asking "that the Governments of all the Powers agree to outlaw weapons of mass destruction and preserve mankind from an unprecedented catastrophe."

Valuable discussion between East and West Germans

The appeal issued by a number of public figures in the German Federal Republic for a referendum of the whole German people on the question: "EDC or a Peace Treaty?" has just won the support of many dignitaries of the Catholic and Evangelical Churches.

As he signed the appeal, Pastor J. Heinrich Wicke, of Braunschweig, defined his position thus:

"We want to take the defence of our interests into our own hands and not to fail in our responsibility to the whole world. We want to make up our minds freely. If ever a people was confronted with a question to which it can and must give a direct reply, it is this question: A Peace Treaty or a military alliance? To this clear question, our reply is equally clear: 'We want Peace!'"

It should be remembered that the appeal for the referendum was issued after the Berlin Conference of Foreign Ministers by an important group of public figures in the German Federal Republic, holding widely differing political and ideological views.

On April 11th, 50,000 pilgrims, most of them former deported persons, met at the Buchenwald concentration camp. They represented twelve countries: France, Belgium, Luxembourg, Holland, Italy, Austria, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Rumania, Denmark, the Soviet Union and Germany. During a ceremony presided over by M. Forcinal, Radical-Socialist Deputy and former French Minister, who had been deported to Buchenwald, the 50,000 pilgrims swore a solemn oath from which the following passage is taken:

"We swear to prevent the murderers and their leaders and masters from getting back their arms to attack and enslave the peoples."

In the German Democratic Republic, the tasks of the Peace Movement following on the Berlin Conference were discussed at 229 regional peace conferences attended by 52,000 people and prepared for in 13,120 public meetings.

The information bulletin of the German Peace Council announces that hundreds of similar discussions, attended by visitors from West Germany, take place every month.

The president of the West German Peace Committee, Frau Hoereth-Menge, spoke at Leipzig, Nordhausen and Grimma in the German Democratic Republic; while Dr. Hans Wiedemann, Mayor of Weimar, Christian Democratic Deputy in the People's Chamber and Chairman of the Erfurt district Peace Committee, gave lectures in Stuttgart, Heidelberg, Karlsruhe and so on in the Federal Republic.

Replying to birthday greetings received from Germany, Professor Joliot-Curie, President of the World Council of Peace, wrote a letter to all friends of Peace in Germany. In it he said:

"The action of the German people for Peace, in the German Democratic Republic and — under different conditions — in the Federal Republic, is one of the most important factors for the prevention of a third world war. In this action, lasting friendship between the peoples of Europe — and more especially between the peoples of Germany and France — is being achieved."

The people of Poland want A REAL EUROPE

A National Conference of the Polish Defenders of Peace took place in Warsaw on April 7th. It adopted an appeal to the Peace Movements of the countries of Western Europe. The following are some excerpts from the appeal:

"The Polish people do not want a divided Europe. They want a united Europe . . .

"The peoples of Europe have no more important task than that of preventing the revival of German militarism . . .

"We are profoundly convinced that there are real possibilities for the creation of a real Europe which would exist in peace and friendly co-operation. A European system uniting the peoples irrespective of their differing political regimes should be the goal of our joint efforts."

The Conference also passed a resolution demanding the conclusion of an agreement banning the use of atomic and hydrogen weapons and all other weapons of mass destruction, with international control over this ban.

The campaign against EDC in Italy

The session of the National Committee of the Italian Defenders of Peace, which was held in Rome on April 1st and 2nd, gave an impressive picture of activity against EDC.

Through its varied activities, ranging from petitions and demonstrations to the lawyers' debate on the constitutional aspects of the treaty, the campaign for the rejection of EDC has won the support of federalists, magistrates, reserve officers of the army and politicians of all parties.

Typical are the demonstrations in Florence, Arezzo, La Spezia; the debates in Modena, Aosta, Palermo, Cagliari and Naples; the women's regional conference in Veneto.

Genoa had a "Week of Mobilisation Against EDC". In Cosenza, there was a public debate attended by Members of Parliament and leaders of the Social Democratic, Liberal, Christian Democratic, Monarchist, Socialist and Communist Parties.

In a report on the Conference of Members of Parliament and public figures of the six countries affected by EDC (Paris, March 20th—21st), Sg. Ricardo Lombardi, Member of Parliament and member of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace, pointed out that, in Great Britain, opposition to EDC is growing in Labour circles, while in France it is gaining ground in Socialist, Radical and Gaullist circles. The Italian people, therefore, have new reasons for pursuing their activity with confidence.

The National Committee also dealt with the grave question of thermo-nuclear weapons.

Dom Andrea Gaggero and Sg. Emilio Sereni, Senator and member of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace, spoke on this subject and concluded that the Defenders of Peace must approach the Catholic masses and the ecclesiastical hierarchy to get joint action for the prohibition of weapons of mass destruction.

The National Committee's appeal met with an immediate response. One of the most significant public demonstrations was the visit to the United States Consulate of a delegation representing the the 12,000 tramway employees of Milan. The delegation handed the Consul a petition bearing the signatures of the representatives of the three trade unions.

In Pesaro, General Pacca, a Christian Democratic municipal councillor, succeeded in getting a municipal council motion demanding the prohibition of weapons of mass destruction to demand an international agreement on disarmament as well. Many other town councils have passed similar motions. Well-known scientists like Professor Fransinetti, a nuclear physicist, and Professor Veronese, a physicist in the University of Bologna, are taking part in many meetings and lectures condemning thermonuclear weapons and demanding their prohibition.

NATIONAL DEMONSTRATION FOR INDEPENDENCE AND PEACE

In an appeal to the French people the French Peace Movement states:

"The French people, bowed down by military expenditure, see today that recourse to violence, intimidation and threats to use atomic weapons have only increased the feeling of insecurity in the world. They understand that security is not possible without negotiation and agreement between all States. They know that France could play a vital role if she became once again mistress of her own decisions and regained the freedom to take measures for peace.

"There are two vital tasks directly incumbent on her:

The final rejection of the Bonn and Paris Agreements.

The restoration of peace in Indo-China...

"On the eve of the grave decisions to be reached by Parliament each c tizen must realise that the existence and future of our country depend on the united action of Frenchmen for Peace.

"We call on all French men and women to support the 'National Demonstration for Independence and Peace' on June 12th and 13th."

GREAT BRITAIN:

Growing opposition in Labour Movement to German rearmament

In Blackpool on April 19th, the Annual Congress of the Co-operative Party condemned the remilitarisation of Germany in any shape or form. The resolution was passed by 5,092,000 votes to 2,410,000.

On the same day, the annual conferences of two important trade union organisations, the Union of Shop, Distributive and Allied Workers and the Confederation of Shipbuilding and Engineering Workers, passed similar resolutions.

In a resolution adopted at its annual conference, the Union of Shipbuilding and Engineering Draughtsmen, the most important group of British technicians, states that it is resolutely opposed to German rearmament.

In a resolution passed by 7,700 votes to 2,400, the Northern Ireland Labour Party asks the British Labour Party to prevent the rearmament of West Germany.

Twenty Labour MPs have signed a petition against German rearmament which is to be presented to Parliament on June 15th. This petition is sponsored by Mr. Aneurin Bevan, leader of the left wing of the Labour Party, Lord Boyd Orr, Nobel Peace Prize winner, the Reverend Donald Soper, president of the Methodist Conference and Mr. Harold Wilson, former Minister in the Labour Government.

The British Peace Committee is supporting and taking part in this campaign.

YOUNG EUROPEANS meet and unite AGAINST EDC

During March there were meetings of young Italians in preparation for the "Youth Conference of the Countries Affected by EDC" to be held in Berlin on May 15th-16th. It was initiated by young Frenchmen and Germans of widely differing opinions.

In Padua, the Rector of the University took part in a meeting, on March 22nd, which was attended by 2,000 young Socialists, Liberals and Christians. The meeting was organised by the Italian Socialist Youth, as was another which was held in Reggio d'Emilia on March 14th and which was also very successful.

In Rome, boys and girls are collecting signatures on rainbow-coloured flags "to prevent the return of the Germans." The flags are taken from house to house, to groups of young people, to cafés, stadiums and schools.

In Milan, there was a debate on the theme: "The Young People's Attitude to EDC." It was attended by young Liberals, Social Democrats, Socialists and Communists.

Youth delegates from Poland, Czechoslovakia and Germany met in Jelenia (Poland) on March 28th.

The meeting, which was held in preparation for the Berlin Conference against EDC, sent messages to the youth organisations of France, Great Britain, Belgium and Italy.

The Free Austrian Youth issued an appeal to young people to take part in the Berlin Conference, and on April 10th, in Vienna, many young people took part in a torchlight procession to demonstrate their opposition to EDC.

On April 11th, the delegates of French and German youth met in Strasbourg and adopted a resolution calling on the young people of the two countries to oppose EDC. Three delegates were elected to represent those present at the meeting at the Berlin Conference.

The Belgian Union for Peace issues a Manifesto

The most important Belgian newspapers, "Le Soir", "Le Peuple" and "La Libre Belgique" published the resolution adopted at the conference of the six countries affected by EDC which took place in Paris on March 20th and 21st.

The Belgian Union for Peace issued a manifesto calling on the Belgian people to strengthen the French and Italian peoples' opposition to EDC by supporting the resolution adopted at the Paris Conference.

The Belgian delegation to this Conference was composed of M. Hubaux, university professor, M. Rolin, Senator and M. Slusny, barrister - both members of the Socialist Movement for Peace - M. Terfve, Communist Deputy, and Mme Isabelle Blume, Deputy and Secretary of the World Council of Peace.

CELEBRATION IN VIENNA O
OF THE P

Members of the Secretariat of the World Council of Peace and of the Austrian Peace Council were on the platform.

On April 23rd a meeting was held in the Musikverein Hall in Vienna to commemorate the Fifth Anniversary of the World Peace Movement. Members of the Secretariat of the World Council of Peace and of the Austrian Peace Council, as well as diplomats, journalists, and political and cultural figures, were present. Professor Heinrich Brandweiner, President of the Austrian Peace Council, and M. Jean Laffitte, General Secretary of the World Council of Peace, made speeches of which excerpts are given below:

Professor Brandweiner
President of the Austrian Peace Council

"The World Peace Movement was born on April 20th, 1949, when 2,200 men and women from 71 countries met in Paris and Prague to discuss together measures for maintaining world peace and international security. This first World Peace Congress in the history of mankind was the result of the spontaneous demand of a great number of men and women in many countries of the world, both East and West, who, quite independently of one another, decided to make a stand four years after the second world war because they did not want to see us land in another catastrophe . . .

"The Austrian people play their part in this great world movement which serves the cause of the maintenance of life on Earth. On July 10th, 1950, an Austrian Peace Congress took place in Vienna and elected the first Austrian Peace Council. Since then, our country and the World Peace Movement have been united by many bonds and by the great watchwords of the World Peace Movement. The conviction that the peaceful coexistence of different political and social systems is possible; the principle of eliminating differences by negotiation and agreements acceptable to all; and, lastly, the right of the peoples to self-determination, have more and more become the common property of all peace-loving citizens in our country . . ."

After reading the exchange of letters between the Austrian Peace Council and the Secretariat of the World Council of Peace inviting the latter to transfer its headquarters to Vienna, Professor Brandweiner continued:

"I think I am expressing the opinion of all of you when I thank the Secretariat of the World Council of Peace warmly and sincerely for its decision. I thank it on behalf of all the peace-loving people in our country. This decision will become part of the history of our dear city of Vienna, a history which goes back to the time of the Romans. Ad multos annos!"

M. Jean Laffitte
General Secretary of the World Council of Peace

"We thank the Austrian Peace Council very sincerely for having organised this ceremony, thus enabling us to celebrate this anniversary with you in Vienna. And since this event coincides with the installation of the Secretariat of the World Council in your capital, allow us, in thanking you once more for the welcome you have given us, to greet, through you, all forces which are taking action for Peace in Austria . . .

Today, the World Council of Peace has the confidence of hundreds of millions of men and has become an active force. Under the presidency of Professor Joliot-Curie, the World Council, which is the highest expression of the Movement, has become an international institution whose authority and influence are continually growing. It is based on National Peace Movements which now exist in 72 countries. It has the active support of great international democratic organisations. It maintains cordial and ever closer relations with widely differing organisations and forces in the political, social, cultural and religious fields which are taking action for Peace. Its acts and appeals meet with a response, not only among the widest sections of the people, but also in the Parliaments and Governments . . .

The World Peace Movement is five years old and we are now in a position to appreciate the correctness and success of its efforts. If it had not existed, if there had been none of the popular activity and concentrated effort to which its appeals have given rise, events could have taken a quite different course in these last tense years. The existence of the Movement was the determining factor in rousing universal condemnation of the use of the atom bomb and the continuation of wars now going on; in getting public opinion to demand solutions which would ease tension; and in the demand that the Great Powers meet in order to reach a peaceful settlement, on the basis of agreements acceptable to all, of the great issues dividing the world . . .

The existence and development of the World Peace Movement have greatly helped to rally the forces which, up till now, have kept war at bay. Its strengthening in every country remains, therefore, the vital condition for a further advance. The commemoration of the Fifth Anniversary of the Movement is naturally connected with this aim, so that, thanks to the joint efforts of all men of peace, the opportunities for an easing of tension, which can be seen today, shall become the reality of tomorrow."

After the speeches, representatives of the provincial Peace Committees of Austria presented gifts to the Secretariat of the World Council of Peace.

The evening ended with a fine concert Compositions by Gluck, Mozart, Schubert, Goldmark and Beethoven were performed by the orchestra and choir of the Vienna Radio.

OF THE FIFTH ANNIVERSARY PEACE MOVEMENT

Letter from the Austrian Peace Council to the Secretariat of the World Council of Peace

To the Secretariat of the World Council of Peace

Dear Friends,

The Presiding Committee of the Austrian Peace Council has done me the honour of asking me to invite you to make the city of Vienna the permanent headquarters of the Secretariat of the World Council of Peace.

It was during the unforgettable Congress of the Peoples, held in our city in December, 1952, that, for the first time, the Austrian Peace Council expressed this desire: Could not our city of Vienna, which, henceforth, is indissolubly linked with the movement of the peoples for Peace, be the place where the permanent Secretariat of that great body – the World Council of Peace – could fulfil its noble tasks in the service of Peace?

The Austrian people have always loved Peace; they have proved it many times during their history. Our people's legitimate desire to help in the safeguarding of peace became even stronger as a result of the sufferings imposed on them by aggressive German militarism and the Second World War. Is it not therefore natural that our people should desire to do everything possible to help guarantee World Peace? If, as we hope, our cordial invitation is accepted by the Secretariat of the World Council of Peace, the very fact that the Secretariat will henceforth have its seat in our capital will create new bonds between our people and the World Peace Movement which is serving the noblest aims of mankind.

For centuries the city of Vienna has been the meeting-place of the various cultural trends of the North, South, East and West of Europe. Artists and scientists from the whole of Europe have sought and found understanding in Vienna.

May our city of Vienna be a centre worthy of your responsible work for the maintenance of Peace.

For the Austrian Peace Council,

Professor Heinrich Brandweiner,

President

Letter from the Secretariat of the World Council to the Austrian Peace Council

The Secretariat of the World Council of Peace sent the following reply to the Austrian Peace Council:

To the Oesterreichischer Friedensrat,

Austria

Dear Friends,

The Secretariat of the World Council of Peace is very happy to give a favourable reply to the friendly invitation of the Presiding Committee of the Austrian Peace Council.

The Secretariat of the World Council of Peace has already had several occasions to appreciate the Austrian people's desire for Peace. It remembers the warm welcome given by the people of Vienna to the thousands of delegates to the Congress of the Peoples for Peace. It was in Vienna that the representatives of all the peoples showed that it was possible, in spite of all differences of opinion, to meet and find solutions acceptable to all for every issue endangering the peace of the world.

We salute the tireless efforts of the Austrian Peace Movement to bring together – whatever their political, philosophical or religious views – all men and women who are aware of the danger and want to take common action in defence of the noblest of causes: Peace and friendship between all peoples.

We thank the President of the Austrian Peace Council for his cordial invitation.

With deep and sincere friendship.

For the Secretariat of the World Council of Peace,

Jean Laffitte,

General Secretary

Important actions in India against the US-Pakistan Pact

Throughout India energetic campaigns are developing against the conclusion of the US-Pakistan military pact. Many important organisations and people are taking part.

On April 11th, the Conference of the Peoples of Southern India took place in Madras. Six States – Madras, Andhra, Hyderabad, Mysore, Coorg and Travancore-Cochin – were represented.

The Conference had been prepared by a committee including members of all parties and such eminent figures as Sri. Subbaroyan, former Prime Minister of Madras, and Sri. Mohamed Usman, former Governor of Madras.

Public figures from different parties took part in the work of the Conference, including several members of the Legislative Assembly: Sri. Varadarajalu Naidu (Congress Party); Sri. Anthony Pillay (Socialist); Sri. Ramaswami Padagachi (Workers' Party); and Sri. Jeesanandam (Communist).

In West Bengal, whose Eastern frontier marches with East Pakistan, representatives of all political parties and various organisations are playing an active part in the campaign against the US-Pakistan pact. So are well-known figures in the political and cultural fields.

Two members of the Legislative Assembly, Sri. Gupta and Sri. Naren Sen, are also taking part in the campaign, as well as trade unionists — Sri. Kali Mukherjee, leader of the National Trade Union Confederation of India — and writers and artists, including Sri. Sashin Sen Gupta, playwright, and Sri. Manoje Basu, writer.

Repercussions of the Beirut Conference in the Middle East

The Syrian and Lebanese representatives on the Executive Committee elected by the Conference in Defence of the Rights of the Peoples of the Middle East (Beirut, December 17th - 19th, 1953) met together in Damascus at the beginning of April. They issued a statement condemning the Pakistan-Turkey pact, the attempts to bring Iraq into it and the plans for a US-Lebanese bilateral treaty.

At the same time the delegates noted the profound repercussions of the Beirut Conference among the peoples of the Middle East.

It should be remembered that the programme set out by the Conference demands the rejection of all treaties, pacts or military blocs which would threaten the peace and security of the peoples of the Middle East, and the solution of all international controversies and issues by peaceful means, on the basis of respect for the independence and sovereignty of the peoples.

Iraq

Petitions supporting this programme have been signed by more than 6,000 people. 4,500 signatures had been collected in Baghdad by the end of March. The representatives of the students of seven faculties and 13 secondary schools signed the petitions.

The Lebanon

In the Lebanon the campaign took different forms: meetings, articles in the Press, but also petitions. In the Southern part of the country 40 public figures of differing views stated their agreement with the Conference proposals and 400 peasants signed a petition to the same effect. At a public meeting in Akkar, Yacub Saaraf, former Deputy, explained the importance of the Conference and its decisions.

Syria

Many meetings have been held in the agricultural region of Alauites and also in centres like Bdada, Aïn al Jorn and Aïn Dabesh.

The Peace Movement has issued a manifesto against the Pakistan-USA pact. It has been signed by Sheikh Mohamed al Ashmar, popular leader and religious figure, member of the World Council of Peace; Hussein Mreiwed, barrister, Deputy; Munir Rayes, owner of the newspaper, "Barada", and member of the Executive Committee of the Beirut Conference; Sabri Kabbani, and so on.

Jordan

The Deputies Abdul Kader al Saleh, Kadri Tukan, Rashad Masudi, Kamel Erekat, Abdul Rahim Irar and 28 other persons, including tribal chiefs, barristers, doctors, writers and journalists, issued an appeal which ends with these words:

"In opposing the Pakistan-Turkey pact and deciding to bring it to nought, our people are fighting to save their life, liberty and sovereignty."

Iran

The newspaper "Mardom" reflected the support given to the decisions of the Beirut Conference by the people of Iran.

Furthermore, the Lebanese Press published the following telegram from Turkey, which had been signed by 84 people:

"We students from Iraq, Syria, the Lebanon, Jordan and Iran, of different opinions, religions and nationalities, studying at the Turkish University, support all the decisions of the Conference in Defence of the Rights of the Peoples of the Middle East, held in Beirut on December 17th - 19th, 1953, for they correctly reflect the legitimate aspirations of our peoples . . ."

Vietnamese workers support the Geneva Conference

The Viet-Nam General Confederation of Labour has appealed to all Vietnamese workers to close their ranks, energetically fulfil their present tasks and tirelessly expose US imperialist manoeuvring as their contribution to the success of the forthcoming Geneva Conference.

The appeal, issued by the Confederation's Standing Committee, describes the Vietnamese workers' anger at the increasingly cynical interference in the Indo-China war by the Americans.

The Confederation's appeal, which is published in response to the May Day call of the World Federation of Trade Unions, adds that US interference in Indo-China has been going on for a long time and has been particularly marked since the US defeat in Korea. The US Government is now paying 78 per cent of the expenditure of the Indo-China war.

Growing National Unity in the Struggle for Peace in Japan

The Congress for the Geneva Conference and for the International Meeting was held in Tokio, on April 18th – 20th. The statement by the eminent figures who called the Congress, says:

"There can be no guarantee of peace in Asia and a peaceful life for the people of Japan unless relations between Japan and the Soviet Union, Japan and China, and Japan and Korea are normalised."

After stressing the danger of the H-bomb to civilisation, the statement goes on:

"Fortunately, there is at present a world force which, overcoming many difficulties, is leading the way towards negotiation for international Peace."

It then says:

"The Japanese people have the right and duty to express the peaceful aspirations of 85,000,000 Japanese and especially to give their opinion on the correct solution of the Japanese question and the prohibition of the terrible weapons of mass destruction."

The work of the Congress was divided among five commissions which were asked to make suggestions:

1. Commission to make proposals to the Geneva Conference to ensure its success.

2. Commission on the prohibition of the H-bomb and of thermo-nuclear experiments.

3. Commission on the normalisation of commercial and diplomatic relations between Japan and the USSR and between Japan and China.

4. Commission to intensify action against the Mutual Security Pact and for the protection of the Constitution.

5. Commission on Japanese participation in the International Meeting.

The following were elected as Chairmen of this Congress: Professor Tetsuhiko Tozawa, member of the World Council of Peace; Mr. Gengo Kinoshita, Member of Parliament of the Left Wing Socialist Party; Mr. Miyanohara, Secretary of SOHYO (Federation of Trade Unions); and Mr. Kesaichi Ito, secretary of the Society for the Promotion of Trade between the Soviet Union and Japan.

Among the principal speakers were: Mr. Tetsu Katayama, former Prime Minister and leader of the Right Wing Socialist Party; Mr. Akira Kazami, initiator of the Congress, Deputy and president of the preparatory committee of the "National Conference for the Normalisation of Diplomatic and Commercial Relations between Japan and the Soviet Union and Japan and China"; Mr. Masanosuke Ikeda, Deputy belonging to the section of the Liberal Party which is opposed to the Yoshida Government; Mr. Shigeyoshi Matsumae, Right Wing Socialist Party Deputy; Mr. Toshio Tanaka, Deputy; Mr. Kanemitsu Hososeko, Deputy; and Mr. Shishiro Hozumi, Deputy. The last three are all members of the Left Wing Socialist Party.

Thus all Japanese political parties, with the exception of the wing of the Liberal Party which is in power, were represented at the Congress.

THE WORLD CONFERENCE OF PACIFISTS

The World Conference of Pacifists was held in Tokio on April 1st – 3rd. It adopted a resolution to the peoples, the Governments and the United Nations suggesting that the manufacture and testing of hydrogen and atom bombs be stopped. The resolution included two points:

The destruction of existing stocks;

The use of atomic research in the service of mankind.

The Conference also urged the immediate ending of the war in Indo-China, the withdrawal of foreign troops from Korea and Indo-China, and the solution of the Korean and Indo-Chinese questions by negotiation.

Koreans Demand Unification

At many meetings and gatherings the Korean people are demonstrating more ardently than ever their determination to put an early end to the division of Korea.

"The division of Korea", writes "Nodong Sinmun", organ of the Korean Nodong Dang, in an editorial, "represents a big hurdle to Korea's political, economic and cultural development. It threatens peace in Asia and keeps the world in a tense situation."

At all their meetings, the Korean people are protesting against the forces who are preventing the unification of Korea and keeping it in a state of perpetual division. They hope that the delegates of the Five Big Powers and other interested nations which take part in the conference will work for the unification of Korea through negotiation and turn the Korean armistice into a lasting peace, with due respect for the desire of the Korean people.

American Peace Crusade calls for Peace in Indo-China and the banning of the Hydrogen Bomb

On April 8th, the Resident Board of the American Peace Crusade called for the greatest possible outpouring of expression in every form from the American people demanding an end of all H-bomb tests and a pledge that such weapons will not be used pending international agreement to outlaw them.

The Board warned of the peril to the American people growing out of increasing United States involvement in the war in Indo-China. The lives of thousands of American boys are in danger, the Board said, and there is a serious threat that if the power of the United States is used to prolong or expand this war, it may become the trigger of an H-bomb war which would visit terrible destruction on our nation. The Board called for an end of US involvement in Indo-China and urged that the United States Government seek a speedy cease-fire there and a peaceful settlement of the conflict at the Great Power Conference in Geneva on April 26th.

After insisting on the need to send letters, telegrams and resolutions to President Eisenhower and Mr. Foster Dulles and to organise deputations to Congressmen and Senators, the Board declared that the great strength throughout the world of the desire for a relaxation of international tensions had resulted in the agreement of the Four Great Powers in Berlin to meet with the People's Republic of China on April 26th in Geneva. The Board urged widespread support of the Geneva Conference to end the war in Indo-China and to assure peace in Korea and throughout Asia.

Another action by the board called for early public hearings and favourable action by the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations on Senator Langer's resolution SCR 71, reaffirming the Constitutional authority of Congress alone to declare war and thereby limiting the danger of the people of the United States being drawn into war without their consent.

At the Cannes Festival:

Film experts demand more international co-operation

The peaceful international competition of the Seventh Film Festival at Cannes gave the film-makers of the world the opportunity to meet and exchange views on their most important ideas.

The need for international co-operation to protect the art of film-making and to ensure its development, the role which it can and must play in the establishment of lasting bonds of friendship and profitable exchange between the peoples – these were the ideas that came out at this meeting of the film world.

That, for example, was the meaning of the message to the French which was handed to the Festival delegates by a group of young Japanese film makers before their film was presented. This idea was also behind the Conference of Film Institutes, initiated by Marcel l'Herbier, at which Italy, the Soviet Union, France, Poland, Hungary and an American school were represented.

It was also with the aim of developing international contacts between all professional film-makers that the "R" Committee, which includes almost all French producers – H. G. Clouzot, René Clair, René Clément, Marcel Carné and the "Association of Film and Television Critics" – took advantage of the presence at Cannes of the greatest producers, actors and critics to invite them to "raise and discuss, in meetings and debates, the problems of co-operation between the film industries of different countries."

The invitation to these discussions, which was signed by Jean Cocteau, Henri Calef, André Cayatte, Jacques Daniel-Norman and André Bazin, said:

"We propose to take, as the theme of these meetings, the remarks made by René Clair and Vittorio de Sica in 1951: A formula must be found enabling French and Italian films to preserve the authentic national character which, in the past, won them international success."

Sixty film-makers and journalists from ten countries responded to this appeal and signed a document in which, after pointing out that "the film art is unquestionably a medium of expression of human thought" and that it is too often restricted, they "condemn these attacks on principles which are the very foundation of human dignity and declare themselves determined to see to it that freedom of expression in the film shall be everywhere recognised and considered as a right, the violation of which means the violation of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the United Nations Charter."

The signatories include: Carlo Lizzani and Vasco Pratolini (Italy); John Grierson (Britain); Henning Jensen (Denmark); Luis Buñuel (Mexico); J. V. Cotton (Belgium); M. Fouy (Switzerland); Charles Delac, President of the International Producers' Union and, among the French signatories there were Georges Sadoul, Léonide Moguy, André Lang (President of the French Association of Critics), Charles Spaak (President of the French Scenario Writers' Union) and Fred Orain (President of the French Higher Technical Committee).

Furthermore, in a discussion on films made by two or more countries in co-operation, all the film men present admitted that, in order to obtain real artistic success, the national character must be preserved.

The representatives of the Soviet Union, Denmark, Italy and France agreed to hold an international meeting of film-makers and critics at an early date either in France or Italy, to discuss the problems of their art and profession.

Cultural Exchange

● An exhibition of Norwegian art has been opened in Paris; it is called "A Thousand Years of the Viking Tradition." This selection of 150 typical works shows the historical development of an essentially popular culture in its national setting, and enables people to appreciate Norway's contribution to mankind's cultural heritage.

● A delegation of Swiss primary school teachers has just paid a visit to Moscow on the invitation of the Soviet primary school teachers' union. It was led by M. Fernand Crot. During the last three years the Soviet primary teachers' union has shown Soviet educational institutions to many delegations of primary school teachers from France, Austria, Great Britain, Bulgaria, Poland, Latin America, Australia, India, Burma and Denmark.

● A Norwegian cultural delegation is going to China to study the working of the cultural institutes.

● An International Meeting for the Study of Child Psychology was held in Paris with delegates from 41 countries, including the United States, the Soviet Union, Great Britain, Czechoslovakia, Greece, Poland and the Argentine. Six hundred teachers, doctors, psychologists and career consultants studied the problems of childhood at this meeting.

Commemorating the Great Anniversaries

● The conductor of the Prague Radio Orchestra, Alois Klima, conducted in Paris for the first time the orchestra of the Conservatoire Concert Society, with the great Czech pianist Jan Panenka as soloist. This concert of Czech and French music was in commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the death of Antonin Dvorak and the 70th anniversary of the death of Bedrich Smetana.

● A ceremony of homage to Henry Fielding has been organised by the Czechoslovak Peace Committee, the Union of Czechoslovak writers and the Philological Faculty of the Charles University in Prague.

Buenos Aires, May 14th — 16th

ARGENTINE CULTURAL CONGRESS

The fruitful work of the Continental Cultural Congress, held in an atmosphere of good fellowship in Santiago de Chile, and of the First Congress of Brazilian Intellectuals in Goyannia, showed how much the intellectuals of Latin America want to restore national dignity to the culture of their respective countries and to work for rich cultural exchanges with the other peoples of the world.

Today, the intellectuals of the Argentine are animated by the same desire. More than a hundred eminent Argentinians from all scientific and artistic circles issued an invitation to cultural societies, to members of the liberal professions, artists, scientists, journalists, and all those interested in the problems of Argentinian culture, to take part in the Argentine Cultural Congress in Buenos Aires, May 14th - 16th, 1954.

The tasks of the Congress are the following:

1. To study the basic development of Argentinian culture, the historical tradition and social conditions, in relation to the general problems of America.

2. To find out the obstacles in the way of an original national culture, of its full development and expansion, from the point of view of creation and research, the necessary diffusion throughout the country and cultural exchanges with other countries.

3. To study the rights and duties of workers by brain: the specific forms of their social action, professional ethics, freedom of creation and thought - this last being the essential condition for their work. Lastly, to examine the activity of popular cultural associations and their relations with those of the intellectuals.

The Argentine Cultural Congress should therefore help forward discussion between intellectuals, whatever their opinions and beliefs, so that the efforts of all may give a new life to the culture of the Argentine.

A team of Soviet chess-players, including the famous champion Bronstein, went to Latin America and met teams from the Argentine and Uruguay. They then returned to Europe and had several matches with French chess-players. They were given a reception in the Paris Town Hall, at which the Vice-Chairman of the Municipal Council presented them with a medal of the city of Paris.

The Comédie-Française in Moscow and Leningrad

The performances given by the Comédie-Française in Moscow and Leningrad were the occasion for moving demonstrations of Franco-Soviet friendship. The performance of "Tartuffe" at the Maly Theatre, in the traditional style of the Maison de Molière, with sets brought from Paris and period furniture, was followed by a ceremony of homage to Molière, in which Jean Meyer, Béatrice Bretty and Jean Yonnel read excerpts from Grimarest and Victor Hugo. The bust of Molière and the armchair in which he died while acting in the "Malade Imaginaire" - this was the first time that this precious relic had left Paris - were presented on the stage in a flood of light. A delegation of Soviet actors then came on to the stage to greet their French comrades.

Speaking on behalf of Moscow actors, Mikhail Tzarev stated: "We listened with great emotion to the music of your language, for we felt how much such exchanges strengthen the bonds of our culture and friendship, and contribute to mutual understanding and closer relations between our two peoples."

Jean Yonnel replied on behalf of his French colleagues, stressing both the profoundly national character of Molière's work and the universal meaning of great masterpieces. The latter reflect the mind of a whole people and are therefore directly accessible to all.

It is interesting to note that this is the first foreign company, if we except the People's Democracies, to perform in the Soviet Union since the war. This fact made M. Pierre Descaves, the general director of the Comédie-Française, declare, at a reception given to the French company by the Minister of Culture of the Soviet Union: "We are happy to have inaugurated the intellectual air-lift between our two countries."

After the last performance of the "Bourgeois Gentilhomme" in Moscow, the French actors were received by the head of the Soviet Government, Mr. Malenkov, who was accompanied by the principal leaders of the Soviet Union.

At the end of the performance of "Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme", Moscow actors came on to the stage and applauded the French visitors.

The Soviet public gave the Comédie-Française an unprecedented welcome. They were acclaimed by crowds of people both at the theatre and in the street, they were loaded down with flowers, and the Press was full of enthusiastic commentaries.

All the seats at the performances given by them had been sold far in advance, but the plays were televised so that hundreds of thousands of people were able to see them.

Before leaving Moscow, the famous actor Maurice Escande made a statement over Moscow Radio:

"I am overwhelmed by the welcome given us by the public. We are deeply moved by this applause because we are sure that it is addressed to our country too . . . When the Muses speak, the guns are silent. I hope with all my heart that, in our countries, the Muses will speak very loudly and that neither of us will ever hear the guns again."

BULLETIN OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

[Paul Robeson, p 26]

INFORMATION BULLETIN PUBLISHED BY THE SECRETARIAT OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

No 12 JUNE 1954

Extraordinary Session in Berlin (May 24-28, 1954)

The World Council of Peace held an Extraordinary Session from May 24th to 28th, 1954.

326 representatives from [illegible] countries and international organisations took part in the work of the Session.

The following two points were included on the Agenda:

1. The banning of atomic and thermonuclear weapons.

2. The security of nations.

The World Council of Peace adopted a Resolution on atomic weapons, a Resolution on security, and approved the Recommendations of the Cultural Commission.

These documents, as well as extracts from several speeches made during the Session, are published in this Bulletin.

Resolutions Adopted at the Session

RESOLUTION ON SECURITY

The threats of USA military intervention in the conflict in Indo-China, which would be liable to lead to a new world war; the pressure brought to bear to set up the European Defence Community, which would sanction the rearmament of Germany; the division of Europe and Asia by the policy of military pacts; the repeated H-bomb experiments, one aim of which is intimidation and blackmail — all these have given the peoples, in whom hopes had been roused by negotiations, fresh reasons for anxiety.

The pressure of world public opinion, which secured the armistice in Korea and the opening of negotiations on European and Asian problems, can to-day secure:

— a successful outcome to the Geneva Conference, that is to say, a cease-fire in Indo-China, and a peaceful settlement of the Korean and Indo-Chinese conflicts;

— rejection of the agreements on the European Defence Community and a resumption of negotiations for the peaceful solution of the German question; — agreement by the Governments to stop all experiments with H-bombs and atom bombs and forbid their use.

Despite differences of political or social system, all peoples have common interests. These common interests cannot be protected, and the security of each and the independence of the peoples cannot be guaranteed by atomic blackmail and the division of the world into military blocs.

Likewise, these common interests are harmed by repression of national liberation movements or by the intervention of any state in the internal affairs of any other.

A nation can only guarantee its own security by ensuring that of every other nation. Security for all must be organised, most urgently in Asia and Europe, with participation of all the States concerned, whatever their differences of political or social system.

Berlin, May 28th, 1954

RESOLUTION ON ATOMIC WEAPONS

Weapons of indiscriminate slaughter now threaten all mankind. The conscience of the world is awakening. Parliaments and statesmen, the most eminent leaders of thought and religion, speak out in protest.

In the name of mankind, we call for agreement, at once, to stop all experiments with H-bombs and atom bombs and forbid their use.

Agreement of this kind will ease the task of securing their effective total abolition.

Agreement of this kind will help quickly to relieve international tension; it will help forward the general reduction of armaments; it will open the way to collaboration in the peaceful development of atomic energy.

We call upon all bodies and individuals concerned with peace, upon political, social, trade union, religious and cultural organisations, upon men and women in every country, to consult together, nationally and internationally, on how best to obtain agreement by the governments to prohibit, under strict international control, which is wholly practicable, the manufacture, use or storage of all weapons of mass destruction.

Berlin, May 28th, 1954

Opening Session

May 24th, 1954

Chairman: Dr. KUO MO-JO

PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

Dr. KUO MO-JO

(People's Republic of China)

VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

Thanks to the joint efforts of the defenders of Peace and the Peace organisations in the world we have had obvious successes in our work.

What we are asking of the Five Great Powers, who have a particular responsibility for the maintenance of Peace, is to take the path of negotiation in order to solve international conflicts and ease international tension. This is gradually being achieved.

Our calls for an armistice in Korea resulted in the cease-fire in June last year. Our call for the restoration of peace in Indo-China is already the main question on the agenda of the Geneva Conference. It is being discussed at the present time by the countries taking part in the Conference.

The Conference on Far-Eastern questions which opened in Geneva on April 26th and in which are participating the delegates of the United States, Great Britain, France, the Soviet Union, the People's Republic of China and the other countries concerned, is without doubt the first realisation of what we have been demanding for several years, that is to say, a Big Five Conference.

The solution of international conflicts through peaceful negotiation is not only necessary; it is now possible as well.

Though the tension in the international situation has begun to relax, we cannot deny the existence of a war danger. The sovereignty and independence of a number of nations are still being violated, and that more and more openly. The establishment of collective security in Asia, Europe and throughout the world is urgently necessary...

All the peoples of the world are demanding collective security. In order to satisfy this demand and avert the danger of the mass destruction of human life, we must increase our efforts for peace and secure a broader exchange of views. We must consider practical proposals in order to attain our goal: real and lasting peace.

HERR FRIEDRICH EBERT

MAYOR OF BERLIN

The World Council of Peace can take credit for having made a great contribution to the upsurge of public opinion. It has worked for the lessening of international tension with great energy and understanding and has elaborated a platform on which every friend of peace can find a place.

We in Berlin feel even greater respect and gratitude towards the World Council of Peace because we can feel the lessening of tension physically, as it were. The very fact that the Foreign Ministers of the Four Great Powers held their Conference in Berlin, has given the citizens of the capital visible proof that the German metropolis is in a position to make an appreciable contribution by serving as a place of understanding and reconciliation. I can assure this meeting that, so far as we are concerned, everything will be done to restore a peaceful life to Germany by means of negotiation, in accordance with the efforts that are being made in the international sphere.

M. JEAN LAFFITTE

(France)

GENERAL SECRETARY OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

The Bureau therefore proposes, providing you are in agreement, to put the following items on the agenda for this session:

1) The banning of atomic and thermonuclear weapons.
2) The security of nations.

Such an agenda confirms the extraordinary character of our session. It places great responsibilities on our World Council for it is its task not only to discuss these problems, but further, to find and promote activities which will enable the continuance and development of our efforts for Peace. We are meeting at a serious time, but a time when two roads are still open to us. On the one hand, the road of negotiation, a road which is without any doubt full of problems and difficulties, but the only one which, if followed in a true spirit of give and take, can take us forward along the road to Peace. On the other hand, the way of force which can only lead the world to a terrible catastrophe, and perhaps total annihilation.

During the five years of its existence, the World Peace Movement, of which the World Council is the expression, has always based its activities on one single principle: that of making the spirit of negotiation prevail over the use of force through the action of public opinion. This effort has not been in vain. Important results have been achieved which have begun to lighten the horizon. The guns have been silenced in Korea; negotiations which, for a long time, were interrupted, have been resumed. Solutions have come to light which are possible of realisation and which are receiving the widest hearing from public opinion.

These are successes which have been achieved by the peoples' will for Peace. Let this will be expressed yet more strongly and Peace can once more gain ground.

To this end the World Council has the task of making a further contribution today in order that the possibilities of easing international tension, which are visible today, become the reality of tomorrow.

Mr. D. N. PRITT

(Great Britain)

The abolition of weapons of terror, the reduction of armaments, the ending of the war in Indo-China, the solving of the German question without the rearming of German militarism, the demand that all questions between States shall be settled by negotiation and agreement: these are principles that today the great majority share with us...

If I may use a lawyer's phrase, they give us a "very good case" against war and against the new "unconventional" weapons, a case better than we had against rearmament when conventional weapons alone were involved. The case against that was good enough; for the miseries it causes are great, the people's longing for peace is great, and the conventional arms race is, as a matter of international law, illegal in that it offends against the letter and the spirit of the Charter of the United Nations Organisation and against the various resolutions that have been passed by that body.

But our case against the new weapons is ten or a hundred times stronger, in the light of the misery and destruction they cause, and in the public indignation they arouse; whilst they are plainly, as I will show, an offence against international law, a war crime, and a crime against humanity, from first to last...

Now, one principle which international law has always laid down is this:

The object of warlike operations is to overthrow the forces of the enemy, not to inflict general damage on all the citizens of the belligerent. The destruction of life and property beyond what is necessary or incidental to the achievement of that object is unlawful, and, in particular, it is unlawful to inflict any injury or suffering on non-combattants, save so far as it is directly and inevitably involved in the pursuit of the one legitimate object of overthrowing the enemy's armed forces.

It clearly follows from this principle that atom bombs and hydrogen bombs, acting indiscriminately on vast numbers of human beings, irrespective of their military or civilian status, over wide periods of time and wide extents of space, are illegal...

It will be seen at once that the position — in fact, in international law, in plain humanity, and in the light of history — of conventional weapons and of these two terrible "unconventional" weapons, are utterly different. Whilst the remedy which the largest sections of public opinion demand in respect of conventional weapons does not go beyond agreed reductions and limitations, at any rate in the first instance, it is clear, I suggest, that the only suitable remedy for unconventional weapons is absolute prohibition...

We start with certain incontrovertible facts. The victorious allies agreed together, both before and after the end of the Second World War, in treaties which surely represented correct policy, and which none of them has any excuse to break, that Germany should be reunited as one country and state, unarmed, democratic. This was agreed not for the advantage of those who now hold financial and industrial power in West Germany, but to help in securing a peaceful future for all the peoples of Europe.

The policy now sought to be carried through by the Western Powers is a policy that West Germany should be massively rearmed, as an integral part of a "European Defence Community", and that her army should be part of a vast armed force formed by most of the countries of Western Europe and by the USA. This is a policy which makes it de facto impossible to reunite Germany; and it has nothing in common with any democratic government of Germany, if only because it bans what every German wants, in one form or another, namely, a government of one whole Germany by Germans, Germans at one table.

What pretexts are advanced by the originators and supporters of this policy, a policy which breaks solemn agreements, perpetuates a divided Germany, leads to endless misery and unrest, embraces many dangers of war, and is contrary to all the principles of the Charter of UNO?

The main pretext, accompanied by various subsidiary excuses, was originally that there was a danger that the USSR might over-run Western Europe by force of arms, and that it was accordingly necessary to rearm Germany, as well as other European countries, to resist such aggression. This scare story was once widely accepted, however unfounded; but no one now seriously believes it. There is not a tittle of evidence that the Soviet Union had or has any such intention, and admissions to this effect can be quoted from the writings and speeches of the most prominent anti-Soviet political and military leaders of the USA, the very men who originated the demand for the rearmament of West Germany, and who are now attempting to bully and blackmail France into urgent acceptance of this policy, even whilst they confess the emptiness of the pretexts they advance.

What can be their real motive? And what can be the real motive of the powerful German industrial, financial and military groupings which, at the will of the USA, now control the policies of West Germany behind a facade of Parliamentary democracy? It is not for me to read their minds; but, however strong their protestations of defensive intention, it is difficult to see any other logical purpose in their acts than preparation for a war, to be launched one day against the Soviet Union and the People's Democracies...

Thus, in all, we see that there is no basis, no reason, no legitimate excuse for rearming West Germany; that it carries appalling dangers, and that it must be stopped. Happily, there are immense forces against it. Not only in the new socialist countries, not only in Britain (where the forces include, I think, a majority of the Labour Party and a number of Trade Unions), not only in France and Italy, but also (in formidable volume) in West and East Germany itself, masses of people from almost all sections of the population realise the dangers and rally against them. And the prospects of success in building up positive plans for European security — which include, above all, the reunion of Germany, itself the greatest contribution to European security — grow always greater. One of our tasks here will be to consider how best the great movement we represent can contribute to success in this field.

I come now to the problems of the Far East, and of Asian security, of its main danger spots of Korea and Indo-China, and of the rights of the Chinese People's Republic to its full status in the world...

But, for our purposes today, our minds turn inevitably to the countries where wars actually rage or are just frozen by armistice. In Korea and in Indo-China, we can see and study with appalling clarity almost every problem and danger presented by this mid-century, so harassed, so tortured, and yet so glorious in its potentialities and in its promises of greatness, promises which we must make sure are realised. In these two countries, and in their immediate future, lies at present the decision between the Third World War and settled World Peace, between a temporary buttressing of colonialism and its swifter passing to its end...

What of Asian security as a whole? The solution in Asia, as indeed in other parts of the earth, lies in the freedom of all the peoples, their right — their really effective right — to sovereignty, untrammeled by the intervention of empires under any pretext, their right to develop their own resources, their own trade, their own industries, instead of having their trade and industry distorted to serve foreign interests...

Let me now very briefly summarise the tasks of this Council.

To win the abolition of weapons of mass destruction and the substantial reduction of other arms — instead of vain reliance for security on an arms race and on the fear of atomic destruction.

To solve the great outstanding questions — Korea, Indo-China, unification of Germany, sovereignty and freedom for the dependent peoples — on the basis of the desires of the peoples themselves, and not on fancied claims to their division or incorporation for strategic purposes in some one or other bloc.

To break down barriers and resume exchanges, material in commerce, spiritual and cultural in the realms of art, literature, science and sport — freely throughout all the world, instead of having partition of the world in mutually hostile groups.

In short, to return to the focal principles that underlay and inspired the Charter of the United Nations, and are the only ones on which security can truly be founded, collaboration of all for Peace, not vain attemps at strengthening one group in enmity against another.

We have with us in our fight the overwhelming majority of the peoples in all countries.

Mr. YOSHITARO HIRANO

(Japan)

What is the reaction of the Japanese people to the explosion of the H-Bomb?

What is the relation of the Peace Movement to the protest movement against H-Bomb experiments?

The Japanese nation is not only angry, but convinced that this inhuman weapon can be banned by the World Peace Movement...

We have started a national petition for the banning of all nuclear weapons and nuclear experiments. It has received the support of people from all walks of life and of all ages — from young children, just able to sign their names, to old people in their eighties...

The statement of the Japanese Academy of Science must be cited here because of the political neutrality of this body, and its normally somewhat conservative attitude. They were, however, influenced by the consciousness of the experts and professors engaged in scientific work on atomic energy. The statement said: "We scientists are determined not to do any research into the use of atomic energy for military purposes, whether it be for experiments, the manufacture of atomic weapons, or their use."

"We sincerely hope and appeal that the experimental explosions of A and H-Bombs be abolished and that an international control of atomic energy be established. We are determined to make all possible efforts to attain this end in spite of any difficulties encountered."

In conclusion, we peace-loving Japanese people at the Extraordinary Session of the World Council of Peace make the following proposals concerning the question of the A and H-Bombs, together with proposals to stop the arms race and to reduce armaments. We propose that:

— This Session ask the Five Great Powers and other countries to prohibit the use, production and experimental explosion of atomic weapons...

— This Session ask the Government of every country to declare its intention not to use atomic weapons and to give its answer to this question...

— This Session initiate a world-wide mass movement to achieve the prohibition of all atomic weapons.

PROFESSOR LEOPOLD INFELD

(Poland)

VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

The H-Bomb explosions have awakened the conscience of the world. The question of the effects of this bomb is no longer a purely theoretical problem, but has become one of the most urgent of the problems facing mankind...

It seems to me that it is the duty of scientists to explain to the people just how terrible is the hydrogen bomb. It is their duty to rationalise this fear and to transform it into a will for peace...

The bombs that exploded over Hiroshima and Nagasaki and exterminated around 200,000 people had an explosive force of 20,000 tons of TNT. The bomb that exploded on March 1st in Bikini had a power 600 times greater; that is, an explosive force of 12,200,000 tons of TNT.

Let us imagine such a bomb dropped on a city ten miles in diameter. The people would be blinded by a new sun. No sound would be heard. The roar of the explosion would not at first reach them, only a brilliant flash, lasting for a few seconds — the flash of a substance at a temperature of many millions of degrees centigrade. That flash is enough to set fire to the clothes of most of the people in the city, to burn their bodies to cinders. These are the relatively fortunate ones, because they die quickly. But what will happen to those who live on the outskirts of the city? Burnt and maimed, they will crawl away from this sun. But the hope of life will be theirs for less than a minute. They will survive meanwhile only to hear the horrible roar of the collapsing houses, cars tossed like balls into the air, and thick walls being crushed by the tremendous air pressure. Many people will lose their lives under burning ruins. And what will happen to those people who live further away and escape immediate death, being only slightly burnt? They will suffer the most horrible death from radio-active poisoning, which can last from three days to several years.

The effect of this radio-active poisoning cannot be controlled scientifically. The radio-active dust is carried by the wind. We know little about the sickness that follows, except that it is deadly and that science does not know any remedy for it.

One hydrogen bomb can kill millions of people, including pregnant women, children and the sick in hospitals. Such is the situation to-day. And to-morrow? To-morrow, if we do not restrain this race in constructing bigger and bigger bombs, these bombs will be much stronger and still more deadly...

In such a situation, our duties — the duties of peace defenders — are simple and clear. We must continue to march along the path we have followed up to now. We must speak to the hearts and minds of all mankind about the blessings of peace and the horrors of war. We must be the conscience of the world as we were when we collected hundreds of millions of signatures to the Stockholm Appeal. Time and events are working for us, and this means — for peace.

A great task is opening up before us, to create a great front — greater than heretofore — of people desiring peace, even of people having very different politicial opinions. We must do everything in our power to enlarge this front, to convince all who want peace that different political systems can co-operate with one another for the sake of all mankind. The slogan "Ban the hydrogen and atomic weapons" is a slogan which can unite all people who desire peace around our most precious and most supremely desired aim — world peace.

MAJOR GENERAL SIR SAHIB SINGH SOKHEY

(India)

The biological effects of exposure to the radio-active rays given out by the bomb are still unpredictable. Even now, over eight years after the explosions of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, fresh cases of cataract and cancer of the blood are appearing among those who were exposed to the radio-active rays. Similarly, there is every possibility that, due to the exposure of the genetic cells to radio-active rays, mutations in the form of malformations of the body may appear in the children born in this or later generations. Today, science uses rays to produce experimental changes in the species of plants and insects. Mankind is no exception to mutations resulting from radio-activity.

The deaths and injuries due to atomic damage can be listed under three headings:

1. — Atomic bomb burns.
2. — Atomic bomb wounds.
3. — Atomic bomb radiation injuries.

Regarding the burns, the salient feature is that the bomb, when it explodes, produces momentarily in its interior a temperature comparable to that of the sun, about 50 to 100,000,000 ^{0} C., and when it becomes a ball of fire 100 metres in diameter has a temperature of 10,000^{0} C., and when the buildings and objects were hit in Hiroshima immediately under the explosion, a temperature of 6,000^{0} C. appears to have been reached, and even 630 metres from the centre, a temperature of 2,000^{0} C. seems to have been attained. This intense heat caused direct flash burns and secondary burns due to clothes and buildings catching fire. Atomic bomb wounds were mainly caused by being crushed under buildings etc. and by splintered glass.

The injuries from atomic bomb radiations were due to the release of gamma rays and neutrons. For the most part the radio-activity comes through the air, but secondary radio-activity results from neutrons and fission products falling on the ground. The body injuries are due primarily to damage to the internal organs, the blood and the blood-forming tissues and infections resulting from the loss of white cells.

Those who, in Hiroshima, were within 1 km. of the hypocentre, suffered severely. Their blood and internal organs were highly affected, and 90 per cent died in the course of about two weeks. Those who were protected against other injuries, but were exposed to the rays, began to show symptoms two weeks after the explosion, such as fall of hair, bleeding, fever, diarrhoea and loss of white cells of the blood, and died in about a week's time. Fifty per cent of those who were one to two kms. from the hypocentre, showed the same sort of symptoms and some of them died. Those who were two to four kms. distant developed the same symptoms but in a milder form.

Be it noted that the symptoms and injuries described here were caused by the bombs of early manufacture. More potent A-Bombs have been made and, what is worse, H-bombs can be made, as powerful as desired without limit. We have no knowledge of the appalling effects they can produce. All we know are the intelligent guesses of scientists.

Most of these facts are now widely known. Self-complacency has given place to real concern. All people are one in demanding not only the banning of these weapons but the stoppage of any further experimental explosions...

PROFESSOR MAX COSYNS

(Belgium)

In this anxious period when the international situation is developing at a constantly increasing speed, the peace camp is every day faced with new perils; it overcomes them and emerges strengthened from the struggle. World opinion is becoming more aware of, and more sensitive to, the things which can imperil its most vital possessions. Its reaction to the heartless H-Bomb experiments clearly shows its growing political maturity. But the fact that its reaction has not yet been strong enough to compel the governments responsible to ban the use of the H-Bomb shows that our efforts are not yet adequate and that we must see what we can do together to intensify our action.

In this connection, the Belgian people have been made responsible without their opinion having been sought. We know now that there would have been no Hiroshima or Nagasaki without Congo uranium. There would perhaps have been atomic bombs today, but there would not have been an H-Bomb, the other sources of uranium being insufficient...

Concerning uranium, it is not only our national sovereignty which is at stake; we are made responsible in spite of ourselves for a danger which threatens all peoples and which can only be averted by the united action of all the peoples...

Each year the Congo produces thousands of tons of uranium; this uranium serves only the policy of death of the USA...

At the present time, practically the whole world stock of uranium is reserved for the war industries. It must be freed and used for peaceful purposes. This obviously cannot be done unless those who possess this stock first obtain guarantees of the controlled banning of the use of the A-Bomb and the H-Bomb.

Will we be strong enough to accomplish this? I think we can be optimistic...

Our efforts have not been in vain and the task of enlightenment which we have undertaken today, if we can spread it widely, each of us in our own country, allows us every hope.

It is by looking danger in the face that one conquers it.

Dr. SAIFUDDIN KITCHLEW

(India)

Dear Friends, we in India, together with the rest of the Asian peoples, have viewed with profound indignation the Hydrogen Bomb tests at Bikini Island...

Do you blame us, if, with the international situation as it was at that time, in face of the fact that the immediate victims of the tests were the Asian people of Japan, we concluded that the purpose of these tests on the eve of the Geneva Conference was to frighten and overawe the peoples of Asia?...

The Indian Prime Minister, Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, in his statement in Parliament on April 24th, referring to the American threats of direct intervention in Indo-China and to the proposals for a South-East Asia Treaty Organisation, said:

"The Government of India deeply regret and are much concerned that a conference of such momentous character, obviously called together because negotiation was considered both feasible and necessary, should be preceded by a proclamation of what amounts to a lack of faith in it, and of alternatives involving threats of sanctions. Negotiations are handicapped, they start ill and they make chequered progress, if any at all; with duress, threats, slights and proclamations of lack of faith preceding them."

Yet, fortunately for the world, all efforts made to prevent the Geneva Conference from taking place, to render it a failure before it began, failed. Today the negotiations at Geneva are proceeding in a manner which has brought hope for peace to the peoples of the whole world...

Sinister efforts also continue to be made to drag India into the vast net which it is being attempted to throw across the countries of Asia.

President Eisenhower, through his letter to our Prime Minister, offered us all the guns and bombs we would want. But India, true to her tradition, true to the will of her people, spurned the offer...

Mr. Nehru declared that:

"India has no intention of surrendering or bartering her freedom for any purpose or under any compulsion whatever."...

The Peace Council's Anti-US-Pakistan Pact Day on February 14th, was more widely observed in every province of India than any other day called by the peace movement in recent years.

On May 7th, 8th and 9th, in Delhi, we had a magnificent demonstration of national unity on the US-Pakistan Pact and the key issues of world affairs...

Nearly a hundred members of Parliament, the vast majority belonging to the Congress Party, enrolled themselves as delegates to this Convention. Unitedly they declared themselves against the US-Pakistan Pact. Never before in recent years, on any issue, has there been such a wide unity among the Indian people...

I commend to your Council the following proposals of this historic Convention, which can well be considered the voice of the united Indian people on Asian questions:

First and foremost, we demand that the People's Republic of China be admitted to its rightful place in the United Nations Organisation. As long as the 500 million people of China are denied a voice in the councils of the world, peace cannot be assured.

Secondly, we fully support the proposals of Prime Minister Nehru in regard to Indo-China, and the stand taken by the Government of India in not allowing the transportation of foreign troops across the territory of India. We call for an immediate end to the war in Indo-China, and we demand full freedom for that country and a guarantee against intervention by any foreign power. We believe that direct negotiations between the belligerents, following a cease-fire, can alone lead to the creation of a climate of peace...

Thirdly, we call for immediate steps to prevent the resumption of hostilities in Korea and to ensure the withdrawal of all foreign troops, so that the Korean people may be free to determine their own destiny...

Fourthly, we call upon the Great Powers now assembled at Geneva to respect the rights of the Asian peoples to self-determination and to complete independence as the basis for the establishment of peace in Asia.

Fifthly, we condemn all military moves and alliances designed to circumvent the freedom of the Asian countries and to strike at the growing solidarity of the Asian peoples...

There is so much talk of "collective defence", and one "pact" after another — the NATO, the ANZUS, and tomorrow the SEATO — is being signed. But these pacts are war pacts, pacts which attempt to line up one group of countries militarily against another.

These pacts are against the spirit of the United Nations Charter. They are pacts which threaten the peace of the world.

Could there not be, instead of these pacts of "collective defence", to use the words of Mr. Nehru, pacts of collective peace?

India commends to you the recent treaty between our country an the People's Republic of China on the question of Tibet...

I would draw your attention to its preamble, which lays down the principles and the considerations which will govern the mutual relations between our two countries.

These principles are:

1. Mutual respect for each other's territorial integrity and sovereignty.
2. Mutual non-aggression.
3. Mutual non-interference in each other's internal affairs.
4. Equality and mutual benefit.
5. Peaceful co-existence.

We seek similar treaties with all our neighbours and with all countries.

Could these principles not become a Charter of Peace? I believe that this is possible. I believe that these principles, emanating from the ancient countries of India and China, can become the basis for relations between countries...

Dr. Kitchlew was not able to be present. His speech was read by Mr. Romesh Chandra, General Secretary of the All India Peace Council.

PROFESSOR PETROS KOKKALIS

(Greece)

I should now like to draw the attention of the World Council of Peace to the most recent developments in the situation with the projected transformation of the agreement between Athens, Belgrade and Ankara into an open war pact. This plan must be taken together with the Turkey-Pakistan Agreement, with Tito's preparations to enter into the European Defence Community, and with the ever-growing interest shown in our country by the President of the Council of Ministers of West Germany. In this we can see an effort to create a new bloc, an effort which seeks to get round the growing resistance of the peoples of Western Europe...

In these plans a special role is played by the bilateral agreement between Greece and the USA which was signed on October 12th, 1953...

The war blocs and alliances which the aggressive powers are striving to create today in the Balkans have no connection with the interests and feelings of the peoples concerned. Friendship and co-operation between all the peoples of the Balkans are a vital necessity, They correspond to the national, economic and cultural interests of our peoples.

Mr. LUDMIL STOYANOV

(Bulgaria)

Our President of the Council of Ministers has several times pointed out forcefully that we have no desire to impose our system of people's democracy on anyone, and our policy is a policy of Peace and good-neighbour relations with all our neighbours without exception.

This statement had a favourable reception and a number of contentious issues with Greece and Yugoslavia were resolved by negotiation.

Dr. WALTER FRIEDRICH

(Germany)

Germany is still not a unified state, in which Peace is the supreme law, nor has a democratic Peace Pact yet been signed with a body representing the whole German nation.

We are well aware that the peoples of Europe will only help the reunification of Germany insofar as we succeed in making it compatible with the legitimate demands for the security of all European States. The reunification of Germany must not endanger the independence of other peoples and other countries. From our Germany, which we want to see united, free and independent, the might of militarism must be banned. We want Germany to become a land of peace...

More and more people in Germany are drawing correct conclusions from the bitter experiences of the past, and are welcoming the ceaseless attempts to end the division of Germany by means of peaceful agreement and to promote, at the same time, a general European treaty which would guarantee the security of all the states of Europe and prevent the splitting of our continent into military blocs. The German Peace Movement is also guided by these ideas when it rejects the EDC scheme as well as all attempts to revive German militarism, and when it fights for normal relations between all peoples. Only along this road can we attain a lasting peace in Europe and firm friendship among all peoples...

Feverish preparations are being made in West Germany for an atomic aerial war. More and more atomic cannon are being installed in West German towns and villages. The maintenance crews of these cannon are already carrying out manoeuvres in preparation for the "real thing"...

My work on the physical and biological bases of the effects of radiation enables me to judge what the use of radioactive weapons and poisons would mean in the event of war. Many of my colleagues are already incurably ill through handling only very small amounts of radioactive substances, and some have died from the effects of radiation.

It is precisely because I know what the use of radioactive weapons would mean for our people that I have spoken out against the stationing of atomic cannon in West Germany, and protested at the fact that the American occupation forces, which came here supposedly to disarm German militarism and to guarantee the peaceful development of Germany, are now abusing their power and making preparations on German territory for atomic war in Europe.

Dr. KENJURO YANAGIDA

(Japan)

The Japanese people, who experienced terrible suffering through the atom-bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, shuddered when they heard that 23 fishermen, victims of the Bikini experiment, were very seriously affected by atom disease...

A young man who lost both his legs and who lies in the National Hospital of Kanagawa Prefecture, printed signature papers by mimeograph in bed and began to collect signatures by all means at his disposal.

The results of the signature campaign show how the people of broad strata of the population are deeply interested in this problem. For example, in the streets of Tokyo young people collected 76,000 signatures and 21,000 yen in only 4 days. The Signature Collecting Committee of Ward Suginami in Tokyo, which includes a member of Yoshida's Liberal Party who is President of a Ward Council, also succeeded in collecting more than 200,000 signatures in 4 days...

These results proved that thousands of new fighters for peace took part in the campaign. In Kyoto city, Buddhists of every sect, in uniform, collected 60,000 signatures and 20,000 yen in voluntary contributions at nine different places in the streets...

We can quote many examples of people who had hitherto supported rearmament and who now support peace and participated in these signature campaigns.

Dr. GEORGES HANNA

(Lebanon)

Taking the floor on behalf of our delegations during the Warsaw and Vienna meetings, I spoke, with a good deal of apprehension, about the diabolic plans and projects with which Western imperialism is confronting us. A flood of such plans was descending on us: the Middle East Defence Pact, Truman's Point Four, strategic demands and obligations, military pacts, etc. We had to fight them one by one, and sometimes we had to fight on more than one front...

But we gained and are gaining ground every day, and we will certainly win the decisive battle. It is an axiom that the people's front will not be conquered and the people's front is our front. Of course, I cannot say that the danger is completely averted, but it will be averted by the constantly growing number of people fighting on our side, because it is the right side, the side of freedom and peace...

It is really encouraging to see the way in which our Peace Movement is continously advancing in an upward direction in the Arab world. Nothing can stand in its way, despite all the hypnotic manoeuvres and mad propaganda...

Even local governments and authorities have become more conscious of the Western threat, and, under the pressure of their peoples, are changing their attitude to the Peace Movement.

PROFESSOR FELIX IVERSEN

(Finland)

It is known that there are bombs which are four times as powerful as the one which was used. They are called "4 B" for short...
The radius of the zone of danger of immediate destruction, according to offical figures, is 800 kilometres...

Apart from this, there is an indirect danger, the gravity of which has not yet been estimated, the danger of radioactivity in the stratosphere and in the depths of the sea, and also the delayed effects which are medically uncontrollable...

And that is not all. Already militarists and scientists have announced the possibility of a new bomb, the Cobalt Bomb, whose effects will completely eclipse those of the H-Bomb. The Cobalt Bomb will doubtless not be the last stage in the "technique of catastrophe". So it is clear that a new war would mean nothing less than the suicide of mankind, the destruction of all life and the poisoning and burning of the entire crust of the earth. The explosion at Bikini on March 1st made it clear to everyone, as Lowes Dickinson said some decades ago, that "If humanity does not exterminate war, war will exterminate humanity"...

The effects of the 4-B Bomb would endanger whole countries and peoples, even if they remained quite outside the war. For example, my country, Finland, including the territories in the extreme North, would be within the zone of immediate destruction of a bomb dropped on Leningrad. The vital centres of Norway and Denmark would also be affected...

Military circles, especially in those countries which boast of their superiority in atomic weapons, are of the opinion that the mere knowledge of the catastrophic and more and more terrible effects of hydrogen and cobalt bombs will terrify the adversary to such an extent that he will not dare to start a war. This has never been proved. On the contrary, we know full well that supposed superiority in armaments has often led to a war of aggression...

PROFESSOR HEINRICH BRANDWEINER

(Austria)

The terrible results of the US hydrogen bomb experiments at Bikini, the full effect of which is as yet unforeseeable, stirred the whole civilised world. Clearly, in addition to their immediate military aim, these experiments have a political meaning. They were a manifestation of the policy of strength which it is obviously becoming more and more impossible to conduct, but to which certain circles in the United States remain obstinately attached.

Mr. NAZIM MOUSLI

(Syria)

At the present time Syria is free from all foreign bases or strategic installations; she is attached to no military pact or treaty. She is, however, like all other Arab countries, the object of pressure from the manufacturers of destructive bombs, she is at the heart of their preoccupations...

The enemies of mankind have spared no effort, have overlooked no method of drawing our country into their war blocs. But every visit of individuals or military missions rouses the vigilance of the Syrian people, renews their will to struggle against this plan of colonisation and war, and consequently rallies all honest patriots, in spite of their differences of opinion and belief, against enormous dangers which would bring nothing but ruin and destitution to Syria.

Truly these dangers only serve to strengthen constantly the unity of the Syrian people. Nothing is more significant than the general wave of disapproval which greeted the Turkey-Pakistan pact...

Nothing is more obvious, either, than the storm of indignation caused by the Iraq Government's acceptance of American military aid, the unanimous rejection by the Syrian people of the notorious American Point Four Programme and the prohibition of the latter's attempts to propagate, under cover of economic aid, its poisonous doctrines in the towns and villages of Syria...

The unanimity of public opinion in Syria against the experimental explosions of the H-bomb and the threats to use atomic weapons against peoples struggling for their freedom, was as broad and as solid as its opposition to all plans for occupation and colonisation...

Mme EUGENIE COTTON

(France)

VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

As Dr. Sokhey recalled yesterday, the victims of the bombs can be stricken even in their posterity and give birth to monsters. That is something which should shock all women, whose mission is to give life...

Several speakers, recalling the good results of the Stockholm Appeal, stressed the fact that only the will of the peoples, only world public opinion, can force the prohibition of the use of atomic and thermonuclear weapons and put an end to the anxiety of the peoples. That is why many women throughout the world are actively working to get a great number of men and women to oppose the manufacture and use of these weapons.

Sra. BRANCA FIALHO (Brazil)

Mr. HAN SUL YA (People's Republic of Korea)

Mr. THOMAS CHRISTENSEN

We are now working to create a people's movement for Peace and security, irrespective of political affiliation...

We in Denmark will work for Danish disarmament, for a reduction of military service, against foreign troops being stationed in Denmark and against Danish troops being sent abroad.

Mr. LOTHAR RADACEANU

(Rumania)

The Rumanian people take a special interest in the security of Europe, for their own security is directly dependent on it. In our country wide interest was taken in the proposal for a general European treaty which would ensure collective security, and in which all European States would take part, whatever their social system...

The adversaries of international co-operation are doing their utmost to convince the world that there is no possibility of co-operation between the countries of East and West Europe, that they are destined to be forever opposed to each other. We cannot share this opinion. The Rumanian people are deeply convinced that co-operation between these States is not only possible but necessary.

A question arises: can a people, whether they be from the East or the West, expect any good to come out of the division of Europe into two hostile camps? Is it possible for anyone to take seriously the attempts at presenting the so-called "European Defence Community" as a means of guaranteeing the unity and security of Europe? Everyone knows that it is only a restricted military group comprising six States, whereas Europe is composed of thirty-two...

The general interest is served, not by division, but by the unity of all European countries, whatever their social system, in their joint effort to ensure peace and the vital interests of the peoples...

Sr. ANGEL CAMMAROTA

(Argentina)

In Latin America we find this absurd phenomenon — the masses of the peoples are enduring privations, lacking sufficient schools, health services offer wide scope for improvement, but military budgets are never skimped. And although the sums allocated to these budgets do not compare with the fabulous amounts spent by the Great Powers, those sums are diverted from the money spent on improving the life of the people, from their physical, intellectual and moral development...

On atomic weapons, everything has now been said. You take a man in the fullness of life, healthy, and enjoying living, you throw him to earth from vast altitudes, you burn and blister him, you set his clothes afire, you poison his blood with poison gases, and in a few minutes you have converted a happy, healthy and vital man into a living corpse, into a blood-stained mass of rags. Multiply this instance by thousands and by millions, include old people and innocent children, and you will have a Dantesque picture of the consequences of an atomic explosion...

Mr. NIKOLAI TIKHONOV

(U. S. S. R.)

President Eisenhower said to the General Assembly of the United Nations in December, 1953, that two atomic giants were condemned to glower at each other across a world trembling with fear for an indefinite period of time. That is an exaggeration. The world is not trembling with fear...

Mankind is confident in its strength and knows that it is stronger than atoms because it has every possibility of using atomic energy in any way it likes instead of collapsing in horror at atomic energy and in terror at its own discovery. Men want peace and they are uniting in opposition to the threatened destruction of civilisation.

The whole world knows the Soviet Government's declaration simultaneously demanding the absolute prohibition of atomic and hydrogen weapons and other weapons of mass destruction, and strict international control over the implementation of this ban...

In the same statement, the Soviet Union said that she was deeply concerned to protect mankind from these murderous atomic and hydrogen weapons, and would devote all her strength to prevent them from ever being used against mankind.

Thus, the Soviet Union replied to President Eisenhower's vague proposal to use a part of atomic energy for peaceful ends and, therefore, to keep the rest for atomic weapons, by a clear, sincere and exhaustive proposal for the absolute banning of weapons of mass extermination.

If we take a good look at the world, we see that it is not as bad as all that; that it doesn't deserve to be given up as lost, and that all men should not be considered as candidates for suicide. We see the ancient countries of Asia, which have awakened to a new life, devoting themselves to the great work of peaceful construction. We see the old countries of Europe, whose peoples do not want to see their cities replaced by ruins and their ancient woods and forests become charred stumps. And it is certain that no man, no matter how destitute, wants to be burnt to cinders along with his family and his hut...

In every corner of our planet voices are being raised saying: we are against weapons of mass extermination, but does there exist a real possibility for the peaceful solution of the atomic question? We can confidently reply to them: yes, such a possibility exists!...

We stand for an international control which would not only allow of the inspection of centres of production and stocks of bombs and raw materials declared by the governments; the international control body must also have the right to inspect centres of production and stocks which have not been declared by the governments, if there is any reason to suspect that they exist.

Only a complete control of this kind, binding on all the parties to the agreement, can be effective. Only by control of this kind can we eliminate the mutual distrust which is having such a harmful effect on the present international situation and which creates the tension in the relations between states possessing atomic and hydrogen weapons...

Nearly 30 years ago, the governments of 19 states, including the Soviet Government, signed the Geneva Protocol of 1925 prohibiting the use of chemical and bacteriological weapons and stating that the use of these weapons of mass extermination would be considered a criminal act. It is quite obvious that this Protocol helped to prevent the use of these weapons during the Second World War. No Government took the decision to use chemical and bacteriological weapons openly. Neither should we underestimate the fact that, taking their stand on the Geneva Protocol, the states of the antifascist coalition firmly declared that, if the enemy should employ chemical weapons, the punishment would be immediate.

If the signing of the Geneva Protocol has had positive results, it will be the same with the prohibition of atomic and hydrogen weapons.

If such an agreement is concluded and if the signatory states give proof of goodwill, it will be possible to save mankind from barbarous extermination, and world civilisation from destruction.

A beginning can be made by an agreement not to use atomic and hydrogen weapons. What does this mean? It means that those states which can produce these weapons will give a solemn pledge not to use them in any circumstances. This agreement would precede the absolute and general prohibition of these weapons. This could, to a certain extent, facilitate the negotiations.

Sig. EMILIO SERENI

(Italy)

Hundreds of millions of men and women throughout the world expect that, as a result of this discussion, we shall give a clear and concrete answer to the question which they are asking themselves as they confront the menace of a new and monstrous horror. The question is — what is to be done?...

At the present time, questions bearing on the deadly threat of weapons of mass destruction hanging over humanity are more closely related than ever to the effort which is needed to give all peoples the benefit of collective security. The H-bomb threat is not a metaphysical or mystical threat of a cosmic nature hanging over our world through the action of forces which are foreign to it. It is a real and present danger which darkens mankind's horizon in close relationship to concrete and definite threats of war which can be seen on this same horizon...

It was at the very moment when events were coming to a head in Indo-China that the open threat of an atomic attack was brandished against China, and the internationalisation of the war in Viet-Nam was urged by American diplomacy; and it was against this background that the United States carried out the first thermonuclear explosions with a great deal of publicity. They were continued until the very eve of the Geneva Conference.

It seems to us that no more was necessary to bring home to American and world public opinion that the threat of a thermonuclear war is a concrete, real and immediate threat, indissolubly linked with the real threats of war which hang over the world, in Asia and in the heart of Europe. This explains the new feeling which the Bikini experiments have aroused in the world in circles which we had not been able to touch with the great campaign around the Stockholm Appeal. The very breadth and intensity of this feeling show how great is the peril we must face; they show us, I believe, the link we must establish between our fight for the banning of the H-bomb and our fight for the peaceful solution of the problems dividing the world; they show us the new possibilities which are opening before us and before our action for peace; they suggest to us the reply which we can give to the question we are being asked — what is to be done?...

In my country, the campaign against the H-bomb has now become the general and permanent frame for all our great struggles against EDC, for the relaxation of international tension and for peace: a frame in which we can develop a broader front, an effective rallying of forces.

And that, I believe, is the reply which we ought to give, on a world scale, to the question: what is to be done? What is to de done against the horrible threat of the H-bomb?

It is not a question of repeating Stockholm, however important our success may have been at that time. The demands imposed on us by the present situation are more urgent; the danger has become more terrible and more real. But our forces, and the possibilities of rallying other forces, have grown in proportion. In my opinion, it is not so much a question of seeking out, or inventing, new solutions. It is a question of making all possible contacts and of achieving every possible grouping of forces capable of imposing these solutions. This is the task which we propose to our whole movement at the present time.

We were alone at Stockholm; today other voices are being raised along with ours to demand agreement. Let us bring people together, let us unite these efforts, surmounting all divisions and all distrust, let us make the struggle against the atomic threat the common frame for all our actions in favour of peaceful solutions, let us make it a fight for the preservation of man's civilisation; they will be forced to listen to us, our common effort will be victorious.

M. JEAN-PAUL SARTRE

(France)

If the atomic bomb were dropped it would inflict on men a danger we know only too well. But even when it is only a threat, it imposes a radical change in the relations between nations. It is the atomic bomb that characterises what we call the cold war.

The appearance of national armies had the effect of enormously increasing the massacre of human beings, but, all the same, they could to a certain extent, restrain the leaders. But yesterday, you needed millions of men to kill millions of men, and to get the masses to accept death and to inflict it the conflict had to reflect, if not their interests, at least their passions to a certain extent, and it had to avoid shocking their sense of justice...

During the Second World War and after, in occupied Europe, in the Soviet Union, then in China and in Indo-China, we have seen the appearance of popular armies which live among the people and not on the people, which take to the people, as the Chinese say, as a fish takes to water...

But the people's army has found its exact counterpart in the nuclear weapon; the people's army and the atomic bomb are the two polar opposites of our time...

Atomic war is getting out of control, it could be launched tomorrow by a few Cabinet Ministers against the will and interests of their own nation. That is perhaps the greatest danger...

Though brutal and violent, the ultimatums of the past were challenges and provocations. An ultimatum meant: if you don't give in, we shall fight, and if we have to fight, it is we who shall win. But the atomic bomb is a permanent ultimatum and it has nothing whatever to do with the ancient custom of the challenge...

In fact, it is blackmail on the destruction of the human race. They try to stop history as Joshua stopped the sun, by threatening to blow up the world: "We will drop the bomb if the French lose the war, and it is just too bad for Man, we will drop it on the Indochinese, on the Chinese or on the Russians, it does not matter which."

In order to stop the world turning round they are threatening to wipe out History by liquidating those who make history. It is all they can do: wipe out man to prevent him from changing. The bomb is in itself the basis and the sum total of a policy completely hostile to the true development of humanity and which wants to impose this alternative: the status quo or total destruction. It is quite certain that we will not change any more when we are dead...

Even if the bomb were not to explode, it can at least serve to intimidate the neighbour countries and to regroup around the powers which possess it other less favoured nations.

It creates a bloc, it gives birth to terror, and besides, since it can be dropped at any time without the consent of the people, it represents an arbitrary power in the hands of a few men.

Up till now, anger, blundering, wrong calculations remained unimportant accidents in collective history, at present they can become formidable, and the moods of a few leaders can become historical factors...

In the past, history was often made by war, but to-day, since war would mean the end of the world, history can only be made in and through Peace.

REVEREND L. J. BLISS

(Great Britain)

These is only one real argument that we have to meet, and it comes from people with varying motives. It says that the only real insurance against the H-Bomb is the abolition of war itself. Well, of course, we all want to abolish war, but this cannot be done merely by waving a fairy wand. It is a question of proceeding step by step, and the Peace Movement, during the period of the Stockholm petition, as well as now in its campaign for the banning of the Hydrogen Bomb, singles out these aspects of modern war which are most revolting to the moral conscience of humanity, and tries to tackle them. Certainly, if the Great Powers reach agreement on the banning of the H-Bomb, not only will a sigh of relief go up from the whole civilised world, but other outstanding issues will be much easier to solve.

And, on purely moral grounds, we are right in singling out nuclear weapons for our attention. They are utterly different in kind, as well as in degree, from any previous weapon that war has devised for killing. Not only will they kill human beings indiscriminately in their millions, but they will poison the springs of human health for generations and may even destroy all human life in this world. They are the ultimate blasphemy against the Creator.

Sr. LAZARO PEÑA

(Cuba)

Every move of United States foreign policy vis-à-vis the Latin American countries has this double content directed both against our peoples and against all the peoples of the world.

This is made very clear by the content of the military pacts which the United States has signed with a number of governments in Latin America and which are meeting with unanimous and active disapproval on the part of the peoples of these countries.

As is well known, it was by ignoring the nation-wide protest that the military pact was imposed on Brazil. The same thing occured in Chile, while, in Mexico, the pressure of popular opposition prevented ratification and consequently the conclusion of such a pact. In Guatemala too, the conclusion of a pact was refused...

The military pacts notwithstanding, the majority of the peoples of Latin America had no wish to go and fight against the people of Korea. Nor did they do so! These pacts notwithstanding, the peoples of Latin America refused to march and did not march against the Guatemalan people.

Mr. BRUCE MICKLEBURGH

(Canada)

For Canada, the prohibition of the hydrogen bomb has become a question of national survival. Canadians do not share the emotions of the US General who said, "Thank God, between the US and Russia there lies Canada"...

Following the campaign which a great National Peace Congress launched in January, and particularly following the March Ist explosion, there has sprung up in Canada, against the H-Bomb, the broadest and most representative movement which we have seen for many years...

Following a lobby by the Saskatchewan Peace Council, the Saskatchewan Legislature, with the unanimous approval of all parties, over-rode the idea that a provincial legislature can only deal with domestic affairs, and called upon the Federal Government to press strongly for the prohibition of the bomb and the peaceful use of atomic energy.

M. EMMANUEL D'ASTIER DE LA VIGERIE

(France)

There are two conceptions of security. One of these conceptions is to put one's trust in arms and alliances and in the superiority of these arms and alliances over those of a possible enemy. Thus, all military alliances, all pacts, whether they are Atlantic or Pacific, whether they call themselves "European Defence Community" or "South-East Asia Pact" are concluded in the name of security. This idea of security corresponds to the idea of blocs, two camps irrevocably opposed to each other, committed to the armaments race and the race for territories...

The other conception of security is more general. It alone can guarantee Peace. It is not the kind of security which two possible allies bring each other by joining their forces, it is the kind of security which is shared by two possible enemies who both have equal rights. That is true collective security.

This kind of collective security is opposed to the division of the world into two rival blocs, each conceiving of security in their own way. It is opposed to the armaments race...

The rules of international law are as follows:

On the one hand the signatories of a collective security pact must recognise and guarantee existing frontiers; on the other hand, they must undertake not to interfere in the internal affairs of other states, every nation having the right to adopt the kind of internal system that it wishes.

As for the procedures on which the organisation of collective security rest, they can be summed up as follows:

1. A procedure which ensures in the best possible way the peaceful solution of international conflicts and differences, by recourse to arbitration, conciliation and negotiation.

2. The setting up of treaties of mutual assistance, with the signatories of these treaties undertaking to give each other armed assistance in the case of one of them being a victim of aggression from outside.

These collective security procedures demand that the idea of peaceful co-existence between different regimes should not be rejected. They forbid one state or a group of states from using the pretext of material or ideological superiority in order to impose by force a particular structure on another state or group of states...

The World Peace Movement considers that public opinion can have a decisive influence on the development of the Geneva Conference. This Conference ought to be the starting-point for the organisation of collective security in the Far East.

It is a question of limiting and eliminating two war centres in Korea and Indo-China, and of assuring security in this vast region of the world with the participation of the Asian states concerned, notably China, Japan and India. The other Great Powers should be brought into this system of collective security...

Collective security, in the true sense, leads to collective Peace. It eliminates war as a method of settlement, and this is a necessary step for building Peace...

Collective security will also allow of general, simultaneous and controlled disarmament. It is to be observed that a sincere agreement on disarmament is incompatible with the maintenance throughout the world of offensive strategic arrangements and of military bases which are part of such arrangements.

Finally, collective security will allow the resumption of economic and cultural exchange between all countries. The unprecedented development of international commerce which would result from this, would ensure the reconversion to peaceful ends of a large part of the armaments industries and would be, for many countries, a remedy for the economic crisis.

PROFESSOR JOSEF HROMADKA

(Czechoslovakia)

I have the honour to talk on this subject in the name of the whole Czechoslovak delegation.

I might add that I am also interpreting the feelings of the Czechoslovak people and all the ideals which underlie our peace efforts. To us, collective security is more than a mere political slogan. It is a basis of freedom and self-government, a precondition of national existence. We live in the heart of Europe where for long centuries historical struggles took place for the highest achievements of the human heart and conscience, of cultural and material life. Our man in the street understands instinctively that his future depends on understanding between European nations in a spirit of freedom, humanity and justice...

Our experience confirms the urgency of collective security. The government of our Republic has recently expressed this very clearly. Our people stand by the decision of our government and consider the proposals for the collective security of European nations suggested by the Government of the Soviet Union to be positive proposals and support them unconditionally.

PANDIT SUNDERLAL

(India)

For 150 years we have known the experience of foreign domination. We know what modern imperialism means for its victims. We got our independence only six years back. Most of the danger spots for the breaking out of a new world war lie scattered round about our frontiers...

As you all know, in the difficult conditions of world diplomacy today, our Government has been doing much — I think it has been doing all it could — to avoid war and secure world Peace. Our leader, Mahatma Gandhi, stood for the abolition of all wars.

I can therefore claim, in my humble way, to speak to you today as the representative of the 360 million people of India on this matter.

Conditions in other Asian and African countries are also more or less similar. Some, like India, have just won their freedom. Others are still struggling to be free. We have all to rebuild our shattered economy and reconstruct our social and cultural lives. For this, both freedom and Peace are equally and absolutely necessary. That is why the cry of Peace is the cry of the people throughout Asia and Africa...

The right to self-rule is the inherent right of every people, it is necessary for the Peace, progress, and prosperity of the world as a whole. Looking at the problems confronting us from this point of view, the following remedies easily and inevitably suggest themselves:

1) It is highly unfair, immoral and even monstrous to regard the so-called nationalist government of Formosa as the legitimate government of the whole of China. This monstrosity has done no good to anybody. It forbodes nothing but evil for the future, and is probably the most potential cause of the disturbance to world peace. This position must immediately and unequivocally be given up by all concerned.

2) The People's Republic of China must also be unequivocally recognised by all concerned as the only legitimate Government of that vast country...

3) All foreign armies should be immediately withdrawn from Korea, and the people of that unfortunate yet brave land should be left free to make up their own differences and decide their own form of government without any interference from any outside power.

4) In Indo-China, as has been suggested, there should be an immediate and complete cease-fire with determination to settle all questions with regard to the future of that country through negotiation, on the basis of the absolute right to self-determination of the people of that country. For any outside power to help, with arms or otherwise, any of the forces now fighting in Indo-China should be regarded as an act of enmity to World Peace and as an international crime.

5) The use of all weapons of mass destruction, such as have already wrought havoc on hundreds of thousands of innocent people in Japan, as we have been hearing for the last two days, should be immediately and absolutely banned through an international agreement, and the new sources of energy discovered should be made common property and be utilised for constructive purposes for the betterment of man.

6) All nations, or rather all governments, that are today holding other nations in any sort of subjection, political, military or economic, should withdraw from those countries...

7) All military pacts or agreements which perpetuate antagonistic groups, factions and blocs among nations, are a constant threat to world peace.

Mr. JAROSLAV IWASZKIEWICZ

(Poland)

The formation of the "European Army" would deepen still more the division, not only of Germany, but of all Europe, the unity of which is so apparent to us and which we believe possible; it would aggravate the rupture of the traditional, economic and cultural ties between the nations of Europe.

As for the pact of collective security, we see in it a powerful method for restoring and expanding the traditional ties which make Europe — the heir of the great Greek and Roman culture — one whole which is dear to us all...

Hence the battle against the "European Defence Community" and for a collective security treaty is at the same time a battle for Europe, for its civilisation and culture...

I think there is a lesson here for all of us writers, composers and scientists, who account for a very large percentage of the active peace-workers throughout the world...

We also have the great task of opposing the splitting of art, literature, and European culture into two camps. We must really proceed with the exchange of cultural possessions.

I am fully convinced that our endeavours can bring the best results. We can not only save European culture from annihilation; we can also bring about its rebirth and revival. We can place it on a higher pedestal than ever before, spread it, and create a new Renaissance. If we do not lose sight of this task, we writers, artists and scientists can undoubtedly contribute in full measure to the happiness of mankind and we shall easily defeat those wretched people who want war and who draw their guns when they hear the word "culture".

I am deeply convinced that writers, artists and scientists themselves do not appreciate the possibilities open to them, and that the pessimism of certain of them is the expression of this lack of faith. I should like to inspire them with faith in Man and his capabilities, with faith in the persuasive power of art and its truly great significance for the destiny of mankind — these convictions are shared by the majority of my fellow-countrymen in Poland.

Be sure that art is the sixth Great Power, and that its eternal influence marches, or at least should march, in the direction of progress. The admiration of beauty is a truly human emotion; it unites all in its great purity, and beauty lies in work, in creation, in peace.

Dr. KUO MO-JO

(People's Republic of China)

VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

Now that the Korean war, which lasted for three years, is ended, the only existing large-scale war is the war in Indo-China. This war has been going on for eight years and certain circles are trying to internationalise it. All people of goodwill in the world are now calling for the restoration of peace in Indo-China with the same eagerness as they called for the ending of the Korean war for more than three years.

Therefore it has become the earnest hope of the people of the world that the Geneva Conference may attain satisfactory results. At the Geneva Conference the representatives of the United States, Great Britain, France, the Soviet Union, the People's Republic of China and other interested states, have sat down together to examine and solve the urgent problems of Asia. This, in itself, is of great historical significance, The Geneva Conference is the first realisation of the Five-Power negotiations which the World Council of Peace has been demanding for five years. This means that there is a greater possibility of solving international disputes through peaceful negotiation. It also means that all important Asian and international questions must be solved with the participation of representatives of the People's Republic of China...

On the one hand, the United States takes part in the discussions on the restoration of peace in Indo-China at the Geneva Conference, while on the other, she shows much more interest in, and can hardly wait for, the organisation of the South-East Asia Military Alliance, in an attempt to extend the war in Indo-China. Who, therefore, could say that there is any sincerity in America's attitude to the Geneva Conference? Who could deny that it is the influential ruling circles in the United States who are protracting, obstructing and attempting to sabotage the Geneva Conference?

The ruling circles of France are also pursuing a two-faced policy. These followers of the aggressive circles of the United States are, on the one hand, pretending, under the pressure of French and world public opinion, to carry on peaceful negotiations, while, on the other, they are begging the United States Government for military aid. At Geneva, there is some underhand business going on between M. Bidault and Mr. Bedell Smith...

In my opinion, the problem of Asia is the same as the problem of Europe. The collective security of Europe is the key to the peace of Europe and the development of the peoples of Europe. So it is with Asia. In the long-term interests of peace for the nations of Asia, we have to solve not only urgent problems of Korea and Indo-China, but to seek collective security for Asia, which should include all the Asian countries. Only this can ensure peace and national independence for Asia, the prerequisite for which is freedom from interference on the part of colonialists...

We Chinese people cherish our own independence and sovereignty, and we therefore respect those of our neighbours. We cherish our own peaceful construction and we therefore respect that of our neighbours. We cherish our own cultural creations, and we therefore respect those of our neighbours.

Since the foundation of the People's Republic of China, these principles have stood at the very heart of our foreign policy.

Acting on these principles, we have established diplomatic relations with many countries, and have concluded trade agreements with business circles in Japan and with the Governments of Indonesia, Burma, Ceylon, Mongolia, Korea and other countries. Recently, moreover, we have signed a new agreement with India which clarifies the relations between China and India with regard to the Chinese territory, Tibet, and which is based on the principle of mutual respect for territorial sovereignty. For two thousand years there has been contact between China and India. We have always co-existed in peace, and have never waged war against each other. We believe that this should be a historic proof of the claim that peaceful co-existence between nations is possible. Further, we have exchanged with India, Burma, Mongolia, Korea and other countries, cultural delegations which have strengthened the friendship and understanding between the nations.

We are carrying out our first Five-Year Plan of peaceful construction. We want to raise the material and cultural standards of our people through socialist industrialisation. All honest and objective persons who have visited our country during the four years since the foundation of our Republic, are in a position to testify to the constructive labours of the Chinese people and their will to co-exist in peace with the peoples of all nations. As long as three thousand years ago, our ancestors bequeathed to us a very wise maxim, "All men within the boundaries of the seas are brothers". We are willing to abide by this maxim. We will never commit aggression against others, but we will never tolerate aggression against ourselves. History is our witness that whenever we have been invaded by a foreign aggressor, we have fought for the restoration of our freedom, independence and peace, even if it has meant a struggle lasting as long as two or three hundred years.

Dear friends, the discussion on collective security for all the nations of the world is one of the most important points on the agenda of this meeting. I have therefore dealt at length with the situation in Asia. Collective security is indivisible, and collective security in Asia is undoubtedly an integral part of world security. We Chinese people are not only striving for collective security in Asia, we are striving also for collective security in Europe.

View of the cultural commission at work.

PROFESSOR WALTER FRIEDRICH

Mr. THAKIN LWIN
(Burma)

The hostile policy of the United States with regard to the People's Republic of China is impeding the solution of the present day problems of Asia.

This aggressive policy has no prospects whatever, for it is in conflict with the entire course of historical development in Asia and elsewhere, and constitutes, under present conditions, the main obstacle to the settlement of present day Asian problems in conformity with the principles of freedom and the national rights of the peoples...

The policies pursued by the Governments of India, Indonesia and Burma, of opposing the spread of the war of aggression and advocating the peaceful settlement of the Indo-Chinese and Korean questions, have struck a serious blow at the aggressive plans of the US imperialists. These policies made a big contribution to the peace of South-East Asia and of the whole world.

The attempts made by the United States warmongers to organise a military alliance in South-East Asia are criminal activities on the part of the United States in order to spread the war of aggression, undermine peace in Asia and enslave its people. These activities will undoubtedly meet with determined opposition from the people of the whole of Asia.

In this situation the countries of Asia should consult among themselves with a view to seeking common measures to safeguard peace and security in Asia by assuming mutual obligations.

SHRI KRISHEN DEV SETHI
(India)

Anglo-American intervention in Kashmiri affairs is the main reason for the non-settlement of this problem. The people of Kashmir have struggled and fought alongside the people of India to achieve their independence and therefore they are united on this point: that the foreign intervention should come to an end immediately. They are against all proposals which will make Kashmir the polo-ground for foreign powers, which would not only endanger the independence of Kashmir, but would also bring war to the frontiers of India and Pakistan and thus endanger the freedom of the whole of Asia.

Sr. ASSAAD SIMONS
(Bolivia)

The people of Bolivia are a peaceful people and they look with horror on the preparations for another war. With anguish they recall Hiroshima and Nagasaki, and the grief of the Japanese fishermen is their grief. We demand, as has already been done by our workers and peasants and by our whole people, the absolute prohibition of atomic and hydrogen bombs. We want no more Hiroshimas and Nagasakis, we want no more atomic tests. It is for this reason that we are here to add our voice to those of millions of men, to prevent the new Attilas from destroying mankind by an act of desperation and madness.

YOGI SHUDHANANDA BHARATI
(India)

It is time for aggressive foreign elements to quit the shores of India and Asia. We do not want them to meddle with our affairs and to divide our homes. We welcome with open arms scientific experts who can help us to build our industries, but not political diplomats who wish to dominate us again. It is time for the East and the West to meet and shake hands for the progress of World Peace. When Europe and Asia meet in equal accord, when the material dynamism of the West is wedded to the spiritual grace of the East, then humanity will be reborn and all will live peacefully together. Then we need not fear atomic fission nor the fusion of atoms of hydrogen.

Mr. SVEN HECTOR
(Sweden)

Recent events, particularly the experiments with the H-bomb, have roused our vigilance. Now that the winds and seas which surround our peaceful country could bring death, we are beginning to understand that we cannot escape either.

This certainty has recently been given expression in many different forms. The Swedish Peace Committee has conducted local inquiries which have shown a considerable development in the nature of the reaction to the threat of the atom bomb.

This was also manifested in the Swedish Parliament. Senator Gosta Elfving, editor of the central organ of the Social Democratic Party, "Morgon-Tidningen", asked the governmenta question in Parliament about their plans in relation to the H-bomb experiments. During the parliamentary debate which followed, just as in the question itself, a very great anxiety was shown to exist concerning the situation and the necessity of taking urgent measures. The Prime Minister, Erlander, stressed the possibility of arriving at an agreement, primarily within the framework of the United Nations, on general disarmament, on banning the use of atomic weapons and on the control of the production of atomic energy...

The Executive Committee of the Liberal Party demanded that the government "should support all efforts within the United Nations leading to the conclusion of an international agreement guaranteeing the control of armaments and their reduction, including the banning of the most horrible methods of destruction." This demand was a practical reflection of the opinion of all the trade union, cultural and religious organisations, an opinion which was demonstrated by resolutions, by statements from their leaders and by editorials in their respective papers.

It is in this way that the Swedish people's traditional desire for peace is at the present time everywhere acquiring an increasingly active and more concrete content.

For a very long time Sweden's foreign policy has officially been one of neutrality and our country still remains, as all the world knows, outside all military pacts. But this neutrality also holds the possibility for our country to play an active role as mediator and promoter of friendship between the peoples

Mr. HAN SUL-YA

(People's Democratic Republic of Korea)

On behalf of all Koreans who are fighting for the sacred cause of peace, and in the name of hundreds of thousands of mothers and war orphans whose hearts are still bleeding, the Korean delegation makes the following proposals:

We demand of all States which are taking part in the Geneva Conference the peaceful solution of the Korean question, the establishment of security in the Far East and lasting peace throughout the world...

We demand the adoption of the proposal for the peaceful unification of Korea made by the representative of the People's Republic of Korea at the Geneva Conference, which calls for the withdrawal of all foreign troops from Korea and for the formation of a central democratic and unified government based on a Parliamant voted in by free elections carried out through the whole of Korea.

We demand the banning of weapons of mass destruction — atomic and hydrogen bombs — and the setting up of international bodies for their control.

Mr. GORDON SCHAFFER

(Great Britain)

Our forces are limitless, but the danger is terribly near just because we are so close to victory...

I believe our task at this Conference is to enable the World Peace Movement to speak, as Professor Infeld has said, "For the conscience of humanity"...

We have to isolate those who plan war. We have to find ways of proving the strength of the millions who seek peace. This is the moment when humanity chooses the way of life and limitless possibilities of progress or the way of death...

Mr. LE DINH THAM

(Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam)

The voice of the guns in Korea was silenced nearly a year ago. However, in Indo-China the battle goes on raging and blood goes on being spilled.

This present Session of the World Council of Peace which is discussing the security of peoples has great significance because at this moment the delegates of the Five Great Powers — the Soviet Union, the People's Republic of China, the United States, Great Britain, and France — are meeting in Geneva with the delegates of the nations concerned to consider the peaceful solution of the Korean problem and the restoration of peace in Indo-China.

The peoples of Indo-China joyfully greet the opening of this Extraordinary Session and hope, as do all the peoples of the world, that the Geneva Conference will be successful so that peace may come back to Indo-China...

American intervention in the war in Indo-China not only makes this war a more murderous one, but also creates a danger to France, and a threat to the security of the peoples of Asia and of the world.

Although the people of Viet-Nam, as well as the people of Khmer and Laos, who have risen up in arms against the French colonialists and the American interventionists to defend peace and their national independence, have scored many successes, they ceaselessly advocate the solution of the conflict in Indo-China through peaceful negotiation.

In a sincere attempt to restore peace in Indo-China, Mr. Pham Van Dong, Vice-President of the Council and interim Minister of Foreign Affairs, head of the delegation of the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam at the Geneva Conference, made a general statement on the situation on May 10th, 1954. In it he explained the basic position of the people and Government of the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam, which is — peace, independence, unity and democracy...

Even Mr. Eden, head of the British delegation, has realised that Mr. Pham Van Dong's declaration is a reflection of the national aspirations of the people of Viet-Nam. This declaration should be used as a basis for discussion on the restoration of peace in Indo-China at the Geneva Conference. On this matter of the restoration of peace in Indo-China, we believe it necessary to insist on the need for an immediate preliminary cease-fire operating throughout Indo-China, in order to create conditions favourable to negotiation.

All the world knows that it is not because we are weak, because we have had defeats, that we desire a cease-fire. On the contrary, the military situation is most favourable to the Viet-Namese People's army. However, moved by humanitarian feelings, and in order to serve the cause of friendship between the peoples, we do not wish to see any more bloodshed. We do not want the young men of Viet-Nam, Khmer, Laos and France to continue killing each other, when there exists between them no cause for hatred. A day without fighting is a day saved for living. Obviously the cease-fire must not be the occasion for the further reinforcement of the troops and munitions in Indo-China. Neither must it be a truce with the aim of restarting the war. And if the ending of hostilities is desired with a view to a genuine restoration of peace, then it is necessary to take into consideration now the fundamental aspirations of the peoples of Indo-China.

Is the restoration of peace in Indo-China possible? We know that the peoples of Indo-China, like the people of France, desire peace. The principle obstacles to the restoration of Peace in Indo-China at the present time are created by the bellicose Americans and those people in France who want war. They are manoeuvring to wreck the Geneva Conference. Instead of creating a favourable atmosphere before the Conference, the Americans carried out military manoeuvres and experiments with H-Bombs in the Pacific. They called for joint action by several powers in the Indo-China war. During the Geneva Conference the Americans are making various moves to organise what they call the South East Asia and Western Pacific Defence Bloc...

Everybody knows that in order to put an end to the war there must be negotiations between the belligerents. However, the proposal of the delegation of the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam to invite to the Geneva Conference delegates from the Resistance Governments of Khmer and Pathet Lao has, up to the present moment, met with refusal by the French and American delegations.

There are other acts of sabotage also, but we are sure that the forces of peace which brought about the opening of the Geneva Conference can prevent the realisation of the plans of those who desire war.

We therefore ask the World Council of Peace to call on all the peoples of the world to struggle against the manoeuvres destined to sabotage the Geneva Conference and to support this conference with all their might until its final success.

We now ask the Council's permission to speak to our very dear French friends and defenders of peace who are present at this session.

Dear friends, the restoration, sooner or later, of peace in Indo-China, still depends in the main on the common struggle of our peoples — in Viet-Nam, in Khmer, in Laos, and in France...

We know that the French people, with their ancient civilisation, will not tolerate the continuance of inhuman acts and unjust ambitions in Indo-China. We cannot but feel pain at the thought that even while we talk cordially together here our sons are being driven to kill one another in Indo-China. We cannot but regret that in the French Expeditionary Force many brave young men have to die, or be wounded, in the sole interest of the Americans.

We ask you to tell the families of those fighting in the French Expeditionary Force that the French men wounded or taken prisoner at Dien Bien Phu, as well as in other battle areas, are getting the best care for their health and well-being from the Viet-Nam people and its People's Army, on the orders of our President, Ho Chi Minh. Whatever lying propaganda may say, be sure that the people of Viet-Nam still consider the French people as their friends, and the French soldiers as the sons of their friends. Like the people of Khmer and Laos, the people of Viet-Nam wish to strengthen their bonds of friendship with the French people...

We have heard the views of many persons from Asia and from the whole world, calling for the restoration of peace in Indo-China. We thank all men who love peace all over the world for their support for the peoples of Indo-China in the struggle they are waging for peace and national independence.

We are convinced that, thanks to the efforts of the peoples of Indo-China and of the French people, thanks to the efforts of the World Peace Movement, peace will triumph in Indo-China, peace will triumph in Asia and throughout the world.

Mr. MODJATABA BUZURG ALAVI

(Iran)

The Iranian people are concerned for their freedom, their national independence and for lasting prosperity and they know only too well that these things can only be guaranteed in Peace and as a result of the collective security of all peoples. But Peace is also disturbed by intervention in the affairs of other countries, by violation of their rights and interests and by the temporary settlement of differences by violence and pressure.

The present wars in Asia, the establishment of war bases, rearmament, and the attempts to take possession of sources of raw materials by force, and, finally, the military blocs and pacts directed against the independence movements of subject peoples — all these are factors helping to intensify the present international tension and to keep men in anxiety and fear. Due to these facts and to its geographical position, as well as to its boundless wealth of raw materials, particularly oil, the people of Iran are very open to such interference...

Our efforts to preserve our independence will go on despite the most difficult conditions and the greatest sacrifices. Our people's fight for peace is bound up with our struggle for independence and freedom.

Mr. AHMED MOHAMED ALI

(Iraq)

Ever since we first learned of the World Peace Movement, whose aim is to save mankind from terrible wars, to bring about the prohibition of weapons of mass destruction, a relaxation of international tension and the expansion of economic and cultural relations between the countries of the whole world, whatever their systems of government — ever since that time, we have felt that a great, well-organised ally was holding out a hand to us, strengthened by the will of all the peoples of the world.

The Peace Movement in Iraq is still extending and consolidating itself. With every day that passes it draws in new people from all classes, people of all opinions and all religions...

Recently, we set ourselves the task of collecting 100,000 signatures in favour of a peaceful solution of international problems, against the Turkey-Pakistan pact and for banning the use and testing of atomic and hydrogen weapons. We are sure that we shall greatly exceed this figure.

Mr. ALEXEI SURKOV

(U. S. S. R.)

Our present Session is taking place in Berlin, the capital of Germany; this fact in itself must remind us of what happened in this city a few months ago.

The Berlin Conference of the Foreign Ministers of the Four Great Powers was called primarily to solve the German question, it was precisely this question that it did not succeed in solving. The discussion on this question made it evident that there was a difference of views between the Soviet Union and the other three Powers which could not be overcome in the course of the conference...

In spite of our terrible sufferings and losses at the hands of Hitler's hordes, neither our people nor our Government have ever, in the post-war period, thought of revenge or punishment. The whole policy of the Soviet Union in regard to the German question is aimed at the rapid creation of conditions for the building up of a peace-loving and democratic Germany, and the earliest possible conclusion of a German Peace Treaty which would make it possible to end the burdens resulting from the foreign military occupation of German territory, which has gone on for years...

The Soviet delegation, expressing the will of all Soviet people, is sure that the World Council of Peace will call on the Governments of the Four Great Powers to resume negotiations for the solution of the German question, the setting up of an All German Government, the withdrawal of all occupation forces and the holding of free elections throughout Germany.

We are convinced that the German question can and must be solved to the satisfaction of all honest Germans, all peace-loving neighbours of Germany and all people who do not want war but only peace...

Since the end of the war the Government of our country has always opposed to the policy of discord and hatred, so dangerous for mankind, a policy based on the recognition of the possibility of the peaceful co-existence of countries with different social systems and of peaceful competition between them, a policy dictated by the desire to reach agreement on the basis of equality and reasonable compromise...

Bearing in mind the experience of the years preceding the Second World War, Soviet diplomacy has opposed to the system of military blocs, which is inspired by ideological considerations and therefore inevitably represents a step towards another military explosion, a policy for the organisation of collective security, for the organisation of regional groups of States bound by reciprocal pledges of non-aggression and mutual assistance in case of aggression...

The Soviet delegation is certain that the present session of the World Council of Peace will raise the demand that collective security in the most important parts of the world, particularly in Europe and Asia, will be guaranteed by the creation of suitable organisations in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations. All countries in a given area, irrespective of their political and social system, could belong to these organisations.

STATEMENT BY DELEGATIONS FROM THE COUNTRIES OF SOUTH-EAST ASIA AND THE FAR EAST

We, delegates to the Extraordinary Session of the World Council of Peace from Burma, Ceylon, China, India, Indonesia, Japan, Korea, Mongolia, U.S.S.R. and Viet-Nam, welcome the opening of negotiations at Geneva for the peaceful settlement of the Korean question and for the restoration of peace in Indo-China. We express our regret that some Asian countries, which are vitally interested in peace in Korea and Indo-China and could, therefore, have played an important role, have been excluded from the Geneva Conference.

We urge the governments of the countries represented at the Geneva Conference to respond to the demand of the peoples of the whole world, and especially of Asia, to bring the negotiations to a conclusion by coming to agreement on the questions under discussion.

The peoples of South-East Asia and the Far East will not, under any pretext, tolerate the existence of foreign military bases on their soil, continued foreign domination and occupation in parts of Asia and attempts to divide and suppress them by the enforcement of military pacts. We demand the immediate withdrawal of all foreign troops from our countries.

We express our unanimous determination to work together with all other countries for an enduring peace in the world and especially in South-East Asia and the Far East. We are confident that this can be achieved through friendly relations and co-operation based on the principles of mutual advantage and mutual respect for each other's national independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity. We pledge ourselves to strive for close co-operation between our countries towards the same goal of collective security and peace.

6th Session

Chairman: Mr. NIKOLAI TIKHONOV

(U. S. S. R.)

Vice-Chairmen

GENERAL EDGARD BUXBAUM
(Brazil)

Mme. KIRSTEN HANSTEEN
(Norway)

Rt. Rev. JANOS PETER
(Hungary)

We have experienced in our lives how friendly relations may he developed between nations. Not very long ago Central Europe was a constant seed bed for every possible antagonism between nations, but the situation has greatly changed...

In harmony with the spirit of the church, we should proclaim in our congregations that Christian people should strive for the fullest friendship between nations. The idea of collective security of nations should be upheld by Churches in all parts of the world...

The Church could do more by demanding the banning of all experiments with weapons of mass destruction and the prohibition of the A and H bombs.

Mr. KRISTEN E. ANDRESSON
(Iceland)

The ordinary people of Iceland demand that a lasting peace be secured for all nations of the world, great and small, and the right to independence and a peaceful life in their countries.

This was the reaction of the Icelandic workers and the whole Icelandic nation to recent world events. The experiments with the Hydrogen Bomb showed us in a terrifying but clear light the adventurous inhuman policy of our so-called protectors, the Americans, and the danger created by the presence of their military bases in our country...

Against our people's will and in spite of our protests, we are caught up, much to our sorrow, in the machine of war. For the first time in our history, we see our man-power, which we need for our basic production, engaged on the setting up of military bases in the service of the aggressive war plans of the USA.

Sr. MANUEL SANCHEZ ARCAS
(Spain)

Spain can be drawn into war at any moment and its territory transformed into a base for atomic aggression without any account being taken of the will of the Spanish people or even of that of its government. The US Secretary for Air put it in this way at a recent press conference when he cynically stated: "There are certain agreements relating to the use of bases, but when it becomes necessary, the bases will be used. Who can prevent us from using them?" This statement was most enlightening to many who still doubted the reality of the danger.

"But the will of those who have sold Spain is not the will of the Spanish people", to quote the words of the Spanish Peace Council, which added: "Our people will never ratify nor will they carry out this monstrous pact which condemns them to death. Our people passionately love their national independence and are already fighting for the life and dignity of their motherland."

Mr. NAZIM HIKMET
(Turkey)

American imperialism bases its hopes of spreading war on our country. A month ago President Eisenhower publicly declared that Turkey was the USA's most powerful ally and that the Turkish Army was the most reliable armed force at America's disposal.

Admiral Finletter publicly announced that Turkey could be used as a starting point for an attack against the Soviet Union and the People's Democracies. On February 21st, 1954, the New York Times correspondent stated in a telegram that Turkey was being prepared for an offensive war, and that its role has been changed from the defensive to the offensive. According to this correspondent, such an offensive would be carried out by the Turkish forces and the forces included in NATO...

My people, like all peoples in the world, work hard, well and honestly for Peace. They fought for their independence and they will continue to fight for it. What I want from the representatives of the peace-loving peoples here today is their support for our efforts and our fight for peace.

Dr. IBRAHIM RASHAD
(Egypt)

We are much astonished to find that after all that followed the last explosion of the H-bomb, after the panic which gripped the peoples of all nations and particularly the people of New York, after what was widely proclaimed by men of science, the rulers of some countries still cling to their refusal to ban weapons of mass destruction, an insistence which proves their adherence to an aggressive policy, and their desire to unleash a third world war by any means and at any price...

The Egyptian delegation, who have listened with keen interest to the speeches of the previous speakers, have nothing to add to the proposals made for the relaxation of world tension, for the banning of weapons of mass destruction, for the ending of the armaments race, for a Peace Pact between the Five Great Powers, and for allowing the People's Republic of China to take its rightful place in international affairs.

HERR XAVER FRANZ BOLDT
(Germany)

To permeate the population with this spirit of militarism and revenge, Western Germany is being flooded with militaristic literature. Apart from a great many books which glorify the Hitlerite war, more militaristic weekly and monthly magazines are being published than in the years 1933-1945. To hinder the resistance developing among the working class against the resurrection of German militarism, the whole State machinery is being mobilised by the Government. Anyone who makes a stand against the revival of militarism in West Germany, and for the peaceful reunification of Germany, is accused of high treason...

The working-class of Germany is beginning to realise this danger. In numerous resolutions passed in the factories and Trade Union organisations, it has demanded the prohibition and outlawing of atomic weapons and the withdrawal of atomic artillery from West Germany...

Countless declarations made during the last few months, and particularly in recent weeks, express their desire for a free, democratic decision by the people. There can be no doubt that the movement for a plebiscite which is now beginning to develop is an effective action against the EDC policy and the remilitarisation of West Germany. The referendums which have already been carried out in many places clearly show that the overwhelming majority of the population is deciding against EDC and for a Peace Treaty; this is also the case even in districts where a large proportion of the population voted for the present Government parties on September 6th, 1953.

Mme YVONNE DUMONT

(France)

We think that the fight which our people have conducted and are conducting against EDC, and the daily increasing unity in this fight, have contributed to a large extent in bringing about the Berlin Conference which was a success for the people's desire for negotiation...

Today, the ending of the war in Viet-Nam has become a national demand put forward by all sections of our people and it is even expressed among groups of the Government majority in Parliament...

The whole nation has come to understand that this terrible war is contrary to the interests of France because it is contrary to international law, to the people's right to independence, and because it involves the risk of a third world war...

By forcing our Government to agree to a cease-fire and begin negotiations in Indo-China, we can put an end to the slaughter and suffering, and eliminate the danger of world war. This would free our country from strangulation, make the establishment of EDC more difficult, and to a large extent ensure the peace of the world.

This is the noble task of the French people. We particularly promise our Viet-Namese friends that we will not fail in it.

Dr. SLIMAN BEN SLIMAN

(Tunisia)

The Tunisian people are daily intensifying their struggle for liberation. They are becoming more and more aware of the fact that the imperialists intend to drag their country into a new war...

Today, our country, as well as all the peoples of Europe, is threatened by a danger. It is the possibility that EDC may be ratified by the French Parliament. Our country is bound to France by the chains of colonialism, and because of that, any pledges made by the French government in the international sphere apply also to Tunisia...

The Tunisian people know what the ratification of EDC would mean for them, not only increased exploitation, but also war and the transformation of their country into a battlefield...

The Tunisian people hate war, for they experienced all the horrors of it during the war which ended nine years ago. They hate it even more because they know that the use of the atom bomb will make the next war more terrifying and more destructive than any previous war.

Mr. NIAMIN LUVSANSHULTUM

(People's Republic of Mongolia)

The peoples of the world see more clearly that their united efforts in the fight for Peace, close economic and cultural collaboration and the peaceful co-existence of nations of different social and political systems, are particularly necessary to ensure the Peace of the whole world.

That is why the Mongolian people encourage and uphold proposals tending to create, both in Asia and Europe, a system of collective security precluding the existence of military pacts of powers opposed to one another, organised by aggressive circles headed by the US...

The Mongolian people want the greatest discovery of our time, atomic energy, to be used for peaceful ends, and not for mass destruction. They want the Great Powers to conclude, on the basis of the proposals of the Soviet Union, treaties to reduce armaments, prohibit atomic and hydrogen weapons and use atomic energy for the good of all humanity. Here we can usefully quote a proverb of our people which says: "Roll up your sleeves, not to fight but to do creative work."

Mr. HASSAN TAHER ZARRUK

(Sudan)

The atmosphere of war preparation, the armaments race, and the threat of war in the near future, render our struggle for freedom a very difficult task. Our national movement can only grow and yield good results in a world free from this stifling tension and fear that is so apparent today. How could we not hail Peace and fight for it, since we so badly need a higher, more decent standard of living, comparable to that which has been attained by other people in other parts of the world...

In the struggle for Peace and freedom, we in the Sudan, in the countries of the Middle East, in Africa, and all other countries in the same situation, must fight for the fundamental rights of man — freedom to speak and discuss, freedom to read and to criticise, freedom to travel and exchange ideas. In such an atmosphere a strong Peace Movement can make its message heard...

We will do our utmost to destroy the Great wall of China which separates us from the world, and we shall fight for Peace. We will work until negotiation, as a means of settling international questions, becomes a tradition, because we firmly believe that peaceful co-existence of the different countries of the world is possible.

Sr. VIRGILIO GUERRA

(Guatemala)

We attach great importance to the interpretation and meaning of collective security between countries, that is, as we democrats in Guatemala understand it, on the basis of mutual respect between countries, of friendship between the peoples, so as to guarantee our people the right to govern themselves politically and economically in accordance with the will of the majority, for the advancement and peaceful development of our people and of our industry. We desire collective security based on friendly agreements and mutual respect between countries...

A democratic government is guiding the destinies of Guatemala—the government headed by Senor Jacobo Arbenz. This government has loyally abided by this principle...

Nonetheless, we are being assailed by powerful forces, we are being mercilessly attacked by the United States imperialists whose obvious aim is to defeat the people and reinstate a regime of fascist dictatorship...

From this rostrum, which is that of ordinary people the world over, and from which we are striving for the well-being and happiness of mankind, we denounce the North American imperialists in their use of force against Guatemala...

Frau EDITH HOERETH-MENGE

(Germany)

Mr. LE DINH THAM

(Viet-Nam)

Mr. ABRAHAM SHLONSKY

(Israel)

Recent international experience proves that a personal meeting, face to face at the same table, gives hope of a lessening of tension, understanding and Peace. We do not need observers and mediators, whose aim is not the strengthening of Peace, but incitement to hostility; for the imperialists view the whole region and its problems from one standpoint only, namely the value of its oil and military bases...

For all of us, the only atmosphere in which we can live and create is Peace. Let us throw off the yoke of foreign mediation which has been forced upon us, let us sit down together at the same table without foreigners, to seek and find a peaceful and correct solution...

Mrs. RUTH FIRST

(Union of South Africa)

In the calculation of the warmongers Africa figures largely. Military authorities in Britain and America have stated publicly that, in the event of a new global war, Central and Southern Africa would be called on to supply raw materials and food, to protect vital war bases and even to supply fighting man power...

South Africa is a major producer of uranium. She is on the way to becoming perhaps the world's largest uranium producer (or perhaps she will share that very doubtful honour with Canada). Thirteen of our gold mines are now producing uranium oxide for America and Britain, all under the utmost secrecy...

Our Peace Council is campaigning in South Africa to make our people realise that on their shoulders must rest the dread responsibility of producing materials for the H-bomb, and they have got to do all in their power to insist, together with the rest of the world, that uranium is not used for destruction but for creative purposes...

Racialism as preached and practised in South Africa contains all the seeds of war. The herrenvolk theories of the Nazi regime were used directly as a method of creating the atmosphere in which war could be waged. The Nazis used racialism and their belief in their superiority over all other peoples as the pretext for marching over other countries' borders to bring all those other nations under their rule...

But racialism has another important aspect. Peace does not depend only upon diplomats and governments. The actions of the people remain the determining facter. It is up to them to hasten the course of negotiation, to clear away obstacles to peace, to impress the will of ordinary men and women upon the statesmen at Geneva and everywhere else. The people and their forces for peace, to succeed, cannot afford to act separately. They must act together, decide on their common will and methods and see that these prevail. All propaganda which attempts to divide the people along racial and national lines, which tries to set one people against another, which educates the young to hate and despise people of another colour, all this acts against Peace. We must encourage mutual respect and friendship between the peoples of the world. We must fight all attempts to prejudice people and to create an atmosphere of hostility.

M. JACQUES N'GOM

(Cameroons)

The peoples of Africa understand more and more clearly that, in order to extricate themselves from this situation, they must put an end to colonialist occupation. They are taking action along these lines, and are joining the battle for national independence which, in the present historical situation, is more and more at one with the struggle of all the peoples for Peace. When they see those very people who are occupying their territories and preparing war, holding conferences at Nairobi and Dakar "For the Defence of Africa", Africans realise that, in fact, the intention is to "defend" Africa against the Africans just as they have been "defending" Viet-Nam against the Vietnamese for 8 years, and as, yesterday, they were "defending" Korea against the Koreans. Today, there is feverish talk about "defending" Asia against the Asians...

The peoples who love peace and the United Nations must not wait for a new Korea or a new Viet-Nam to flare up in Africa before acting. It is now, within the framework of collective security, that the peoples of Africa must be helped in their fight to regain their liberty. For us collective security means the end of the colonial regime and the achievement of national independence. Collective security will not be complete until the day arrives when there is no longer any colonisation or suppression of men on the earth.

This is also one of the objects of our Great World Peace Movement.

Mr. ABDEL KADER SALEH

(Jordan)

The people of Jordan realise the importance of the world Peace Movement and of its contribution to the struggle for a correct solution of their problems.

They welcome any event that can contribute to the relaxation of international tension, such as the Korean armistice, and condemn war as a means of solving international conflicts.

Telegrams of congratulation and support have been sent by Jordanians of all classes to the representatives of the democratic countries at the Geneva Conference.

The people of Jordan are utterly horrified and disgusted at US policy on the question of the atom and hydrogen bombs. They propose that these bombs and all weapons of destruction should be banned, and that the warmongers should be prosecuted as war criminals.

The Jordanian delegates condemn the use of atom and hydrogen bombs and propose that the production of such bombs should be stopped and that those which have already been made should be destroyed.

M. ALI BOUMENDJEL

(Algeria)

In the framework of what has been called the strategy of encirclement of the Pentagon, Algeria, Tunisia and Morocco constitute one of the essential links in the "cordon sanitaire", 1954 version, which the USA are trying to set up through the Atlantic Pact, the Balkan Pact, and the Turkey-Pakistan Pact. The Mediterranean Basin with all the military interference its geographical situation implies, is dependent on North Africa...

The Algerian people, in turn, wish to state the essential principles of their fight: collective security is indivisible; freedom and peace are necessary; the right of peoples to self-determination is inalienable.

Within the framework of these vital principles:

— We are opposed to the sending of Algerian contingents to Indo-China, and we demand the return of the 65,000 of our sons who have been sent by the French Government to fight in Indo-China.

— We appeal to the conscience of the world to oppose the recruitment of young Algerians and the methods used. Do you know that the recruits are first weighed and then paid according to weight?...

— The Algerian National Movement, along with the French people, has unanimously condemned the European Defence Community.

In addition to the already established reasons for condemneng EDC — the setting up of two antagonistic blocs; the rearmament of West Germany, etc. — there are also purely Algerian reasons.

EDC, a weapon of war, is also for us an instrument of oppression.

French colonialism will be replaced by an anonymous bureaucracy representing international imperialism in its military, industrial and social, or rather anti-social features...

The Atlantic Pact and EDC are complementary and have their tragic result in the strategic bases set up in North Africa.

In fighting against EDC, against the Atlantic Pact, and for the banning of weapons of mass destruction, Algeria is fighting for its national liberation. Liberty and peace are sisters, just as collective security is indivisible.

Mr. MOHAMED KAMEL EL BINDARI

(Egypt)

The Egyptian people have resolutely refused and they are determined to refuse to take any part in military pacts of whatever nature. They will never weaken before the oppression, terror and lying propaganda which is carried on by the imperialist camp...

The Egyptian people, fighting for their liberation, fighting against imperialism with its abject exploitation, are working to win full independence for their country and for its right to decide its own destiny. By acting in this way they are answering the call for peace and making a contribution to the struggle against the camp of aggression and war. Their struggle is of a kind that will weaken this camp's possibilities for unleashing a third world war. Considering their geographical position, which dominates the principal route to, and the communications with, the East and with Africa, they join fraternally in the liberation struggles of these millions of people of the East, from Cairo to Peking, from Cairo to Khartoum and beyond, in spite of distance.

The outcome of these struggles is known. It is the victory of world peace...

PANDIT OMKAR NATH THAKUR

(India)

Those who want to frighten the world by experiments with hydrogen bombs, who want to capture the minds of the peoples of the world by frightening them, are bewildered by the great power of our collective ideas. They do not know what to do and their souls, blind and deaf, are helpless before the great strength of the collective ideas of World Peace.

India is wholeheartedly contributing to these collective ideas. We have placed the issues before our peoples, through meetings, practical symposiums. lectures, art exhibitions, and peace rallies; and in this way we have wakened the sleepers, roused those who were awake, and encouraged those who had already risen, and we are preparing to meet the cultural attack of America.

In this effort we have received much assistance from our neighbour, China, and other sister nations.

Mr. MAKUOTO HORI

(Japan)

We Japanese want security in Asia in its true sense. We fully support the proposal on the problem of security in Asia which was made at the Geneva Conference by Mr. Molotov, the Foreign Minister of the USSR, and by Mr. Chou En-lai of the People's Republic of China.

The proposals of these ministers clearly embody the principles of security in Asia. Furthermore, we also support the proposal made by Mr. Kuo Mo-jo yesterday.

Our national Peace Meeting was held from May 18th to 20th in Tokyo. It adopted several resolutions for the relaxation of international tension and for the promotion of security in Asia.

Allow me to make the following proposals, based on these resolutions:

1) We propose that Korea should be peacefully and independently united after the evacuation of all foreign armies.

2) We propose that the war in Indo-China should be stopped at once and that peaceful negotiations should be undertaken between the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam and France.

3) We propose that intervention by foreign armies, the establishment of foreign military bases and troop stations, threatening national sovereignty, should be abolished.

4) The People's Republic of China should be recognised as one of the Five Great Powers and at the same time should be given her rightful place in UNO.

5) We oppose any military bloc proposed by the USA, such as SEATO, or the Defence League in South-East Asia, which aims to make Asians fight Asians. We hope for the creation of a system of collective security in Asia which would include all the countries of Asia.

6) We propose to convene an Asian Peoples' conference in order to promote the relaxation of international tension in Asia.

7) We propose that economic relations and free trade between East and West should be promoted on the basis of equality and reciprocal interest.

Mr. ANDREAS POUYOUROS

(Cyprus)

The US intend turning Cyprus into a transit centre for war bases in the Middle East.

But I can officially declare here, on behalf of the thousands of peace-loving people of my country, that we will do everything in our power to prevent the transformation of our beautiful island into a carrier of machines of mass destruction. We are resolved that we shall not allow anyone to use our soil for the purpose of spreading havoc and disaster to our neighbour countries which are building their own way of life in Peace.

The people of my country are disgusted to see that next to the ruins of the temple of Apollo our foreign rulers are feverishly constructing a huge military cantonment, that near the ancient theatre of the Arcadian town of Kourion, military aerodromes covering hundreds of acres of land are being built, and lastly, to see that the ancient Green Theatre, where "The Peace" of Aristophanes was played, is being converted into an arsenal of weapons for mass destruction.

Closing Session

Chairman: PROFESSOR WALTER FRIEDRICH

(GERMANY)

Vice-Chairmen

Mme ISABELLE BLUME
(Belgium)
SECRETARY OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

Sr. JORGE AMADO
(Brazil)

HERR ERWIN SCHARF

(Austria)

The dangers of the rearmament of West Germany for the peoples of Europe and for peace in general have been repeatedly and strikingly demonstrated at this Session of the World Council of Peace. I believe I can say without exaggeration that for my country such rearmament would be particularly disastrous...

The attack on Austria's independence is at present taking place on two levels. From Bonn there is a frontal attack which aims directly at the integration of Austria into the Federal Republic. At the same time efforts are increasing to include Austria in a European system which, by its very structure, would be dominated by West Germany to such an extent that, in this way too, Austria would become a victim of West German expansionism...

There is no doubt that the great majority of the Austrian people want to have nothing to do with a second Anschluss. But the experience of 1938 shows that it does not depend only on Austria to decide how this question is settled. A European army, supported by the American Government, would make West Germany so strong that Austria by herself would be overwhelmed...

The American experiments with the Hydrogen Bomb have not only caused concern, they have also been severely condemned. For instance, it was stated in the April 24th number of the influential Catholic Weekly, "Die Österreichische Furche", that: "As long as man has the gift of speech and hands to act, as long as neither has been crushed by the diabolical thunder of weapons, he has the duty, no matter where he is, of working to get the great powers of the world to prohibit the use of such weapons by an international convention. Let it not be said that this will only be a scrap of paper; the agreement on the prohibition of poison gases proved efficacious in two world wars."

We are convinced — and the Austrian Peace Movement will play its part in this — that the Austrian people's resistance will become stronger and stronger. As the forces supporting the politicians in favour of the European Defence Community come to light, as the dangers connected with the establishment of a European army become apparent to all, the Austrian people's opposition to these dangers will increase in determination. Ever more clearly will they recognise that it is not the European Defence Community and the division of Europe into two, but a system of collective security taking in the whole of Europe, which will guarantee the freedom and independence of Austria.

Thus, for Austria, as for all other countries, the demand of the moment must be: with all our might we must fight for collective security and Peace!

SHRI YASHWANT RAO DATE

(India)

I am proud to say that our Indian culture, which is one of the oldest, along with that of China and Egypt, has carried its flag of Peace, goodwill, brotherhood and prosperity to distant parts of the world...

It is because the memories of peaceful exchanges between our country and our neighbours are still fresh in our minds that we speak...

As we come nearer to each other in the interest of peace, there is bound to grow up a common world culture based on human values. Let us try to build it and give it shape by piecing together all that is best in each of the advanced cultures of the earth and not exterminate by force the culture of any race in order to plant another way of life in its place.

Mr. TAWFIQ TOUBI

(Israel)

The heightened fever of the enemies of peace is making itself felt in practically every part of the world. Nowadays, the Middle East countries, like all Asian countries, are being exposed to intensified pressure with the intention of intimidating their peoples, weakening their resistance to war preparations, and drawing them into the imperialist nets of further subjugation and war.

Our people in Israel are experiencing the bitterness and insecurity of permanent American pressure and tutelage which our rulers have accepted, promising the people security and prosperity...

The people of Israel want peace and security and will continue to strengthen their struggle against foreign pressure and interference, against evil designs on their country, against embroiling it in aggressive pacts under whatever name. We shall not rest until the shameful application for American military aid is withdrawn.

In order to mobilise public opinion in our country in favour of direct negotiations for a peaceful settlement between Israel and the Arab countries, in order to raise higher the voice of our people against the remilitarisation of Germany and the revival of the Nazi Wehrmacht, which is a most deadly threat to the security of our people, and in order to ensure an Israeli policy of peace and independence, the Peace Movement in our country is conducting a countrywide plebiscite in support of these aims.

In the same way as our people have stood solidly behind every previous campaign for peace, they will also support en masse this present campaign, demonstrating their strong will for peace, which the rulers of our country should take into account.

M. RENE BOVARD

(Switzerland)

If I asked to be allowed to speak at this meeting, it was because I felt that a pacifist cannot remain silent on the serious problems which figure on the agenda; the less so because I wanted to convey to the Committee of the World Council of Peace my gratitude for the unfailing openmindedness which it has shown to all those who, though sometimes for different reasons, are seeking the same goal — peace...

I believe that those who still keep silence before the terrifying development of atomic weapons of destruction, become the accomplices of the criminals who plan to make use of them...

On the question of collective security... I am convinced that this is the only way to prevent the present cold war from becoming a hot war, to prevent the present peripheral wars from being transformed into a world war, and to mitigate the cold war...

Let us take Europe as an example. It is clear that the introduction of the European Defence Community will split Europe in two, and will sooner or later lead to war. If we want to create security in Europe, we must draft a peace treaty which will serve to reunite the two halves of Europe.

(Brazil)

A complete regional system of treaties, agreements, resolutions and military pacts is already in force in Latin America and establishes in this important region of the world, with its 150 million inhabitants, what can only be termed a legal system of collective insecurity...

Our peoples reacted against the American policy of colonisation and war by fighting energetically, in different ways, for Peace and the sovereignty of their countries, for liberty and national independence...

In such a situation... the American Government decided to start open military intervention in the internal affairs of the Latin American countries, as it had already done in Korea, and as it is now doing in Viet-Nam...

Under the cloak of anti-Communism, the proposals of Caracas are actually devised to kill democratic freedom in Latin America, and, by armed intervention, to prevent any kind of demonstration for national emancipation by the Latin American peoples...

I must tell you that our peoples are now reacting more swiftly, with greater courage and determination, against this new danger. They know that the enemy, whose succession of dazzling plans are tottering from defeat to defeat, is becoming daily weaker and more isolated. On the other hand, they know that by throwing themselves more and more into the world struggle of the peoples for peace, and by resolutely defending their sovereignty and national independence, they are becoming stronger and are daily strengthening their historic invincibility in the teeth of the crazed attacks of the enemy...

Whether the fomenters of war and national oppression like it or not, the road which the Brazilian people and all the Latin American peoples must follow is clear. We want national independence: our independence is a guarantee of world peace; we want peace: peace in the world is a guarantee of our national independence.

Mr. IVOR MONTAGU

(Great Britain)

SECRETARY OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

The absolute pacifist is an important part of the movement against war, he contributes an even more important ingredient to the traditional mass popular feeling against war in certain countries, for instance my own, Britain, and still more importantly in the USA.

The pacifist says he opposes collective security because it contemplates the use of violence...

We think it is wrong to oppose collective security as an alternative to the system of rival, competing blocs — just as it is wrong to oppose gradual, or substantial partial disarmament on the grounds that it is not total disarmament...

Collective security must be to us not only potential collective punishment, as a deterrent; it must be collective prevention. It must include positive collective collaboration for Peace — and this means among all countries willing to participate, with no exclusions.

Mr. ABDULLAH ADRA

(Lebanon)

As an industrialist, I declare that through trade relations I have won the friendship of many Britishers, Belgians, Americans and others in the Middle East, and any disturbance would create inconvenience to our mutual interests. It is, therefore, natural that a lasting peace is to the advantage of every honest businessman and that the promotion of international trade increases the friendship between individuals and nations.

COLONEL ALFREDO DE AMESTI ZURITA

(Chile)

I have great pleasure in informing you that, soon, a meeting of legislators and prominent persons from all the countries of America will be held in Santiago to analyse the Caracas Agreement. It is hoped, with good reason, that this meeting, sponsored by prominent figures from nearly all political parties in the Chilean Parliament will have the character of a really international conference in opposition to that of Caracas. In Chile there is a very definite national feeling against the agreements made at the Tenth Inter-American Conference, and our movement has played a powerful role in the creation of this feeling.

SHRI MULK RAJ ANAND

(India)

The men and women of Asia are organising themselves to thwart all attempts to crush them.

The nations which have already thrown off the yoke of colonial rule: India, China, Indonesia, Burma, Pakistan and Ceylon, will never allow the imperialist powers to disrupt their newly won freedom and to overpower them.

Asia will never, never be conquered again.

And the free Asian nations are all looking with concentrated interest on the situation in Korea and Indo-China, where the imperialist powers are seeking to maintain their hold by bloody violence...

The Geneva Conference is certainly a great step forward from the impasse of the past few years. It brings the Five Great Powers together for the first time since the war to solve world problems...

The disrupters try to evade, bully, and bludgeon, but the realism of the Viet-Namese proposals has already won a wide agreement outside Geneva if not in Geneva. One can only hope that the Conference will bring secure peace to Indo-China and Korea...

The problem of these war-ravaged countries has a significance which goes far beyond the borders of the two countries. The immediate future of Asia depends on what happens there.

Mr. MAO DUN

(People's Republic of China)

In recent years, there has been a continous exchange of visits between the peoples of our country and other countries. These visits are becoming more numerous from year to year...

During the past four-and-a-half years, representatives of more than fifty countries have visited China, totalling more than 300 separate visits...

We have organised more than 20 exhibitions of different kinds in foreign countries. At the same time, our cultural institutions have assisted those of other countries to organise in China more than 50 exhibitions of different types...

The Chinese people sincerely and warmly hope to strengthen cultural relations with other countries...

People are welcome to visit our country, where they will be able to see our peaceful construction in industry and agriculture, our national drama and folk dancing, now blossoming with new creations...

We resolutely support the appeal of the World Council of Peace to defend national cultures. We believe that the defence of national culture is not antagonistic to cultural exchange, for the development of national cultures and cultural exchange can, with advantage, go hand in hand. Cultural exchange on the basis of mutual benefit can help the culture of the world to blossom in an eternal spring.

Mr. NIKOLAI ORLOV

(U.S.S.R.)

The extension of economic and cultural co-operation between the peoples is a problem of profound concern to millions of good people in the various countries. For all men who are concerned about peace, this co-operation is a way to bring about more normal relations between the countries, to improve living conditions, and to ensure the material and intellectual progress of society . . .

There is in the Soviet Union an atmosphere of confidence and peaceful and fruitful work. The Soviet people wish to live in Peace with all peoples, they wish to develop economic and cultural exchanges with all countries. I can assure you that the Soviet people will continue to defend with great persistence the cause of Peace and the development of broad economic and cultural exchanges between the peoples.

Dr. JOSEPH WIRTH

(Germany)

My awareness of the great power and effectiveness of the people's desire for peace in our time gives me the courage to speak to you about the anxieties, hopes, sacrifices and success of the German people in the Federal Republic. The overwhelming majority of these people, to whom I am bound by more than 40 years of political work, are lovers of peace like all the other peoples of the world. They look with great anxiety at the piling up of war materials in their country and the installation of 20 atom guns on German soil. But they also know that the solidarity of the peoples supports them in their endeavour not to allow Germany to become once more a centre of militarism . . .

Today we must bring the German people to take a decision on the vital problem which will decide the fate of Germany. Is there to be a peace treaty and the withdrawal of the occupation forces, or the EDC treaty and the continuation of the occupation — a policy which would bring with it a constant danger of war? A free declaration for a unified, democratic and peace-loving Germany — this is the contribution we Germans can make towards collective security.

Recommendations of the Cultural Commission

1. The last few months have been notable for the encouraging progress made in the field of cultural exchange. Many artistic events, film performances, visits and delegations, commemorations of the anniversaries of famous men and works, congresses of intellectuals, teachers, scientists, students, sporting events and so on, have demonstrated the peoples' desire to exchange the fruits of their work, the advances they have made in technique, and their achievements in science and the arts.

2. At the same time we have seen the birth and growth of broad national movements, the aims of which are the development of each national culture and the diffusion of knowledge among the people. These movements oppose any attempts at the stifling of national culture — any such attempt is a blow at national sovereignty — and strive to encourage the creation of works which augment the cultural heritage of the people concerned, thereby enriching international cultural exchange.

3. However, although the results obtained in the field of cultural exchange and in the development of national cultures are encouraging, they do not correspond to the present possibilities. There remain too many obstacles preventing the peoples from enjoying to the full the conquests of the human mind. It is inconceivable that there should still be administrative and political obstacles to the expression of ideas and the circulation of works and people. These barriers must be removed. They will be eliminated if every friend of culture is aware of his responsibility and firmly supports any move, whatever may be its origin, that is directed toward elimination of these barriers and the encouragement of more national cultural activities and exchanges on the basis of reciprocity.

The desire of the peoples is that culture should be put at the service of friendship and peace among men.

Berlin, May 28th, 1954

Charles Chaplin and

INTERNATIONAL PEACE

On May 27th, Sr. Jorge Zalamea, Secretary of the Jury for the International Peace Prizes, made the following statement at the Berlin Session of the World Council of Peace:

I have the honour to inform the Extraordinary Session of the World Council of Peace that, at its meeting in Vienna on March 30th and 31st, the Jury for the International Peace Prizes, bearing in mind the exceptional contribution their creative activity makes to the cause of Peace and friendship between the peoples, unanimously awarded the International Peace Prizes for 1953 to the famous British artist Charles Chaplin and to the eminent Soviet composer Dmitri Dmitrievich Shostakovich.

I also have the pleasure to inform you that Mr. Charles Chaplin has accepted the Prize conferred on him by the Jury with pleasure and gratitude, and that this man, who is full of humanity and loved by the whole of mankind, has communicated to us his decision to use the money for works of peace and friendship in London, Vienna and Geneva.

It is our privilege that Mr. Shostakovich is with us, thus giving this Extraordinary Session of the World Council of Peace a further opportunity to pay homage to this illustrious musician.

In fulfilment of the decision taken by the Jury for the International Peace Prizes, the International Peace Prize for 1953 was presented to the eminent British artist on June 3rd at his residence, the Manoir de Ban, in Vevey, Switzerland.

The ceremony, which was deliberately kept simple, was both solemn and moving. In the park belonging to Mr. Chaplin's house the writer Vercors, Member of the Jury for the International Peace Prizes, handed the diploma to the great actor who made a moving reply to the speech pronounced by the author of "Le Silence de la Mer." Then Dr. Richard Synge, winner of the Nobel Prize for Chemistry, described the British people's satisfaction at this latest honour conferred on their greatest and best-loved artist.

The World Council of Peace was represented at the ceremony by Dr. Synge and by the famous Hellenist, Professor André Bonnard. The Jury for the International Peace Prizes was represented by M. Vercors from France, Mr. Sergei Gerassimov from the Soviet Union and Sr. Jorge Zalamea from Colombia.

More than 20 journalists, representing the Press of various countries, were present at the ceremony. Mr. Chaplin gave each of them a copy of his speech and chatted cordially with them for nearly an hour.

We give here the texts of the speeches made at Vevey.

The great actor has just received the Diploma awarded by the Jury for the International Peace Prizes. Left to right round Chaplin: Professor Synge, Vercors, Professor Bonnard and Sr. Zalamea.

Vercors

On behalf of the World Council of Peace and the members of the Jury for the International Peace Prizes, I have the very great honour of presenting you with the prize-winner's diploma for 1953.

It is not only an honour but a great joy for me to have been chosen to present it to you. I have loved and admired you as a man of peace for nearly forty years; you were perhaps the first man to bring home to me the criminal folly of war. I was a child at the time of the First World War. War seemed to me to be a glorious adventure and it fired my childish imagination insofar as it was not I who was called upon to pay the price of this glory nor to undergo the sufferings of this adventure, but men deep in fear and mud whom I did not know. Then one day, in the midst of the war, I saw a film which tore asunder the tawdry and bloody frippery of military glory by the extraordinary power of laughter. From that day onward I have never ceased to see war in the very likeness that you showed us: a base attempt to crush Man disguised under the hypocritical mystification of a glory invented by the mystifiers.

Afterwards, for forty years, you obstinately showed us what man really is, a little light overwhelmed by the blind powers of nature and whose sole dignity and greatness consists in refusing to submit, as the animal submits, and in rising up after each defeat, even if he is beaten beforehand, to resume an endless struggle. You have shown us how blind and stupid are those who, instead of helping him, join his persecutors in order to take advantage of his defeat; they do not see that the executioner already holds the axe poised above their own heads. So for forty years you have been showing us that there is no other reasonable road for men of peace than to make common cause against these blind powers, loving and helping each other like brothers.

Having myself tried after you to show in my books what you have shown in your films in such a masterly way, I look upon it as a wonderful recompense for my own efforts that I should have the opportunity of handing you this diploma today.

Dmitri Shostakovich

PRIZE-WINNERS FOR 1953

Doctor Richard Synge

I come here as a British member of the World Council of Peace and am deeply conscious of the honour and the good fortune to have been chosen to greet you today.

I suppose at all times people have understood that they are in a very real sense trustees for their children and so for the future of mankind, and have wondered how well they were fulfilling their trust. But surely that questioning has never been more anxious than now. The World Council of Peace exists simply to bring together the millions in all the nations of the world so that they make effective their desire to live together in peace, to live life in their own ways and to enrich it each with their own contribution to industry, learning and art.

You are one who has understood this much all along, but not only that. You have succeeded through your work in imparting such understanding to millions of others all over the world and in strengthening within them their determination as trustees for the future. Although we all know what you would say when at last you broke your silence, none but you could have said it so well or so clearly. You have helped two, perhaps three generations to live their lives in a more clear-sighted way. The Prize you have just received is simply a recognition of this work. We in Britain are proud that this is the work of a fellow-countryman.

The members of the Council and the guests present at the session warmly applauded the announcement of the distinction conferred on Dmitri Shostakovich. The applause went on for several minutes when the famous composer of the Tenth Symphony came to the rostrum to express his emotion at being given "such a high award". "I see in this award", he added, "a mark of great confidence. I assure you that I will do all I can, that I will devote all my strength, so that the great cause of peace may triumph throughout the world and that I may always be worthy of the high award conferred on me . . ."

In a future number of the bulletin, we shall give a report on the ceremony at which the International Peace Prize for 1953 was presented to Dmitri Shostakovich.

PEACE STATEMENT
by Charles Chaplin

The desire for peace is universal. To promulgate a demand for peace, whether from the East or West, I firmly believe is a step in the right direction. Therefore, I am honoured and very happy to receive this award.

I do not assume to know the answers to the problems that threaten peace, but this I do know, that nations will never solve them in an atmosphere of hate and suspicion, nor will the threat of dropping hydrogen bombs solve them. The secret of manufacturing these horror weapons will very soon be common knowledge, and very soon all nations, big and small, will have them.

In this age of atomic science nations must think of something less old-fashioned and more constructive than violence to solve their differences. The melancholy grooming of people to the acceptance of hydrogen warfare, with all its attending horrors, is a crime against the human spirit and is creating world insanity. Let us absolve ourselves of this miserable, cancerous atmosphere. Let us try to understand each other's problems, for in modern warfare there is no victory.

Therefore, let us return to that which is natural and healthy in man, to the spirit of goodwill which is the basis of all inspiration, of all that is creative, beautiful and noble in life. Let us work towards that end — towards a glorious era of peace in which all nations will prosper.

Messages received by the Session

5,408 messages from various regional Peace Committees in Germany, factory Peace Committees, various democratic organisations, a number of schools, peasants' organisations, trade unions, co-operatives, town councils and district councils were sent to the Session.

Together with these messages, 155,754 signatures to resolutions calling for the prohibition of atomic weapons were received.

Several leading figures, among whom were Herr Wilhelm Elfes, Paul Robeson and Professor Henry Pratt-Fairchild, also sent messages to the World Council of Peace.

The following are extracts from their messages:

Mr. PAUL ROBESON

(U. S. A.)

Warmest greetings to the great company of men and women associated with the World Council of Peace in mankind's noblest endeavour — the establishment of peace and friendship between all peoples.

Once again I find myself unable to be present for your important deliberations. I hope soon, however, that my right to travel will be restored. Friends here and in other countries have begun a concerted effort to persuade the State Department that the best interests of the people of the United States are not served by withholding a passport from me and from many others who speak for peace.

Many of us in America — artists, scientists, workers — wish we could be with you today. What happiness I and many others shall know when we can personally accept and fulfil the opportunities afforded us in many parts of the world to appear and sing and act for peoples I have long known well and love dearly.

The right to travel was denied me in 1950. At that time there were many in our homeland who did not agree with us, or if they did agree, were not prepared to take up the fight for peace. How different is the situation today. Today, my views on peace are the same as in 1950 and today these views on peace are shared by millions of my countrymen. Yes, today, millions of Americans know that every effort must be made for nations to reach agreement to settle their differences peacefully. They know that in a world of H-bombs, dictation through strength is a policy of national suicide. "Co-existence or no existence", "live together or die together"; these are popular expressions here which reflect the understanding of the people that the efforts of responsible United States statesmen must be directed towards a peaceful settlement through mutual compromise rather than toward a vain attempt to amass overwhelming strength...

Yes, the conscience of the people of the United States is coming to life at a crucial point in my nation's history and at a turning point in world affairs. Indeed, it would be an alarming thing if this were not the case, for only a cowed and drugged or corrupted people could remain complacent in the face of recent events...

Organisations representing literally millions of Americans have expressed deep concern that the Government of the United States should complete the series of H bomb tests in spite of the fact that the first test caused widespread havoc, bringing cruel injury to 379 persons and threatening the livelihood of whole peoples and in spite of the fact that there was a world outcry for the test not to be held...

The great majority of the people in the United States want to end the menace of the H bomb. They want to live at peace with all other peoples. While the voices representing these millions of Americans will be absent from your meeting, you must know that they are here and are speaking out.

The people of the United States want to stay in the family of peace-loving peoples.

The action you take at this Council Session will help them to do so.

We, the workers for peace here will continue to fight and thereby strengthen our bonds of friendship with all of you who represent the preponderant sentiment of the peoples of the world.

HERR WILHELM ELFES

(Germany)

PRESIDENT OF THE UNION OF GERMANS FOR PEACE AND LIBERTY

Dear Friends,

I am sorry that it is impossible for me to be in Berlin to take part in the deliberations of the World Council of Peace, and therefore I am sending you this fraternal greeting and my best wishes...

The Extraordinary Session of the World Council of Peace is meeting in Berlin — a city which, we hope, will soon be once more the capital of a united, independent and democratic Germany, a Germany which serves the cause of peace and is worthy of the trust of all its neighbours...

And what about the collective security of Europe? Well, there is now no possible doubt about it: EDC means the division of Germany into two, the division of Europe, the division of the world — and this division into two means war. A treaty for the collective security of Europe, to which all European nations could adhere, would bring to an end the fatal division of Europe and would form a firm foundation for Peace between peoples. He who wants to serve the cause of Peace must oppose EDC and work for a system of collective security for all the peoples of Europe.

I hope that the discussions of the World Council of Peace in Berlin will bear fruit in these respects, and I send the Session my best wishes.

Long live friendship between the peoples!

Long live world Peace!

PROFESSOR HENRY PRATT-FAIRCHILD

(U.S.A.)

President of the National Council of Arts, Sciences and Professions

The existence of the hydrogen bomb and the possibility of even more devastating instruments of mass annihilation, emphasise the importance and value of every sincere and vigorous movement for the establishment of international peace. The happiness and spiritual welfare of mankind demands the permanent abolition of war.

Best wishes for the success and wide influence of the Conference.

Around the World

Cuba

The arrival in Kingston, Jamaica, of a British ship with 64 experts on bacteriological warfare, guinea pigs, and all the necessary material for the experiments off the Bahamas, has given rise to a new wave of protest in Cuba.

The National Peace Committee approached the Cuban Government asking it to demand the ending of the experiments, which have been condemned by a great many organisations, for example:

The Federation of University Students;

The Association of Students of the Institute of Oriental Studies;

The National Federation of Seamen;

The Placeta Food and Trade Workers;

The National College of Nurses;

The Cuban Dockers and Seamen of Nuevitas, Puerto Padre, Cienfuegos and Santiago,

The Sugar Plantation and Sugar Industry Workers of Amazonas and Natividad (in the Province of Las Villas).

600 students and secondary school students in Santa Clara suggested that a provincial gathering be organised; the Federation of University Students called on its members to take part in a demonstration outside the British Embassy.

The Council of the Primary Teachers' College of Las Villas has condemned not only the experiments off the Bahamas, but any use of weapons of mass destruction, and called for a "broad movement to bring about a relaxation of international tension."

United States

In New York, a Committee has been set up for the restoration of Paul Robeson's passport, which the American Government had withdrawn from the famous American singer and member of the World Council of Peace.

On May 26th, the Committee organised a gala in which Mr. Robeson took part, and at which speeches were made by leading cultural figures.

Sweden

A Peace Conference of the North of Sweden was held on May 16th, in Lulea.

With a view to this Conference, a writer, a teacher, a housewife and four trade union leaders launched an appeal to trade union, cultural and religious organisations, and to the general public, stating in particular:

"A strong public opinion rejecting war and armaments as a means of settling conflicts between the peoples would constitute an effective moral support for the United Nations, for politicians and statesmen who are determined to make the idea of negotiation prevail.

"The undersigned, aware that the political and geographical position of our country enable it to contribute to the relaxation of international tension, invite you to participate in a free and open discussion on this subject."

A similar regional Conference took place on May 9th, in Göteburg, in the West of Sweden. Among those present were: Dr. Peter Varenius, from Stockholm, Professor Ivan Rosenquist, D. Litt., from Oslo, Ove Tjernberg, artist.

The following is an extract from the resolution adopted:

"Sweden enjoys international respect by reason of the peaceful position she has taken. Therefore, we urgently call on the government of our country to do everything in its power to facilitate and support international efforts to put a ban on the most terrible means of destruction, and establish an effective control over the implementation of this ban."

This summer, a grand cruise for Peace will be organised in the Baltic Sea with the slogan "Peace and Friendship between the countries bordering on the Baltic Sea." The cruise, in which more than 800 Swedes, Danes, Norwegians and Finns will take part, will begin on August 26th, in Stockholm, whence it will go to Leningrad, via Copenhagen, Warnemunde, Rostock, Gdynia, Gdansk and Helsinki.

U.S.S.R.

M. Jean-Paul Sartre, the French writer, who is on a visit to the Soviet Union, made a statement over Moscow Radio on the invitation of Soviet writers. He said:

"All the people I have seen, from the Red Square to the kindergarten, say: 'We want to build, and we want peace'. Up till now I have thought it necessary to do all I could for peace. But now, after this visit, I find it necessary to do even more."

Germany

An "All Berlin Peace Conference" has been held and attended by 750 delegates, of whom 250 came from West Berlin. The report was made by Professor Robert Havemann, President of the Berlin Peace Council.

Three working committees examined the role of the working class, the young people and the Christians, respectively, in the fight for peace. The Conference issued a call condemning atom bomb policy and asking the Parliament of the Federal Republic to denounce EDC and weapons of mass destruction. "All Berlin must become a city of peace", says the appeal.

The "Conference of Young People from the countries of Europe affected by EDC" was held in Berlin on May 18th and 19th. It was attended by 147 delegates, observers, and guests from 22 countries. The Conference sent a letter to the government of every European country, asking it to promote a peace policy which would stop EDC. A Standing Committee was set up.

Canada

Throughout Canada a broad campaign is being conducted against the use of the H-bomb. Local Peace Committees and members of the Movement are visiting Members of Parliament, asking them to take a stand against the hydrogen bomb. The Canadian Press has published many letters on the subject. As part of the campaign, Dr. James Endicott has toured the country speaking on the danger of the H-bomb.

Tunisia

The Tunisian Committee for Freedom and Peace has stated that the ratification of EDC by the French National Assembly would have disastrous results in Tunisia. The statement points out that Tunisia is vitally interested in defeating the EDC treaty. This would spare the Tunisian people the horrors of war and would facilitate their struggle for freedom and independence.

Brazil

At its recent Annual General Meeting the Brazilian Press Association (or House of Journalists), which includes all Brazilian journalists, adopted a resolution in favour of peace.

The resolution opposes weapons of mass destruction and urges the development of economic and cultural relations between the peoples.

Four Deputies and four municipal councillors of Sao Paulo have sent the following telegramme to the Geneva Conference:

"We call upon the representatives of the United States, Great Britain, the Soviet Union, France and the People's Republic of China to reach a peaceful solution of the Korean question and to end the war in Indo-China."

Hungary

Several Departmental Peace Committees have organised "Peace Weeks" and "Peace Days" to acquaint the broadest masses of the people with the activities of the World Peace Movement. This campaign of education also included Peace Meetings for young people, excursions, and professional, artistic and cultural meetings.

Hungarian Peace Committees are preparing to celebrate the anniversary of the Appeal launched by the World Council of Peace at its session in Budapest in 1953.

Ireland

The Irish Peace Committee has organised in Dublin a public meeting to support the Geneva Conference. It called on the Government to support the peace policy of Mr. Nehru, the Indian Premier, and particularly his proposals for a cease-fire and peace in Indo-China.

Denmark

Fifty Danish export firms are organising an exhibition of their goods in Moscow from September 6th to 15th, with a view to creating new commercial ties with the Soviet Union on the occasion of the coming into force of the new commercial agreement between Denmark and the Soviet Union.

The director of the exhibition, Mr. Jorgen Jorgensen, who has just come back from Moscow, stated to a Danish newspaper:

"We were really very warmly welcomed in Moscow, and I can tell you that there are a very great number of Western European businessmen there at the present time."

Japan

Four inhabitants of the island of Shikoku have fallen ill after drinking rain water which had become radioactive as a result of the US experiments in the Pacific.

Analysis showed that each litre of the water contained 300 Geiger degrees of radioactive matter, which made it highly dangerous.

More than 500 representatives from trade unions and other groups attended a peace rally in Tokyo on May 23rd. The rally decided to launch a campaign for the prohibition of hydrogen and atomic bombs.

In Osaka, 50 trade unions, peasants' associations and other mass organisations formed a liaison committee to campaign against the hydrogen bomb. The collection of one million signatures to demand the banning of atomic weapons is now in progress.

Similar campaigns are being conducted in Nagasaki, Fukuoka, Miyagi, Shiga, Kochi and Miyazaki prefectures.

Great Britain

Latest figures show that 1,574,640 trade unionists affiliated to the Labour Party through their unions have already voted against German rearmement.

Further, the annual conference of the Union of Post Office Workers, of the Transport Salaried Staffs Association and the representatives of 150,000 Civil Servants have called for the banning of the H-bomb. The conferences of the 220,000-strong Electrical Trades Union, of the 80,000-strong Amalgamated Union of Foundry Workers, and of the 55,000-strong National Union of Vehicle Builders demanded the banning of atomic and thermonuclear weapons, and for an end to be put to German rearmament.

The Association of Scientific Workers called for international control of atomic energy.

Three important religious organisations, the Convocation of Canterbury, the Assembly of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, and the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland have taken a similar stand on the atomic question.

On May 8th, an estimated quarter-of-a-million Londoners watched a poster parade of Peace slogans that ringed a large part of the West End in an almost continous two-mile long procession. It was organised by the London Peace Federation and the British Peace Committee in association with the National Assembly of Women, the Ex-Service Movement for Peace and other organsiations.

On May 19th, a similar poster parade was held in London, organised by the Holborn Peace Council with the support of the local Labour Party, the Co-operative Party and the Westminster Co-operative Women's Guild.

Paris — 10,000 delegates from all over France decide to make July 11th

A DAY OF CIVIC ACTION FOR INDEPENDENCE AND PEACE

For two days — Saturday, June 12th and Sunday, June 13th — the Vélodrome d'Hiver in Paris echoed the enthusiastic and firm demand of 10,000 delegates who had come from all over France: The Bonn and Paris Agreements must be rejected! There must be an end of hostilities in Indo-China! Weapons of mass destruction must be banned!

This national demonstration was held in three plenary sessions, on Saturday morning and all day Sunday, which were presided over by M. Jacques Madaule, the Catholic historian, Mme Yves Farge and M. Cotelle, a militant Socialist from the Loiret, respectively. On Saturday afternoon, the delegates split up into three big commissions on the German question, Indo-China and atomic weapons. Each of them put forward a recommendation.

The "Recommendation to make July 11th a great day of civic action for independence and peace", says:

"We call on all Frenchmen to unite and make Sunday, July 11th, a day of civic action for peace. We ask them to to go to the Town Halls, since the Town Councils have the power to inform the authorities of the voters' wishes.

"So that this day may be the authentic expression of the country's desire for peace, we suggest that all Frenchmen who have France's future at heart and who are determined to work for peace should hold meetings, organise petitions and deputations, and set up broad Departmental and local committees to sponsor the activities. These Sponsoring Committees should go the Mayors and ask them to give the deputations a favourable hearing and transmit their wishes and petitions to the Prefect and all Members of Parliament in their Department. They should call on the people to attend public report-back meetings by the deputations, which could be organised the same day.

"In this way, the day of civic action for peace will, in every commune in France, be a powerful demonstration of the French people's will for peace. It will have a great influence on the nation's destiny."

The rally also adopted an "Appeal to Frenchmen" which says:

"France is at the cross-roads between peace and war. Tomorrow, she can be dragged into a world war which could start either in Asia or in Europe. A rearmed Germany could draw her into a another conflict. She would be in danger of suffering the devastating effects of atomic war...

"The French people must demand the rejection of EDC, a negotiated solution of the German question and collective security for all the countries of Europe; a cease-fire in Indo-China and a political settlement which will allow the peoples of Indo-China to choose freely the social system and government they want and restore to France her prestige and influence in the Far East; an end to experiments in preparation for atomic war, the outlawing of atomic weapons and an equitable agreement on disarmament...

"The men and women who took part in the National Demonstration for Independence and Peace invite all their fellow-countrymen to unite and make Sunday, July 11th, a national day for peace in all the towns and villages of France.

"The people will exercise their inalienable right to approach town and county councillors, Members of Parliament and the authorities. Together they will demand that the country's desire for independence and peace be reflected in the actions of the Government."

Paris, June 13th, 1954

"Let's hope the whole world will be as peaceful as this garden"

Mr. Charles Chaplin, the International Peace Prize-winner for 1953, has given an interview to a special correspondent of the Hsinhua (New China) News Agency at his villa in Vevey, Switzerland. The great actor and film producer stressed the great importance that he attaches to international exchange of films as a method of improving mutual understanding between nations.

Taking leave of his visitor in his beautiful garden, Mr. Chaplin said: "Let's hope the whole world will be as peaceful as this garden."

Meeting for the Relaxation of International Tension

(Stockholm, June 19th to 23rd, 1954)

Documents adopted unanimously by the Plenary Assembly on June 23rd, 1954

The first of these documents was presented by M. Jacques Madaule, professor and writer (France).
The third by Sr. Eusebio Rocha, Member of Parliament, member of the Brazilian Labour Party.

GENERAL RESOLUTION

In the troubled world of to-day, where the Powers mistrust each other's intentions, and where suspicion and fear which have kindled so many conflicts in the past still prevail, a number of public figures from thirty countries in the East and in the West have freely met to make a contribution to the easing of international tension. Their experience here has proved that by meeting together, reasonable and unprejudiced people speedily arrive at a mutual understanding, and that agreement is possible on most of the issues at present dividing the world.

Differences of social and political system are not in themselves an inevitable cause of war. Peaceful co-existence is quite possible on condition that the right of all peoples, both great and small, is recognised in law and in fact.

The United Nations Organisation, whose existence is essential for peace, must be based on a true appreciation of international life, and it must be universal. Therefore, the People's Republic of China and all states which have asked or might ask to be admitted, must be admitted to the United Nations Organisation.

States must reject all recourse to force for the settlement of their conflicts. All conflicts must be settled by negotiation, and this must be pursued with tenacity whatever the initial difficulties.

These principles must in the first place be applied in the Geneva negotiations, the success of which is of supreme importance for the peace of the world.

The contacts which have been made during the Meeting give all the participants the firm conviction that the Geneva Conference, so far as Indo-China is concerned, can and must succeed.

On Korea, it is necessary that the negotiations which have been broken off should be resumed as soon as possible.

Peace is indivisible. It is not sufficient to restore it in Asia. The peaceful solution of the German problem is indispensable if there is also to be peace in Europe. Therefore the negotiations on Germany must be re-opened as soon as possible and, meanwhile, nothing should be done which might compromise them.

Atomic weapons are a dreadful threat to the whole of mankind. It is therefore necessary:

That experiments which in themselves are a danger to the health of the peoples should be stopped;

That those states which now possess weapons of mass destruction should pledge not to use them, and that the manufacture and storing of these weapons should be prohibited under control.

Atomic energy, used for peaceful purposes, will then bring great benefits to mankind.

In the same way, the negotiations on the limitation and control of armaments must be conducted with a will to succeed. If successful, they will free very considerable productive forces to the advantage of the general prosperity.

Another important factor making for the easing of tension will be the development of trade between East and West. This could be considerably increased once the present restrictions have been removed.

A general desire was also expressed that cultural exchanges should be increased and developed.

The participants in the Meeting note with satisfaction the good results obtained by these few days of contact. They regret that, in certain circles of some countries, the invitation issued by the organisers was not more widely taken up. They pledge that they will make known in their respective countries the conclusions reached, and have decided to convene, at the beginning of 1955, a further Meeting on an even broader scale than the present one.

The Meeting instructs its Bureau and Secretariat to take all necessary measures to this end.

ADDRESS TO THE GENEVA CONFERENCE

Those taking part in the Meeting for the Relaxation of International Tension held in Stockholm from 19th to 23rd June, 1954, send their greetings to the representatives of the nations now assembled at Geneva to work out a peaceful solution of the question of Indo-China, to re-establish peace in Asia and thereby make a contribution to the easing of international tension.

This Meeting asks the Governments represented at Geneva:

1. To unite their efforts to obtain as soon as possible a cease-fire in the three countries of Indo-China by an agreement between the belligerents.
2. To avoid all moves and all actions likely to lead to the continuation or extension of the conflict in Indo-China, which would further increase the danger of a world war.
3. To ensure that a Peace Treaty be signed as soon as possible between France and the three nations of Indo-China on the basis of respect for the sovereignty, national independence and unity of each of the three peoples of Indo-China, for their democratic freedoms and their right freely to choose their political and social system.

The Meeting further draws the attention of the powers represented at the Geneva Conference to the urgency of ending the sufferings of the Korean people and of preventing the very grave danger of a renewal of hostilities in this part of the world. It calls for the immediate reopening of negotiations to secure a peaceful solution of the Korean problem and to give to the people of Korea their security, their full independence, their unity and the right to choose their social and political system by free, democratic elections throughout their country.

It is evident that agreement on the conditions of withdrawal of all foreign troops is necessary to ensure to the Korean people the possibility of free expression of their wishes.

To create an atmosphere favourable to the solution of the Korean problem, the strict application by both parties of the terms of the armistice must be assured, especially in relation to the sending of armaments to the belligerents.

ADDRESS TO THE UNITED NATIONS ON THE EVENTS IN GUATEMALA

Those taking part in the Meeting for the Relaxation of International Tension held in Stockholm from 19th to 23rd June, 1954, deeply concerned by the invasion of Guatemala and the bombing of its capital, condemn all help given to the aggressor by any power whatever, address an urgent appeal to the Security Council of the United Nations to take all measures for ending hostilities, for the withdrawal of the invading forces and the re-establishment of the former peaceful state of the country.

The Meeting for the Relaxation of International Tension asks the peoples of all countries to support this request to the Security Council.

Meeting for the Relaxation of International Tension

The Meeting for the Relaxation of International Tension was held in Stockholm from June 19th to 23rd and was attended by 150 persons from 30 countries. The proceedings were directed by a Bureau which published regular statements tracing the discussion at the Meeting.

The Meeting divided into three working sections: a political section, an economic section and a cultural section.

The recommendations drawn up by these sections were adopted by the Meeting in plenary session, as also were a Resolution and two Addresses, one of which was sent to the Geneva Conference and the other to the Security Council.

The Meeting had the support of a number of important people including M. Edouard Herriot, Former President of the French National Assembly, and received many messages, including messages from Mr. Tetsu Katayama of Japan, Sig. Ferruccio Parri, Italy, M. Paul Boncour of France and Mr. Matine-Daftari of Iran, all former Prime Ministers; from Sr. Josué de Castro of Brazil; and from the writers François Mauriac and Thomas Mann, Nobel Prize-Winner.

The World Council of Peace was represented at the Meeting by the following delegation:

The Resolutions Adopted

The National Convention adopted 7 resolutions, from which the following quotations are taken:

On US-Pakistan Military Pact

"The National Convention of the Indian people declares its firm opposition to the US-Pakistan Military Aid Pact, as it threatens the security and independence of all the countries of Asia, increases international tension and menaces world peace . . .

"India is vitally affected by this Pact as it is a step which brings war right to the frontiers of India. It also makes amicable solution of Indo-Pakistan differences through direct negotiations more difficult than ever before.

"This Convention wholeheartedly supports the Prime Minister's forthright rejection of President Eisenhower's offer of military aid . . ."

On Asian Problems

"While regretting the absence from the Geneva Conference of many Asian countries vitally interested in decisions on Asian problems, this Convention welcomes the participation in the Conference of the representatives of the People's Republic of China. It declares its firm belief that the People's Republic of China must be admitted to its rightful place in the United Nations Organisation . . .

"It calls for an immediate end to the war in Indo-China, and demands her full freedom, and a guarantee against intervention by foreign powers . . .

"It calls for immediate steps to prevent the resumption of hostilities in Korea and to ensure the withdrawal of all foreign troops from there, so that the Korean people may be free to determine their own destiny . . .

"This Convention calls upon the Big Powers now assembled at Geneva to respect the right of the Asian peoples to self-determination and to complete independence as the basis for the establishment of peace in Asia."

On Weapons of Mass Destruction

"This National Convention joins all other bodies and all people in calling upon the United Nations Organisation to ban all weapons of mass destruction under effective international control."

It calls on the peoples to give wholehearted support to Prime Minister Nehru's demand "for an immediate stand-still of any further experimental explosions."

On Colonialism and Racialism

In this resolution the Convention "strongly condemns the attempts . . . to keep the colonial peoples in subjection."

On Foreign Pockets on India's Soil

This special resolution says:

"This National Convention of the Indian people considers . . . that these foreign possessions are likely to be used as military bases and transit centres for the imperialist powers, thus constituting a danger to the security of Asia" and "urges the French and Portuguese Governments to withdraw from the areas under their possession without any further delay, and facilitate the integration of these areas with the rest of India."

Lastly, the National Convention demanded the raising of the restrictions on cultural and economic exchanges, since the promotion of these exchanges "is one of the principal ways in which we can lay the foundation of durable peace among nations."

Indo-Pakistan Friendship

Excerpt from speech of Mrs. Rameshwari Nehru at the National Convention

"We are conscious of the fact that Pakistan is an independent country and has every right to manage its affairs according to its own choice. But we should never forget that independence does not mean isolation. We, the Asiatic countries, have many ties that bind us together. Our religion and culture, our sense of values, our way of simple living and our love for peace knit us together."

Excerpt from Resolution on the U.S.-Pakistan Military Pact

"This Convention firmly believes that the peace and progress of the peoples of the two countries are interdependent and can be achieved only through mutual friendly co-operation, and that all disputes between the two countries can be settled by direct negotiations.

"The Convention sends cordial and affectionate good wishes to the people of Pakistan and assures them that the people of India will unceasingly strive towards the strengthening of the bonds of friendship and co-operation between the two countries."

IN THE MIDDLE EAST

THE LEBANON

Campaign against the H-bomb

In the Lebanon, 60 persons have issued an appeal against the H-bomb and atomic weapons. It is addressed to the Government and is couched in the following terms:

"We, the undersigned, joining the 180,000 Lebanese who have already signed the world appeal demanding the prohibition of these weapons, ask the Lebanese Government to perform its duty to the nation and to mankind by making its contribution to the efforts being made to preserve mankind from the danger of extermination. It will thereby realise the aspirations of our whole people to live in security and express their fidelity to the cause of peace and the easing of international tension."

The signatories include three Moslem dignitaries, 11 doctors of medicine, 6 businessmen, 21 professors and teachers, engineers and barristers. The appeal, which was published in three newspapers of varying outlook — "Al Hadaf", "Al Telegraph" and "Al Sarkha" — was immediately signed by more than 400 persons and approved at many meetings.

The Syrian Press comments on the Berlin Session

The Syrian press has paid particular attention to the Extraordinary Session of the World Council of Peace in Berlin. Newspapers like "Al Nasr" of Damascus, "Al Tarbia" of Alep, and "Al Alam", organ of the General Federation of Trade Unions, published information on the work of the Session, stressing the broad representation of the various countries and the importance of the discussions on international affairs.

IRAQ — Call for international solidarity

"Saut Al Ahali", organ of the National Democratic Party, has published an "Appeal from the Iraqi Defenders of Peace" from which we give the following excerpts:

The Pakistan representatives who were not able to arrive in Berlin in time to take part in the Extraordinary Session of the World Council of Peace, May 24th—28th, have communicated to the Secretariat of the Council that, after being informed of the work of the Session, they give their wholehearted support to the resolutions.

The Pakistan delegation was composed of Mr. Maulana Abdul Hamid Khan Bashani, President of the Awami League of East Pakistan and a leader of the United Front; Mr. Muzaffar Ahmed, Member of Parliament and professor at the University of Dacca; Mr. Zamiruddin Ahmed, lawyer and Assistant Secretary of the United Front; Mr. Khondker Elias, Acting General Secretary of the East Bengal Peace Committee.

"A grave danger threatens our country, the danger represented by the Turkey-Pakistan Pact and the attempts being made to incorporate our country in it . . .

"A strong resistance to Iraq's participation in this aggressive pact has developed among the people and even in the Parliament. Today, throughout the country, parties, organisations, the national press and public figures are rising up in unanimous opposition . . .

"The Iraqi Defenders of Peace, like other citizens, realise that this is their battle and are therefore taking their place in the first rank of the struggle, working hand in hand with all sincere patriots to foil these dangerous designs.

"Despite their unshakeable confidence in the rightness of the cause for which they are fighting, they cannot, in present circumstances, do without the fraternal support of the defenders of peace in all the countries of the Middle East, North Africa and South-East Asia . . .

"The Iraqi defenders of peace are sure that their call will be heard and will meet with a response."

Danish National Peace Conference Appeals to Parliament

On May 29th and 30th a National Conference was held in Odense, on the island of Fyn. The call for the Conference had been launched by a Sponsoring Committee composed of 167 persons representing various pacifist groups and movements which are working for peace.

Of the 700 people who attended the conference, approximately 350 represented trade union, peasant and other organisations.

It powerfully demonstrated the determination of large sections of the Danish people to oppose the obstacles in the way of a genuine relaxation of international tension.

This determination is expressed in the resolutions adopted by the participants.

One of these resolutions, which was sent to the Danish Parliament, says:

"We want to see Denmark making a stand in the United Nations Organisation for the prohibition of weapons of mass destruction under control and for the control of the use of atomic energy.

"We ask Denmark to refuse to ratify the treaties making German rearmament possible, and, as far as possible, and in co-operation with other countries, to use every occasion to replace the policy of blocs by peaceful negotiation and by free commercial and cultural exchanges between the nations."

In an Appeal, the Conference asks the Danish people "to demand that conflicts between the nations be resolved by peaceful negotiations and not by military force . . ." After stressing the possibility of the peaceful co-existence of the peoples in spite of different ideologies and systems, the Appeal continues:

"In German rearmament, the general armaments race, and especially the new and terrible weapons of mass destruction, we see a danger to the security of Denmark. We call on the people to demand the prohibition of these weapons, the control of atomic energy and the beginning of disarmament . . ."

The Conference elected a National Commission of 40 people whose task it will be to carry out the resolutions adopted and to prepare new activities in the struggle for peace in Denmark.

Japan — June was a month of struggle against atomic weapons

On the initiative of the Japanese General Council of Trade Unions, June was made a "month of peaceful struggle against atomic weapons".

The month of May had already seen the holding of the Conference of Students for Peace, Tokyo, May 2nd-5th; the Young Women's Congress, May 9th and 10th; and mass meetings against atomic weapons in Osaka, Kyoto, Tokyo and the district of Kansai.

During June this activity has grown in breadth: June 5th, Peace Congress of the Island of Hokkaido; June 7th-9th, National Peace Congress organised by the Japanese Peace Committee, the Japanese Peace Liaison Committee, the Movement for the Defence of the Peace Constitution of Japan, the Association of Democratic Scientists and various other organisations; June 19th, a day of meetings against atomic weapons organised by the Movement for the Defence of the Peace Constitution of Japan.

Further, on June 1st, a campaign of petitions against atomic weapons was launched. The aim is to collect ten million signatures during June, July and August.

Burma — the Peace Movement prepares for its National Conference

In Burma, regional peace conferences are being held in preparation for a National Conference which will include not only representatives of the local Peace Committees but also people who have never yet taken part in the activities of the All Burma Committee of the World Peace Congress.

Conferences of this kind have already been held in the districts of Tharawaddy, Myitkyina and Tennassrin. This last, which was held in Chaungzon, was financed by the voluntary contributions of 36 villages.

On the occasion of the Pagoda Festivals, the Burmese Peace Movement organised exhibitions and petitions for an agreement between the Five Great Powers, in Pegu, Shwebo, Monywa, Sagaing, Letpadam, Sitkwin, Thonoze, Prome, and many other places.

A great demonstration was held to celebrate the birthday of Mr. Thakin Kodaw Hmaing, the President of the All Burma Committee. In addition to the leaders of the Peace Movement, it was attended by the religious heads of all the monasteries of Rangoon and by many intellectuals, journalists, businessmen and so on.

National Campaign in United States against H-bomb and War in Indo-China

The Resident Board of the American Peace Crusade called for the greatest possible outpouring of expression in every form from the American people demanding an end of H-bomb tests, a world ban on such weapons and a halt of US involvement in Indo-China. Widespread support of the Geneva Conference was urged to win a cease-fire in Indo-China and peace in Asia . . .

The American Peace Crusade has encouraged the widest public discussion, through forums, debates or meetings, of the peace issues facing the American people . . .

In Washington, 5,000 leaflets against US involvement in Indo-China and for a cease-fire there have been distributed.

In New York, thousands of leaflets on the H-bomb and Indo-China are being distributed; postcards to the President on the H-bomb are being signed.

The American Vets for Peace have handed out leaflets at Herald Square and picketed with posters reading "Ban the Hell Bomb" and "No more Koreas".

In Atlanta, the Peace Council has distributed 2,000 leaflets on the H-bomb, has sent press releases to the local papers, has taken 500 copies of the Peace Ballot, as well as postcards calling for the banning of the H-bomb.

Letters sent to Senators George and Russell of Georgia brought acknowledgements expressing opposition to sending US troops to Indo-China.

In Los Angeles, a series of factual bulletins are being issued and sent to churches, trade unions and peace organisations by the Southern California Peace Crusade.

In San Francisco, thousands of leaflets on the H-bomb and on Indo-China have been issued by the Northern California Peace Council. They are also distributing 5,000 H-bomb postcards to the President, and arranging appointments with their Congressmen.

In Baltimore, 4,000 leaflets on "Trade Means Peace and Jobs" have been distributed at shop gates by the Baltimore Peace Council.

3,500 leaflets on the H-bomb and Indo-China distributed door-to-door in a steel and longshoremen residential area are being followed up by canvassing with postcards on the same subject.

In Chicago, the Illinois Assembly of the American Peace Crusade held a meeting on April 3rd, attended by 500, on trade with China and for peace in Asia. Leaflets on "No Troops to Indo-China" are being distributed.

In New Jersey, a petition addressed to President Eisenhower asking for support of every move to settle the Indo-China war by negotiations and the removal of all US armed forces from Indo-China, is being circulated throughout the state.

In Louisville, the Peace Crusade distributed leaflets at factory gates dealing with Indo-China and the Geneva Conference.

In Philadelphia, the Philadelphia Women for Peace held a Mother's Day meeting on May 8th on Indo-China and the H-bomb. Mr. Louis Wheaton, recently returned from a 10 month's stay in China, was the principal speaker.

Peoples condemn aggression against Guatemala

A new theatre of war, which threatens the peace of an entire region of the world and the independence of several countries, has broken out in Latin America; armed forces have invaded Guate- to overthrow the legitimate government of the country. For more than eight months, the Guatemalan Government had been informing world opinion of the act of aggression being plotted against it.

Preparations for Aggression

On May 25th last, according to Reuter's, United Press and Associated Press, the American State Departement announced that in accordance with the Nicaragua-Honduras-United States mutual assistance pact, they would speed up the shipment of weapons to Nicaragua and Honduras.

At the Congress of the Rotary Club on June 10th, in Seattle, Mr. Foster Dulles stated that the United States Government were of necessity interested" in the overthrow of the regime in Guatemala".

At the Extraordinary Session of the World Council of Peace in Berlin (May 24th—28th) the Guatemalan delegate, M. Virgilio Guerra, stated:

"The governments of Honduras and Nicaragua are, in the main, those who are mounting the most provocations against Guatemala . . . From this platform, the platform of ordinary people the world over, we are working for the well-being and happiness of mankind; we denounce the North American imperialists' use of force against Guatemala."

The day after the invasion of Guatemalan territory, "Le Monde" wrote:

"It appears that, the attempt at an internal uprising having failed, the men and States interested in the liquidation of the progressive government in Guatemala have decided to take extreme measures . . ."

"'The emigrés' have the backing of foreign weapons, troops and money."

The British newspapers, "The Observer" (June 20th) and the "Manchester Guardian" (June 21st) voiced very similar opinions.

The Movement of Solidarity in Latin America

The movement of solidarity with the people of Guatemala took shape when the danger of foreign intervention first began. In December, 1953, in Mexico, Cuba, Brazil, Argentina, Bolivia, etc. . . . "Societies of Friends of Guatemala" were formed.

It is impossible to mention the thousands of leading figures and the hundreds of organisations in Latin America which have taken part in this movement.

We give the names of only a few of them.

General Cardenas, former President of Mexico and Senator Pedro de Alba, former leader of the Pan American Union, gave resounding support to the "Society of Friends of Guatemala". In Cuba, four former ministers are members of the Society. During the Caracas Conference, many Colombian intellectuals who are renowned throughout America were among 72 leading figures who signed a message of solidarity to the Guatemalan Minister of Foreign Affairs, Sr. Toriello.

In Chile, 68 MPs sent a similar message to the Guatemalan delegation and a "Committee of Friends of Guatemala" was set up in the Chamber of Deputies.

In Ecuador, the House of Culture, the Federation of Students and the Confederation of Workers took part in setting up "Committees of Friends of Guatemala" which operate in Quito and Guayaquil.

The Aggression is condemned

The news of the act of aggression has only increased the movement of solidarity. Among the first news received from Latin America, we may mention the motions of the Uruguayan House of Representatives and the Chilean Parliament condemning the aggression; the 24 hour strike of the Students of Montevideo to express their solidarity with the Guatemalan people; and the forming of the "Association for the Defence of Guatemala" in Montevideo.

The Argentine Radical Party has declared its solidarity with Guatemala; in Quito, the students opened a recruiting centre for volunteers for Guatemala; the Confederation of Latin American Workers, through its President, called on all the peoples of the continent to support the Guatemalan government.

Foreign interference in Guatemala's internal affairs is on the agenda of the conference of Latin American MPs which will be held from 1st to 4th July in Santiago de Chile, on the initiative of Chilean M.P.s.

We should also mention that among the first messages or acts of solidarity reported, were those of the World Federation of Trade Unions, the French CGT (TUC), the Viennese workers and the Austrian Peace Council.

"No! to atomic war"

This poster, designed by the artist Hans Erni, has just been published by the Swiss Peace Movement and several thousand copies of it have been posted up in Swiss towns. A postcard size reproduction of it has been widely distributed throughout the country, and the money collected goes towards financing the poster campaign.

From Douala to Johannesburg

THE PEOPLES OF AFRICA IN THE WORLD STRUGGLE FOR PEACE

Action in the Cameroons for the banning of the H bomb and the ending of the war in Indo-China.

In 1950, when the Cameroons Peace Committee had only been newly set up, a campaign was organised during which 50,000 signatures were collected for the Stockholm Appeal. Since the murderous H-bomb experiments in the Pacific, a new, wider campaign of protest has grown up.

Meetings have been held by the Peace Committee, the trade unions, the Women's Democratic Movement and the National Movement, during which resolutions condemning these monstrous weapons were adopted.

Right from the beginning, the Indo-Chinese war has been condemned by public opinion in the country. The Cameroons Peace Committee has given new force to this campaign in recent months by the publication of pamphlets and numerous articles in the local press.

The Government has attempted to open a subscription for service-men in Indo-China. The appeal lauched by the Committee against this subscription has had such an effect that the Government's pressure did not even succeed in making State officials subscribe.

Great Meeting in Douala

On April 20th last, a public meeting was held in Douala. A number of speakers addressed the audience, among whom were: Mr. Kingue Abel, Vice-President of the Union of the Peoples of the Cameroons; Jacques N'Gom, General Secretary of the Federation of Trade Unions and member of the World Council of Peace.

At the end of the meeting, resolutions condemning EDC, A and H bombs and other weapons of mass destruction were adopted. A further resolution was adopted for the relaxation of international tension; the ending of the war in Viet-Nam, and lasting peace in Korea. Resolutions on these same questions were adopted at the May 1st demonstrations.

South African Peace Council stimulates national campaign for the use of uranium for peaceful purposes

Enlighten the people

30,000 leaflets entitled "We want to live" were distributed at street corners, from house to house, at bus stops, at meetings and from tables placed in the streets. Large numbers were distributed by branches of the Peace Council and also by branches of the South African Indian Congress, the African National Congress, the South African Congress of Democrats and the Council of Non-European Trade Unions.

Over 4,000 letters which included the Dean of Canterbury's speech, World Church Leaders' Easter Messages, Professor Bleksley's Press Statement and the Peace Council's leaflet, were sent out to scientific, political and religious organisations and to numerous personalities from all walks of life.

Telegrams were sent to a number of Labour and United Party M. P.s and at least two of them raised the question of a meeting of the Great Powers to ban the bomb, in a debate on foreign affairs.

Meetings and Conferences

Two large public meetings were held in Durban on the question of weapons of mass destruction. The Transvaal Peace Council organised a symposium which was addressed by Professor Bleksley, Professor Gilmar and Ruth First. Well-attended meetings were also held in Alexandra Township.

Resolutions for the banning of atomic and thermonuclear weapons were passed by the Students' Representative Council of the University of Witwatersrand, the Transvaal Indian Youth Congress, the South African Congress of Democrats, a Conference of the Transvaal Festival Youth Workers, branches of the African National Congress, various Trade Union branches, and the National Conference of Women which was recently held in Johannesburg.

A folder . . .

A folder has been published putting forward questions which the public are invited to answer. It says:

"War has been moving towards us for the past few years. Steadily, but increasingly, South Africa is being drawn into the heart of a possible new world war.

"There is war in Africa today . . . destroying human life, human values, homes and families . . . What we know of war, and what we have learned about Kenya, shows us that.

"Nearer still, in our own country, on our own doorsteps, as it were, is the mining of uranium for the making of atom bombs. The centre of our industry and our most populous area — Witwatersrand — has become, through its production of uranium, a direct target for bomb attacks on a mass scale . . .

"It is not enough for us to hate war, and to recognise its evils. We must also act together against war . . . There is no problem that cannot be settled by negotiation."

. . . and a programme

The South African Peace Council calls on all peace-loving South Africans to support these policies:

1. Negotiations between the Big Powers to settle their disputes peacefully.
2. The inclusion of China as essential in establishing lasting world peace.
3. A Pact of Peace between the Big Five Powers.
4. An end now to the destructive colonial wars in Malaya, Viet-Nam and Kenya.
5. No incorporation of new territories into South Africa against the wish of the inhabitants.
6. The production of uranium for atomic power for peaceful purposes.
7. Friendship between the peoples of different countries.

It continues:

"If you are in favour of this programme, put a cross opposite each of the points and send this form to your Peace Committee."

The Popular Referendum in Germany

From different parts of the Federal Republic information is being received on the progress of the referendum on the question: "A Peace Treaty or EDC."

Here are a few of the results:

In the factories and mines

Out of 820 workers asked in the Scholven factory in Gelsenkirchen 710 voted for a peace treaty. Out of 630 miners in the "Kaiserstuhl II" mine in Dortmund, 599 voted for a peace treaty, 24 for EDC and 7 did not vote. At the "Karolinenglück" mine in Bochum 637 miners out of 731 are for the peace treaty, and so on.

In the towns and villages

Out of 125 people who voted in the Streekermoor commune in Oldenburg, 101 stated their preference for a peace treaty. At Bordesholm in Schleswig-Holstein, 69 out of 72 inhabitants expressed their opposition to EDC.

At Herringen by Hamm, 1876 inhabitants out of the 2535 who voted wanted a peace treaty, 70 wanted EDC and 589 abstained.

At a protest meeting in the neighbourhood of the US training ground, "Wildflecken", the peasants of the villages of Rathenbach, Retnersbach, Alsfeld and Burg Sinn condemned EDC and demanded the withdrawal of the occupation troops.

In the German Democratic Republic a great patriotic campaign is developing in the course of the preparations for the referendum which will be held throughout the Republic on June 27th—29th, following on a decision of the People's Parliament.

During the great Meeting of Young Germans which took place at Berlin at the beginning of June, 700,000 young people, including 25,000 from the Federal Republic, demonstrated the strong opposition of all young Germans to EDC and their determination to struggle for a united and peaceful Germany.

Against atomic weapons

In the Federal Republic a growing number of people are speaking out in condemnation of atomic weapons. Professor Otto Hahn, Nobel Peace Prize-Winner, has recently called on the statesmen to reach agreement in order to avert catastrophe.

Dr. Nikolaus Ehlen, the sociologist, of Velbert, associated himself with a statement condemning atomic weapons.

Rector Lindenberger of Aschaffenburg has issued a petition which has already been signed by 13 other professors.

In a statement signed by Bishop Dibelius and Bishop Lillje, the Council of the Evangelical Church of Germany asks the leaders of all Christian Churches to exert sufficient pressure on the Governments to make them reach agreement.

An appeal issued by the Catholic writer, Frau Christa Thomas, has won the support of many people from Catholic circles.

Many municipal councils are also condemning the H-bomb and weapons of mass destruction. They include the Municipal Council of Bad Kreuznach and the District Council of Diebürg.

At a women's trade union conference in Kassel, 77 delegates from the Paperworkers' Union, the Chemical Workers' Union and the Union of Ceramics Workers, who came from all over the Federal Republic, adopted a resolution condemning the manufacture of atomic weapons and atomic experiments.

At its last provincial congress, the Hamburg district of the Social Democratic Party demanded the international control of atomic energy and the prohibition of its use in wartime.

FRENCHMEN

As we reported in our last number, the 10.000 delegates from every province in France who met in Paris on June 12th and 13th decided to make July 12th a national day of struggle for peace.

We give below supplementary information on the Demonstration of June 12th and 13th and on the preparations to make July 12th a great national day of civic action for independence and peace, as indicated in the Recommendation, the full text of which is given opposite.

"The destiny of France is in the hands of its people"

In his opening speech, M. D'Astier de la Vigerie made a strong appeal for the unity of all Frenchmen:

"The destiny of France", he said, "is in the hands of its people. To the extent the people, eager for peace, unite, whether they are on the extreme Right or the extreme Left, will the great drama that is dogging our footsteps in these first days of the summer, the drama of a world war breaking out in Asia, be averted."

Responding to M. D'Astier de la Vigerie's exhortation, all the speakers expressed the determination of those who had sent them as delegates to stand ever more firmly together in the struggle for the peace and independence of their country.

The speech of M. Casanova, in particular, met with unanimous applause. He concluded by saying:

"We shall have to clear out the splitters, those who whisper to the Communists: 'So you are playing into the hands of the fascists', while at the same time they shout to the others: 'So you are playing the Communist game.'

"To that we must answer, and answer together: 'We are playing the game of peace and of France, and that is all'."

A Call from the National Peasant Committee

On June 17th, the Secretary of the National Peasant Committee made public the following statement:

"The Secretariat of the National Peasant Committee for the Preservation of Peace and Agriculture is happy that, in spite of the fact that this is the season of hardest work for peasants, many peasant delegates took part in the National Demonstration for Peace, held in the Vélodrome d'Hiver in Paris on June 12th and 13th on the initiative of the Peace Movement. They attended together with thousands of delegates from other professions in response to the call made by the National Peasant Committee.

"The Secretariat of the National Committee was itself associated with this demonstration; in his speech, M. Jacques Bourdelle, its General Secretary, explained the reasons why the peasants are playing an active role in work for peace...

"The Secretariat of the National Peasant Committee invites all Departmental and Local Peasant Committees, and all friends of our movement, to take part in the national day on July 11th by informing municipal and county councillors, members of Parliament and the authorities of the peasants' determination to win national independence and peace and their desire to see this determination reflected in the actions of the Government.

"In this way, together with all Frenchmen, they will make July 11th a great national day for peace."

A Message from Catholic Priests

The many messages received by the National Demonstration for Independence and Peace included one from 16 Catholic priests from Marseilles. They wrote:

"As Christians, desirous of doing Christian work, we cannot look on the events of recent months without anguish."

After expressing their hope "that peace in Indo-China will be achieved through direct negotiations between the real combattants", they say:

"We believe that it is useful for Christians to proclaim that the time has come to put an end to the armaments race and to bring in a great and humane policy of peace between the peoples."

Messages were also received from many organisations, municipal councils, Members of Parliament and Senators, barristers, pastors, teachers, writers, artists and many public figures, including M. Pierre Cot, M. Claude Bourdet, director of the newspaper "L'Observateur", M. J. M. Domenach, Editor of the review "Esprit", and so on.

. . . to make Sunday, July 11th, a great day of civic action for Independence and Peace

"We call on all Frenchmen to unite and make Sunday, July 11th, a great Day of Civic Action for Independence and Peace. We ask them to go the Town Halls, since the Town Councils, which represent the people, have the power to inform the authorities of the voters' wishes.

"So that this day may therefore be the authentic expression of the country's desire for peace, we suggest that all Frenchmen who have France's future at heart and who are determined to work for peace should:

1. Organise, in the coming days, many meetings, petitions and deputations, so that, between now and July 11th, further united actions may be added to those that have already taken place;

2. Set up broad Departmental and Local Committees to sponsor the activity on July 11th. They should be composed of people of every opinion and from all walks of life and who are known and respected in their Department and locality. They should show initiative and take the particular circumstances of their Department or locality into consideration;

3. These people will call on their fellow citizens to set up deputations of workers, peasants, tradesmen, ex-servicemen, women, young people and all other social classes and professions. The deputations will go to the Town Halls on the morning of July 11th to communicate the desires of the people to the Municipal Council;

4. The Sponsoring Committees will ask the Mayors to give the deputations a favourable welcome and transmit their wishes and petitions to the Prefect and all Members of Parliament in their respective Departments. They will call on the people to attend public report-back meetings by the deputations which could be organised for the same day.

"In this way, the Day of Civic Action for Independence and Peace will, in every commune in France, be a powerful demonstration of the French people's will for peace. It will have a great influence on the nation's destiny."

. . . to end the war in Indo-China

"The National Demonstration, being resolutely opposed to the continuation of the war in Indo-China, notes with satisfaction the resignation of the Laniel Government, voted out by the National Assembly. It is a great victory for public opinion, whose increasing pressure and vigilance put the Members of Parliament on their guard against the threat to peace involved in the attitude of France's representatives at Geneva . . .

"Recognition, by the French Government, of the independence of the peoples of Indo-China and respect for their right to self-determination would make possible the establishment of a genuine and lasting peace. This, in turn, would make possible the maintenance of friendly political, economic and cultural relations between these countries and France.

"At a time when vital negotiations are under way and when the security of the Expeditionary Corps is gravely threatened, it is necessary that all Frenchmen — whose resolute action has already been reflected in the Parliamentary vote — should further intensify this action and help to impose peace through their unity."

. . . to ban atomic weapons

"The members of the Commission note that the manufacture of thermonuclear devices a thousand times more powerful than the Hiroshima bomb brings within the realm of possibility the destruction of all life on earth.

"They note that the recent tests in the Pacific made hundreds of victims in peacetime, and that thousands of miles away from the explosion. The spectacular way in which they were organised partakes of the political blackmail which is in danger of dragging the world into a general atomic war . . .

"They recall the vital role of public opinion, as expressed in the Stockholm Appeal, in preventing the use of atomic weapons during recent conflicts.

"They ask that a great effort be made to inform the country through booklets, articles, exhibitions, meetings, films and so on, so that people may know the choice that is offered to mankind between mass destruction and the immense possibilities of science in peacetime. All specialists, and particularly all scientists, should be called upon to take part in this effort; they must be made to feel their collective moral responsibility . . .

"It is therefore, in the first place, the duty of the people to exert immediate and ceaseless pressure on all elected representatives and in all circles in order to get the French Government to put forward or support all proposals for the immediate conclusion of an international agreement containing a solemn pledge not to use atomic or thermonuclear weapons and to put an end to experiments with these weapons."

. . . to reject EDC

"The treaty setting up the European Defence Community, signed by the Minister of Foreign Affairs two years ago, was to be ratified within six months. The National Assembly has not yet discussed it. Only the Foreign Affairs Commission has discussed it . . . and rejected it.

"This important fact is the result of the great wave of national protest to which the Peace Movement has made a big contribution and which has given rise to demonstrations of exceptional breadth . . .

"The promoters of EDC have much to say of their desire to build Europe, whereas EDC truncates it by reducing it to six countries.

"They claim to be the champions of Franco-German reconciliation. In fact, EDC would place our two peoples in a state of permanent conflict . . .

"Though they are incapable of convincing the French people, the promoters of EDC have not, however, given up trying to force a rapid decision of the French Parliament through pressure and intrigues . . .

"The close unity of all Frenchmen is indispensable if we are to obtain the final rejection of this fatal treaty. We hail the unprecedently powerful actions that have already taken place, uniting the most diverse circles in a common protest . . .

"Detailed study of the question — as witness the university meetings, the meetings of lawyers, engineers, doctors, civil servants . . . workers' and peasants' conferences, and so on — should continue among all sections of the population . . .

"More and more numerous, more representative and better informed deputations should visit the Members of Parliament, support those who have already condemned EDC, and convince those who are still hesitating. Every Member of Parliament must be made to squarely face his heavy responsibility.

"It is the action of ALL that will obtain the final rejection of EDC, bring about the resumption of the Berlin negotiations and open the road to peace and security for France."

The humanism of CHEKHOV

The monument to Anton Chekhov in Yalta

The short story and the drama of the 20th century have been strongly influenced by Chekhov. This influence is not only to be explained by his great mastery as a writer, but also because his books always extol the noblest and most effective humanism.

Chekhov said that man must create and not destroy, that his vocation is to perfect life and not to degrade or disorganise it. These truths find a response in the hearts of ordinary people and progressive men of culture and the arts. In this century of struggle for justice and peace, the voice of writers is weighed on the scales of history. Chekhov's voice calls the forces of light on to victory. Although profoundly romantic, his humanism was never diffuse or vague. Chekhov knew perfectly well what should be despised and hated. He loved man's aspirations for liberty and peace; he had faith in work which brings joy and the greatest satisfaction; he abhorred all that was slavery and bondage and scorned men with tormented consciences who trample down human dignity. That is why many monologues and retorts of Chekhov's characters ring out clearly today, and his passionate dream of a better life has lost nothing of its stirring force.

Chekhov's plays have been performed by great artists. Bernard Shaw said his drama, "Heartbreak House", was written under the direct influence of Chekhov's works. The works of the American short story writer, Sherwood Anderson, also underwent the influence of Chekhov. The evidence of Kuo Mo-jo, writer, scientist and peace fighter, is significant: "Chekhov's influence on modern literature and art in China is really immense... Chekhov could be compared with our greatest writer, Lju Hsun." They both "implacably denounce the falsity, the rottenness and the ignominy of the reality which surrounds them", and "dream of the radiant future of human society."

Great Anniversaries

United States

The American Peace Crusade organised a public meeting in New York on June 24th, to commemorate the anniversaries of Aristophanes, Fielding, Dvorak and Chekhov.

American artists, musicians, actors and singers co-operated in a musical and theatrical programme composed of works by these great cultural figures. Paul Robeson sang songs by Dvorak, and some of the composer's piano pieces were played. A new adaptation of Aristophanes' play, "Peace", was presented for the first time in the United States. Excerpts from the theatrical works of Fielding and Chekhov were also performed.

In Brazil

The Ministry of Education radio broadcast a Dvorak concert conducted by Sr. Arnaldo Estrela, pianist and member of the World Council of Peace.

Articles on the lives of Fielding and Chekhov and studies on "Antonin Dvorak and the struggle for Peace" appeared in the leading newspapers of Sao Paulo and Rio de Janeiro.

Great Britain

Following on the success of the evening in commemoration of Fielding held in London, various cultural and dramatic associations are, in turn, organising readings of Fielding, Aristophanes and Chekhov.

In order to popularise the work of Chekhov and confer more éclat on the commemoration of his anniversary, an exchange of visits, lectures and performances is planned between British and Soviet specialists on Chekhov.

Similarly, the British-Czechoslovak Friendship Association is drawing up a programme of musical events to pay homage to the memory of Antonin Dvorak. Already, the BBC has broadcast an interesting talk on various aspects of Dvorak's work and a number of concerts devoted to his compositions.

China

The anniversary of Antonin Dvorak's death was solemnly commemorated at a meeting in Peking on May 24th, with Mr. Ting Hsi-lin, Vice-Chairman of the Chinese People's Association for Cultural Relations with Foreign Countries, in the chair. The meeting was attended by representatives of Chinese Peace Committees, many persons from cultural and artistic circles, and delegates from Czechoslovakia and other countries.

A number of speakers paid homage to Dvorak's musical genius, to his love for his country, for his people and for peace. After the ceremony, a Dvorak concert was given by the Orchestra of the Central Troupe of Music and Dancing.

Other Dvorak concerts have been given in various big Chinese cities; Chinese reviews and newspapers are publishing articles on the composer; and a Dvorak exhibition has been going on in the Peking Library since May 25th. During June, a lecture on his life and work, illustrated by records, was given in Peking.

Cuba

For Chekhov's anniversary the Cuba Peace Review is publishing one of Chekhov's short stories, "The Ladies", and a famous article on him by Maxim Gorki.

Czechoslovakia

The commemoration of the anniversary of the great national composer, Antonin Dvorak, is being made the occasion for various activities, such as the reconstruction of the Dvorak Museum in Prague, the restoration of the castles and houses in which Dvorak lived and which have been transformed into State Museums, and the building of a monument to the great composer. In addition, the 60th anniversary of the European première of Dvorak's "New World Symphony" will be celebrated in Karlovy Vary.

In Iran, the thousandth anniversary of Avicenna is still being marked by various events. For example, the Iranian Government held a congress on Avicenna, in collaboration with the "Association for Historic National Works". The cultural representatives of 45 countries took part. In his lecture on the theme: "The Commemoration of Avicenna in Europe", Mr. Said Naficy, Member of the World Council of Peace, stressed the great interest shown in this anniversary in all countries and the wide activity to which it has given rise. Proof of this was to be found in an exhibition of Iranian and foreign journals containing articles on Avicenna.

In addition, the Iranian Peace Council's Cultural Commission is distributing a book by Mr. Mohamed Shaverdi entitled "The Philosophy of Avicenna."

50th Anniversary of Pablo Neruda

On July 12th, the Chilean poet, Pablo Neruda, International Peace Prize-winner, the greatest living poet in the Spanish language, will be 50 years of age. To commemorate this anniversary, which coincides with one of the most fruitful periods of Neruda's poetic creation, his friends from Chile and other Latin American countries are organising a cultural meeting of an international character from July 11th to 18th, in Santiago de Chile.

The works of Neruda have been translated into dozens of foreign languages, so that admirers of the poet are to be found in all parts of the world. A great number of European and Asian countries, not to mention the Americas, will be represented by their writers at the meeting, during which there will be lectures by foreign visitors, recitals, concerts, popular fetes, literary discussions, theatrical performances, etc.

Music

The International Festival of Music in Strasburg, which took place from June 11th to 20th, gave much time in its programme to Spanish, Italian, French and English music. The first international audition of the 10th Symphony of Shostakovich was also to be given, with the composer present. This musical event did not take place. Dmitri Shostakovich had to give up the idea of attending the Festival since he could not get an official guarantee that the precedent of cancelling the Soviet ballet in Paris last month would not be repeated.

Many musicians and conductors, including Gustav Wolf, Vlado Perlemuter and Roland Manuel, expressed their regret and disappointment at the absence of Shostakovich and the conductor, Mravinski, from the Strasburg Festival. On the failure to give the guarantee in question, M. Louis Martin, conductor of the Strasburg Radio Orchestra, commented: It is heart-breaking to see musicians deprived of great works for reasons which form no part of the spiritual climate which alone can lead to a better understanding between the peoples. Strasburg was looking forward to welcoming Shostakovich. His coming would have avoused the same enthusiasm as that which met Gillels some weeks ago. In the name of music, we are all very distressed."

On leaving London, where they were a great success, the 47 young dancers and musicians of the Moscow "Beriozka" Company continued their tour of Europe by a stay in Brussels. Around the World

Sweden

On May 23rd, on the Götaplatsen in Gothenburg, 20,000 people took part in the Nordic Demonstration for Peace organised by the Workers' Commune, the local branch of the Social Democratic Party and the Trades Council. The slogans were: "Co-operation between all peoples and all races"; and "For international control of the atomic and hydrogen bombs".

After the opening speech made by a local speaker, the Prime Ministers of Norway, Sweden and Denmark and the President of the Finnish Parliament spoke.

Indonesia

After its session in Djakarta on June 20th, the Indonesian Peace Committee stated:

"Today more than ever, when the forces of aggression are threatening the integrity of the Republic and want to use its territory for their criminal designs against the peoples of Asia, the people of Indonesia must strengthen their unity."

In the statement, the Indonesian Peace Committee expresses its agreement with the proposals for the establishment of peace in Asia made at the Geneva Conference by the Soviet Union and the People's Republic of China.

It particularly stresses the danger of the use of atomic and hydrogen bombs. It demands the immediate banning of these weapons and that atomic tests be stopped.

Pakistan

At its meeting on June 10th in Lahore, the Central Council of the Jamiat Islami Party condemned the military agreement with the United States which prejudices the national and cultural independence of Pakistan.

Mr. Alexander Karev, General Secretary of the Union of Baptists of the Soviet Union, has just published in the Soviet Review "News", an article entitled "The Christian Conscience and the H-Bomb". Emphasising the importance of a stand for peace on the part of Christians — of whom there are 600 million in the world — Mr. Karev states:

"Atomic and hydrogen weapons are incompatible with the ideas of Christianity and . . . no one who approves those infernal weapons can consider himself a true Christian."

A Congress of dignitaries and representatives of the Moslems inhabiting the European part of the Soviet Union and Siberia has been held in Ufa.

The many guests included the religious chief of the Moslems of Central Asia and Kazakhstan, the Mufti Ishan Babakhan. Those present at the Congress issued an appeal to all Moslems in the world, irrespective of social and political differences, asking them to intensify their activity for peace.

Australia

An "Assembly of Peace and Goodwill", organised by religious circles, will be held in Melbourne from July to September. The Czechoslovak theologian, Dr. Joseph Hromadka, and the leading British Quaker, Professor Kathleen Lonsdale, have been invited to take part.

Switzerland

At its meeting in Geneva, the Executive Committee of the World Federation of United Nations Associations adopted a resolution demanding the reduction of all conventional armed forces, the banning of the use and production of atomic and hydrogen bombs, bacteriological weapons and other means of mass destruction, and the adoption of an effective system of international control and inspection.

"The resources freed by disarmament", the resolution points out, "must be used for peaceful development in the economic, social and cultural fields".

The Executive Committee also demanded the admission of the People's Republic of China to the United Nations Organisation and that the peoples of Asia should enjoy the right of self-determination.

Egypt

A Manifesto of the National Peace Committee calls on the Egyptian people to support the decisions of the Extraordinary Session of the World Council of Peace. It states:

"The Egyptian people, like other peoples, want the world to enjoy peace and prosperity, and they know that, if a Third World War broke out, Egypt would be the scene of the most ferocious battles. That means not only destruction, death and famine, but continued exploitation and oppression . . ."

According to the Lebanese Press, the Egyptian Radio and the Cairo daily, "Al Jumhuriya", have announced that the Egyptian Government have refused to authorise aeroplanes transporting war material and munitions for the French Expeditionary Corps in Indo-China to fly over the territory of Egypt.

Luxembourg

On May 16th, the General Assembly of the "Awakening of the Resistance" adopted a resolution protesting against the ratification of EDC and the modification of the Constitution by the Luxembourg Parliament. The resolution states that these two decisions are "a voluntary renunciation of national independence in favour of a foreign supranational body."

Germany

The Trade Union Conference of all the countries of Europe has just taken place. It was attended by more than 500 delegates from workers' organisations of all tendencies. There was one point on the agenda: the role and tasks of the trade unions in the establishment of peaceful relations between all the countries of Europe and of real guarantees of security, and in the improvement of the standard of living of the working people.

The report on this point was presented by M. Louis Saillant, General Secretary of the World Federation of Trade Unions.

Also in Berlin, workers' representatives from France, the German Democratic Republic and the German Federal Republic met at a conference held just before the Trade Union Conference of all the countries of Europe. It gave further proof of the determination of French and German workers to work together for the defeat of EDC.

Israel

On April 26th in Tel Aviv, the National Rally of the Peace Committees of Israel launched a "Popular Referendum for the Preservation of Peace". By June 13th, 52,227 favourable votes had been collected. The signatories are asked to condemn the remilitarisation of West Germany, Israel's entry into regional military pacts, and to demand the peaceful settlement of the disputes between Israel and the Arab countries.

The National Rally also sent to the Geneva Conference a manifesto expressing the hopes of the people of Israel.

A MESSAGE

The workers of the district of Niari, in the Middle Congo, met on May 1st in the town of Dolisia. After passing resolutions on their immediate demands, they adopted a message to the World Council of Peace which the Secretariat of the World Council has received together with many others.

The Niari workers "warmly congratulate the World Council of Peace on the great successes obtained in the fight for peace". They "salute the firmness of the great scientist, Joliot-Curie, who, in spite of pressure, has refused to put his knowledge at the service of those who live on the poverty of others and destroy thousands of human lives".

The message ends with these confident words:

"We want the World Council of Peace to know that the workers of Dolisia will remain firmly attached to the cause of peace."

BULLETIN OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

[Paul Robeson, p-11]

INFORMATION BULLETIN PUBLISHED BY THE SECRETARIAT OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

N° 14 JULY 1954

Consistent Activity of the Peace Movement

At present the National Peace Movements are conducting campaigns for definite aims, following the lead given by the World Council.

All these aims link up, for they lead to the same goal — the relaxation of international tension. They are bound up with a preoccupation which is to be found in every country, that of ensuring the security of all nations. In all countries, too, the peoples are expressing their unanimous will for the prohibition of weapons of mass destruction, above all the H bomb.

The campaigns based on these aims are being strongly supported by public opinion, for they coincide with the interests of every people, which are — to ensure their security with respect for their independence, and to end the atomic menace which hangs over all mankind.

The breadth of these campaigns is obviously to be measured by the extent of the forces that are moved to act, and this mainly depends on each National Peace Committee's ability to promote undertakings likely to bring about broad popular participation.

Experience proves that, where organisation is concerned, this question of consistent activity is the basic rule of the Movement. The activities of the National Movements, regular reports on which are given in this Bulletin, are based on this principle, and they show that by continually fixing new objectives, by tackling one undertaking after another, the life and development of the Movement are ensured. As soon as one objective is attained, another is immediately proposed. It is first set for the whole Movement and then for every Peace Committee.

For example, a signature-collecting campaign gives rise to the sending of deputations to elected representatives. In the same way, a period of rallies or regional demonstrations on one or more definite themes leads to the preparation of a national demonstration. The national demonstration, in turn, sets objectives such as the organising of a day of action or some other demonstration which, if it is to be successful, necessitates the participation of every Peace Committee.

In this way, the Peace Movement develops on the basis of activities which are continually being renewed, and is enriched by each new experience. This renewal is at the same time of great importance for strengthening the organisation of the Movement at every level.

The lessons of the present campaigns and the experience accumulated in the Peace Movement's five years of activity confirm the correctness of this conception.

The development of each Peace Movement and the broadening of its influence depend on this idea being put into operation. For this very reason, it will help them to make a more effective contribution to the achievement of the peace aims which are their raison d'etre.

What the Press is saying...

The aggression against Guatemala, the overthrowing of its legitimate Government by force and the attitude to this adopted by certain members of the Security Council of the United Nations have angered public opinion. This is reflected in the excerpts from the world Press given below.

We can see quite obviously that the entry of the "liberation army" is very opportune for this powerful company (United Fruit Company Ed.). It had been practically liquidated in Guatemala through large-scale expropriation. The company is strong enough to survive such a blow, but the example could be contagious. For the United Fruit Company has interests not only in Guatemala, but in all the other "Banana Republics". It has great influence. Like the Anglo-Iranian Company in Iran, it plays a certain civilising role, but it is also an exploiter and, because of its wealth and interests, it has great political influence.

POLITIKEN,
June 22nd (Denmark)

El Debate, organ of the Uruguayan National Party, had the following to say of the aggression against Guatemala in an editorial entitled "America Mourns":

We rebel against this terrible and crude farce. To preserve peace, this war was let loose; in the name of liberty they want to destroy the only really democratic regime in Central America, while all the neighbouring regimes are dictatorships enjoying the favour and support of the almighty and of the United Fruit Company.

EL DEBATE,
June 26th (Uruguay)

Two of the Central American Republics have compromised themselves more gravely than is the custom in the affairs of a neighbour. The United States has tarnished its reputation among its "good neighbours". Under its leadership the Security Council has run away from the issue by refusing on Friday even to hear the Guatemalan complaint; and Britain has heroically abstained after stating that the Council should not divest itself of its responsibility.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN,
June 29th (Great Britain)

Above all, the United Fruit Company, with its huge banana plantations, imposes on Guatemala a system of exploitation which is in every way similar to that practised by the classical colonial powers.

Many people find it difficult to believe that the 3,700,000 Guatemalans are a threat to the security of the USA.

NY TID,

The aggression against Guatemala is rousing a wave of popular protest in Latin America. Washington's denial that any military aid was given to the insurgents will certainly not convince the local inhabitants. The evidence is too clear. Yesterday evening, at an angry meeting, the students of the University of Tegucigalpa unanimously condemned the aggression and sent a message of sympathy to the Guatemalan people... It is symptomatic.

LE MONDE,
June 23rd (France)

The Washington Government was quite clearly involved in the conflict, whether the arms it recently delivered to Honduras are used or not.

SUDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG,
June 22nd (German Federal Republic)

These days, a little Central American country — Guatemala — is the centre of the thoughts and feelings of people the world over. In the few days that have elapsed since June 18th, the day on which the armed intervention against Guatemala was launched, inspired and directed by the aggressive circles of the United States, the facts about this event have become absolutely clear. The responsibility of US ruling circles in the aggression against the Guatemalan people has been irrefutably proved, and Washington's manoeuvres to evade this responsibility are doomed to failure.

IZVESTIA,
June 26th (U. S. S. R.)

What is happening can only harm the cause and reputation of the West. There is no hiding the fact that it is an act of aggression starting from the territory of other countries. The fact that the Security Council is not intervening can create a dangerous precedent.

Since US financial circles are directly involved, it is particularly necessary that the US Government should act correctly. The thoughtless action against international navigation (this was a demand for control of navigation on the high seas), which failed, and the refusal to let the matter be dealt with by the Security Council, show that the old dollar imperialism is still alive.

VERDENS GANG,
June 29th (Norway)

This is far from being the first time that a powerful US corporation has undertaken to change things in a little Latin American State, through a successful revolution. Whatever the colour of the Government party in these weak Republics, they will struggle in vain against the resources of the corporations.

The expropriation of the United Fruit Company's plantations was part of a great agrarian reform aimed at giving land to the huge agricultural proletariat in Guatemala. That is a measure which could as well be taken by a liberal regime, but which was used by propaganda as a proof of Communist power in the country. The army which Armas is now leading against the capital calls itself anti-Communist and an army of liberation. Its leaders quite obviously belong to extreme Right Wing circles which, not long ago, held Guatemala under a dictatorship. It is doubtful whether broad sections of the population look upon this army as a liberation army worthy of confidence. But it is quite certain that it is prepared to liberate the United Fruit Company.

STOCKHOLMS-TIDNINGEN.

Criticising the dangerous abstention of Great Britain and France in the Security Council's vote on Guatemala, Le Monde writes in its editorial of June 27th:

In Honduras and in all the Republics of Central America revolt is brewing among peoples who are nearer to slavery than to "the American way of life". It is their poverty and not Communism which could be blamed for creating the revolt. The much talked-about Point Four and the American principle of the peoples' right to self-determination should first of all be applied to them.

On the other hand, the Security Council's decision amounts to recognising the right of the United States to impose their policy by whatever means in the so-called "Monroe zone".

LE MONDE,
June 27th (France)

The glorious struggle of the Guatemalan people against American imperialism cannot be suppressed by any force.

The Guatemalans have brought the United States before the bar of justice and exposed its shameful moral defeats.

JEN MIN JIH PAO,
July 2nd (People's Republic of China)

It is nothing but an act of aggression and intervention. The real cause of the aggression on Guatemala is the latter's disapproval of American policy.

SULUH INDONESIA,
June 23rd (Indonesia)

The people of Guatemala have the right to the Government of their choice. But the United States want to deprive them of this right so as to keep the country under their thumb. The people of Guatemala have the right to be master of their own land, but the United States want to exploit it in their own interest.

A great day for Independence and Peace in France

In France July 11th was observed as a great day of civic action for peace. In the big towns and in the small, deputations went to the Town Hall to present to the Municipal Council their wishes, petitions, resolutions and peace notebooks, asking that the desires of the people be communicated to the Prefect and to the Deputies.

Many sponsoring committees, widely-based, had been set up to prepare for this day and to ask the mayors to receive the deputations. These were received in hundreds of Town Halls all over France: at the Hotel de Ville in Paris; by President Edouard Herriot in Lyons; by M. Daladier in Avignon; in Amiens by the Socialist mayor. In many places the Municipal Councils had agreed beforehand to receive the deputations.

On July 11th and the days immediately following, the deputations called on the people to attend public report-back meetings.

Thus, once again, the people of France were given the chance to rally in a great movement directed towards their elected representatives and the authorities so as to inform the latter in a more direct way of the unity of views of the French nation.

Why it was a success

Only a month elapsed between the National Demonstration of June 12th and 13th and the National Day of Action, which arose out of it.

The National Demonstration, which was held in the Velodrome d'Hiver in Paris and attended by 10,000 delegates, put forward, in its "Call to Frenchmen", the national demand of which July 11th was to be the effective expression. This is:

a) The rejection of EDC, a negotiated solution of the German question, and collective security for all the countries of Europe;

b) A cease-fire in Indo-China and a political settlement which will allow the peoples of Indo-China freely to choose their regime and government and restore to France her prestige and influence in the Far East;

c) An end to atomic tests in preparation for war, the outlawing of atomic weapons and an equitable agreement on disarmament.

The changes in the situation in France have opened up new prospects for the rallying of all peace forces to act on the basis of such a programme. Persons and organisations who had not formerly made a stand, joined the Sponsoring Committees, signed the petitions and took part in the deputations.

This great day of action could be prepared in a few weeks because the peace forces are growing in numbers and activity literally every day. Stage by stage, these forces have arisen and united in action to replace the cold war and adventurism by a policy of negotiation aiming at an easing of tension.

Each stage has helped public opinion to understand the issues and to give expression to its desires, and in each new recruits have joined the general movement for peace. In the course of these successive actions the organised basis of the Peace Movement has been strengthened.

The success of the National Day of July 11th is the result of continuous effort.

Consistent activity for common peace aims

After the two great National Conferences on the German problem and for negotiation in Indo-China which were held in Paris in November 1953, and the popular Departmental or regional rallies of last autumn, the growing influence of the Peace Movement was seen in the increasing number of declarations by elected bodies, national organisations and various public figures.

Action committees against EDC or for peace in Indo-China grew up in the country districts, in the towns and factories; others were formed on a professional or trade basis. Conferences were held.

Then there were the demonstrations of March 13th and 14th. During these two days, "as a token of their disavowal of German rearmament", many deputations of patriots placed wreaths of red, white and blue flowers on the war memorials, which recall that Frenchmen have died as a result of German militarism and Nazism.

A week later, French participation in the Conference of members of Parliament and personalities from the countries affected by EDC, held in Paris on March 20th and 21st, reflected this advancing national unity.

In the two months that followed, the Peace Movement called great Departmental rallies, thus consolidating the great upsurge of patriotic feeling and preparing for the Demonstration of June 12th and 13th.

In the course of these various activities, the consistent action of the French people took widely differing forms — petitions, lobbying of elected representatives, signature campaigns, local and peasant rallies, factory gate meetings, patriotic unity committees, joint statements by personalities, congresses, public meetings and so on.

One of the most recent forms of action was the organisation of deputations to Geneva. There have been 450 of these in two months, or an average of 7 per day, and they brought to the Foreign Ministers' Conference the authentic expression of the French people's will for peace.

July 11th — a day which has prepared for further, more powerful action

Like all the activities and initiatives of the Peace Movement, July 11th was not an end in itself, but a stage.

The following dates enable the French Peace Movement to measure the ground that has to be covered:

July 20th — dead-line on the Indo-China question fixed by the Mendes-France Government;

July 20th — the United Nations Disarmament Commission resumes its work;

August — probable debate on EDC in the French parliament.

A new period of action has opened up which demands that the French Peace Movement organise ever broader and more powerful activities.

HUE — IMPOSING DEMONSTRATION FOR "PEACE IN INDO-CHINA" in the zone occupied by the French Expeditionary Corps

On June 18th, a peace demonstration in which more than 10,000 people took part was held in Hue, on the coast of Annam, in a region occupied by the French Expeditionary Corps.

The demonstrators, who carried banners and posters expressing their opposition to forced enrolment in Bao Dai's army and the continuation of the war, met in the morning in the Dong-Da Market Square.

Later, the meeting turned into a huge demonstration of 10,000 people which wound its way through the streets of the town.

Units of the Expeditionary Corps joined the demonstrators, and so one had the spectacle of European and African soldiers marching behind the demonstration with their tanks and armoured cars, while the number of those taking part grew all the time.

The demonstration went on till the early afternoon, demanding a cease-fire and peace in Indo-China.

"Le Monde" comments

Dealing with the attitude of the Viet-Namese population in the territories occupied by the French Expeditionary Corps, Le Monde said on July 3rd:

"Men formerly described as fence-sitters are now proclaiming their support for the Vietminh. They have been won over to the idea of a cease-fire, to be followed by the evacuation of the Expeditionary Corps and the holding of a general election . . .

"Lastly, they are convinced that the Vietminh would agree to sign a peace which was honourable for France, and guaranteeing certain advantages to the French."

Young people oppose the H-bomb

In an open letter to international youth organisations, the Secretariat of the World Federation of Democratic Youth says:

"All young men and girls in the world, whatever their opinions or the organisation to which they belong, are justly alarmed at the mortgage which the atom danger puts on their life and future . . .

"We therefore think that the time has come for all who lead youth organisations to try and get united action to avert the danger which threatens us all, whoever we may be and whatever we may think about any other problem."

This open letter was addressed especially to the World Alliance of Young Men's Christian Associations, the World's Young Women's Christian Association, the World's Student Christian Federation, the World Federation of Liberal and Radical Youth, the World Assembly of Youth, the International Youth Hostel Federation, and the International Union of Socialist Youth.

Congress for Peace and the German People's Right to Self-Determination

The "Congress for Peace and the German People's Right to Self-Determination" was held in Cologne on June 27th. It was attended by 895 delegates and many observers and guests from all parts of West Germany.

Eminent figures like Ex-Chancellor Wirth and Herr Oskar Müller, former government minister, sent greetings to the Congress.

In his speech, Herr Von Ameln announced that in the last few days 40,000 people had declared their opposition to EDC and their desire for a peace treaty.

Representatives of all sections of the people, and of many parties and organisations, spoke in the discussion. All stressed the fact that, irrespective of political and ideological differences, they were ready to co-operate with all those who are taking part in the struggle against the Bonn and Paris Agreements.

Here are two excerpts from the Manifesto unanimously adopted by the Congress:

"The Congress for Peace and the German People's Right to Self-Determination affirms the German people's legitimate right to self-determination in conformity with the principles of democracy, and demands that it be respected. To this end, it is necessary to hold a free vote in which our people will show whether they want the Bonn and Paris Agreements or a peace treaty and whether they want the occupation to go on, or the withdrawal of all occupation troops from Germany . . .

A policy of understanding and peace, a really German policy . . . that is the real alternative to the policy of strength, the policy of EDC and the Bonn and Paris Agreements."

Repercussions of the Berlin Session in the German Democratic Republic

During and immediately after the Extraordinary Session of the World Council of Peace in Berlin, the friends of peace in the German Democratic Republic organised 110 public meetings and demonstrations.

The great interest shown in the cause of the World Council of Peace by the people of the German Democratic Republic is to be seen in the fact that, during the session, 645,000 signatures were collected for the prohibition of the hydrogen bomb.

"No country can be secure unless all are secure"

British Peace Committee launches "World Security Campaign"

A special session of the Executive Committee of the British Peace Committee, attended by a number of invited guests, decided to launch a national campaign under the title 'World Security'.

The 'World Security Campaign' will link together the issues on which the Peace Movement will concentrate:

the banning of atomic, hydrogen and germ weapons;

the organisation of security for all nations in Europe and Asia instead of the creation of opposing blocs; an extension of trade and cultural exchange between all countries.

In launching this campaign the British Peace Committee underlines the fact that today, more than ever before, no country can be secure unless all countries are secure.

Campaign Activities

Among the new steps taken by the British Peace Committee to popularise the policy of the Peace Movement are:

The issue of a Manifesto in leaflet form, based on the resolutions of the Berlin session of the World Council of Peace;

the publication of folders containing the speeches of Jean-Paul Sartre on the H-bomb, Paul Robeson on Peaceful Co-existence and Charles Chaplin on the award of the International Peace Prize; the issue of many posters with slogans on the policy of the movement.

During the campaign a prominent place is being given to poster parades and open-air meetings. Among the main centres in which meetings are being held are Sheffield, Glasgow, Edinburgh, Dundee, Manchester, Birmingham, London. Many leading figures of the peace movement are speaking, among them Dr. E. H. S. Burhop, the well-known atomic scientist, Mr. Gordon Schaffer and Professor J. D. Bernal.

Increased Co-operation

During peace activity in Great Britan in recent months a significant trend has been the increased co-operation between the different movements and organisations. For example in Reading the Peace Committee joined together with the Labour Party, the Trades Council and the Co-operative Men's Guild to organise a peace demonstration. In Plymouth the peace committee and the different pacifist organisations joined together to organise a meeting addressed by the Labour M. P. for Plymouth, Mr. Michael Foot. In Coventry a big meeting organised by the Anti-Hydrogen Bomb League was addressed by the Bishop of Coventry, Mr. Anthony Greenwood, Labour M. P., and Dr. E. H. S. Burhop, Vice-President of the British Peace Committee.

The extent to which popular support is rallying to the campaign against the hydrogen bomb can be seen from two facts:

The entire congregation of the Church of St. Crispin with Christchurch, in East London, of which World Council member the Rev. John Bliss is the vicar, unanimously signed the petition against the Hydrogen Bomb.

ITALY: Provincial and Municipal Councils in the Peace Campaign

The Italian Peace Movement's campaign is developing broadly round the themes of the prohibition of atomic and thermonuclear weapons and collective security. The aggression against Guatemala has roused the anger of the masses of the people and various democratic circles; this anger is being widely demonstrated in the course of current activity.

Every day public opinion is becoming more aware of the close link between the danger of the use of weapons of mass destruction and EDC.

The Italian people understand that it is the same forces which fomented the aggression against Guatemala that are urging the countries of Europe to ratify EDC; so the aggressive nature of EDC is becoming even more obvious to all. The many declarations by Municipal and Provincial Councils are a significant indication of the growing alertness of public opinion.

The Provincial Council of Novara voted unanimously for the prohibition of weapons of mass destruction; so did that of Chieti, which also rejected a motion in favour of EDC.

The Provincial Councils of Piacenza, Cosenza, Matera, Catania, Perugia and Avellino, and the Municipal Councils of Avezzano, Mantua, Cosenza, Caserta, Frignano, Capua and others, adopted motions for the prohibition of atomic weapons.

The Municipal Council of Lacedonia (Avellino) unanimously passed a motion to be sent to Parliament, asking "that Italy should not ratify the EDC treaty".

On the subject of EDC, the Venice Peace Committees organised what was virtually an electoral campaign, with ballot papers. The great majority of the voters were opposed to EDC.

In Como, the mothers and widows of war victims conducted a campaign against weapons of mass destruction and EDC.

In Empoli (Florence), a referendum was held, the results of which showed that a majority of the people are opposed to the rearmament of the German revenge-seekers. Priests, leaders of Catholic Action and cultural figures have also condemned EDC. In the commune of Cerreto Guidi, 1072 people out of 1096 expressed their opposition to thermonuclear weapons and to EDC.

In Lucera, a Civic Committee against EDC was set up, composed of personalities of various political views.

In Rome, the International Art Circle held a debate on the theme, "Art and the H Bomb"; many of the capital's artists took part.

At Forli, in the Romagna, an important lawyers' debate was organised under the chairmanship of His Excellency Saverio Brigante.

Austria protests at Weapons of Mass Destruction

In Austria, many resolutions demanding the prohibition of hydrogen bombs have been adopted.

The Tyrol Peace Council states in an appeal "that the growing number of American atomic cannon in West Germany, a whole battery of which have been stationed at Oberammergau on the Austrian border, is a warning to all fathers and mothers and to all young people. To guarantee a future of peace, we must ceaselessly demand the prohibition of atomic weapons and an international control of atomic energy."

The Municipal Council of Ebensee, in Upper Austria, adopted an appeal to the Austrian Parliament asking it to speak out in favour of the prohibition of weapons of mass destruction. Herr Neuhauser, the Socialist Mayor, stated that no one could be against this appeal, and he took upon himself to transmit the resolution to Parliament.

Resolutions along the same lines have been adopted by the following:

The Shop Stewards' Committee of the linen factory of Lambrach; the Municipal Council of Stadl Paura; the 1,200 war victims who took part in the general assembly of the Graz Branch of the War Victims' Association; the participants in a meeting of the personnel of the Siemens-Schuckert factory in Vienna, and so on.

U.S.S.R. — a concrete achievement in the field of the peaceful use of atomic energy

The Council of Ministers of the U.S.S.R. has issued a communique stating that an industrial power station using atomic energy is now working in the Soviet Union. It is the first of its kind and has a working capacity of 5,000 kilowatts. The communique says:

"On June 27, 1954 the atomic power plant was put into operation and generated electric current for industry and agriculture of adjacent districts.

"For the first time an industrial turbine is operated not by the burning of coal or other kinds of fuel but by atomic energy — the fission of the atomic nucleus of uranium.

"With the commissioning of the atomic electric power station a real step was made in the use of atomic energy for peaceful purposes.

"Soviet scientists are working on the development of atomic energy industrial electric power stations with a capacity of 50—100 thousand kilowatts."

This communique has given rise to many commentaries throughout the world—proof of the great importance attached to this historic event by world public opinion.

The Guatemalan People's Activity for Peace

In the weeks before the aggression was launched, upsetting the normal functioning of democracy in Guatemala and depriving the country of its sovereignty, the people of this little Central American Republic conducted intense activity for the improvement of international relations and the consolidation of world peace.

The peasant associations issued a statement demanding the ending of hostilities in Indo-China in the following terms:

"The people of Indo-China are fighting to win their independence as Guatemala did in 1821. In general, we Guatemalan peasants have the same ideals and the same problems as the peasants of Indo-China. We support them and want them to win in the struggle for peace."

Against weapons of mass destruction

Organisation of all kinds, including the various political parties and workers', peasants', students' and women's organisations, published manifestoes demanding the immediate prohibition of A and H bombs. The National Peace Committee distributed thousands of copies of a pamphlet containing the Pope's Easter Message and Professor Joliot-Curie's statements on the atomic problem.

For peace and sovereignty

On June 6th, the region of Retalhuleu had its first assembly in defence of peace and national sovereignty. More than 600 delegates and guests from the towns and Indian communities attended, including many small land-owners.

That same day, a provincial assembly was held in San Juan Sacatepequez. The two hundred delegates took important decisions to intensify the struggle for the preservation of peace and national sovereignty.

Confronted by threats to Guatemalan sovereignty on the part of certain international circles, the people took part in many popular demonstrations in the provinces and villages and greatly intensified their struggle against intervention.

On June 26th, the Secretariat of the World Council of Peace received the following telegram:

Paying no heed to the Security Council's agreement, Honduras and Nicaragua are continuing to give support to the invading mercenaries.

From bases in these countries, aeroplanes piloted and equipped by the North Americans are bombing and machine-gunning the civilian population, the hospitals, schools and churches.

We urge action by Defenders of Peace the world over to put an end to the aggression against our country.

Guatemalan Peace Committee

For Peace and Friendship between the Peoples of Central America

Faced with manoeuvres to make relations between the countries of Central America more difficult, the people of Guatemala demonstrated concretely their desire for peace and friendship with these countries. With the support of all classes in the country, the Guatemalan Government proposed to the Government of Honduras — whence the aggression was to be launched and where there was a stockpile of foreign arms — the conclusion of a pact of non-aggression. This proposal was very favourably received by the people of Honduras.

Such were the activities of this peace-loving people during the very days when, abroad, there was being prepared the blow that was to interrupt the normal course of its democratic life.

The People of Luxembourg say no to EDC

At assemblies, meetings and gatherings, thousands of Luxemburgers — workers, intellectuals, civil servants, peasants, artisans and middle-class people — are continuing to express their opposition to EDC, in spite of the fact that it has been ratified by the Parliament.

Many letters from people of all circles show the people's hostility to the EDC treaty.

During these last four weeks, hundreds of people have added their signatures to the National Peace Movement's Appeal.

These facts demonstrate that it was not empty talk on the part of the National Peace Movement when it stated, in a leaflet issued after the vote in the Parliament, that, though a majority of the House had ratified the European Army agreements, the people of Luxembourg would never do so.

Australian woman sets an example

The following two excerpts are taken from an article on the experiences of an Australian mine-mechanic's wife which appeared in Peace News, bulletin of the New South Wales Peace Council:

Mrs. Buchanan, a mine-mechanic's wife in West Wallsend (NSW), wrote out a simple petition calling for peaceful action to abolish the H-bomb threat, then took it from door to door in her township. She got 458 signatures and about 20 refusals; six people had no opinion and she missed about 60 houses because the occupiers were out. Here is her report:

"Everyone was kind, and welcomed me with understanding and relief. They felt my petition was getting something done. It was giving them an opportunity to protest about something that filled them with real fear and confusion.

"Nearly everybody invited me in for tea or a cold drink and all asked me to sit and rest while we discussed the petition. It would be hard to find more human people anywhere. I came home in the evening loaded up with plants and cuttings of some sort, after a very happy, satisfactory day."

Recommendation adopted by the Political Section

The participants in this Meeting, convinced that peace is indivisible, hold that the peaceful solution of the problem of Germany is essential for the relaxation of international tension.

The development of the negotiations at Geneva makes possible, and therefore necessary, the early resumption of the negotiations broken off in Berlin between the four Great Powers. In order to associate the German people in the shaping of their own destiny, it would be desirable that the governments of the German Federal Republic and the German Democratic Republic should take part in these negotiations.

The negotiations must lead to the peaceful reunification of Germany by democratic methods, and to a treaty of peace guaranteeing the security of Germany's neighbours and of all Europe.

In order to arrive at these results, it is essential that no step be taken, before or during the negotiations, towards the rearmament of Germany in any form or her inclusion in any military pact.

THE MEETING FOR A REL

Recommendation on the United Nations Org on Security and on National Independence adopted by

The participants in the Meeting for the Relaxation of International Tension consider that the Charter of the United Nations Organisation must be applied in the letter and in the spirit in order to correspond to the aspirations of the peoples; that the People's Republic of China must without any further delay take its rightful place in the United Nations Organisation; that all States, whatever their social and political system, who ask to be admitted to the United Nations Organisation must be admitted in order that it may take on a universal character.

In this way the United Nations Organisation could play a role of prime importance for the easing of international tension.

The Meeting takes cognisance of the fact that the division of the world into two hostile blocs and the military measures which this provokes are a grave threat to peace. It opposes any military pact or military coalition which has the aim or effect of prolonging or aggravating this state of affairs.

It declares itself in favour of pacts of non-aggression and security, provided that such pacts are open to all interested countries irrespective of political or social systems, based on the principle of equality and conformity with the Charter of the United Nations.

Recommendation on Disarmament and Weapons of Mass Destruction adopted by the Political Section

The participants in the Meeting for the Relaxation of International Tension firmly adhere to the principle embodied in the Charter of UNO which rejects war as a means of settling international disputes. We hold further that the accumulation of excessive and burdensome armaments, and especially the rapid development and stocking of atom and hydrogen bombs, and the experimental explosions which have already caused many casualties and widespread alarm, all accentuate international tension which may lead to war.

Accordingly, they call on the Governments of all nations capable of producing atom and hydrogen bombs to agree to suspend any further trials of such weapons and to issue a simultaneous declaration that they will not employ them in war.

They urge the Governments to push forward the present negotiations of the Disarmament Commission of the Assembly of the United Nations and to conclude without further delays an agreement to secure the permanent abolition of all such weapons, with the necessary safeguards of unhampered and continuous inspection.

They further call on the Governments of all nations to conclude an agreement embodying a substantial and equitable measure of disarmament extending to armed forces and to all types of weapons.

Although only certain states are involved in the production of atomic weapons, every country in the world may suffer from their effects. Those taking part in the Meeting therefore support the appeal of the Prime Minister of India, Mr. Nehru, that all the peoples of the world should "express their concern and add their voices and influence in as effective a manner as possible to arrest the progress of this destructive potential which menaces all alike."

The effectiveness of public action will be measured by the degree to which the peoples everywhere become aware of the dangers of atomic warfare, and of the steps needed to eliminate it. Those taking part in the Meeting therefore request the Governments, and associations of all kinds, particularly those of scientists, to do everything possible to create a soberly informed public opinion on this subject.

They welcome every proposal for the constructive use of atomic energy but recognise that these are less likely to be acceptable or effective if they do not follow an agreement prohibiting its military use. Only when this is achieved will it be possible to make full use of the resources of science and technology for the satisfaction of the urgent needs of mankind.

Recommendation adopted

The participants in the Meeting for the Relaxation of International Tension draw attention to the economic difficulties resulting from the present international situation. The cold war and the international tension which it causes have resulted in the creation of artifical barriers to normal trade relations between countries with different economic and social systems, obstacles to the development of world trade, unbalanced economies in many countries, the unproductive use of resources for armaments; have impeded the progress of underdeveloped countries and caused a reduction of the standard of living in many parts of the world. These consequences, in turn, contribute towards an increase in internationl tension. Elimination of these economic consequences of the present international situation, therefore, would be in itself an important contribution towards relaxing international tension.

While there has been a substantial improvement during the last year in international trade and in economic co-operation between nations, the possibilities of economic measures designed to reduce international tension are far from being exhausted. The annual volume of East-West trade could be rapidly increased by three to five milliard dollars. Such an increase by no means represents the limits of the possibilities in this field.

With a view to contributing to the relaxation of the present international tension, the Meeting proposes:

1. Immediate utilisation of all existing possibilities of increasing trade between countries, irrespective of their economic and social system. This means the use of possibilities implied in existing trade agreements, and the negotiation of new commercial agreements, as well as the extension of trade by private firms.

2. Abolition of all measures of discrimination and embargoes designed to prevent normal trade relations between countries with different economic and social syste Battle Act, adopted by the Congress of resolution of the General Assembly of t bargo against China, should be ended. trade relations with countries because of be removed.

3. Adoption of positive measures to pr all countries, such as a gradual remova of prohibitive tariffs, increase in import etc. Special attention should be devoted countries as well as multilateral and pay different economic and social systems.

The work of the United Nations Econ international trade should be continued an of the United Nations, such as the Econon and the Economic Commission for Latin behalf of international trade.

4. Maintenance of diplomatic relation differences in their economic and social s ment of trade relations and trade agreeme in the United Nations for all countries willi In particular it must be realised that no world economy is possible without the es relations with the Chinese People's Republic atives to the United Nations.

In this bulletin we publish the recommendations made by the various working sections of the Meeting, which were also adopted by the plenary Assembly.

The Meeting proclaims that the inalienable right of the peoples to self-determination and to an independent existence is of no value unless it is genuinely implemented.

Consequently it considers that peoples who are still dependent must gain their freedom, manage their own affairs as they wish and themselves freely dispose of the products of their labour and of their natural resources.

The Meeting declares that the acts of violence at present being committed against the aspirations of the peoples in various territories must cease and that all racial discrimination must be abolished.

The national independence of all peoples and the free exercise of their national sovereignty are at once the essential condition and the surest guarantee of world peace.

Recommendations adopted by the Cultural Section

I.

Today, the peoples of the world desire with all their hearts relief from international tension. The Meeting in Stockholm from 19 to 23 June, 1954, has stressed the primary importance of the part played by cultural exchanges between different countries in creating throughout the world the atmosphere of confidence and understanding necessary for the establishment and maintenance of peace.

When scientists, artists, workers of all kinds, students, sportsmen and others stay in foreign countries, this makes it possible to bring people into direct contact with one another. This gives them the opportunity to obtain precise information and enables them to become familiar with and to respect ways of life which differ from their own.

The International Meeting, in order to increase the number of such exchanges and to make them more fruitful, appeals to all organisations throughout the world active in the field of culture. It asks them to use all their authority in order to obtain the necessary facilities and authorisations from Governments.

The communication of creative ideas and the exchange of works will help to bring people together and to give them an even clearer understanding of those treasures of culture which all must defend and enrich.

II.

The participants in the Meeting appeal to all creative workers, to all engaged in research, to all engaged in teaching. It calls upon them to use all their resource and all their talent with ever greater devotion, in their creative, research and teaching work, so as to give full weight to everything which brings men closer to one another: the sense of the unity of man, the respect and love for one's own people and one's own culture, and equally for all peoples and all cultures.

They therefore urge them to oppose with all their strength the propagation of everything contrary to these ideas and these feelings, everything which would promote distrust and hatred between the peoples.

In this way they will be able to work effectively to strengthen peace for mankind — the essential condition for the development of culture.

The economic and social progress of underdeveloped countries requires special international measures. Such measures must include technical as well as economic assistance from economically more advanced countries, on a basis guaranteeing freedom from interference in the internal and external policies of the countries receiving aid and the full respect of their national sovereignty. Effective aid should also be made available to non-self-governing territories.

The measures indicated would help to relax international tension. They provide at the same time a solution for certain economic problems resulting from such relaxation. The development of normal trade relations between all countries, without regard to differences in their economic and social systems, can provide the industrially highly developed countries with employment for many years to come; secure for countries with a surplus production new markets for their products; provide new sources of imports for countries lacking certain particular currencies; and help in the economic and social progress of underdeveloped countries.

These measures and the perspectives which they offer are such as to allay the apprehension of those who fear depression and mass unemployment in consequence of a reduction in the production of armaments; as well as of those who look forward with apprehension towards the end of certain dollar resources which might result from the end of the war in Indo-China and from the abandonment of the proposed "European Defence Community".

Peaceful co-operation between all countries, whatever their economic or social system, for the development of the standard of living and welfare of their people will serve the cause of the reduction of international tension and promote the establishment of durable peace among the nations.

Address from members of different Churches taking part in the Meeting to the believers of every religion in the world

We religious people from the Churches of different countries and peoples — Australia, Brazil, Canada, China, Germany, Hungary, Japan, Korea, Poland, the Soviet Union, and Sweden, who have come together at the Meeting for the Relaxation of International Tension, appeal to the believers of every religion in the world.

Let all of us, in our own country, do everything in our power to bring about international understanding, to prevent the use of atomic, thermonuclear and other weapons of mass destruction, and to put an end to experiments with atomic and hydrogen bombs. The religious conscience is opposed to the very idea of the use of this terror weapon.

Let us once again work, by every means at our disposal, to make the spirit of peaceful negotiation between countries for the solution of all present differences prevail.

The spirit of love and peace, which inspires every religion in the world, demands it.

We call upon the Churches and religious organisations of all countries to support the cause of peace in a spirit of unity.

We consider it necessary to increase the number of small meetings between groups of religious figures, in order to consolidate the bonds of friendship between Churches and religious organisations and to establish contacts in action for peace — the supreme good of all mankind.

We are convinced that all these measures will contribute to the common cause — the attainment of a relaxation of international tension.

YOU CANNOT WAIT FOR PEACE, YOU MUST FIGHT FOR IT!

This is the title of a booklet published in the Soviet Union; we reproduce its cover in our photograph.

In it Mr. Kotov, General Secretary of the Soviet Peace Committee, shows how the forces of peace are being consolidated throughout the world, and describes the activities of the Peace Movement, especially the Peace Movement in the Soviet Union. He calls for constant vigilance against the intrigues of the war forces. "Peace can be saved! Peace must be saved!" Such is the conclusion of this pamphlet which reflects the ideas of a peace-loving people.

If this were your child . . .

We reproduce the cover of a pamphlet produced by the Belgian Liaison Committee of Peace Organisations. In a few illustrated pages, it gives some telling facts on the H bomb, and proves that no one is safe from the radio-active clouds produced by the test explosions. It demands that these tests should be prohibited. The pamphlet also contains an appeal to the Belgian Government and to public opinion, pointing out that Belgium "is responsible for the fact that Congo uranium is being used to manufacture these deadly devices", and demanding that it be used for peaceful purposes.

"Guess with us"

In the German Democratic Republic a 16-page folder with an attractive cover and entitled "Guess with us" has been produced. It contains twelve questions dealing with the proposals for the security of the nations of Europe and with the principle that international differences can only be solved by negotiation.

The last question in this game, for which many prizes are offered, is in the form of a cross-word puzzle. The solution is: "Germany must become a peaceful country", and the 43 words which have to be guessed (names of persons, towns and institutions etc.) are all related to the Peace Movement.

Nordic peoples demand a genuine relaxation of international tension

Public opinion in the Nordic countries, as in the rest of the world, is pressing for the elimination of obstacles to a genuine relaxation of international tension.

This ever growing demand is reflected in recent declarations by a number of pacifist organisations.

The Norwegian Branch of the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom has just sent an urgent appeal to Parliament, asking it not to ratify the supplementary protocol involving the European Army.

In Sweden, the National Congress of the "Svenska Freds- och Skiljedomsföreningen", a pacifist organisation, has adopted a declaration from which we take the following two excerpts:

"The huge sums required for atom and hydrogen bomb tests must be devoted to the peaceful use of atomic energy for the good of mankind . . .

"We call on the interested parties to do everything possible to obtain an armistice and peace in Indo-China."

The question of East-West trade has also been raised within the general framework of the struggle to achieve a relaxation of international tension.

In Denmark, an agricultural country in which the question of trade is vitally important for the majority of the population, authoritative and official voices are beginning to be heard. For example, Mr. Hans Pinstrup, President of the Danish Agricultural Council, stated at the Council's conference on June 23rd:

"It is in the interest of Danish agriculture to increase trade with Eastern Europe, the Soviet Union in particular."

On June 25th, the Danish Minister of Commerce, Mrs. Lis Groes, pointed out, in her speech at the opening of the Soviet Trade Exhibition in Copenhagen, that her country "hoped, in the course of the trade talks in Moscow, to obtain a treaty involving a considerable increase in the possibilities of trade."

Public assembly for peace in Bucharest

A public assembly was held in Bucharest on June 14th to hear the report of the Rumanian delegation at the Berlin Session of the World Council. The meeting adopted a resolution which reads as follows:

"We wholeheartedly share the opinion of the representatives of all peace-loving people who met together at the Extraordinary Session of the World Council of Peace, the opinion that collective security must be organised by all interested states irrespective of the differences between their social and political systems.

"Our people, who have twice in a generation suffered from German militarism, are resolutely opposed to the creation of the European Defence Community, which is a screen for the revival of Hitler's armies . . ."

SWITZERLAND — doctors in the canton of Vaud against the H bomb

At its ordinary meeting of June 3rd in Lausanne, the Medical Society of the canton of Vaud unanimously adopted a resolution moved by Dr. Thillot, President of the Peace Movement of the canton. All 193 members of the Society were present. The resolution reads as follows:

"Indignant at the terrible danger to mankind involved in the use of the atomic weapon, the Medical Society of the canton of Vaud expresses the wish that the use of blind weapons of mass destruction, particularly atomic weapons, and A and H bomb tests whose effects are unpredictable and uncontrollable, should be prohibited by an agreement between the powers."

Dutch people on their guard against revival of German militarism

With the return of fine weather, the Dutch Peace Movement has held a series of open air meetings, the most important of which were those at the Hague on May 31st and in Zaandam on June 24th. The meetings formed part of a campaign against the revival of German militarism which included a "Vigilance and Resistance Month" — the month of May — also organised by the Peace Movement.

On May 4th, Holland commemorated her dead and on the fifth the anniversary of her liberation from the yoke of German militarism. As May 5th drew near local "vigilance conferences" were held in the Hague, Amsterdam, Rotterdam and Arnhem. A special edition of "Vrede", the organ of the Peace Movement, containing an Appeal from the Movement and facts proving the remilitarisation of West Germany, was widely distributed, mainly at factory gates.

In spite of the Parliament's decision to discontinue the observance of May 5th as a national holiday, thousands of workers did not work that day following a call by the two trade union centres, NUU and EVG. In the towns there were empty schools and many shops were shut.

In Amsterdam, the day was marked by a rally of 25,000 children and imposing torch-light marches. The Mayor of the city took part in these demonstrations.

Eight literary and artistic reviews put out a joint edition in which the greatest Dutch intellectuals expressed their determination that May 5th should remain a national holiday.

On May 14th, the anniversary of the bombing of Rotterdam in 1940, flowers were laid at the memorial created by the sculptor Zadkine who associated himself with this step. The Rotterdam Peace Committee sent a letter to the Dresden Peace Committee in the German Democratic Republic, for Dresden is another city which suffered terribly from intensive bombing.

July 16—17: Second Congress of Syrian Peace Movement

On June 11th, the Syrian Peace Committee held a joint meeting with representatives of the regional committees. After hearing a report from the Syrian representatives at the Extraordinary Session of the World Council of Peace in Berlin, May 24—28, the National Committee examined the present situation of the Movement in Syria and the preparations for the Second Peace Congress. The Congress was convened for July 16th and 17th and the Committee stressed the possibilities it offered for making the Syrian Peace Movement a broad mass movement with a strong organisation based on regional and local committees. After the meeting the Committee issued a statement on the decisions of the Berlin Session of the World Council which was given much attention in the Syrian Press. The newspapers Al Nasr, Barada, Al Nadara and Al Fathaa, all nationalist, published it in full.

A campaign for the prohibition of atomic weapons is now being carried on. For example, Mr. Abdul Wahab Homad, Member of Parliament and former Minister, recently denounced the atomic bomb in a broadcast speech. In Aleppo petitions are going round.

At a meeting held in Damascus to celebrate International Children's Day, more than 4,000 women passed a resolution asking "the Government and Parliament to take the necessary steps in international organisations to express the Syrian people's determination to ban atomic and hydrogen weapons."

Similar resolutions were adopted at ten other women's meetings which were held on the same occasion and in which women's organisations of every tendency took part.

Peking "People's Daily" on peaceful co-existence

The Peking People's Daily has just published an editorial on the peaceful co-existence of all nations. It says:

"We do not launch aggression against others and are firmly opposed to all aggressive action. We do not interfere in others' internal affairs and are firmly opposed to all interference in others' internal affairs. We stand for peace and hold that peaceful co-existence is possible between different social and political systems. As Premier Chou En-Lai declared at his press conference in New Delhi:

"'All nations of the world can peacefully co-exist, no matter whether they are big or small, strong or weak, and no matter what kind of social system each of them has. The rights of the people of each nation to national independence and self-determination must be respected. The people of each nation should have the right to choose their own state system and way of life, without interference from other nations. Revolution cannot be exported; at the same time, outside interference with the common will expressed by the people of any nation should not be permitted. If all the nations of the world put their mutual relations on the basis of these principles, intimidation and aggression by one nation against another would not happen, and peaceful co-existence of all nations of the world would be turned from a possibility into a reality.'

"Because China consistently pursues this foreign policy of peace, she has won the approval and support of all peace-loving states and peoples of the world."

Japanese Students' Appeal

The All Japan Federation of Students' Associations has just launched an Appeal for the banning of A and H bombs, from which we give two excerpts:

"In addition to the A-bombs dropped on Hiroshima and Nagasaki, the recent Bikini H-bomb experiments have, for the third time, caused Japanese people to suffer from the dreadful consequences of this terrible weapon . . .

"Again, to relieve all the world from the terror of these bombs so that peace be brought about, enabling students everywhere to pursue their studies, we appeal to the students of all countries to promote every possible movement to this end — the prohibition of atomic and hydrogen bombs and the realisation of an international control to implement this ban."

Indian peasants and trade unionists support decisions of World Council of Peace

"At a time when the world is looking towards Geneva for a peaceful solution of the problems of the Far East, the Berlin Session of the World Council of Peace has presented a policy which can unite the peoples of Asia and assure their peace and security." This was said by Mr. N. Prasada Rao, General Secretary of the All India Kisan Sabha (Peasants' Association) in a recent statement.

The Indian peasant leader said that his Association "directs all its units, peasant, community and agricultural labourers to support the decisions by holding meetings and rallies in response to the call of the Berlin session."

Support for the Berlin decisions of the World Council of Peace was also expressed by the West Bengal Committee of the All India Trade Union Congress.

The Burmese people want peace in Asia and throughout the world

Statement by President of the All-Burma Peace Committee

On June 23rd, at a Press Conference in Rangoon, Mr. Thakin Kodaw Hmaing, President of the All-Burma Committee of the World Peace Congress, made an important statement on the situation in Asia. He said:

"The peoples of Asia have not yet forgotten the dead, the poverty-stricken families and the ruined homes of the Second World War. These ruins, which have not yet been restored, are a daily reminder of the horrors of the war. Further, it was on an Asian country, Japan, that the first atomic bomb was dropped during the Second World War. That is why the peoples of Asia do not want another world war. They do not want another conflagration which would be an opportunity for using atomic and hydrogen bombs. They want peace in Asia and throughout the world . . .

"I call on the peoples of Asia, particularly the Burmese people, to make a great effort to foil the plans for the establishment of military bases, and to reach an understanding between the States of Asia with a view to regulating their relations with each other on the basis of the principles contained in the agreement between India and the People's Republic of China."

WARSAW Friendly meeting between the architects of 26 countries

An International Meeting of architects, town planners and municipal councillors has just been held in Warsaw on the initiative of an Organisation Committee Composed of architects from various countries and with its office in Paris. The two hundred participants came from the following countries — Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Bulgaria, Chile, China, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Finland, France, Great Britain, Hungary, India, Italy, the Lebanon, Norway, Poland, Rumania, the Soviet Union, Sweden, Switzerland, Syria.

Speaking on behalf of the Organisation Committee at the opening session, the French architect, André Lurçat, said:

"This gathering is not a congress but a meeting of personalities in the field of town planning and architecture, including all those who take an interest in these professions — architects, students of architecture, representatives of communities and engineers. We hope that such a composition will broaden our discussion and increase its interest, that the diversity of the participants will provoke criticism or assent and avoid a too technical discussion, placing it rather on the loftiest human plane."

Professor Jean Tschumi, President of the International Union of Architects, who was among the guests, made this statement:

"I sincerely believe in the efficacity of such meetings as this, in the usefulness of such fraternal exchanges and discussions . . .

"The mutual help to which they give rise, the moral atmosphere they create and the service they render encourage the International Union of Architects to advocate them, help them and support them."

When the meeting was not in session the participants visited Warsaw and other towns and regions of Poland.

At the end of the Meeting, which took place in an atmosphere of understanding and friendliness, the Conclusions given below were reached.

Conclusions Reached

"We architects, town planners and municipal councillors, 200 in number and belonging to 26 different nations, met in Warsaw from June 17th to 26th.

"Inspired by interest in the problems of town planning and architecture, we exchanged our ideas and experiences on a question of particular interest to us on account of its importance to the life of the people of our time, namely, the post-war town, in its three characteristic aspects — the reconstruction of towns that have been destroyed; the redevelopment of existing towns; and the construction of new towns.

"As a result of the discussions arising from a friendly exchange of views, we have arrived at the following conclusions:

"The Warsaw Meeting has fulfilled the hopes of its organisers and of those who have taken part in it. We recognise the unquestionable value of such meetings for the broadening of our professional views and of our knowledge, and for a better appreciation of our social mission and the problems it involves. It has revealed to us new prospects and undreamt of possibilities.

"The general report, the debates in the plenary sessions, the group discussions, the conversations and the examination of concrete cases have shown us the variety of forms taken by the reconstruction of destroyed towns, the redevelopment of existing towns and the construction of new ones. Though it is true that there are partial solutions which have features in common, yet every town is an individual case requiring individual solution.

"We raised the question — so important for the appearance of our towns — of the reconstruction, preservation and enhancement of historic monuments, the witnesses of a glorious past. In connection with this, we discussed national cultures, the architectural heritage of the past, its relation to and possible influence on the creation of works in our time.

"We express our gratitude to the Organising Committee and to our Polish colleagues for giving us the opportunity of meeting in such numbers.

"We congratulate the latter on their bold reconstruction of Warsaw, Gdansk and other towns so cruelly stricken by a militarism whose revival can threaten peace.

"The study of the post-war town in general, and of the reconstruction of destroyed towns in particular, shows that the essential condition for the proper exercise of our profession and of the various activities connected with it, is peace founded on active friendship between the nations.

"Yet we know that ever growing rearmament is inciting men to use for destructive ends technical, financial and scientific resources which, if used for peaceful construction, would speedily bring men a better and more secure life. We know that such behaviour leads to the search for ever more powerful weapons of mass destruction. We ask that such weapons be banned.

"As builders, organisers and administrators of the framework in which men live their lives, we architects and municipal councillors cannot accept the idea that so many works of past and present culture, the fruit of so much creative effort, and the glorious symbols of our civilisation, should be for ever wiped out.

"We have decided to make even greater efforts for the establishment and maintenance of lasting peace.

"We promise to increase, by all means and in all possible forms, the opportunities for meetings, discussion and the exchange of ideas, not only between people of our profession, but also between people of different professions who are interested in the same problem. We promise to strengthen the bonds of friendship so as to establish — as we have done in our own field — an atmosphere of mutual confidence, understanding and respect favourable to the friendly and effective solution of the problems of the relations between people and countries, whatever their political and economic systems."

Conference of architectural students in ROME

The young people of many countries, especially students, are showing in the most diverse ways their desire for closer relations and the exchange of knowledge. This explains the success of the International Conference of Architectural Students held in Rome a few weeks ago. It was organised by the architectural students of the Italian capital with the support of the International Union of Students, and was attended by 248 delegates, observers and guests from 27 countries of the East and West, representing 57 architectural schools and organisations.

There were two-and-a-half days of discussion in plenary session on the basis of the main report: "Contemporary Architecture and the National Tradition", and one day devoted to discussion in the three commissions.

The most important Recommendations were those of the Commission on Exchanges and Co-operation between Architectural Students. The Conference decided to organise a similar meeting in 1955, either in Great Britain, France or Czechoslovakia, on the theme: "The Structure of the New Town".

Among other recommendations on the exchange of delegations, documents, publications, films, and so on between schools of architecture, the Conference approved a number of proposals for bilateral exchanges, and asked the International Union of Students to help in fulfilling the agreements reached.

At the opening session, presided over by Mr. Angus Teece, a delegate from the Australasian Architectural Students' Association, the Conference was welcomed by Professor Marconi of Rome University, M. Lagneau, delegate from the International Union of Architects, and Sig. Giovanni Berlinguer, President of the International Union of Students.

One of the unanimously adopted texts explains the intention of the Conference:

"In spite of the present tension, the efforts being made to lessen it are joyfully welcomed by all. Architectural students are more than ever desirous of meeting their colleagues from every country in the world, so as to become acquainted with their work and attain mutual understanding where full agreement is possible."

Two Letters from Paul Robeson

This year the Jury for the International Peace Prizes awarded the Peace Prizes for 1953 to the famous British artist Charles Chaplin and the eminent Soviet composer Dimitri Dimitrievich Shostakovich.

Paul Robeson, who himself received the International Peace Prize in 1950 for his songs for peace, has sent to the two new prize-winners the letters given below.

For four years Paul Robeson, member of the World Council of Peace and of the Jury for the international Peace Prizes, has been unable to travel outside his country, the United States Government having withdrawn his passport.

This measure prohibits the great artist from making his country's art known throughout the world, from accepting the many invitations he receives from various countries to take part in concerts, plays, films or operas and from attending the sessions of the World Council of Peace and the Jury for the International Peace Prizes.

A "Provisional Committee to restore Paul Robeson's Passport" has been set up in New York at the following address: Suite 6, 139 West 125th Street, New York 27, NY, USA. It has launched a world campaign to defend Paul Robeson's right to sing his people's songs anywhere in the world. The Secretaries of the Committee are Howard Fast, Charles White and Maud Green.

Already, many Peace Committees and eminent personalities, among whom is Charles Chaplin, have sent messages of support to the Committee and to Paul Robeson and have protested to the Government of the United States.

To Dimitri Shostakovich

Dear Dimitri Shostakovich,

I deeply regret that the continued denial of my passport did not permit me to be present on the recent occasion when you were awarded the Peace Prize of the World Council of Peace: Though I was privileged to serve as a member of the awards committee, I would have liked so much to congratulate you in person on your winning of this new honor, so richly merited by your steadfast devotion to the most urgent cause of humanity.

But permit me now to salute you from afar, and to express in these few lines some measure of the affection and esteem I hold for you. As an artist, I am always inspired by the soaring beauty of your music; as a friend of the Soviet Union, I see in your genial art the flowering of a great people's culture; and as a partisan of peace, I am ever strengthened by the magnificent leadership which you and the other masters of socialist culture bring to our ranks.

It has been a pleasure for me to greet the Soviet chess masters who are here in New York today as guests of our foremost American players. How heartening was the warm applause of the spectators at the opening session of the tournament when the spokesmen of both teams expressed their strong desire for peace and cultural exchange between our countries! Here was a token of that for which all peacelovers yearn, a forecast of that happy time — so surely coming — when artists and audiences the world over shall be enriched by the exchange of peoples' cultures.

Yes, dear Dimitri Dmitrievich, in the words of your glorious song which I frequently bring to listeners across this land: "The breeze of peace is blowing . . ." And with that breeze is the surging tide of the colonial liberation movement — in Asia, in Africa, in Latin America, and here at home where my own oppressed people are demanding immediate equality and freedom.

So, for peace, for freedom, for culture — I clasp your hand!

Paul Robeson

To Charles Chaplin

Dear Charles Chaplin,

I want to thank you and tell you how deeply I was moved by your recent message supporting the struggle now being waged to restore my right to a passport.

As you know, this case involves much more than the injustice done to me as an individual, just as the shameful action of the State Department in your own case is part of a larger picture. The so-called cold war, which has victimized us as artists and citizens, involves the welfare and, indeed, the very lives of uncounted millions. In the fateful drama of our times artist and audience are part of the same cast.

And how happy I am to see you starring in the role of champion of peace! With all my heart I congratulate you on your winning of the Peace Prize of the World Council of Peace.

I recall that in his epic poem, "Let the Railsplitter Awake", Pablo Neruda, the great Chilean poet who was a previous winner of the same prize, noted with sorrow that in the United States "Charles Chaplin, last father of tenderness in the world, is defamed." But I also remember that fascists everywhere hated you for your anti-Nazi film, The Great Dictator. Well, Hitler and his gang are gone, but Chaplin and his art lives on! And your name will be honored — yes, here in America, too — long after McCarthy and his kind are buried in oblivion.

The New York Times was never more false than when it recently wrote "farewell" to your career. More than ever the world looks to your unequalled artistry for new gifts of the love and laughter, the tears of compassion, and the ennobling spirit of humanity with which you have blessed us through all the years.

The affirmation of life and beauty, so poignantly portrayed in your classic Limelight, united you inseparably with mankind everywhere; and it is that commom affirmation which guarantees the victory of peace and brings ever closer the day when human brotherhood shall be a passport for all.

May we meet again soon!

Paul Robeson

This being Czechoslovak Music Year, the Festival Programme includes concerts commemorating the anniversaries of three great musicians — Bedrich Smetana, Antonin Dvorak and Leos Janacek. The Festival also honours the memory of the great writers Aristophanes, Henry Fielding and Anton Chekhov: one of the exhibitions being presented is devoted to them. In addition, the Soviet Union is presenting a new film based on a short story by Chekhov.

The Fourth World Festival of Youth and Students, which was held last year in Bucharest, is living again on the screen in the colour documentary, "For Peace and Friendship".

The film describes this great meeting of the young people of all countries: its preparation in various parts of the world, the enthusiastic welcome the delegates met with in Bucharest, the atmosphere of happiness and brotherhood, meetings between delegations, and the countless artistic programmes which made of this youth meeting a true festival of world culture.

The film was made by Soviet and Rumanian film producers, with contributions from young Albanian, Austrian, British, Chinese, Czech, French, Mongolian and Swedish operators. It proves once again the fruitful results of international co-operation based on peace and friendship.

Around the World

Marshall Islands

The people of the Marshall Islands have sent a petition to the United Nations demanding the immediate ending of atomic and hydrogen bomb tests, which have seriously harmed the inhabitants of the islands.

Uruguay

In a motion of support for Guatemala, the Uruguayan House of Representatives "protests against the attack on Guatemala, expresses its solidarity with a brother country, and decides to send this declaration to all Parliaments on the American continent".

Other Latin American Parliaments, particularly those of Chile, the Argentine and Brazil, have adopted similar resolutions.

Japan

A group of well-known physicists, including Dr. Hideki Yukawa, has signed an appeal against the use of thermo-nuclear weapons. The appeal marks the beginning of a big signature campaign against the H-bomb in Japanese scientific circles.

Great Britain

More than 170 Divisional Labour Parties have already gone on record against the rearming of Germany.

A major victory on this issue was scored by the decision of the 85th Co-operative Congress (representing 11,000,000 British co-operators) on June 9th, deploring "the suggestion that Great Britain should be party in agreeing that West Germany should be rearmed", and calling upon the Co-operative Party to take action "to prevent this agreement coming into force."

The Fire Brigades Union, representing 20,000 British fire-fighters, by an overwhelming majority endorsed the sentiments expressed by their General Secretary, Mr. John Horner, when he said: "The rearming of Germany is no good for peace, no good for democracy and no good for Britain", at the union's annual conference on June 23rd.

On June 17th, the Annual Conference of the United Society of Boilermakers (90,000 members) also overwhelmingly opposed German rearmament and strongly resisted the idea of including Germany in EDC. At the same time the conference demanded the outlawing of the H-bomb.

USSR

At a ceremony in the Sverdlov Hall of the Kremlin Mr. Ilya Ehrenburg handed the Stalin International Peace Prize to Mr. Leon Kruczkowski, the Polish writer.

Brazil

In a recent speech in the Federal Senate Senator Hamilton Nogueira, one of the best known Catholic leaders in Brazil, denounced hydrogen bomb tests as a permanent threat to mankind.

Venezuela

Monsignor Pellin, the Archbishop of Caracas, Monsignor Henriquez, Father José Francisco Fernandez and other religious figures have associated themselves with the Peace Movement's campaign for the prohibition of weapons of mass destruction.

In an article published in the daily, "Ultimas Noticias", General Rafael Gabaldon, President of the Venezuelan Peace Movement, writes of events in Guatemala:

"When economic interests can demand — and there is someone to hear them — the intervention of the American continent to block an agrarian law which one of our countries put into operation, as it had a sovereign right to do, then a blow is struck at the sovereignty, not only of the country where the intervention takes place, but of all countries."

Switzerland

The Grand Council of Neuchâtel has unanimously adopted a resolution expressing the "fervent wishes of the people of Neuchâtel for "a wide relaxation of tension in the international situation" and asking for "atomic energy to be used for exclusively peaceful ends."

Germany

In a referendum held in the German Democratic Republic from June 27th to 29th, 98.7% of the people over 16 years of age took part.

Of these, 11,276,926, that is 93.2%, voted for a peace treaty and the withdrawal of the occupation troops from Germany; only 6.8% voted for EDC.

The result of this referendum is a victory for the forces of peace in the whole of Germany.

Holland

In a letter to Protestant Churches, the Bureau of "The Church and Peace" expresses its anxiety at the hydrogen bomb tests.

The danger of perfecting this weapon is so great, states "The Church and Peace", that it is not enough to demand international agreements. The time has come for a statement by the Churches against atomic war.

Poland

In several towns there have been meetings at which members of the Polish Peace Movement acknowledged the decisions of the Berlin Session of the World Council of Peace and examined the tasks they entail for the Polish Peace Movement.

Italy

In Rome, Turin, Milan, Florence, Padua, Bologna and dozens of other places there have been demonstrations in defence of Guatemala's sovereignty and of support for the Guatemalan people who are the victims of foreign aggression.

In Venice, individuals and delegations laid flowers in a pavilion of the "Biennale" in which canvases by Guatemalan painters were on show.

Iran

The Iranian newspaper "Donyaya Emruz" writes:

"The Iranian people are quite aware that entry into any military alliance would mean the loss of national independence and sovereignty . . . In these tense days, when plots are being woven for the purpose of incorporating Iran in the Ankara-Karachi military pact, we call on the Iranian people to be extremely vigilant and not to allow our country to become a toy in the hands of aggressive diplomacy."

Israel

In Israel, the collection of signatures for the "Popular Referendum to ensure Peace" is continuing. On July 2nd 109,551 signatures had already been collected. The referendum is on the following questions: opposition to the remilitarisation of West Germany, for a peaceful settlement of the issues outstanding between Israel and the Arab countries, and against Israel's entry into regional military pacts.

Birds made radioactive by Bikini explosion

It is not only fish that have been made radioactive by the Bikini H-bomb explosions. Many migratory birds passing over the region have been found to be radioactive.

Tests with Geiger counters on birds which arrived in Japan during the recent migratory period showed traces of radioactivity. The birds probably passed through radioactive clouds.

These are only survivors, for many birds were killed by the Bikini test. Thirty per cent fewer swallows than in previous years arrived in Japan with the migrating flocks this year, and a great number of migratory birds have been found dead in various parts of the country.

BULLETIN OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

INFORMATION BULLETIN PUBLISHED BY THE SECRETARIAT OF THE WORLD COUNC

N° 15

Long live Peace!

Today these familiar words ring with new meaning. For the first time in 23 years, there is not a country where hour by hour and day by day war brings its relentless train of destitution, ruin, anguish. To the deep happiness of men and women, husbands and wives, on 20 July a cease-fire was signed at Geneva to put an end to the bitter and bloody war in Indo-China.

Such a success does not come out of the air. It is born of a long sequence of hard work, of struggle. It is the result of manifold actions — actions in Indo-China and in other countries of Asia, actions in France, actions in every country in the world — to get negotiations started and to make them succeed.

Once again the pressure of opinion has built up strength enough to stop a war — and in creating and building up that pressure the World Peace Movement has played a leading part.

Despite all the obstacles, all the twisting and scheming, now it is crystal clear that the will to peace which moves the people is irresistible — strong enough to put a stop to the attempts of all who wish to argue with weapons rather than with reason. Recent shifts in viewpoint, new attitudes taken up, have shown that agreement can be reached when both sides really want it.

This cease-fire, outcome of such tremendous endeavour, is a common victory for all the forces of peace. At the same time its importance as a step on the way to a relief of world tension is seen by all.

But does the cease-fire mean peace? Not yet. Great success though it is, it has not turned aside the threat of new dangers. The Geneva agreement opens out a favourable prospect — if the agreements made are duly observed. We must keep good watch. Other dangers, too, remain: dangers that other centres of war may spring to life in Asia, in Europe or elsewhere.

So the success gained is not an end. It is a beginning full of promise. It is a great incentive to greater effort.

From the first the Peace Movement worked for a peaceful settlement of the war in Indo-China. At the same time it has worked persistently for such a solution to every other dispute which by its nature carries the risk of new conflict. In Europe, in particular, it has worked and works for a peaceful solution of the problem of Germany. It works to turn the Governments on to the path of negotiating disarmament and, as first objective, the banning of atomic weapons. In every country it works for the security of all nations with mutual respect for their sovereignty and their independence.

Agreement at Geneva has made easier the solution of every other problem. The negotiations which led to this agreement have given unchallengeable proof that the People's Republic of China must take its place in the world as a Great Power. Once more the stand made by the Peace Movement for the People's Republic of China to take its lawful place in the United Nations Organisation has been vindicated.

Great tasks remain. Today's victory shows that there is no objective which those who go resolutely forward on the road to peace cannot gain. It opens a magnificent vista of new successes. But, as Indo-China has proved to us all, these successes will not come of themselves.

They will come from unceasing action. They will come when all efforts for peace converge, to ensure that henceforth the spirit of negotiations shall prevail in every sphere over the policy of "strength", to ensure that peace may live.

What the Press is saying...

The signing of the armistice ending the war which has been going on for eight years on the territory of Viet-Nam, Pathet Lao and Khmer marks an important step on the road to the relaxation of international tension. Tremendous enthusiasm among the people greeted the agreement concluded at Geneva. This is reflected in the comments of the international press of which we give a few excerpts.

In general, these (the terms of the armistice Ed) are good terms — better, indeed, than could have been expected... We must be thankful that patience has brought peace to Indo-China, and on good terms.

What next? The agreement at Geneva is, of course, only the beginning of making peace and keeping it. The armistice in Indo-China ought to be followed, if possible, by seeking a more general settlement in Asia. This favourable opportunity should not be lost...

To shut all doors on the Chinese and ignore them, as many Americans want, would be a policy of weak timidity. By all means let us negotiate...

Under the heading "Important Victory for the Forces of Peace", the July 22nd number of Pravda writes:

The agreements signed at Geneva end a bloody war which has been going on for eight years and represent a great victory for the national liberation struggle of the peoples of Indo-China. For the latter they make possible a peaceful economic and cultural upgrowth and lay the foundation for the development of peaceful co-operation between them and France.

The agreements are also of far-reaching importance for the peoples of Asia, where another war theatre has been eliminated. They are also a great step forward in the strengthening of peace and the development of international co-operation. The attainment of these agreements is a victory for the whole camp of peace, and they fulfil the hopes of all mankind desirous of living in peace. It is for this reason that the peoples of the world are today wholeheartedly welcoming the victory won at Geneva.

The reaching of agreement on the question of Indo-China opens the way to the solution of other outstanding international issues.

END THE WAR IN VIET-NAM!
THIS WAS THE WILL OF THE PEACE FORCES

The World Peace Movement has always demanded the ending of hostilities in Indo-China. It has always advocated the settlement of major international issues by Great Power negotiation. The proposals and campaigns of the Movement to a large extent helped to create the powerful trend of opinion which decisively influenced the peaceful settlement of the war in Indo-China.

THE WORLD CONGRESS OF THE DEFENDERS OF PEACE LOUDLY PROCLAIMS THAT THE DEFENCE OF PEACE IS HENCEFORTH THE CONCERN OF ALL THE PEOPLES.

Manifesto of the World Congress of Defenders of Peace
Paris-Prague, April 20-25

The World Committee addresses itself to the elected bodies of all the countries of the world. It invites them to discuss peace proposals which express the wishes of peoples everywhere. It urges them to require of their Governments that they support these proposals, that they remain faithful to the spirit of the Charter of the United Nations and also that their national policy be inspired by them.

These proposals should include:

Immediate and direct negotiations under international auspices to bring about the ending of current wars, especially in Greece, Viet-Nam, Indonesia and Malaya...

General Resolution
Session of the Committee of the World Congress of Defenders of Peace
Rome, October 28-31

End the wars of intervention against the peoples of Indonesia, Malaya and Viet-Nam by direct and immediate negotiations under international auspices.

We call for the ending of the intervention by US armed forces on the Chinese island of Taiwan (Formosa) and the ending of hostilities against the Republic of Viet-Nam — military operations which also carry the threat of world war.

Address to the United Nations
Second World Congress of Defenders of Peace
Warsaw, November 16-22

The proposals for a peaceful settlement of the war in Korea and the other major Asian problems (Taiwan, Viet-Nam and Malaya) and for a peaceful settlement of the German and Japanese problems, as well as the attempts at conciliation by certain Asian, Arab and other peace-loving countries, contribute at one and the same time to the maintenance of peace and the free self-determination of peoples.

Resolution on the Struggle for Peace in the Colonial and Dependent Countries
First Session of the World Council of Peace
Berlin, February 21-26

Concerning the current conflicts in Southeast Asia, the World Council of Peace notes that the development of the war in Viet-Nam, involving Pathet Lao (Laos) and Khmer (Cambodia), is increasing the danger of a new world war.

The World Council of Peace calls for an immediate cease-fire in Viet-Nam and simultaneous opening of negotiations for a general settlement of the conflict — a settlement which would make obligatory the withdrawal of foreign troops.

Resolution on Southeast Asia and Viet-Nam
Second Session of the World Council of Peace
Vienna, November 1-6

Appeal of the World Council of Peace

A great hope has been born. Everybody now sees that agreement is possible. The slaughter can be ended. The Cold War can be stopped.

In this hour we solemnly call upon the peoples to demand of their Governments that they negotiate and agree.

It is for us all to support every move — from whatsoever Government it may come — to solve disputes by peaceful means. It is for us all to frustrate the efforts of those who prevent or delay agreement.

Peace is within our reach. It is for us to win it.

Fourth Session of the World Council of Peace
Budapest, June 15-20, 1953

The above quoted Appeal, adopted just before the conclusion of the armistice in Korea, gave rise to a world campaign in favour of negotiation which is reflected in the results obtained at Geneva.

1952

On Viet-Nam:

a) Immediate cessation of hostilities in the three countries of Viet-Nam, Pathet Lao and Khmer;

b) Immediate withdrawal of all foreign troops from the three countries of Viet-Nam, Pathet Lao and Khmer; the two parties to assume responsibility for avoiding any further loss of human life and further material damage during the withdrawal;

c) Complete and genuine independence for the three countries.

Congress expresses the wish that, after the withdrawal of foreign troops from the three countries, Viet-Nam, Pathet Lao and Khmer, and the restoration of their full independence, these three countries and France establish agreements in an atmosphere of peace, with a view to cultural and economic exchanges on a basis of equality and mutual interest.

Recommendations adopted by the Commission of the Congress of the Peoples for Peace entrusted with examining problems relating to the Ending of Wars now going on Congress of the Peoples for Peace
Vienna, December 12-19

1953

The war between France and Viet-Nam, which has been raging for seven years, can only be ended by direct negotiations between the belligerents.

General Resolution
Fifth Session of the World Council of Peace

The Four Power Conference in Berlin was a success for the peoples' will for peace... It was possible to reach agreement on the holding of a Conference in Geneva on Far Eastern questions, with participation of the Five Great Powers and other interested States...

For the first time, there is an opportunity for the Big Five, meeting in discussion with other interested States, to reach an agreement on general security in the Far East. Such security can come about as a result of the normalisation of relations among all the countries of Asia, their independence recognised, their security guaranteed. Korea must be reunited peacefully and must freely decide her own destiny after the withdrawal of foreign troops. An immediate cease-fire in Indo-China would make possible peace negotiations between France and the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam.

The Geneva Conference can and must constitute an important stage on the road to relaxation of international tension and disarmament.

Resolution of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace
Vienna, March 28-30

The pressure of world public opinion, which secured the armistice in Korea and the opening of negotiations on European and Asian problems, can today secure:

— a successful outcome to the Geneva Conference, that is to say, a cease-fire in Indo-China and a peaceful settlement of the Korean and Indo-Chinese conflicts...

Resolution on Security
Extraordinary Session of the World Council of Peace
Berlin, May 24-28

IN THE MIDDLE EAST

SYRIA — Appeal convening the second Congress of the Peace Movement

The second Congress of the Syrian Peace Movement took place on July 15th, 16th and 17th following a call by the National Peace Committee. The call reads as follows:

"There are signs of a relaxation of international tension on the horizon — the ending of the Korean war, the Berlin Conference and the meeting of the Big Five for the first time, in Geneva.

"At the same time the widest circles, including Government and Parliamentary circles, are going on record for peaceful co-existence between all the countries of the world in general, and the countries of East and West in particular, and the expansion of trade and cultural relations, and are demanding that the peoples should be free.

"At the present time, the Arab countries and the whole Middle East are the object of great activity and pressure on the part of those who want war, the aim being to bind us to aggressive coalitions and bilateral military and economic treaties . . .

"By co-operating with all honest patriots, the Syrian Peace Movement, in which are to be found groups with different political views and social backgrounds, has done much to alert our people to the dangers of war plans and colonisation and has helped to frustrate these plans up till now. In this way, it has made its contribution to the cause of peace throughout the world.

"Faced with this growing pressure on our country and the dangers threatening the Arab countries in general, faced with the warmongers' attempts to aggravate international tension by sabotaging any peaceful agreement in Indo-China, by doing everything in their power to force through a South-East Asia bloc and by organising armed attacks on the independence of peoples, as in Guatemala, Tunisia and Morocco;

"In order to avert the threat of war to our country, to frustrate the plans for an imperialist coalition and to support the world campaign to stop H-bomb tests and to prohibit this weapon;

"To foster trade and cultural relations between all countries, irrespective of their political and social systems;

"The Syrian Peace Movement calls for the convening of its Second Congress, certain that it will receive wide support from all honest and patriotic people — writers, students, workers, industrialists, tradesmen, artisans, peasants and landed proprietors — in a word, from all men and women in our country . . ."

EGYPT:

Manifesto on Atomic Weapons and Tests

The Egyptian National Peace Committee has issued a manifesto addressed to the Egyptian Government condemning the manufacture, testing and use of weapons of mass destruction. The manifesto says:

"To carry on experiments on H-bombs threatens to bring catastrophe upon mankind. The radioactive dust reached Japan and perhaps even New York. The tests gave rise to a wave of fear throughout the world. Governments and peoples demanded that the tests be stopped and that an agreement be concluded for outlawing atomic, thermonuclear and bacteriological weapons of mass destruction, together with a reduction of armaments.

"We want the Egyptian Government to do its duty and intervene on this subject, mankind's main concern today . . .

"The Egyptian National Peace Committee supports Mr. Nehru's appeal for the stopping of the tests and the prohibition of these weapons. It asks the Egyptian Government to associate itself with this appeal and co-operate with governments and international organisations which are trying to attain these objectives . . .

"Because of the danger, stronger and more united efforts are necessary in order to win a victory for civilisation and defeat barbarism. For this reason we hope that the Egyptian Government will make its decision known soon."

THE LEBANON:

Preparations for a National Congress of the Peace Movement

A meeting of the Lebanese National Peace Committee was held on June 28th, together with members of local Peace Committees and guests. The meeting studied the resolutions and recommendation adopted by the Berlin Session of the World Council and approved them unanimously.

They also decided to convene Peace Congresses in all parts of the Lebanon in preparation for a National Congress of the Peace Movement.

Mr. Hussein Mruye, the writer and member of the Lebanese delegation at Berlin, gave a report on the work of the session. After explaining the resolutions, he drew attention to the vital paragraphs of the most important speeches delivered at the session, and to the unanimity of views of the delegates, who had come from 56 countries and embraced different political opinions, on mankind's principal preoccupations — the prohibition of the H-bomb and collective security.

Mr. Abdallah Adra, industrialist and delegate at the Berlin Session, showed that the maintenance of peace is an essential prerequisite for building up the national industry, and that trade between all countries, on a footing of equality and mutual interest, consolidates friendly international relations and helps to ease tension.

Mr. Antoine Tabet gave a report on the International Meeting in Stockholm and pointed out that the decisions reached were in agreement with the aims of the World Peace Movement. He then proposed that a Congress of the Lebanese Peace Movement should be convened.

This proposal was supported by Mr. Abdallah Alaili, a religious scholar; Sheikh Mussa, another religious figure; Mr. Ramez Shaban, Mr. Subhi Rifai and Mr. Shafik Murtada, lawyers belonging to no party, and adopted unanimously.

Meeting for the Relaxation of International Tension Chinese support for resolutions

A report-back meeting of the Chinese delegation to the Stockholm Meeting for the Relaxation of International Tension was held in Peking on July 13th at the invitation of the Chinese Peace Committee.

The meeting was attended by over 800 people including representatives of the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference, and the Peace Liaison Committee of the Asian and Pacific Regions.

Mr. Kuo Mo-jo, who headed the Chinese delegation to the Stockholm Meeting, spoke after an opening speech was delivered by Mr. Chen Shu-tung, member of the delegation to Stockholm.

Mr. Kuo Mo-jo said that the Stockholm resolutions answered the demands of the peoples and were favourable to the progress of the Geneva Conference. The Stockholm Meeting, he added, had broadened the basis of the movement for peace throughout the world. He ended his speech by listing among the principal demands typical of the present world situation: the universal demand for agreement through negotiation, a ban on atomic and hydrogen bombs, free trade and cultural exchanges, the admission of the People's Republic of China to U.N.O.

The meeting adopted a resolution of support for the Stockholm decisions. It says that these decisions — for an early cease-fire in Indo-China and against the continuation or extension of the war there; for the early reopening of the Korean negotiations and the prevention of a renewed Korean war — accord with the interests of the people of China, India and the rest of the world and are favourable to the development of the Geneva Conference.

The holding of the Stockholm Meeting, notable for its wide range of representation, was opportune, the resolution points out. It showed that the desire for peace of people throughout the world was so strong that no national, professional, political or religious differences could prevent them from closing their ranks in the interest of peace.

The resolution states in conclusion that by their action the Chinese people will support the decisions of the Meeting for the Relaxation of International Tension.

Israel — Success of Referendum

During June 123,143 positive answers were collected for the referendum organised by the Israeli Peace Movement. We recall that the referendum deals with the following three points:

— Opposition to the revival of German militarism;

— The establishment of lasting peace between Israel and the Arab countries;

— Opposition to Israel's entry into a regional military alliance.

The signatories include 120 doctors, 40 lawyers, 50 engineers and architects, 500 teachers, and many tradesmen, craftsmen, employers, religious personalities and soldiers.

Four Rabbis of Jerusalem have taken part in the campaign for the referendum. One of them, Rabbi Shalom Aboutboul of Talpiot, has issued a manifesto to all believers asking them to take part.

Indonesia — Declarations in support of Peace

The Indonesian National Peace Committee met in Djakarta on June 20th to discuss the preservation of peace and security in Asia. It decided to express unqualified support for the resolutions of the Extraordinary Session of the World Council of Peace in Berlin and called on the Indonesian people to carry them out.

The meeting welcomed the efforts of the Soviet Union and the People's Republic of China for the establishment of peace in Asia at the Geneva Conference, and called for the greatest possible support for the Conference.

A resolution was adopted demanding the immediate prohibition of hydrogen and atomic bombs and voicing opposition to the testing of these weapons in the Pacific by the Americans.

The meeting elected Professor Purbodiningrat as Chairman of the Indonesian National Peace Committee.

Statement by the Prime Minister

The Indonesian Prime Minister, Mr. Ali Sastroamidjojo, declared on July 7th that "in the last few weeks, the balance of power in the world seems to be shifting to new positions".

He mentioned Premier Chou En-lai's visit to India and Burma, which took place while Churchill and Eisenhower were meeting in Washington, and the Chinese trade delegations to London and Djakarta.

"It is to be hoped that these shifts will develop to the advantage not only of Indonesia, but of Asia and the world as well", the Prime Minister said.

"Our desire for peace", he continued, "will be nearer satisfaction if these shifts are materialised on the basis of Asia's interests. These interests could best be served by abandoning the out-dated policy of subjugating Asia's wishes to those of other continents.

"I think the time has come for the countries to co-exist as independent nations and to begin, in harmonious unison, to set about the task of building a peaceful world where each nation can prosper and live in freedom.

"The Republic of Indonesia is determined to continue its efforts to reach this goal..."

"Indonesia pins great hopes on the Geneva Conference", concluded the Prime Minister. "This Conference directly concerns Indonesia as it is discussing the vital problems of Asia. We therefore want the Geneva Conference to be as successful as possible."

Peace in Indo-China is necessary for the whole world

Statement by Minister of Foreign Affairs

Dr. Sunarjo, Indonesian Minister for Foreign Affairs, said in an interview that a cease-fire should be carried out in Indo-China, followed immediately by a peaceful political settlement of the Indo-China question by the Indo-Chinese peoples themselves.

He added that he greatly hoped the Geneva Conference would bring about peace in Indo-China; it was badly needed both in South-East Asia and in the world at large.

Chairman of Foreign Affairs Committee opposes foreign bases

Indonesia cannot provide military bases for foreign countries, declared Otto Rondonuwu, Chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the Indonesian Parliament, in an interview with the press on June 26th.

He pointed out that the occupation of West Irian by the Netherlands in relation to the proposed SEATO and political manoeuvres in South-East Asia have made the Indonesian people suspicious.

Rallies and Meetings in Burma

A peace rally of over 1,000 people in the Municipal Hall of Rangoon on July 4 adopted resolutions supporting the Geneva Conference and the joint statements issued by the Chinese and Indian and Chinese and Burmese Prime Ministers.

The rally, held under the auspices of the Rangoon branch of the Burma Peace Committee, opposed the organisation of the so-called "Southeast Asian Defence Bloc", called for a ban on atomic weapons and condemned U.S. aggression in Guatemala.

The rally was presided over by U Shwe Pyu, Chairman of the Rangoon Peace Committee. He pointed out that the world forces of peace were more powerful than a year or two ago, but peace-loving people must not relax their vigilance. They must redouble their efforts in the defence of world peace, he said. Referring to the joint statements, U Shwe Pyu declared: "These statements are greatly helpful to world peace and are welcomed by all the Burmese people."

Thakin Kodaw Hmaing, Chairman of the Burma Peace Committee, and other prominent people also spoke at the rally.

Resolutions supporting the joint statements of the Chinese Premier and the Indian and Burmese Prime Ministers were adopted on July 4 at a meeting of the Shwebo District Committee of the Burma Peace Committee. A peace meeting held by the Bhamo District Committee of the Burma Peace Committee on July 3 passed resolutions opposing U.S. intrigues to foment a new war in Asia. Over 600 representatives from 27 villages attended the meeting.

The Latin American Conference of Members of Parliament and Others

(Santiago de Chile, July 8—12)

A Conference of Members of Parliament and well-known individuals of Latin America was held in Santiago de Chile from July 8th to 12th. It was convened by an important group of Chilean MPs for the purpose of studying both the situation in Guatemala and the general economic and political problems involved in the struggle against interference by the U.S.A. in the internal affairs of the countries of Latin America.

Well-known people from Argentine, Brazil, Chile, Colombia, Costa Rica, Nicaragua, Paraguay, Peru, Uruguay, Venezuela and other countries took part in the conference.

Professor Marcos Armando Hardy of Argentina, whose recent book, Bilateral Military Aid Pacts, has roused great interest in legal circles, made the point that foreign interests are placing obstacles in the way of the development of national economies. He illustrated this by describing the situation in his own country, where the national industries are dying.

Similarly, the attacks on national cultures were condemned by the participants in the Conference, especially Senator Angel Cusano from Uruguay, who attacked the foreign hold on the press and radio.

The Conference was strongly in favour of the protection of each country's natural wealth and the right to free trade with all countries, and condemned colonialism in all its forms.

It declared its unanimous opposition to the decisions of the Tenth Inter-American Conference in Caracas, which are a screen for interference by the United States in the internal affairs of a number of Latin American States, and strongly affirmed the right of each people to the political system of its choice and its sovereign right to recover its national wealth, to nationalise and exploit it for its own benefit.

The Conference strongly condemned North American intervention in Guatemala and refused to recognise the military junta which has been set up there.

This important meeting ended with a great popular demonstration in Santiago de Chile.

Statement by Foreign Minister of Nepal

Speaking on June 19th at a meeting at Chabhil, about three miles from Katmandu, the capital of Nepal, the Nepalese Foreign Minister, Mr. D.R. Regmi, said that the interests of both Nepal and India demand that they should not be involved in the maelstrom of war. He expressed his opposition to any policy aimed at making South-East Asia into a war base.

Growing Unity in Action for Peace in Great Br

Response to Campaign for World Security

"The most urgent duty facing every patriotic man and woman today is to unite against German rearmament. The threat of the Hydrogen bomb and all that it involves makes this all the more necessary. No bans or proscriptions can be allowed to stand in the way." With these words Mr. William Wainwright, secretary of the British Peace Committee, member of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace, opened a big open-air meeting in Manchester on 11 July. Preceded by a march through the streets this rally was one of the numerous current events in the British Peace Committee's "World Security Campaign".

Underlining the strength of the resistance of the British people to the rearming of Germany, Mr. Wainwright recalled the following facts:

— in the last three months 16 national trade unions with a total membership of over 2,500,000 have opposed German rearmament;

— in June the Congress of the Co-operative Union, representing 11 million members, rejected German rearmament;

— the majority of the local branches of the Labour Party are opposed to E.D.C.;

— there is a section of the Conservative Party which is opposed to E.D.C.

"But in spite of this", Mr. Wainwright added, "very great efforts to force through the remilitarisation of West Germany and rearm the Nazis are being made. And when rearmed they will have atomic guns and atomic air bases. Think of Coventry and think of what a revived German army armed with the H-bomb means.

"It can be stopped. What is needed is not only protest but common action between all, whatever their political party or religious belief."

Forms of Common Action

Other events in the campaign for World Security show that the Peace Movement's call for common action is meeting with a growing response.

...In Swansea (West Wales) a poster parade organised by the Peace Council was headed by the Liberal M.P., Sir Percy Morris, who afterwards spoke at a meeting together with Mrs. Llewellyn of the West Wales Peace Committee.

...In Loughton, Essex, the Peace Committee took a deputation to the local town council. The deputation was supported by the Labour group on the Council and the appeal of the Peace Committee was adopted by a majority of the town council, including five conservative councillors.

...In a big rally at Battersea Town Hall, South London, the main speakers were Mr. D. N. Pritt, Q.C., President of the British Peace Committee, and a leading Labour Party Councillor.

Developments of greater unity are taking place particularly in relation to the campaign against the Hydrogen bomb. In London alone, during June, united committees to campaign against the Hydrogen bomb in association with local peace committees have been set up in nine boroughs. In Bristol the Peace Movement is organising a city-wide campaign against the H-bomb. The Bristol Borough Labour Party has set up a special sub-committee for the purpose. The City Engineer gave special permission for the use of bomb sites and open spaces to be used for collecting-tables and publicity.

In Birmingham, a programme of poster parades and signature collections leading up to a big meeting in Aston Park addressed by Mr. D. N. Pritt on 17 July, has been supported by leading members of the Labour party.

On 11 July the annual meeting of the Surrey Peace Council was addressed by Alderman H. B. W. Cresswell, former Lord Mayor of Coventry.

H-Bomb Coffin

Thousands of shoppers in the crowded streets of Camden Town, working class district of North London, on Saturday afternoon 10 July, saw a cortege pass carrying a black-draped coffin beneath a banner with the words "BETTER AN ACTIVE LIFE THAN A RADIOACTIVE DEATH". Headed by a band, and with many banners and posters calling for the banning of the H-bomb and against German rearmament, the procession was organised by St. Pancras Peace Council, supported by the Labour parties of St. Pancras and Holborn.

Further demonstrations and poster parades of this sort are taking place in London on 17 and 24 July and 7 August.

The British Peace Committee has appealed to all organisations without exception to join in observing 7—8 August as 'Hiroshima Weekend', the anniversary of the bombing of Hiroshima.

Consistent Activity of the Italian Peace Movement

Since the beginning of the year there has been an important development in the work and organisation of the Italian Peace Movement, the reason for which is that the whole Movement has been spurred into action by concrete objectives.

From explanation . . .

The campaign against the EDC treaty was given a new lease of life, in an organised way, at the end of 1953. The first thing was to make the treaty known to the people, and a campaign of explanation was begun consisting of many hundreds of meetings and conferences at all levels. The text of the treaty, either with or without commentary, was distributed on a wide scale.

This phase of explanations resulted in the discussions which the defenders of peace were seeking. The various movements and political parties were publicly invited to take part in public debates, and in this way it was possible to interest new sections of the people in EDC and to communicate the arguments of the Peace Movement to people who had never heard them.

On the other hand, Italy is this year celebrating the 10th anniversary of the national liberation struggle, and throughout the country demonstrations have been held at which members of the Peace Movement raised the question of German rearmament and EDC. Other organisations — former resistance fighters, ex-service men, the women and the young people, etc. — took part in these demonstrations, giving their own reasons for opposing German rearmament.

Thus the campaign against EDC took on a mass character. Deputations were sent to the authorities and to the MPs; petitions were distributed and were soon filled with signatures; motions and resolutions gave expression to the people's wishes. This activity went on even in the homes, from family to family. In this way the campaign mobilised the whole people.

From the H-bomb . . .

It was at that moment that public opinion was put on its guard by the Bikini hydrogen bomb tests. The National Council of the Peace Movement immediately made its views known and more especially spoke to the Catholic masses, calling on all who want peace to unite. Many deputations representing all sections of the people and all political viewpoints asked the Church leaders to condemn atomic and thermonuclear weapons. And so the campaign for peace grew in scope, especially after the Pope's Easter Message. Many municipal and provincial councils went on record against the A and H bombs and more and more petitions went round every day, gathering an ever increasing number of signatures. This growing activity of the Italian people was reflected in the declaration of the Chamber of Deputies demanding the prohibition of weapons of mass destruction.

. . . to the dangers of a divided Europe

Within the broader framework of the fight for peace the campaign against EDC was conducted with renewed vigour.

The dangers of a Europe divided into two blocs became more obvious — the war implicit in them could be an atomic war.

After going on record against weapons of mass destruction, Municipal and Provincial Councils adopted motions condemning EDC.

The campaign against EDC and that against atomic weapons became indissolubly joined together in such actions as the "Peace Days" in Turin, the referendum in Empoli (Florence), the ballot in Venice, and so on.

The National Council of the Peace Movement made a clear stand against the aggressive attack on Guatemala, and demonstrations of solidarity were immediately held in many places. This new campaign also helped to strengthen the struggle against EDC, for it showed where the real forces of aggression lie and the danger of aggression contained in EDC.

The reasons for this development of the Italian Peace Movement and its successes in recent months are the consistent setting of clear political objectives, the correct linking up of the different problems and a constant search for further ways of promoting common action among wider circles thereby enriching the work of the Movement.

FOR THE DEVELOPMENT OF RELATIONS WITH THE PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

A number of people from political, economic and cultural circles met in the Study Centre for Relations with China in Rome on July 8th, to examine the measures to be taken for the development of relations with the People's Republic of China.

Those present included: Dr. Giuseppe Alberti, Senator; Professor Antonio Banfi, Senator and Professor at Milan University; Senator Alberto Bergamini; Professor Piero Calamandrei, Deputy and Professor at Florence University; Professor Canaletti-Gaudenti, Senator, former President of the Institute of Statistics, Councillor of State; Professor G.M. De Francesco, Deputy and Rector of Milan University; Sig. Raffaele Guariglia, Senator and former Minister for Foreign Affairs; Sig. Enrico Molè, Vice-President of the Senate; Professor Ferrucio Parri, Deputy, former President of the Council of Ministers; Professor Raffaele Pettazzoni, Professor at Rome University; Professor Ugo Spirito, Professor at Rome University; Sig. Umberto Terracini, Senator and former President of the Constituent Assembly.

Many persons also sent messages of support to the Assembly.

Switzerland — a Proposal for Disarmament

M. Samuel Chevallier, a Swiss journalist, launched a popular appeal for disarmament in his paper, "Le Bon Jour".

"Bearing in mind the need for positive action in favour of peace and a reduction of armaments, and Switzerland's moral obligations as a neutral country", the initiators and signatories of this document demand:

1) A 50% reduction of the normal military budget for 1955 (or 1956).

2) The elimination of any extraordinary expenditure for this same year.

3) Half on the economies thus realised to be used in Switzerland for the benefit of the children and for the construction of houses to be let at moderate rents, and the other half for reconstruction in neighbouring countries devastated by the war.

Lastly, they express the wish that this year of respite should be given over to a new examination of the problem of national defence with a view to reducing expenditure in this field.

This proposal roused a violent polemic in Switzerland but was widely supported among the mass of the population and by many organisations which sincerely desire peace and a relaxation of international tension. The document was issued in the form of a petition which has, to date, won 76,222 signatures. According to Swiss law, the Federal Council must consider issueing as a referendum of the whole electorate any petition which receives 50,000 signatures. If the petition then wins a majority of the votes it can become law.

This proposal, though its form somewhat limits its effect, certainly reflects the Swiss people's opposition to excessive military expenditure. The most diverse circles seized the opportunity to show their profound desire for peace.

It is clear therefore that this Swiss journalist's initiative has become a positive action helping to rally the Swiss people in favour of peace.

BELGIAN YOUTH FESTIVAL FOR PEACE AND FRIENDSHIP

The Belgian popular Youth Organisation recently organised a Belgian Youth Festival with the slogan: "For Peace and Friendship." Many young Socialists and Catholics took part in it.

The Festival ended with a mass demonstration at which representatives of the World Federation of Democratic Youth and the youth organisations of France, West Germany, Holland and Italy were among the speakers.

Iceland — signature campaign for the withdrawal of foreign troops and against atomic weapons

The Iceland Peace Committee is organising a signature campaign throughout the country for the withdrawal of foreign troops and the prohibition of atomic weapons.

As a result of the policy of war preparations, the economic situation in Iceland has been getting worse since 1946 and the people are suffering its harsh consequences.

The atomic bomb threat is particularly felt in Iceland because of this little country's strategic importance in the event of a world war.

More than once the people of Iceland have clearly shown their will to regain full independence and to replace the policy of strength by negotiation. This new signature campaign will be powerfully supported by the most diverse sections of the people and will be another step forward in the organisation of a great movement of national unity to defend peace.

Baltic Peace Cruise

The folder whose cover we reproduce was published by the Swedish Peace Committee to popularise the great peace cruise in the Baltic from August 26th to September 10th, in which more than 800 Swedes, Danes, Norwegians and Finns will take part. The itinerary is as follows: Stockholm, Copenhagen, Warnemünde, Rostock, Gdynia, Gdansk, Helsinki, Stockholm.

The tourists will sail in the Polish ship, the Batory. The travellers will be welcomed by the Peace Committees at the various ports of call and they will have plenty of time to visit the cities. The cruise is open to all friends of peace and it will reinforce peaceful, friendly relations between the peoples of the Baltic.

Austria — Campaign against War Propaganda

A strong fight against the propaganda of war and annexation conducted by the so-called soldiers' associations which are organised and directed by the revenge-seeking circles of West Germany, is being led by the Austrian Peace Movement.

In Upper Austria the Regional Peace Council mobilised public opinion against one of these "Ex-service-men's Meetings" which was to have been held in Gmunden on June 12th. Workers from many factories and deputations of women went to the Mayor of Gmunden and asked him to ban the meeting. As a result of the unanimous determination of the population only 23 people turned up for the meeting.

Women in Salzburg demonstrated their opposition to war propaganda and soldiers' meetings by a silent march through the town. One of their posters said: "No more meetings of soldiers, no more militarism — we've had enough!"

An Austrian Peace Council poster bearing the legend: "From soldiers' meetings to a mass grave!", was placed on the ruins of the Burgtheater in Vienna and created a great sensation.

On June 27th in Amstetten there was a demonstration of former resistance fighters and victims of fascism against soldiers' meetings and annexationist propaganda.

Poster placed on the ruins of the Burgtheater in Vienna by the Austrian Peace Council

"This demonstration", said Dr. Wilhelm Steiner, President of the Federal Association of Resistance Fighters and Victims of Fascism, "is in memory of the time when German militarism cast our country into the deepest ignominy and immeasurable national disaster... We should have no objection to soldiers' meetings if they were led by war invalids, the blind, the limbless, the widows and the orphans, and if they had slogans such as "We soldiers do not want war: we want a peaceful Austria!" instead of "Honour means loyalty!"

"The little country of Luxembourg feels especially threatened by German rearmament."

The National Committee of the Luxembourg Peace Movement adopted three resolutions at its session of June 29th.

The first is on security and the relaxation of international tension and runs:

"The insolent aggression by avowed mercenaries of imperialism against the little country of Guatemala has shown to millions of people throughout the world the true face of those who want war.

"The little country of Luxembourg feels especially threatened by the rearmament of its neighbour, West Germany, which has been organised by forces that are well known; by the dangers of atomic weapons; and by the incorporation of Luxembourg in the so-called European army which is really a German army."

The second resolution calls for the prohibition of weapons of mass destruction.

The third calls on the people of Luxembourg to defend the Constitution of the Grand Duchy which it is intended to revise so as to permit EDC to come into force. Indeed, the Council of State has irrefutably established that EDC violates 17 provisions of the Constitution. The ratification of the treaty by Parliament is contrary to the will of the people of Luxembourg. Such is the opinion expressed by seven big organisations of different kinds and several groups of intellectuals, peasants and middle class people.

The Greek People want Peace

On the island of Syros on May 30th, more than 3,000 Catholic inhabitants of the island with the Bishop and the clergy at their head left the town and the villages in a long Peace March. As they marched they chanted prayers for world peace. The different groups met at the Faneromeni convent where prayers were offered up for the attainment of world peace and the prohibition of weapons of mass destruction.

The demonstration had wide repercussions in this beautiful island of the Cyclades which suffered terribly from the war and is struggling in deep crisis under the weight of the preparations for another.

The municipal and communal councils of the picturesque suburbs of Athens are widely mobilising public opinion against the destruction being wrought through the expropriation of land for the enlarging of airfields and the setting up of military works and arms factories. On June 5th a big meeting was held in the Town Hall of Glyfada, at which the Mayor, Mr. Metaxas, said:

"The Greek countryside must be protected from the destruction resulting from increased war preparations. The beautiful suburbs of Athens are in the greatest danger, and our properties are in danger of complete destruction. The only way out for us is to struggle to avert the threat hanging over our homes and our whole country."

Action and Struggle for Peace in Japan

Following on the big meetings which it organised in preparation for the Berlin Session of the World Council of Peace and for the International Meeting in Stockholm, the Japanese Peace Movement has made great progress and is developing on a broader foundation. Through the holding of 19 provincial conferences in the Prefectures of Fukuoka, Ishikawa, Ibaragi, Osaka, Gifu, Shiga, Nagano, Yamaguchi, Mie, Kanagawa, Migagi, Shizuoka, Aichi, Hyogo and Yamanachi, the Movement has infused more strength and clarity into its various campaigns, especially the current campaign for the prohibition of weapons of mass destruction. This is shown in the resolution adopted at the National Meeting held in Tokyo on June 8th, 9th and 10th.

The resolution demands:

— The early banning of the use and manufacture of nuclear weapons and of experiments with them;

— Collective security in Asia;

— The peaceful settlement of international conflicts and negotiation among all the interested countries;

— Non-interference in the internal affairs of Asian countries; the elimination of foreign military bases and the withdrawal of foreign troops from Asia.

50,000 take part in a peace meeting

The aims which the Japanese Peace Movement has set itself meet the aspirations and wishes of the Japanese; they have therefore enabled the Movement to bring together the most diverse circles.

The speakers at the great public meeting held in front of the Shinbachi Station in Tokyo on June 25th, which was attended by 50,000 people, represented all political groupings. They included the Ceylonese Buddhists Nianubimara, Birako and Shwara; Mr. Hozeni, member of the Federation for the Defence of the Peace Constitution; Mr. Hoachi, of the Left Wing Socialist Party; Mrs. Syako Ichii, of the Federation of Women's Organisations; Mrs. Tamae Fukagawa, of the Progressive Party; Dr. Sues Akimoto, member of the Organisation of Japanese Doctors; Mr. Takahi Yoshida of the General Society of Japanese Fishing Companies; Mr. Masao Iwana, of the Communist Party; and Professor Oyama, President of the Japanese Peace Committee.

Success of signature campaign

The Japanese people, who were the first in the world to undergo atomic bombing at Hiroshima and Nagasaki and who are now suffering from the results of the H-bomb tests, are giving an unprecedented welcome to the campaigns of the Japanese Peace Movement.

The forms of action most widely used are discussions, meetings, rallies and frequent signature collections. During June, which was a "month of struggle against thermonuclear weapons", signatures were collected not only by the Peace Movement but by various other organisations also. By June 26th, the number of signatures thus collected against weapons of mass destruction rose to 1,427,105, including 527,000 from Tokyo, 341,696 from Osaka, 115,868 from the Prefecture of Hiogo and 89,500 from Hiroshima.

Statement by 50 Scientists

The struggle for the prohibition of thermonuclear weapons is growing in Japanese scientific circles; scientists of different beliefs and points of view have on several occasions unanimously condemned both experiments with and the use of atomic weapons.

Recently, 50 scientists, research workers and professors of Kyoto University, including Professor Yukawa, the Nobel Prize winner, issued a statement against weapons of mass destruction. They say: "We scientists declare that we do not want to do research on atomic energy for it to be used for the manufacture of weapons. We demand the immediate stopping of research on nuclear weapons and the testing of them..."

Prefects and Mayors make their views known . . .

On June 11th, the governors of the Prefectures of Kyushu and Yamaguchi, together with the Prefect of Honshu, adopted a resolution opposing the testing and use of the H-bomb and decided to submit it to the National Conference of Governors.

A similar resolution was adopted at the end of May by the Mayors of seven Prefectures in the North Eastern region of Honshu also for submission to the National Conference of Governors.

On July 8th, the Prefectoral Assembly of Akita adopted a resolution demanding the prohibition of the production and use of atomic weapons.

. . . and 500,000 primary school teachers open a campaign

The Japanese Union of Primary School Teachers — membership 500,000 — is preparing to hold a national signature campaign against the atomic and hydrogen bombs. The decision was taken at a meeting of the Union's Central Committee on July 8th.

After the poisoning of fishermen, fish and birds by radioactivity, spokesmen of the Institute of Agricultural Research in Tokyo stated that they had found that cereals in the neighbourhood of Tokyo had been similarly contaminated. They demanded that this year's rice and wheat crops should be thoroughly examined before being passed on to the consumer.

These facts explain why it is that the Japanese Peace Movement accords such importance to these continuous campaigns for the banning of thermonuclear weapons. Indeed, their minds overwhelmed, the Japanese people are demanding and approving every action aimed at abolishing the hydrogen bomb — the cause of mankind's fear.

The Japanese Peace Committee has decided to hold a solemn ceremony of commemoration of the anniversary of August 6th, the day on which the atomic bomb was dropped on Hiroshima. In this way the people of Japan will have yet another opportunity to express their will for the establishment of world peace — a will which has so often been expressed already.

This aim opens new prospects before the Japanese Peace Movement in its consistent campaigns for the prohibition of weapons of mass destruction and for national independence.

The Japanese Fishermen will be in Hospital for twenty Years

Tokyo Radio has broadcast the report of the group of Japanese doctors who are treating the Japanese fishermen affected by radioactive ashes as a result of the American hydrogen bomb tests in the Pacific. The doctors say that several of the fishermen will have to stay in hospital for anything up to twenty years.

Even at the end of this period those of the fishermen whose liver, kidneys and bone structure have been seriously affected will never completely recover and will have to undergo continuous treatment.

The Fifth Congress of the Association for the Commemoration of the Japanese students who fell in the war opened in Tokyo on July 31st.

Students from the Universities and higher schools and representatives of all Japanese young people were present at this great assembly.

This year the Association dealt mainly with the question of the prohibition of the H-bomb and security in Asia.

A Letter from the Japanese Meteorological Society

At its 1954 Annual General Meeting the Meteorological Society of Japan decided to issue a message to the world demanding that the use of weapons of mass destruction should be banned. The message runs as follows:

"At the present time, we are examining the following two circumstances from the point of view of meteorological science and the work of the Meteorological Service with which we are in contact:

1) The fact that the enormous quantity of radioactive ashes thrown into the stratosphere by the explosion of the hydrogen bomb spreads over the whole world through the action of general atmospheric circulation; and

2) The fact that this large-scale poisoning of the atmosphere continues for a long time and can affect the amount of sunshine and other meteorological phenomena. It can make the summer colder and bring about natural catastrophes which cannot be foreseen..."

The Annual General Meeting then asks the peoples and Governments to support the following two proposals:

"1) To struggle for the immediate ending of the testing, production and use of weapons of mass destruction including atomic weapons, which would, in our view, cause enormous harm to mankind, even from the purely meteorological point of view, and the establishment of international control over the production and use of atomic energy for peaceful purposes.

2) To publish all the results of enquiry and research into the poisoning of the atmosphere and other meteorological phenomena which may yet result from the hydrogen bomb tests."

For genuine Cultural Co-operation among all Countries

The cultural isolation from which many countries have suffered for a number of years under the pernicious influence of the so-called cold war is beginning to break down. We have had occasion in these pages to cite a number of promising examples: the reception Moscow gave to the Comedie Francaise; the performances given in Paris by the Berlin Opera; the chess matches played by Soviet chess players in North and South America; the international congresses and meetings of physicists, microbiologists, astronomers, architects and technicians from East and West and the cordial atmosphere in which they were held; the reciprocal visits of dancers, choirs, folklore ensembles and musicians to the Soviet Union, India, China, Canada, France, Great Britain, the Scandinavian countries and Argentine; the growing number of film festivals; the sports meetings in which the nations strive to win victory solely through the skill, ability and wise training of their athletes . . .

These attempts to open or to resume relations, to break the ice of mutual incomprehension, have already had considerable results. The favourable reaction of public opinion, the declarations of famous intellectuals and the comments of the press in general are symptomatic. All without exception have congratulated themselves on this resumption of cultural relations.

This being so, how to explain the fact that these exchanges are still so limited and inadequate? Why are they not developing rapidly in response to the unanimous desire of the intellectuals and the peoples both? In every country, people have shown that they are interested in getting to know the finest artistic, technical and scientific productions from abroad and in spreading their own. Why is this noble and legitimate aspiration not given free play?

It is obvious that there are still obstacles in the way of such international cultural co-operation. Let us briefly examine them. Today it is quite certain that no one dares openly oppose these exchanges for the simple reason that such an attitude finds no valid or acceptable argument to justify it. In fact, however, various restrictions remain, such as the refusal to grant the necessary visas and passports in certain cases. It must also be said that in the circles interested in resuming cultural contacts there exists a certain timidity — the unfortunate legacy of the most dangerous period of international tension.

It has been noted that these difficulties are greatly reduced or even overcome when those who desire this advantageous re-establishment of good relations resolutely take the initiative and bend all their efforts to organising and developing all kinds of exchanges. In this way broad international meetings have been successfully held and reciprocal visits of delegations of artists, students and scientists arranged. Similarly in other cases, reluctant governments have been won round to satisfy the popular demand and grant the necessary facilities for the practical realisation of this great common desire.

What is needed now is that contacts which are still occasional and sporadic should speedily grow in number until there is a broad flow of rich and reciprocal communication among the peoples.

In this way international coexistence will be greatly helped forward, enabling the growth of understanding and friendship — these indispensable prerequisites for the establishment of a solid and lasting peace.

Men of culture and friends of peace in every country must be aware of this and do all they can to attain this objective. They can be sure that they will have the warm approval and support of public opinion. They can also win the collaboration of many intellectuals including those who have different views as to the best solution of international disputes, but yet agree on the need for establishing close cultural relations among all countries without any arbitrary exceptions or distinctions.

Exchanges between the different cultures will enrich the common heritage, open nobler prospects to the creative artists of every country and unite the peoples by harmonious and indestructible bonds.

SUPPORT FOR PAUL ROBESON

The campaign of the Provisional Committee to restore Paul Robeson's passport is rousing a great movement of support throughout the world.

The All-India Peace Council has issued an appeal to leading figures in the world of literature and art and to cultural organisations. The appeal has met with wide support and a number of very well-known figures of Indian culture — professors, artists, writers, editors, MPs etc. — have signed it. Almost all the important newspapers have given space to this campaign, and many letters of protest from intellectuals and cultural organisations have been sent to the American Embassy in Delhi. The All India Peace Council intends to strengthen the campaign by holding a public meeting in Delhi.

The Caracas Peace Committee in Venezuela has sent a message of support to the Provisional Committee and to Paul Robeson.

The British Peace Committee has called upon local Peace Committees and sympathisers to show their support for Paul Robeson by sending messages or in any other way.

"Charles Chaplin Peace Fund" established in Vienna

With the spontaneous generosity to be found in all his films, Charles Chaplin has decided to divide the five million francs of the International Peace Prize for 1953, which he has just received, among the cities of Geneva, London and Vienna.

At a ceremony in Vienna to mark this occasion, Professor Brandweiner, Chairman of the Austrian Peace Council, announced that this gift had been used to set up a "Charles Chaplin Peace Fund" to encourage cultural activity in favour of peace through the award of various prizes.

A number of competitions have been organised. One is for the best monument to the famous Austrian friend of peace, Berta von Suttner, author of the novel, "Down with Weapons" which had a big sale in its time. There will be other competitions in the field of music — seven prizes for the best songs of peace; literature —short stories, radio plays, poems; and photography, on the theme country, work and peace.

There will also be awards for sportsmen or sports directors who in their work try to further the establishment or development of friendly relations among the peoples.

There will be a great competition of equal importance open to all the inhabitants of Vienna. They will have to answer the question: "What must we do for the maintenance of peace?" There will be prizes for the 13 best replies.

International Congresses

An important International Botanical Congress, attended by 3000 botanists from 75 countries, has been held in Paris. There were scientists from Bulgaria, Brazil, Czechoslovakia, France, the German Democratic Republic, Great Britain, Hungary, Italy, Japan, Poland, Sweden, Switzerland, the Soviet Union and others. The Congress was divided into 28 sections working simultaneously; they dealt with botany in all its aspects, especially the "social life of plants", the establishment of botanical cartography and vegetable palaeontology.

Seventy physicists from twenty countries took part in the Eighth General Assembly of the "International Union of Pure and Applied Physics" in London. Among the aims of the organisation is the encouragement of international co-operation in the various branches of physics. The Assembly showed great interest in the exchange of scientific publications between the Soviet Union — which is not a member — and other countries. Recently, through the Union, steps were taken to publish an annual specialist review which would also appear in Russian and the other Slav languages. The Physics Society of Great Britain has also concluded an agreement for the resumption of a regular exchange of publications with the Soviet Union, and the possibility of translating into English all or part of the contents of the Soviet publications is under examination.

Chekhov Anniversary celebrated throughout the World

The great Russian author and dramatist, Anton Chekhov, who died on July 15th, 1904, is today admired and celebrated throughout the world. In many countries this date has been chosen so as to give the commemoration of his anniversary its full value and to pay homage to the human and artistic qualities of Chekhov and his work.

U.S.S.R.

On July 14th a Chekhov museum was inaugurated in a Moscow house in which the writer lived for many years. The house in Melikhovo — a village near Moscow — in which Chekhov worked for a long time has been restored and transformed into a museum in which new documents on Chekhov will be shown.

On July 15th, representatives of cultural, political and diplomatic circles gathered at the writer's grave in the cemetery of Novo Dievichny. In the evening a memorial ceremony was held in the Hall of Columns in the Trade Union House. It was attended by foreign guests who had been invited by the Soviet writers and by the Peace Committee. After the opening speech by Konstantin Fedin, Vladimir Yermilov gave an address on Chekhov's work. He stressed its satirical and lyrical qualities and pointed out that Chekhov gave new life to the humourous short story. Then there were speeches by Mme Isabelle Blume, Stalin International Peace Prize winner; Professor Hirano, General Secretary of the Japanese Peace Committee; and the writers Pa Chin of China, Ludmil Stoyanov of Bulgaria and Willi Bredel of Germany. The evening ended with excerpts from Chekhov's plays.

CHINA

A "Chekhov Fortnight" began in Peking on July 15th with a great commemorative meeting in the Youth Palace. The meeting was attended by more than 900 people including many prominent writers and artists, foreign guests, members of the diplomatic corps and so on.

Opening the meeting Mao Dun, Chairman of the Chinese Union of Writers, showed how Chekhov's work, which has long been known and loved by the Chinese people and Chinese authors, voiced his sympathy for the "little people". Tien Han, Chairman of the Chinese Union of Dramatists, stressed Chekhov's optimism, his humour and simple joy. A performance of Chekhov's one-act play, "The Proposal", was presented by the Chinese Youth Art Theatre and two of his short stories were read.

The Peking Library has inaugurated an exhibition of pictures illustrating Chekhov's life, stage presentations of his plays in the Soviet Union and different editions of his works.

The two-week commemoration is also being marked by the showing of films based on some of the writer's short stories and a film biography, and many performances of his plays. Special radio programmes are carried on a national hookup. Prominent writers and dramatists are taking part in discussions and lectures on Chekhov's work. A collection of photographs and portraits of Chekhov and a special volume of his one-act plays and articles on him will be published.

All these activities are jointly sponsored by the Chinese Peace Committee, the Chinese People's Association for Cultural Relations with Foreign Countries, the Sino-Soviet Friendship Association, the Chinese Federation of Literary and Art Circles, the Chinese Union of Writers and the Chinese Union of Dramatists.

POLAND

A memorial evening of homage to Chekhov has taken place in the National Theatre in Warsaw; it was attended by many people from the cultural, political and diplomatic fields. The Soviet Peace Committee was represented by the poet, Maxim Tank, and the Chekhov specialist, Professor Ivan Anissimov. The meeting was presided over by Jaroslaw Iwaskiewicz, Chairman of the Polish Peace Committee, who extolled the profound humanity of Chekhov's work and the bonds of friendship between the peoples that it creates. Professor Zygmunt Mlynarski, Director of the Polish-Soviet Institute, and Professor Anissimov also dealt with various aspects of the creative work of the great Russian realist. To end the evening the actors of the National Theatre performed excerpts from several of Chekhov's satirical plays.

ITALY

The Italian radio has devoted to Chekhov 16 broadcasts planned in collaboration with specialists in Russian literature and in the history of the theatre. Many newspapers and reviews have given a lot of space to commemorating this anniversary and printed some of Chekhov's short stories, a volume of which has also been published in Rome. The film, "The Marriage", was dedicated to Chekhov.

FINLAND

There was a large audience at a Chekhov memorial evening in the National Theatre in Helsinki. They heard a lecture by Professor Aino Kalima and excerpts from "The Seagull" and "Uncle Vanya" interpreted by the actor Bakman.

BULGARIA

Many demonstrations of homage to Chekhov have taken place on the initiative of the National Peace Committee, the Bulgarian Union of writers and other organisations. A memorial ceremony was held in the "Christu Sarafov" popular theatre.

FRANCE

There have been many activities in commemoration of Chekhov's anniversary: performances of "The Seagull" by the "Comedie de l'Est" company at the Theatre Hebertot; the publication of four volumes of Chekhov's plays as translated by Elsa Triolet; broadcast performance of "The Seagull" and of one of Chekhov's short stories as adapted for the stage; a special issue of the weekly Les Lettres Françaises, dedicated to Chekhov; articles addressed to a wide public in various newspapers.

AUSTRIA

A lecture on Chekhov was given at Vienna University, attended by the Rector of the University and the President of the Academy of Sciences.

JAPAN

A meeting to honour the memory of the great writer was held in Tokyo on June 29th. Among the 3,000 people who attended were the Chairman of the Japanese Writers' Association, Mr. Suekichi Aono, the noted playwright Mr. Ujaku Akita and the writer Mr. Yasunari Kawabata.

Chekhov's play, "The Seagull", will be put on this coming autumn.

The Armistice concluded in Geneva is the common Victory of all the Forces of Peace

Message from the Secretariat of the World Council of Peace to the Viet-Nam Committee for the Defence of World Peace

Greetings and warmest congratulations on the signing of the armistice ending the war which has being going on for many years on the territories of Viet-Nam, Pathet Lao and Khmer. We salute the agreement which has been reached after a long period of struggle and effort for negotiation as the joint victory of all the forces of peace.

Your Committee has taken part in all the great campaigns which have been conducted on the initiative of the World Council of Peace. Your work has always reflected the will of the peoples of Indo-China and the other peoples of Asia to reach a peaceful settlement of the conflict based on the principles of independence and security. You have thus greatly contributed to the creation of the atmosphere of understanding and friendliness which has made negotiation possible and enabled it to succeed.

This victory marks an important stage along the road to the relaxation of international tension. It is an encouragement to the Peace Movement and to all defenders of Peace to pursue their efforts for the consolidation of peace in Asia on the basis of respect for the pledges that have been made, and for the safeguarding of peace elsewhere in the world in accordance with the will of the peoples.

THE SECRETARIAT OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

Vienna, July 21st, 1954

Message from the Secretariat of the World Council of Peace to the National Council of the French Peace Movement

Greetings and warmest congratulations on the signing of the armistice concluded at Geneva, thus ending the grievous and bloody war which has been going on in Indo-China for almost eight years. We salute the agreement which has been reached as a victory for all the forces of peace — a victory which proves that, in spite of all difficulties and obstacles, peaceful solutions are possible on condition that negotiations are entered into with the determination to succeed.

The action of the French Peace Movement made a powerful contribution to the creation and growth of the wide movement of French public opinion which spoke out with irresistible force for negotiation and then for agreement. This action and the joint action of all other peace forces have greatly helped in the peaceful settlement of a conflict, the continuation and extension of which would have entailed a most serious threat to world peace.

This victory marks an important stage along the road to the relaxation of international tension and the re-establishment of good relations between the peoples. At the same time, it is an encouragement to pursue our efforts for the consolidation and preservation of peace in Asia, and for the guaranteeing of peace in Europe through the peaceful solution of the German question on the basis of the sovereignty, independence and security of nations.

THE SECRETARIAT OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

Vienna, July 21st, 1954

Statement by the French National Peace Council

The agreement which has just been concluded at Geneva has made the spirit of negotiation prevail over the policy of strength.

The Peace Movement bows its head to the fallen, to the victims of the cruel and terrible war in Indo-China.

It salutes all those who, by their tireless activity, have worked for the ending of the conflict and the opening of peace negotiations, sometimes even in the teeth of repression.

The Peace Movement called on all Frenchmen to unite in ending this war which is contrary to the national interest, and is conscious of having unfailingly expressed the country's will for peace. This will for peace, which M. Mendès-France has finally translated into Government action in Geneva, has increased France's stature in the eyes of the peoples of Asia and of the whole world.

The agreement which has been reached opens the way to the final establishment of peace in Indo-China.

The state of war must be succeeded by freely agreed co-operation between the French and Viet-Namese peoples, united and independent.

Negotiations must be pushed forward for the conclusion of political, economic and cultural agreements in conformity with the interests of France and of the peoples of Indo-China.

Following on the armistice in Korea, the ending of hostilities in Indo-China is a new and important contribution to the relaxation of international tension. By negotiation have been quenched the flames of a war in Asia which was a threat to world peace.

In the same way, by negotiation, peaceful solutions can be found for the problems of Europe. The remilitarisation of Germany through E.D.C. or in any other form both creates a danger of war in Europe and is the main obstacle to negotiation.

The French Peace Movement expresses the will of the great majority of Frenchmen in asking the Government to take the initiative in calling for the resumption of international negotiations for the settlement of the German question and the organisation of security among all the countries of Europe.

Telegram from the French National Peace Council to the Viet-Nam Committee for the Defence of World Peace

WE WISH TO EXPRESS THE PROFOUND JOY OF THE FRENCH PEACE MOVEMENT AT THE CESSATION OF HOSTILITIES, THUS PUTTING AN END TO A TERRIBLE WAR. WE PAY HOMAGE TO THE PERSEVERING EFFORTS OF THE FRIENDS OF PEACE IN OUR TWO COUNTRIES AND THROUGHOUT THE WORLD. WE ARE SURE THAT THE AGREEMENT CONCLUDED IN GENEVA WILL BE THE PRELUDE TO FRUITFUL CO-OPERATION AND FRIENDSHIP BETWEEN OUR TWO PEOPLES.

THE BUREAU OF THE FRENCH PEACE MOVEMENT

Message sent to the Rt. Hon. Anthony Eden by Mr. D. N. Pritt, Q. C.

The British Peace Committee welcomes the Indo-China agreement as a great victory for peace. To you and all whose participation brought agreement we send congratulations and gratitude.

Today Britain can be proud of its contribution towards the ending of bloodshed and the lifting of tension resulting from the Geneva Conference.

Now in this new and more hopeful atmosphere there must be no pause in further effort to reach East-West agreement. To end the fighting in Asia and at the same time to proceed with decisions to rearm West Germany is to create conditions that can rob the world of the peace its people need.

We therefore urge you to give another lead for peace by proposing renewed Four-Power negotiation on Germany.

BULLETIN OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

[Paul Robeson, p. 10]

INFORMATION BULLETIN PUBLISHED BY THE SECRETARIAT OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

N° 16 AUGUST 1954

National Sovereignty and the Security of Nations

Paris, 1949: at the first World Peace Congress two thousand delegates from sixty-two countries, representing many hundred million men and women, unanimously approve a declaration of principle in these words:

"We strive for the national independence and peaceful co-operation of all peoples, for the right of peoples to determine their own future — essential conditions for freedom and Peace."

Berlin, 1954: the World Council of Peace, in extraordinary session, in the light of new facts and of growing dangers, reaffirms the principle in the following terms:

"Despite differences of political or social system, all peoples have common interests. These common interests cannot be protected, and the security of each and the independence of the peoples cannot be guaranteed, by atomic blackmail and the division of the world into military blocs."

"Likewise, these common interests are harmed by repression of national liberation movements or by the intervention of any state in the internal affairs of any other."

What is the essence of this idea that has run so consistently through the work of the World Council of Peace? It is the conviction, day by day striking deeper roots in the minds of men, that no nation can be secure unless the sovereignty of every people without exception is respected.

This idea stands, too, as the very cornerstone of the United Nations: the Charter specifies as its second aim the fostering of friendly relations between the nations "based on respect for the principle of equal rights and self-determination of peoples".

A recent event has dealt this principle a resounding blow. In a small country a liberal government was carrying through a policy which conformed to the expressed wishes of the electors. This country was invaded by mercenary troops. These troops had been supplied with up-to-date guns, planes and ships. The intervention came from outside. It was carefully prepared, rather indiscreetly advertised, generously financed from foreign sources. It overthrew the legitimate government by force; it suspended the republican constitution; it took from the Guatemalan people the right to settle their own affairs.

The Government of Guatemala appealed to the United Nations. The whole world looked on — hoping to see the Security Council enforce respect for the right of self-determination which, without shadow of doubt, had been violated in Guatemala. It was not to be. Guatemala's appeal was deferred: five to four, with two abstentions.

Now every one can see the effect of unwarranted interference by a country or group of countries in the internal affairs of another and of subordinating the rules of the Charter to the interests of a single power; the United Nations is sterilised.

No nation, nor mankind itself, can feel safe merely because the United Nations Charter is excellent in form and true in spirit. Far from it. Every nation, every people, must be deeply troubled by the apparent ease with which Governments find ways to dodge or to twist the provisions of the Charter.

That is why the World Council of Peace has so many times affirmed its full support both for the letter and for the spirit of the Charter. That is why it has condemned every military alliance or restriction of national sovereignty that "nullifies the Charter and leads to war".

Among the basic factors preventing exemplary application of the Charter is the weakness in the composition of the United Nations. Its lack of universality lowers its authority. And this is aggravated, above all, by the fact that China is not represented by its lawful Government.

So two of the important aims in the struggle for peace, national sovereignty and the security of nations are: universality in the United Nations, and strict adherence both to the letter and to the spirit of the Charter. The greater and more resolute the solidarity displayed by the peoples of the world with any country or nation, whatever its importance or geographical situation, whose sovereignty is restricted or whose national independence is taken away, the more easily will these aims be won.

VIET-NAM

The Viet-Nam Peace Committee has issued a statement which says:

"The signing of the agreement for a cease-fire in Indo-China is a great victory for the peoples of Viet-Nam, Cambodia and Laos who fought heroically and in the most difficult conditions in the struggle for peace, unification, independence and democracy. The signing of this agreement is also a great success for the peoples of France and Asia and for defenders of peace the world over, who firmly adhered to the position that peace must be restored to Indo-China.

"The policy of continuing and extending the war in Indo-China failed, but the instigators of war are not taking time off; indeed, they are working out new plans.

"The people of Viet-Nam have given proof of their determination honestly to respect the armistice agreement. Together with all peace forces, they are determined to oppose the warmongers' plans to sabotage peace."

"The ending of the seven-year-old war in Indo-China is an event of major importance not only in Asia but in the world. For the first time since the end of the Second World War there is peace between all nations. The All India Congress Committee trusts that it will be followed by the peaceful settlement of the problems of East and Southeast Asia so that disastrous conflicts which have brought ruin to certain countries of Asia and hindered their progress may be finally ended."

GERMANY

The Executive Committee of the West German Peace Committee issued, on July 25th, a statement which reads:

"The direct contacts established between the belligerents at Geneva made a decisive contribution to the positive outcome of the negotiations. This underlines the need for early negotiations on Germany and the need to ask representatives from the Federal Republic and from the German Democratic Republic to take part in the discussions between the Great Powers.

"This is the only way to achieve a peaceful solution of the German problem."

Sir John Kotelawala, Prime Minister of Ceylon, has sent M. Mendès-France a telegram of congratulations on the cease-fire in Indo-China.

ITALY

The victory for the forces of Peace, which the conclusion of the armistice in Indo-China represents, met with a great and joyful response throughout Italy.

The National Committee's message to the Italian people is quoted in posters which were put up in Modena, Bologna, Genoa, La Spezia, Ancona and other towns. In it the National Committee says:

"The success of the Geneva Conference ending the last armed conflict in Asia, which was fostered by foreign intervention for eight years, shows that agreement on peace is possible between the great powers — that it is possible when founded on respect for the independence of the peoples and non-interference in the internal affairs of other countries. The success of the Geneva Conference confirms that it is possible, as well as necessary, to put an end to the division of the world into opposing military blocs, and possible for countries with different social and political systems to find the road of peaceful co-existence and fruitful co-operation in works of peace....

"Let the Italian people resume their action for peace along the way opened by the victory in Geneva. Let them finally reject the policy of division and military blocs on our continent, let them reject E.D.C."

The National Peace Committee
Rome, July 21st, 1954.

France - People joyfully welcome Armistice and call for Peaceful Settlement in Germany

Throughout France the news of the cease-fire in Indo-China was greeted by an explosion of joy.

Both in Paris and in the provinces the workers downed tools in many factories and on many building sites and held short meetings to celebrate the good news.

In the workshops of the State controlled Paris Transport Company, in the Scientific Research Centre and the Vitry power station, and in many factories, there were meetings which adopted resolutions welcoming the armistice and demanding the rejection of E.D.C.

In the evening, public festivities were organised in provincial towns and in the suburbs of Paris with the members of the municipal councils present. The town halls were decorated with flags. The town council of Champigny put on a firework display and in Montreuil 20,000 leaflets were distributed, 200 posters put up and the town council held a reception. In Gentilly, a meeting was organised and public balls were held in Arcueil, Malakoff and Saint-Ouen.

The provinces also gave free rein to their joy. In Troyes, a joint march was organised by the Socialist, Radical and Communist parties and by the various trade union organisations. In Tarbes, a deputation on which all the parties on the town council were represented laid flowers at the war memorial. In Avignon, there was a firework display and public dancing, and the Trades Council of the Department held a reception.

So it was throughout the whole of France.

Everywhere, in the course of festivities and demonstrations, the French people showed their determination that the armistice agreement shall be respected and that the struggle against German rearmament — that mortal danger to France — shall go on.

"France has the Right to Decide her own Future Freely" Appeal of 134 Public Figures against E.D.C.

On July 26th, the French Committee for the Peaceful Solution of the German Problem issued the following statement:

"While the leaders of foreign States are increasingly interfering and exerting pressure to force our Parliament to ratify the E.D.C. treaty, we would recall that her millions of dead give France the right to decide her own future freely, particularly with regard to Germany, her immediate neighbour, whose militarists have caused France so much grievous suffering in the past.

"The reasons for rejecting E.D.C. have not diminished with time. On the contrary.

"We reaffirm that, in rearming a divided Germany, E.D.C. would:

1) Aggravate the division of Europe and the world and lead us to the verge of war.

2) Withdraw the greater part of the army from the sphere of national sovereignty — and the army is one of the principal guarantees of a truly French policy.

3) Lead to an armaments race in Europe which would depress living standards and prevent any economic revival.

"We warn against insidious attempts to restore West German sovereignty for the sole purpose of enabling her to rearm immediately. For the rearming of a divided Germany would combine the dangers of civil and international war.

"We repeat that the only genuine alternative to E.D.C. is the negotiation of a peace treaty with Germany and the reunification of that country in the framework of a relaxation of international tension and European security.

"We invite French public opinion to ask the Government to take action along these lines before the restored German divisions threaten Europe with a new conflict."

Among the first 134 people to put their signature to this statement were four former Government Ministers: M. Paul Bastid, M. Justin Godart, M. Louis Marin and M. Jacques Soustelle.

The signatories also include: M. Paul Didier, Judge in the Court of Appeal in Paris; M. Jacques Hadamard and M. Robert Fawtier, members of the Institut de France; M. Emile Labeyrie, First Honorary President of the Exchequer and Audit Department; M. Lyon-Caen, First Honorary President of the Supreme Court; M. Mornet, Public Prosecutor; General Le Gorguillé; M. Olivier Pozzo di Borgo, inspector general of education; together with many writers, MPs, ministers of religion, magistrates, leaders of organisations, journalists, elected representatives from various Departments, and others.

TWO MESSAGES FROM VIET-NAM

Telegram from the Young People of Viet-Nam to the Young People of France

The Viet-Namese Union of Youth has sent the following telegram to the French Union of Republican Youth and the French Girls' Union:

"We salute with enthusiasm the agreement for the ending of hostilities in Indo-China which opens up a radiant future of peace to the young people of France and an era of lasting and fraternal co-operation to our two peoples. We are deeply grateful to the youth of France and to the French people for the active contribution they have made to this victory of the desire for peace and friendship between the peoples. We are confident that our united struggle will consolidate peace now that it has been won, smash all the attempts of the warmongers to revive the conflict at the cost of our blood and restore France's sons to their families and to peaceful labour in their homeland."

Hoang Minh Chinh
General Secretary of the Viet-Namese Union of Youth

Message from Viet-Namese General Confederation of Labour to French Trade Unions

In a message to the French General Confederation of Labour (C.G.T.), Force Ouvrière and the French Confederation of Christian Workers (C.F.T.C.), Mr. Hoang Quoc Viet, President of the Viet-Namese General Confederation of Labour, writes:

"We warmly salute the agreement on the ending of hostilities in Indo-China as a victory of the desire for peace on the part of the peoples of France, Viet-Nam, Cambodia and Laos and all peace-loving people the world over.

"We wish to express our sincere thanks to the workers of France for their persevering struggle against the war of aggression in Indo-China . . ."

French University Professors' Manifesto on German Rearmament

A manifesto open only for signature by university professors has been issued. In Paris, the professors of the Collège de France, the Natural History Museum, and the directors of the School for Higher Studies are also being asked to sign.

The manifesto, which has already been signed by 267 professors, runs:

"It is not necessary to pass judgement on our foreign policy as a whole, nor on the question of Europe. Many of us are aware of the need that our country should not be left isolated and ardently desire the earliest possible creation of a European organisation in which each nation would find its place and there would be no threat to its own security or to that of any other nation.

"The only question that arises here is that of German rearmament . . .

"The acceptance of German rearmament would amount to capitulation on the part of France. There is no essential difference between the European and autonomous forms of this rearmament. The German General Staff, whether official or clandestine, will easily be able to pass from one to the other.

"In both cases, the operation we are being asked to ratify consists in giving Germany an army and pacifying us with a promise . . .

"That attempts are being made to impose this on France does not concern us. It does depend on us, however. to fight against it in a free debate with our allies who are well aware what a tremendous strategic asset France represents.

"At any rate no one will be able to say that, less than ten years after her liberation, France voluntarily offered her persecutor the hegemony of Europe, thus signing her own downfall."

The first 267 signatories include professors from the Collège de France, the Sorbonne, the Faculties of Law and Medicine, the Natural History Museum and the School for Higher Studies in Paris. In the provinces, professors from the Universities of Aix, Marseilles, Algiers, Besançon, Bordeaux, Caen, Clermont-Ferrand, Dijon, Grenoble, Lille, Lyons, Toulouse, Montpellier, Nancy, Poitiers, Rennes and Strasbourg have signed.

Growing Understanding about E.D.C. in Germany

At a time when the peoples of Europe are making every effort to prevent the rearmament of Germany and establish the conditions for a genuine relaxation of international tension, the German people, both East and West, are not holding aloof from this struggle which for them is decisive. Admittedly, the conditions in which they are working are not the same throughout Germany, but these last few months have revealed that the German people's awareness of the problem of peace is growing more or less rapidly everywhere.

Favourable possibilities for National Unity for Peace and against E.D.C.

Two conferences which have just been held, one in the Federal Republic and the other in the German Democratic Republic, give encouraging examples of the prospects which exist in Germany for the formation of a great movement of national unity for peace and against E.D.C.

Following consultations between the "West German Circle for the Peaceful Solution of the German Problem", the Peace Movement, the West German Peace Committee, the "Association for Peace", the "War Resisters" and other groupings, an important conference was held in Heidelberg in June. It was attended by representatives of the organisations quoted and eminent persons from cultural, political and religious circles.

Those who took part were by no means agreed on all the questions discussed but they unanimously considered that the E.C.D. treaty must be rejected and that a peaceful solution must be found for the German problem. They also unanimously agreed on the need for agreement between East and West Germans and that they should do what they could to overcome the spiritual division of Germany by consistent cultural exchanges between the two parts of the country.

Joint Deputation to Geneva

The conference also sent a deputation to Geneva to communicate to the Ministers of Foreign Affairs of the Four Great Powers a petition asking for:

— the convening of another conference on the question of Germany;

— the granting of full sovereignty to Germany;

— the creation of a system of security for Europe.

It was also decided to collect signatures to an appeal against the use of atomic weapons.

Churchmen of East and West Against E.D.C.

Shortly after the Heidelberg Conference, the Synod of the Evangelical Church met in Leipzig in the German Democratic Republic from July 7th—11th. More than 300,000 East and West Germans gathered in Leipzig on this occasion.

On the first day of the Synod a discussion was held in Leipzig on the question of Christians co-operating with the Peace Movement. It took place at the invitation of the German Peace Council and was attended by churchmen from both parts of Germany. In the course of this discussion Pastor Schott of Hesse stated: "As a Christian I am a determined adversary of the E.D.C. treaty and I should like to act in this spirit; that is why I am interested in the work of the Peace Movement." And Pastor Reichelm of Heidelberg demanded close co-operation between all friends of peace, at the same time condemning all propaganda of revenge in Germany.

The decisions of the Heidelberg Conference and the Leipzig discussions clearly demonstrate that the idea of the necessity and possibility of a united fight for peace is growing among the German people.

Two Votes with the same Meaning

New elections to the provincial parliament of North Rhine-Westphalia — the most important province of the Federal Republic — were held at the end of June. The vote showed that the Christian Democratic Union, the main governing party, whose whole policy is based on the establishment of E.D.C. — has lost 1,049,648 votes since the last election, that is 30 percent in eight months.

Commenting on this result, the Deutsche Zeitung und Wirtschaftszeitung, an important Stuttgart newspaper, stated that the election unexpectedly turned into a referendum against Chancellor Adenauer, "who was", it said, "so ill advised as to make the election a vote of confidence in the way in which he has fulfilled his office during these last few years . . ."

Many other newspapers see in this vote a condemnation of the West German Government's "European" policy.

About the same time — on June 27 - 29 — a referendum was held in the German Democratic Republic; 98·7 percent of the people over 16 years of age took part. The question which the voters had to answer was the following:

"For a peace treaty with Germany and the withdrawal of the occupation troops, or for E.D.C. and the Bonn and Paris Agreements."

11,276,926 voted for a peace treaty and the withdrawal of the occupation troops, while only 6·8 percent voted for E.D.C.

A notable feature of the preparations for the referendum was the broad participation of the people in rallies and demonstrations organised by the German Peace Council.

There were rallies of 65,000 people in Leipzig, 40,000 in Weimar, and more than 10,000 in smaller towns such as Altenburg and Finsterwalde.

The Palatinate under the Threat of Atomic Guns

The United States armed forces have set up 30 atomic guns in the Palatinate in the German Federal Republic. They are spread out at equal distances on a line from Basle to Rotterdam; they can be traversed through 360° and have a range of nearly 30 miles.

On the destructive power of the atomic shells, the United States general Ridgway has stated that it is equivalent to that of the atom bombs dropped on Hiroshima and Nagasaki. These sinister weapons of atomic war are transported about the country.

On April 28th, violent explosions were heard in the district of Kusel-Baumholder, revealing that the atomic guns were being fired for the first time. Fortunately it was not atomic shells that were used, but ordinary shells of great explosive force. The shells whistled over terrified villages to explode on the Baumholder polygon — a piece of land with an area of nearly 10 square miles.

The installation and use of the atomic guns has given rise to fear and growing anger on the part of the people of the Palatinate. There is a growing wave of protest throughout the country.

The two photographs are taken from the German newspaper "Stimme des Friedens" (The Voice of Peace). One is of an atomic gun and the other shows the zone threatened by these weapons of mass destruction.

UNITED STATES — 13 North Shore Towns take United Action for World Peace

Organisations from 13 North Shore towns joined in launching a drive for "more activity now for world peace" following an overflow rally of more than 1,200 in the Northwestern University Tech auditorium.

Norman Cousins, editor of the Saturday Review, sounded the main theme of the need for world co-operation and negotiation. He declared that this was the only course for the world.

Among the 36 sponsoring organisations were: the League of Women Voters, the Y.W.C.A., several Parent Teachers Association chapters, the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom, the United Nations Association, the United World Federalists, the National Council of Jewish Women, the Fellowship of Reconciliation and a number of Protestant and Jewish congregations.

The rally was designed to launch further discussion in churches, civic and neighbourhood groups on "What more can North Shore citizens do now about world peace?" The steering committee for the town meeting announced that the proceedings would be forwarded to the World Council of Churches which is to convene in Evanston in August.

As part of the rally, each participating group submitted a brief statement. Here are some of the highlights from some of these statements:

League of Women Voters (Evanston, Winnetka, Glencoe, Wilmette and Glenview chapters):

"The principle upon which the League is agreed is co-operation with other nations in solving international problems and promoting peace."

United Nations Association of Great Chicago:

"There simply is no drastic, sensational cure-all for the world's ills; only slow, persistent, patient, piecemeal labour on the diplomatic level and across the conference tables."

Central School (Evanston) P.T.A.: This P.T.A. reaffirmed its faith "that international differences can be solved without recourse to war".

Detroit Methodists for Negotiation

Methodists representing 500 churches in the Detroit area, at their annual conference at the end of June, adopted a report by their World Peace Committee which made the following points:

"The conferences at Berlin and Geneva will need to be duplicated over and over with an intent for peace, negotiation and a lessening of the cold war."

"Lessening of militarization of the U.S.": the report deplored expenditure of 70 per cent of the national budget for war.

"Decrease of restrictions upon trade... a lessening of restrictions between East and West ought to be encouraged."

"We call upon our country to cease from further experiments with destruction and to apply their energies, science, scientists, research and money to peacetime use of fissionable material."

Chain Letter for Peace

Two mothers in Los Angeles who started a chain letter urging President Eisenhower to "cancel all further H-bomb explosions" received requests for over 2,000 copies of the mimeographed letter within a week. The letter, asking each receiver to copy and mail to five other persons, reads:

Dear Mr. President!

"In the name of humanity, in the name of peace, and in the name of America's moral position before the world, I respectfully call upon you to cancel all further H-bomb explosions; and instead to seek an immediate agreement among the great powers which will prohibit for ever the use of all nuclear weapons."

Actions in the United States against Aggression in Guatemala

A number of organisations have condemned the aggression against the people of Guatemala.

New York Peace Council of the American Peace Crusade organised a Peace Vigil before the United Nations. The Council appealed for support for the Vigil which was directed against the aggression in Guatemala.

The New York Council of Arts, Sciences and Professions organised a public meeting to protest against military intervention in Guatemala and Indo-China.

The American Labour Party denounced the invasion of Guatemala. It sent letters to President Eisenhower and the state Congressional delegation, urging implementation of the United Nations Charter — respect for and the guaranteeing of the sovereignty and independence of the peoples and of peace.

The Korean Armistice was Signed one Year ago

The Peking People's Daily has published an article by Dr. Kuo Mo-jo to commemorate the first anniversary of the signing of the armistice agreement in Korea. In it Dr. Kuo Mo-jo, who is the President of the Chinese Peace Committee, states:

"The signing of the Korean Armistice Agreement is a great contribution to peace in Asia and the world, as has been indisputably proved by the past year's developments in the international situation.

"The signing of this agreement constitutes the most important milestone in the struggle against aggression and for a relaxation of international tension... It shows that peaceful negotiation is the only way of solving all international issues.

"Since the signing of the Korean Armistice Agreement the Chinese and Korean peoples have faithfully carried out the agreement and have made unflagging efforts to strengthen peace in Korea and achieve a peaceful settlement of the Korean question. Their delegations to the Geneva Conference, as well as the Soviet delegation, strove hard to make the negotiations on the Korean question successful."

Message from the French Peace Committee to the Korean Peace Committee

The National Council of the French Peace Movement has sent a message to the Korean Peace Committee. It reads:

"On the occasion of the anniversary of the signature of the armistice in Korea we send you our best wishes for the peaceful development of Korea and for the maintenance and consolidation of peace...

"The cease-fire in Indo-China... is an event of the greatest and most positive importance for peace in Asia and the world!

"We are sure that it will lead to the resumption of international negotiations for peace in Korea, for the peaceful settlement of the German question, for the establishment of collective security in Asia and Europe, and also for the effective prohibition of the atomic weapon and for disarmament."

INDIAN PUBLIC OPINION DEMANDS COLLECTIVE SECURITY IN ASIA

"We consider this statement to be a new step towards the consolidation of peace and the elimination of factors giving rise to tension in Asia and throughout the world..."

In these words the National Committee against the United States-Pakistan Pact gives its opinion of the interview between Mr. Chou-en-Lai and Mr. Nehru. It then asks the people to "bear the message contained in the principles enunciated in the statement to every corner of the country and to give these principles their full support..."

The interview between the Prime Ministers of the People's Republic of China and of India and the statement published after the interview have done much to consolidate the trend of public opinion which arose in India after the signature of the military pact between the United States and Pakistan. This pact is a growing threat to the security and independence of the peoples of Asia and to peace.

Already, throughout India, many important persons are asking for "appreciation and conscious support" — in the words of Mr. Nehru — for the principles put forward in the Prime Ministers' statement.

The Calcutta session of the All India Peace Council, held from July 30th to August 1st, adopted the following three points as the basis for discussion:

— Asian security and solidarity against military agreements and bases resulting in foreign interference in the affairs of these countries and threatening their independence and peace;
— the prohibition of weapons of mass destruction;
— cultural exchanges.

"German problem has reached a crucial stage"

British Peace Committee's Appeal for Special Urgent Action

In relation to its "Campaign for World Security" the British Peace Committee has sent a letter to the secretaries of local peace organisations saying that "special urgent action and emphasis is needed now regarding the German problem, as this has reached a crucial stage".

This letter reviews the situation following the Churchill—Eden visit to Washington. It points out that both the British and French parliaments will shortly rise for their summer holidays and says:

"Clearly there is danger that irrevocable steps making the division of Germany permanent, placing armed forces in the hands of militarists and creating a situation of the utmost tension in Europe may be taken during the Parliamentary recess."

The committee calls for urgent and continuous action to bring home the people's opposition to German rearmament to M. Ps., leaders of political parties, trade unions, editors of local and national newspapers, in the form of resolutions, letters, ballots in streets and factories, and deputations.

Reviewing the extent of the opposition in France and Great Britain the letter emphasises:

"Thus it there is action now by organisations and individuals throughout this country, the whole plan for arming West Germany can be brought to an end."

Opposition of the People Mounting

Every day new examples of the opposition of the mass of the people are reported. For example:

In Sheffield, shop stewards at such famous steel works as Ambrose Shardlow's and English Steel Corporation are organising the collection of signatures against German Rearmament; the Sheffield branch of the Amalgamated Union of Foundryworkers (2,000 members) has gone on record against any arming of Germany.

British Rose Garden for Lidice

The leading breeder of roses in Great Britain, Mr. Harry Wheatcroft, who developed the famous rose named "Peace", is helping to plan a great memorial rose garden which the British people are to give to Lidice. It is expected that Mr. Wheatcroft will visit Czechoslovakia in October to help with the final plans for laying out the garden with several thousand rose trees, given by trade unions, local councils, peace committees and other organisations.

Among those who are sponsoring the scheme of Roses for Lidice are a number of national trade unions, the Archbishop of York, the Archbishop of Wales and the Chief Rabbi.

In Bristol a special committee has been set up by leading members of the Peace Committee supported by labour and trade union organisations to convene a conference against German rearmament. The Bristol Trades Council has now passed a resolution against German Rearmament. So has the Gloucester Trades Council.

During the weekend of 24—25 July the Executive Committee of the Labour Party organised official conferences in support of E.D.C. in Manchester, Liverpool, Salisbury and Dorking. These were addressed by such leaders of the Labour Party as Mr. Herbert Morrison, M. P., Mr. J. B. Hynd, M.P., and Mr. R. T. Paget, Q.C., M.P., with audiences of 500 delegates. In each case the opposition to E.D.C. and the policy of the Executive Committee was overwhelming; only one or two participants supported the arming of Germany. In several places the peace movement organised poster parades and the sale of pamphlets outside the conferences.

In Putney (South London) on the anniversary of the day when a V2 killed 150 young people in a crowded dance hall, members of youth organisations collected signatures against German rearmament outside dance halls and milk bars.

Municipal Action Against the H-Bomb

The second major question in the Peace Movement's campaign — action against the H-Bomb — is also receiving wide support in new circles. After Coventry—Birmingham and Tottenham (North London).

In Birmingham, the City Council by 70 votes to 37 has instructed the Civil Defence Committee to give a full report on what steps are being taken to meet the destructive power of the Hydrogen bomb and to consider deferring the appointment of additional civil defence staff until after they have made their report. Moving the resolution, Alderman A. F. Bradbeer, chairman of the Labour group, said: "It is the first move to educate the citizens about the situation which would arise in this city and in this country in the event of Hydrogen bomb warfare."

Not only has the Tottenham Borough Council (Labour majority) decided to suspend all civil defence expenditure, but its members are taking part in a public campaign against the Hydrogen bomb. The resolution of the Council said:

"That this council, in view of the atomic and hydrogen bomb development, suspend all expenditure and support for civil defence until such times as the Government provide adequate protection for the inhabitants of this Borough."

In the course of the campaign in support of this move, the Ex-Service Movement for Peace, supported by the Peace Committee and labour and trade union organisations, organised a mass demonstration. Headed by a band the Ex-Service Men marched through the streets and held an open-air meeting in the centre of the Borough, addressed by the Deputy-Mayor.

In the West of England the campaign against the H-Bomb has been supported by the Trades Councils of Bristol, Trowbridge and Cheltenham. Shop stewards in the Bristol Aeroplane Company are collecting signatures to the national petition against the bomb.

A new pamphlet, The Hydrogen Bomb and You, by Mr. William Warbey, Labour M.P., has just been published by the Union of Democratic Control.

During a visit to Coventry, the leader of the delegation of Soviet students which is now touring Britain told the Lord Mayor that Coventry's Appeal to Stalingrad for joint action against the H-bomb had met with a whole-hearted and intense response throughout the Soviet Union.

"Mankind can dispense with the Accursed Voice of the Guns"

Appeal of the High Synod of the Rumanian Orthodox Church

The High Synod of the Rumanian Orthodox Church and the National Ecclesiastical Assembly which have just been held in Bucharest made an appeal to the clergy and to all the faithful, exhorting them to give strong support to the great work being done for peace.

The prelates of the Church taking part in the High Synod and the National Ecclesiastical Assembly included: the Patriarch Justinian; Metropolitan Sebastian of Moldavia and Suceava; Metropolitan Nicolae of Transylvania; Metropolitan Firmilian of Oltenia; and Metropolitan Vasile of the Banat.

The Patriarch Justinian gave the High Synod an exposé of the principal problems which today preoccupy mankind. "Under the threat of a new world war", said the head of the Rumanian Orthodox Church, "the peoples of the world are passionately seeking the road of understanding and peace."

After the Patriarch's statement, the High Synod unanimously adopted an appeal to the clergy and the faithful. It runs:

"The powerful voice of the defenders of peace has prevented the use of weapons of mass extermination, brought about the ending of the war in Korea and shown to all that the only road that can lead to the elimination of discord among the States is that of discussion. The Berlin and Geneva Conferences are a living proof of the fact that mankind can dispense with the accursed voice of the guns and that they can understand each other better through the spoken word, which God gave them." Referring to the appeal of the World Council of Peace calling for agreement between the Governments on the prohibition of the manufacture, storage and use of all types of weapons of mass destruction, together with a strict control to ensure the implementation of this ban, the appeal of the High Synod of the Rumanian Orthodox Church asks the clergy and the faithful to respond to the World Council's appeal by making a vigorous contribution to the establishment of peace between the peoples.

HIROSHIMA, AUGUST 6, 1945

MESSAGE OF THE SECRETARIAT OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE TO THE JAPAN PEACE COMMITTEE

On the occasion of the ninth anniversary of the tragedy of Hiroshima, which is being commemorated today in every part of the world, the Secretariat of the World Council of Peace offers to the first victims of the atomic bomb, the Japanese people, its deepest sympathy. The name Hiroshima will be for ever a symbol of the horror of atomic war which threatens the world. The hydrogen bombs recently exploded in Bikini, which have claimed new victims among the Japanese people, are a grave warning to the men and women of the whole world.

Throughout the world the peoples are working for the total banning of atomic weapons, hydrogen bombs and other weapons of mass destruction. By their noble struggle the Japanese people have assumed a place of honour. The present campaign in Japan for banning atomic and hydrogen bombs, supported by all sections of the people, has already achieved remarkable results. In a very short time more than five million signatures have been collected,

The Secretariat of the World Council of Peace sends its warmest good wishes to the Japan Peace Committee and to the whole Japanese people in their advance to new successes in the struggle for peace.

The People of Hiroshima Commemorate the Dropping of the Atom Bomb

On August 6th 500 white doves flew up from the Peace Park in Hiroshima like a symbol of the hope that no other city in the world will ever suffer the terrible fate of Hiroshima.

In memory of August 6th, 1945, the day on which the city was wiped out by the first atomic bomb, the people of Hiroshima met in the new park in which was erected a monument to commemorate the 120,000 victims. A great number of those present still bore the scars of the wounds they received nine years ago.

In his speech Mr. Shinzo Hamaï, Mayor of the city, said:

"May the catastrophe that befell us be a warning to mankind not to repeat such a tragedy. We urgently demand of the whole world that war be banished and that adequate control of atomic energy be set up. We pledge that we will continue, with fresh resolution, the struggle for the establishment of peace.

The memorial ceremonies in Hiroshima were opened by the inauguration of an international church dedicated to world peace. The church was built on the ruins of the former German Catholic Church of Hiroshima which was destroyed by fire on August 6th, 1945 and the cost was met by gifts from all over the world organised on the initiative of the German Jesuit, Father Hugo Lassalle.

During this day of commemoration of the disaster of Hiroshima the Japanese people received thousands of messages of sympathy from every part of the world.

In the name of mankind, we call for agreement, at once, to stop all experiments with H-bombs and atom bombs and forbid their use.

Agreement of this kind will ease the task of securing their effective total abolition.

Agreement of this kind will help quickly to relieve international tension; it will help forward the general reduction of armaments; it will open the way to collaboration in the peaceful development of atomic energy.

Japan - Creation of Central Body for Collection of Signatures against the H-bomb

On August 6th, that unforgettable day on which, nine years ago, the first atomic bomb was dropped on Hiroshima, there was held in Tokio the inaugural meeting of the National Council of Signature-collecting Movements for the prohibition of the hydrogen bomb.

The initiators of this new body include the following personalities: Mr. Tetsu Katayama, former Prime Minister; Professor Hyoe Ouchi, Rector of Hosei University and President of the Japanese Union of University Professors; Mr. Hatsiro Arita, former Minister for Foreign Affairs; Mr. Tokutaro Kitamura, banker, former MP and one of the leaders of the Kaishin party; Mr. Toyohiko Kagawa, Christian minister.

The National Council of Signature-collecting Movements set itself the task of maintaining liaison among all signature-collecting movements in Japan and centralising the signatures obtained.

At present more than 5,000,000 signatures have been collected and those who are working for the prohibition of thermonuclear weapons consider that with the setting-up of the National Centre they will soon reach a figure of 30 millions.

Calcutta — Demonstration for the Prohibition of Weapons of Mass Destruction

There was a great demonstration in Calcutta during the session of the All India Peace Council.

Mr. Romesh Chandra, General Secretary of the All India Peace Council, Mr. Mulk Raj Anand, the writer, Mr. Hirendra Nath Mukherjee, MP, Mr. Satyapriya Banerjee, Vice-President of the All India Trade Union Congress, Mr. Mukherjee, the journalist, and other personalities spoke during the demonstration and demanded the prohibition of weapons of mass destruction.

Moscow Meeting: "June 27, 1954, marks the Beginning of a New Era"

More than 1,000 workers, office workers, engineers, scientists, writers, artists and representatives from the organisations of the Soviet capital were present at a demonstration for the relaxation of international tension held in the Hall of Columns on July 16th. The meeting had been called by the Soviet Peace Committee and the Association for the Diffusion of Political and Scientific Knowledge.

In his opening speech Mr. Nikolai Tikhonov, President of the Soviet Peace Committee, pointed out that the peoples' will for peace had become a powerful force.

"The Soviet Union", he said, "wants disarmament, the absolute prohibition of weapons of mass destruction, peace and friendship between the peoples. The Soviet Union has shown how sources of energy which have recently been discovered must be used for peaceful work with mankind's happiness as its goal. We may look on June 27th as the beginning of a new era: on that day, for the first time in the history of the human race, an atomic power station was put into operation in the Soviet Union and supplied current for peaceful purposes.

"The peace camp is continuing its struggle and nothing can prevent mankind from overthrowing all obstacles and taking the road of peace and friendship between the peoples."

Latin America Angered by Tragic Fate of Guatemala

Today in Guatemala

The coup d'état in Guatemala is being followed by a bloody terror. Through atrocious massacres and repeated shootings the instigators of the rebellion are seeking to stifle all opposition in the country.

Throughout Latin America the tragic fate of the people of Guatemala is giving rise to growing emotion and to angry protests at the brutal putsch which deprived the Guatemalan people of their liberties.

Eminent personalities in Latin America have already given voice to their support for the people of Guatemala. For example, Monsignor Luis Maria Martinez, Archbishop of Mexico, disassociated himself from the excuses given for striking a blow at the Guatemalan people's liberty; and General Lazaro Cardenas, former President of Mexico, quite categorically took the side of the legitimate Government which had been forcefully overthrown. Committees of Friends of Guatemala have spoken out in Mexico, where the Committee is headed by such persons as Senator Pedro de Alba, and in Chile, where a committee has been set up in the Chamber of Deputies. Political parties such as the Argentine Radical Party have officially pronounced their opposition to the coup d'état in Guatemala.

The Uruguayan Chamber of Deputies passed a motion of support for Guatemala and big workers' organisations such as the Confederation of Workers of Latin America have stated their support for the Guatemalan people.

Latin American opinion is all the more angry in that the attack on Guatemala's independence had been condemned beforehand. To give only a few examples, the putsch that was being prepared was denounced by Senator Angel Cusano and Sr. Dutra, deputy, of Uruguay; by organisations such as the Bolivian Trade Union Centre; by the La Paz Federation of Factory Workers. Dr. Arturo Frondisi, President of the Argentine Radical Party, issued a moving appeal for support for Guatemala.

So far from diminishing, the support for Guatemala is growing throughout Latin America and the world. El Debate, organ of the Uruguayan National Party, recently wrote that nothing can extinguish national feeling or make the peoples of Latin America forget the fraternal relations that today unite them with the people of Guatemala.

This feeling has grown everywhere.

In Sagua la Grande in Cuba, a big meeting was held with the participation of trade union and political leaders. Groups of students went through the streets applauding the people of Guatemala and demonstrated at Havana University when the American ambassador visited Cuba.

In Bolivia, the second Workers' Congress which has just taken place in La Paz asked the Bolivian Government "not to recognise the anti-popular government which has been imposed on our brother people in Guatemala".

In Brazil, there have been demonstrations of support for the Guatemalan people throughout the country. "The North-American aggression against Guatemala" was condemned by the Chamber of Deputies of the State of Porto Alegro, by many Deputies in the Federal Parliament, by workers' organisations and by intellectuals and politicians.

At an assembly of the Union for National Emancipation General Buxbaum, President of the Union, speaking of the aggression against Guatemala, said that foreign imperialism was a threat to the countries of Latin America. The participants expressed support for the people of Guatemala.

In a message to the United Nations, the Brazilian Peace Committee condemns foreign interference in Guatemala:

"The constitutional government of the Republic of Guatemala has been overthrown following armed intervention carried out with the help, among others, of certain Central American countries."

A big meeting of personalities and Members of Parliament, recently held in Chile, refused to recognise the junta set up in Guatemala.

Damascus, July 15–16
Second Congress of Syrian Peace Movement

The Second Congress of the Syrian Peace Movement was held in Damascus on July 15th and 16th and it was attended by representatives from the districts of Aleppo, Al Jazira, Deir Ezzur, Al Rekka, Homa, Asselmue, Homs, Scalbiyeh, Al Kacamun, Jabal el Druze, Howran and so on. The delegations were composed of doctors, barristers, workers, peasants, students, teachers, writers, poets and engineers.

Dr. Mustapha Amin presented a general report on the World Peace Movement and on the activities and tasks of the Syrian Peace Movement in the present circumstances with new dangers threatening the country.

After a wide discussion on the report two commissions were designated to study the problems before the Congress:

1) The political commission, which unanimously adopted two resolutions: one on the prohibition of the hydrogen bomb and the stopping of tests with weapons of mass destruction; and the second on the rejection of the military pacts and aid which the imperialists are trying to impose on Syria.

2) The organisation commission, which unanimously recommended to the Congress that the Peace Movement should be broadened and developed in the towns and villages.

After the discussions the Congress elected the National Peace Committee.

The convening of this Congress was warmly welcomed by all circles and by the press. More than 15 Syrian newspapers representing different views printed the National Committee's appeal convening the Congress. They included independent papers, the organs of the People's Party and the Moslem Brotherhood, newspapers which support the National Party and left progressive papers.

A number of eminent personalities sent messages of support to the Congress. Among them were Dr. Maaruf Dawaliby, former Prime Minister; Mr. Zeki al Khatib, former Prime Minister; and Mr. Sobhy al Khatib, President of the Syrian Confederation of Trade Unions.

LIFE INSURANCE FOR PEACE

The Argentine Peace Council has just taken a very interesting step in instituting "Life Insurance for Peace."

A series of insurance policies in the form of illustrated folders (see photo) was put out. In the inside pages the risks against which insurance is normally taken out are enumerated, but over a photograph of a great city threatened by the atom bomb we read the question: "Who insures you against this?" The answer is given in the text which says:

"The only life insurance for man, his possessions and his culture, is the fight for peace.

"This life insurance is different from commercial insurance in that it is not only on your death or when you lose your possessions that it comes into effect; as from this very moment, through the will of millions of people in the world, it protects life and all that mankind has done to make it more beautiful and happy...

"In making your contribution you will be helping to save peace!"

We want to live!

The peoples of South Africa, whose soil is rich in uranium, are aware of the danger to mankind involved in the use of this mineral for purposes of mass destruction.

South African uranium is at present being used to manufacture thermo-nuclear weapons; yet uranium must be made to serve peace.

The people of South Africa are working vigorously for the prohibition of the A and H bombs. The South African Peace Council is distributing stickers which bear the legend "We want to live!" in the various languages in use in the region.

Australia – New Campaign against Thermo-Nuclear Weapons

On August 14th, the New South Wales Peace Council called a special conference at the headquarters of the Teachers' Union in Sydney to draw up plans for a new campaign against the hydrogen bomb and for the security of nations.

Referring to the discussions which took place in preparation for this conference, Peace News, organ of the New South Wales Peace Council, said:

"Recent events raise hopes for peace... But the making of nuclear weapons goes on in several countries at least. This is the most significant pointer to the world war danger."

Preparations for a Second Conference in Defence of the Rights of the Peoples of the Middle East

The Executive Committee of the "Conference in Defence of the Rights of the Peoples of the Middle East" was held in Damascus on July 2nd and 3rd. Those present included: Mr. Zenun Ayub, MP, from Iraq; Mr. Ahmad Abaza, landed proprietor; Mr. Munir Rayes, nationalist figure and journalist; Mrs. Suraya Hafez; Mr. Ahmad Mohaffel, barrister; Mr. Hussein Mruye, writer; Dr. George Hanna, member of the World Council of Peace; Mr. Antoine Tabet, Mr. Salem Dablitz, Sheikh Ahmad Arez Elzein, Mr. Yussef Fayssal, and Dr. Mustapha Amin, member of the Syrian Peace Movement.

The agenda was made up of the following three points:

1. The situation after the Beirut Conference and the possibility of holding another conference.
2. The celebration of Al Afghani's anniversary.
3. The International Meeting in Stockholm.

A wide discussion on the present situation in the countries of the Middle East showed that since the Beirut Conference many attempts have been made to incorporate these countries in military pacts and that such attempts have been met with anger and resistance everywhere. This was made clear during the last electoral campaign in Iraq, by the formation of the National Bloc in Jordan, and by declarations of the Moslem Brotherhood and other national forces in Syria and the Lebanon.

The Executive Committee ended its work by adopting three resolutions which correspond to the most pressing preoccupations of the peoples of the Middle East and reflect their will for peace and national independence. They deal with the calling of the second "Conference in Defence of the Rights of the Peoples of the Middle East", the recommendations of the International Meeting in Stockholm and the organisation of a festival in honour of Jamal El Dine Al Afghani.

Here are the most important parts of the resolutions:

. . . Since the holding of the first Conference (in Beirut, December 19th, 1953 Ed.) growing pressure has been exerted on the countries of this part of the world in order to achieve the projected military alliances under various forms and various names. This pressure has recently been increased with a view to tying our countries to the Turkey-Pakistan Pact, arbitrarily imposing imperialist military and economic aid on them, transforming them into a centre of war and a battlefield and making them the victims of the catastrophe for which they are preparing.

The Executive Committee of the Conference therefore asks all who are united in their hostility to imperialism and their opposition to military alliances regardless of political views and party to co-operate with it in the preparation of a second Conference, in pursuance of the resolutions of the first conference and also to seek solutions to our national problems on a platform common to all—opposition to increased imperialist dangers and positive action to block projects which are a threat to our sovereignty and to peace.

(Resolution on the calling of the Second Conference in Defence of the Rights of the Peoples of the Middle East.)

. . . There is no doubt that the aim of the International Meeting, that is, the relaxation of international tension and the settlement of international disputes through peaceful negotiation, is closely related to our national problems; for the achievement of the desired detente would nullify the reasons the imperialists give for forcing their "aid" and their "military alliances" on us under the pretext of "defence" . . .

(Resolution on support for the resolutions and recommendations of the International Meeting in Stockholm.)

. . . Pursuant to the resolution of the First Conference in Defence of the Rights of the Peoples of the Middle East on the organisation of a cultural festival on the 60th anniversary of the death of the great militant teacher, Al Sayed Jamal El Dine Al Afghani, who is a great figure in the cultural and progressive heritage of our contemporary history, the Executive Committee has thought it necessary to recommend that the preparations for this festival be speeded up and that it be held in Damascus this coming September.

The Executive Committee therefore asks all writers, poets, artists, intellectuals and scholars in the Middle East to take part in this cultural festival and hopes that it will give an impulse to the defence of our national culture and our cultural heritage.

(Resolution on the organisation of the Festival in honour of Jamal El Dine Al Afghani.)

First national Peace Conference in Iraq

The first National Conference of the Iraqi Peace Movement has been held in Baghdad; it was attended by delegates from nearly every part of the country.

The Conference decided to strengthen the campaign for a relaxation of tension in international relations; for the expansion of economic and cultural relations with all countries regardless of their political system; and for the prohibition of the atom bomb and all other weapons of mass destruction.

The Conference condemned the Iraqi Government's decision to accept United States military aid, opposed the creation of military blocs in the Near East and other parts of the world — the Turkey-Pakistan Pact in particular — and demanded that all foreign troops stationed in Iraq should be withdrawn.

Broadening of Peace Movement in Israel 67 new Committees formed

The popular referendum for peace is the foundation on which the consistent activity of the Israeli Peace Movement is based. Important successes have been registered. Already, 67 new committees have been set up throughout the country and the 22 committees which existed before have been strengthened. Up to the first fortnight of July, 27 big mass meetings and dozens of rallies and meetings of the members of the Movement had been held.

Various trends of opinion are going on record in favour of action for peace. The Liberal newspaper Zmanim recently gave the following reasons for the strength of the Peace Movement in Israel:

"a) The Jewish people love peace and hate war for they are its first victims. This desire, which has existed for a long time, was strengthened by the last war in which six million Jews were exterminated."

"b) The watchwords of the Peace Movement are often peculiarly suited to our way of thinking and have always found a way to the hearts of Jewish people. At the same time they have always — from an objective standpoint — been adapted to real current needs. This has been the strength of the Peace Movement — its demands were justified and came at the right time: the prohibition of the atomic bomb; no rearmament of Germany; a cease-fire and peace between Israel and the Arab countries, etc."

"How could we reject them?"

Many personalities, approving the referendum, have stated their desire for peace. Rabbi Shalom Abutbul, one of the most eminent persons in Talpiot (Jerusalem) said:

"Peace is in the interest of our people and of the whole world. Blessed be those who are engaged in this holy work and those that help them."

The referendum organised by the Israeli Peace Movement, the provisional results of which we gave in our last issue, is having great success. The number of signatures had risen from 123,143 to 219,716 by the end of July.

According to a recent communique of the National Peace Council, issued when 152,000 signatures had been collected, the total breaks down as follows:

So far 140,412 citizens all over the country have taken part personally in the People's Referendum and have answered the questions asked in the affirmative, while 11, 875 have collectively supported the demands of the Referendum. Of the personal replies received 33,040 are from Tel Aviv-Jaffa and 18,831 are from Haifa. The Peace Council has called a National Rally of Peace Committees for August 13th in Tel Aviv.

ANTONIN DVORAK

Antonin Dvorak died fifty years ago but his work is more alive than it ever was; it is loved and played everywhere. In fifty years it has gone round the world and won the heart of all peoples by its pure beauty, its depth of feeling, its profoundly national character and by the way it expresses Dvorak's love for his country and for the people.

The whole work of Dvorak shows in the most convincing way that only music which is deeply rooted in the nation can achieve international renown. Glinka's saying: "The people create music, we composers only adapt it", could have been said by Dvorak. He was the heir of Smetana, that powerful personality who, steeping himself in the life and history of his people, succeeded in laying the solid foundations of Czech national music; he, too, believed that the national character of music must spring from popular musical art. He was in intimate contact with the culture of his country and he transposed the melodies and rhythms of popular songs and dances in his compositions. He drew inspiration from, and composed his music to, Moravian popular poetry, Czech, Slovak, Serbian, Lithuanian and Greek popular songs, ballads and tales, gipsy melodies and the psalms in the Bible. Even the subjects of his operas are taken from popular sources — King and Charcoal-burner, The Peasant a Rogue, The Jacobin — or from tales — The Devil and Kate, Rusalka.

All Dvorak's work is popular because the man was naturally so. He was very simple and sincere, he loved all men and nations and liked to meet ordinary people. A biography which came out during his stay in the United States speaks of his "great affection for the songs of the American people, for negro musicians, for the poet Longfellow and for the towns and countryside of America". He was a musician of the people who reached the highest peak of artistic attainment but could say: "I remain what I have always been — a simple Czech musician."

Dvorak's compositions express the wealth of feeling of a pure, noble and profoundly human heart. They express his love of nature, life and truth and his ardent sympathy for people of all nations. Known and admired throughout the world, Dvorak's music has become a powerful factor of friendship between the peoples.

A Good Initiative — The Commemoration of the Cultural Anniversaries

The commemoration of the anniversaries of world-famous figures in art, literature and science is already exerting a wide influence throughout the world. This initiative was launched by the World Council of Peace a few years ago and has gradually won the support of various circles which have no direct connection with the Peace Movement. This is quite understandable, for the homage payed to geniuses who made a decisive contribution to human progress is not only a token of our common gratitude to them for what they have given to all peoples and to all times. It also serves to emphasise that the peoples are brought together and united when they learn to know each other's cultural treasures, of which each is so proud.

Year by year the great anniversaries have been celebrated on a wider and wider scale. During 1954, the great figures proposed by the World Council — Aristophanes, Fielding, Dvorak and Chekhov — have been commemorated in Great Britain, China, France, Canada, Hungary, the Soviet Union, Czechoslovakia, Belgium, India, the United States, Poland, throughout Latin America and in other countries. Further, the coming months will see other important ceremonies held. The commemoration takes many forms: lectures and meetings, exhibitions, concerts, stage presentations, articles and essays on the life and work of these great figures, and so on.

We may be sure that with the generous support of cultural organisations, intellectuals and friends of peace in every country, the commemoration of the cultural anniversaries will become an international event of great importance.

Albania:

A memorial meeting in honour of the great Czech composer Antonin Dvorak was held in the Palace of Culture in Tirana under the auspices of the Albanian Peace Committee and the Albanian League of Artists. The conductor of the Albanian Philharmonic Orchestra, Mustafa Kraute, gave a lecture on the life and work of Dvorak and afterwards conducted a concert of his works. A Dvorak exhibition was also opened in the Palace of Culture.

Similar evenings are being organised in the high schools of the main towns with the co-operation of the pupils of the Tirana Art School.

Great Britain:

An adaptation of Aristophanes' Lysistrata by Professor Ronald Willets of Birmingham University was performed in Birmingham with great success.

Cuba:

Professor Gaspar Jorge Garcia Gallo, member of the National Peace Committee, gave a memorial lecture on Aristophanes at the Las Villas University.

Uruguay:

In Montevideo, the writer José Ruibal gave a lecture on the life and work of Aristophanes.

Paul Robeson files new Application for Passport

In a letter accompanying his new application for a passport sent to the Passport Division of the State Department which for four years has barred him from foreign travel, Mr. Robeson presented photostatic copies of several contract offers he recently received from abroad.

These included an offer for him to play the title role in a new London production of Othello, and a statement by the British Actors' Equity Association unanimously approving the proposal and expressing satisfaction "at the prospect of seeing Mr. Robeson play this part in which he has previously made so striking an appearance."

Another English offer cited was for a concert tour of the country under the sponsorship of the Workers' Music Association, with supporting personal invitations from a distinguished group of British musicians and composers, including Dr. Vaughan Williams and Mr. Benjamin Britten.

Here is an excerpt from Mr. Robeson's letter to the State Department:

"Gentlemen,

"...I am a singer and actor by profession and I have achieved recognition in many foreign countries as well as in the United States. However, my opportunities for performing in the ordinary channels of entertainment in this country have been severely limited, in that opera, drama, motion pictures, the larger concert halls, radio and television have unfortunately been closed to me here. I am one of many American artists who have been thus blacklisted for political non-conformity.

"Consequently the invitation to sing and act abroad is welcomed by me with heightened enthusiasm in that it affords me the only opportunity to practice my profession in conventional entertainment media before large audiences. The value of this opportunity lies in the fulfilment of my artistic efforts and in permitting me to earn a livelihood in my profession.

"Accordingly, I request your speedy and favourable consideration of the within application."

Very truly yours,

PAUL ROBESON

THE KARLOVY VARY FILM FESTIVAL

The international film festival which has been held annually in Czechoslovakia since 1946 — till 1950 in Marianske Lazne, then in Karlovy Vary — has had a well-deserved success from the beginning. The 1954 Festival, which was held from July 11th to 25th, surpassed all the others. It had a fine motto: "For peace, for friendship between the nations and for mankind's noble aspirations", and was notable for the high artistic quality of the films presented and for the spirit of friendship which reigned among the representatives of more than 30 nations.

The European countries taking part were: Albania, Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Finland, France, Great Britain, Holland, Hungary, Italy, Poland, Rumania, the Soviet Union, Sweden and Switzerland. From America, Argentine, Bolivia, Brazil, Chile, Mexico, Peru and the United States sent films. The Asian countries taking part were: China, India, Indonesia, Japan, Pakistan and Viet-Nam.

More than 150 foreign guests were present, including actors, producers, technicians, critics, directors and others from the above-quoted countries and from Afghanistan, Canada, Egypt, Greece, Iran, Ireland, Norway, Turkey and Uruguay. Karlovy Vary gave them all many opportunities to get to know each other, discuss their common problems and become convinced of the need to multiply international cultural exchanges.

Prevented by previous engagements from attending the Festival, Charlie Chaplin sent the President of the Jury a message wishing the Czechoslovak film industry every success.

Inaugurating the Festival, Dr. Vaclav Kopecky, Vice-President of the Council of Ministers and Minister of Culture, expressed himself in these words:

"It is already a well-established tradition that our International Film Festival shows how the film art is measuring up to its tasks, that is to say, to what extent it can solve the most burning contemporary problems, record the efforts, work and struggle of the forces of good and unmask the obscure forces of reaction, stimulate mankind to work for noble aims and teach them to love truth and peace. It is therefore natural that this review of the world's films should always to a certain extent reflect the present international situation... We are proud that from this point of view our Film Festival has won the esteem of the whole world. It does not only seek to appreciate perfection of form and technique in the film. For the first time films are chosen and appreciated for the contribution they make to mankind's struggle for a better future. They are films with other than commercial aims. Other international film festivals in the world have already followed our example."

One hundred and forty films were projected, including 40 features. The Jury awarded a Grand Prize, a Peace Prize for the film which best expressed the idea of peace, a Friendship between the Nations Prize, a Prize for the Struggle for Social Progress, a Prize of Labour for the film which best expressed the idea of work, and various other prizes for each category of film: film biography, the musical, the documentary, the cartoon, and so on. In addition, there was a Prize given by the Czechoslovak Peace Committee.

The Eighth International Film Festival at Karlovy Vary was a great artistic event and a fine contribution to the cause of peace and human progress.

The Prize-winners

The Grand Prize — "The Faithful Friends" (U.S.S.R.) and "The Salt of the Earth" (U.S.A.).

Indian Intellectuals and Workers congratulate Charles Chaplin

A meeting of cultural workers of Madras, organised by the Madras Peace Committee, unanimously adopted a resolution moved by Director K. Subramanian congratulating Charles Chaplin on winning the Peace Prize. Supporting the resolution, Mr. T. V. Sundaram, President of the South Indian Artists Association, referred to Gandhi's meeting with Chaplin in 1934 in London and said that Chaplin's simplicity had attracted Ghandi very much. On behalf of South Indian artists Mr. Sundaram extended an invitation to Chaplin to visit India.

The meeting also adopted a resolution condemning the denial of a passport to Paul Robeson.

The Bengal Motion Picture Employees' Union has also sent a warm message of greetings to Charles Chaplin on behalf of the film workers of West Bengal.

The Peoples of the Middle East Prepare to Celebrate the Anniversary of Jamal El Dine Al Afghani

The celebration, this year, of the 60th anniversary of the writer Jamal El Dine Al Afghani will be an event of far-reaching importance in the cultural life of the peoples of the Middle East.

The aim of leading intellectuals of the Middle East in organising a Cultural Conference on this occasion, inviting writers from other parts of the world, is to achieve not only a meeting of those who want to defend the culture of the Middle East, but also an exchange with cultures different from their own. They also hope to improve the study of national literatures, thereby opposing deleterious influences which are spreading a literature and art foreign to the aspirations of the peoples of the Middle East and exalting hatred between the peoples. The work of Al Afghani is a fine example to these intellectuals who, on a healthy impulse, are rising up to defend national culture.

Jamal El Dine Al Afghani lived in a feudal environment in which all boldness of thought and difference of opinion were severely punished. He had confidence in man and in his ability to shape his own future. He studied the objective circumstances of the life of his compatriots and saw the grievous situation of the common people.

At a time when women were looked upon as the property of the men Al Afghani proclaimed that men and women should be companions and associates with equal rights. He fought for freedom and respect for human dignity. He made long journeys through a number of Middle Eastern countries, familiarised himself with the customs of many peoples and learned their languages. It is for this reason that his work portrays faithfully and with a profound humanity the life of the peoples of the East at this period.

The works of Al Afghani are of great historical value for he was the first man in his country and the countries around who had the courage to express new and progressive ideas. He was followed later on by many other writers and is the originator of the present movement of intellectuals in this part of the world.

In order to ensure a fitting commemoration of this anniversary, the intellectuals of the Middle East have set up — particularly in Syria, Egypt and the Lebanon — initiating committees composed of writers, professors, journalists, artists and others. Arab literary reviews are publishing many articles on the life and work of Al Afghani and are studying the repercussions of his humanitarian and progressive ideas throughout this part of the world.

A Song of Peace

The well-known Soviet composer Anatoli Novikov, who wrote the "Youth Song" has written a new suite, "We Need Peace". It is dedicated to the struggle for peace and friendship between the peoples.

Around the World

Burma

In a statement issued on July 1st, the Rangoon District Committee of the Burma Peace Committee demands the abolition of foreign military bases in Asia so as to safeguard the peace and security of Asia.

The Committee also urges close unity among the Asian nations on the principles of mutual respect for each other's territorial integrity and sovereignty, non-aggression, non-interference in each other's internal affairs, equality, mutual benefit and peaceful coexistence.

Indonesia

In a speech to a crowd of many thousands at Balikpapan, Kalimantan, on July 24th, Mr. Ali Sastroamidjojo, Prime Minister of Indonesia, declared:

"The Indonesian people ardently desire world peace, for it is essential for Indonesia's sovereignty and independence . . .

"War would be a catastrophe for our people. For this reason, Indonesia will make its contribution to the maintenance of world peace and to the well-being and security of the peoples, who suffer from war."

Mr. Sastroamidjojo also pointed out that only if there is peace will Indonesia be able to proceed with construction and other work beneficial to the peoples be done.

Stalingrad—Coventry

The citizens of Stalingrad and Coventry — two cities whose names are famous throughout the world for their sufferings during the Second World War and for the heroism and courage with which they faced them — are planning to send to the United Nations a joint appeal for the outlawing of the hydrogen bomb.

The Soviet press has announced that the people of Stalingrad were very interested in the suggestion that they should join the people of the British city in a positive action for the outlawing of weapons of mass destruction. The workers of the great factories of Stalingrad "express their full support for this proposal by the people of Coventry".

Austria

An international seminar, organised by the International Union of Students, on the subject: "The Ways and Means of Lessening International Tension", has been held in the Knappenhof Hotel amid the beautiful mountain scenery of Raxgebiet-Edlach. Eminent personalities took part in the discussions, including Professor Marcel Ner and Professor Jorgen Jorgensen of Copenhagen University. The following were the main themes of the discussion: "Students and Society", "National Sovereignty and Independence", and "Education, Culture and Science in the Service of Mankind".

On August 6th, the Austrian Peace Council presented the Austrian première of the Japanese film, "Children of Hiroshima", in memory of the victims of Hiroshima.

The Austrian Peace Council also sent a letter to the Government asking it to play its part in the international efforts that are being made to obtain the banning of the manufacture and use of atomic weapons. The letter asks the whole people to support this appeal to the Government.

USSR

In the course of a solemn ceremony in the Kremlin on July 9th the Stalin International Peace Prize was presented to Mme Isabelle Blume, Secretary of the World Council of Peace. In her speech, Mme Blume stressed the importance of working-class unity in the fight for peace.

At a similar ceremony on July 15th, Academician Dimitri Skobelitsin, President of the Jury, presented the Stalin International Peace Prize to Major General Sir Sahib Singh Sokhey, Vice-President of the All India Peace Council. In his speech, Academician Skobelitsin stressed the fact that Major General Sokhey is the second Indian to win the Stalin International Peace Prize.

On July 13th Mr. G. M. Malenkov, President of the Council of Ministers, received Dr. Saifuddin Kitchlew, President of the All India Peace Council.

India

In the district of Amritsar more than 65,000 people have appended their signature or their thumb print to the Patna Peace Appeal.

The signatures were collected throughout the district of Amritsar, at peasants' conferences, Congress Party conferences, conferences against the United States—Pakistan Pact and at peace conferences where the defenders of peace explained the dangers inherent in the hydrogen and atomic bombs.

The Executive Council of the Bombay Branch of the Association of Democratic Lawyers issued an appeal to lawyers, to the people of Bombay and to the whole country asking that August 6th — anniversary of the atomic bombing of Hiroshima — be made a day of solemn protest and struggle for the absolute banning of nuclear weapons.

Germany

A provincial conference of delegates of the Association of the People of the Saar Persecuted under the Nazi Regime (V.V.N.) was held in Saarbrücken on July 11th; it examined the war danger implicit in E.D.C. The Conference stressed the opposition to the Bonn and Paris Agreements and to the rearmament of the German militarists in every country in Europe including Germany, and called for the creation of a united, democratic and peaceful Germany.

The resolution adopted by the Conference demands the ending of war preparations in the Saar, that the atomic cannon be removed from the immediate vicinity of the Saar and the banning of weapons of mass destruction.

Great Britain

In a speech at Newcastle, the Labour M.P. Mr. Anthony Greenwood said: "The triumph of patience and common sense at Geneva is an object lesson for the miserable defeatists who accept the inevitability of the cold war." He went on to say that it was high time to abandon the dangerous plan of rearming Germany and to conduct serious negotiations with Russia on the reunification of Germany.

Mr. Harold Wilson, former Minister of Trade in the Labour Government, said in a speech that the cease-fire in Indo-China shows what can be done when the two sides are animated by a real desire for peace. He added that if such an attitude had been adopted at Berlin it would have greatly helped the solution of the German question and that the Geneva Conference showed what could be done if Great Britain and Russia took the initiative in organising a meeting between East and West.

Denmark

The Right Reverend Erik Jensen, Bishop of Aalborg, declared in a sermon that we must expect further horrors if the German militarists are given arms again, particularly the new and terrible atomic and thermo-nuclear weapons.

"Think of what would have happened if Hitler had possessed them!", he added. "I don't think West German ruling circles have learned a thing. As yet they have shown no sign of repentance for their misdeeds and crimes."

War Preparations an Obstacle to Interplanetary Flight

About 150 scientists from 13 countries attended the Fifth International Astronautical Congress in Innsbruck (Austria). At a press conference before the Congress Professor Hecht and Dr. Dolezal stated that the world is "on the eve of the cosmic age" and that there will be enormous progress in the field of interplanetary flight in the next 50 years. They pointed out that in many countries, unfortunately, the means that could be used for astronautical research are being devoted to secret work in preparation for war, and that is a great obstacle to the exploration of the universe by man.

BULLETIN OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

[Paul Robeson, p-10]

INFORMATION BULLETIN PUBLISHED BY THE SECRETARIAT OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

N° 17 SEPTEMBER 1954

An Imperative Necessity

When the General Assembly of the United Nations meets later this month it will at once face an acute question — the seating of the representatives of the People's Republic of China. From its earliest days the Peace Movement has stood for this principle: and it has done much to build up the present strong public feeling that no great world question can be settled without China.

In September 1953 — to the detriment of peace — it was possible to use the automatic majority in the Assembly to shelve this question for a year. It is urgently necessary to ensure that this does not happen again.

The General Assembly will meet in the presence of certain facts. A peace treaty has yet to be agreed in Korea. The question of Asian security, of military pacts and foreign military bases in Asia, is becoming increasingly acute. The Bikini explosions revealed the frightful dangers of the policy of "strength" which makes imperative an agreement on disarmament and the banning of weapons of mass destruction. All these urgent problems directly affect the maintenance of Peace. On every one of them discussion without China is sterile, settlement impossible.

At Geneva the world saw clearly the practical proof of the effective part which China can play in international negotiations. The forces of Peace achieved a great success. Ever wider circles are realising that instead of cold war it is possible to organise security for all nations despite differences of political and social systems.

On the other hand, others have seen Geneva as a check to their policy and are trying to discount its effects. At Geneva a Korean settlement was frustrated. Since Geneva preparations for a "South East Asia" pact are being rapidly pushed forward. In direct contradiction to the Geneva agreements plans to include South Viet-Nam, Laos and Cambodia in a military bloc are being laid. Vehement efforts are being made to force through E.D.C. More and more, hydrogen bombs and other atomic weapons are being produced as the essential expression of this policy.

Unfortunately a number of influential people in some countries, including some responsible members of governments, still oppose every suggestion that the Chinese Government should be accorded its right to a seat in U.N.O. There is no longer any semblance of a logical argument against this essential step. Instead there is wild talk about using the veto, with empty threats about "walking out" of U.N.O. But the question of China's seat is not subject to a veto: it is a right established in the Charter which can be recognised by a majority vote.

Thus the seating of China in U.N.O. is not only an imperative necessity; it can actually be achieved, so great is the support for this step throughout the world, so weak the basis of the opposition.

But it will not be achieved if those who support it relax and think it will come without a great common effort by all who wish to preserve Peace.

Public opinion helped to make possible the Geneva Conference. It was a decisive factor in bringing about the Indo-China cease-fire. It can also be effective in seating China in the United Nations.

That is why throughout the world national Peace Movements are giving attention to this question at this time. That is why by deputations to Governments, letters in the Press, approaches to other peace organisations and in other ways, special efforts are being made to unite in action all sections of the peoples. The "Asian Solidarity Month" which the All-India Peace Council is organising during September is an exceptionally encouraging example.

Effective action of this sort during the next few weeks can ensure that, at last, the United Nations shall begin to work as it should, with China represented and exerting her full influence as a Great Power in accordance with the Charter.

Throughout the world public opinion is saying:

China must be represented in U.N.O.

"A people of 600 millions cannot be ignored"

FRANCE

To sum up my ideas on China today, Goethe's historic words after the battle of Valmy come back to me. "A new world has been born", he said.

We can see the immense scientific and cultural progress that has been made in the century and a half that has passed since then . . . And when, on the other hand, we consider the immense changes in public opinion and the collapse of regimes which had remained bowed down in ignorance, fanaticism and slavery, I think we can say:

"Our century, too, is seeing the birth of a new world."

China is a large part of this new world, and she will develop rapidly along the road of intellectual and practical labour, the road of wisdom and peace where she will again follow in the footsteps of her immortal philosophers.

In this way she will become once more a great and noble country doing good service in the fraternal interests of mankind. In all work beneficial to human progress France and China must be friends. The foregoing emphasises my desire to see China seated immediately in the United Nations.

M. Forcinal, French Radical Socialist Deputy and Former Government Minister

JAPAN

One of the appeals issued by the National Congress of the Japanese Peace Committee, which was held on July 3rd and 4th, calls for the establishment of diplomatic relations with the People's Republic of China and its admission to the United Nations. Japanese personalities from various circles have set up national and local Nippo-Chinese Friendship Societies and groups for the development of trade with China. Similar organisations exist in the Parliament and the municipal councils.

CANADA

A Committee for the recognition of China was set up in Edmonton on June 29th.

It said it was certain that the majority of Canadians support this cause, that some people saw the hope of a peaceful world in the recognition of China, others the opening of a market for Canadian surplus products, and others again wanted friendly cultural relations with the Chinese people.

The Committee announced its intention to publish a booklet entitled "Recognise China" immediately.

Mr. Mor Cheolin, director of the Chinese Language School in Vancouver, stated that it was wrong to ignore a nation of 600 million people and possessing all kinds of resources.

"... The obligations of membership could be carried out only by Governments which in fact possessed the power to do so. Where a revolutionary Government presented itself as representing a State, in rivalry to an existing Government, the question at issue should be which of these two Governments in fact was in a position to employ the resources and direct the people of the State in fulfilment of the obligations of membership. In essence, this meant an enquiry as to whether the new Government exercised effective authority within the territory of the State and was habitually obeyed by the bulk of the population. If so, it would seem to be appropriate for the United Nations organs, through their collective action, to accord the new Government the right to represent the State in the Organisation, even though individual members of the Organisation refused, and might continue to refuse, to accord that Government recognition as the lawful Government for reasons which were valid under their own national policies."

Excerpt from a memorandum which the Secretary General of the United Nations had prepared in February, 1950.

Jawaharlal Nehru, in a speech to the Indian Parliament

"One of the issues before the United Nations for some time past has been whether the People's Government of China should be accepted there as a member or not. There has been some confusion of thought about this matter when people talk about China being admitted into the United Nations. There is no question of admission of China; China is one of the founder members of the United Nations. The only question that can arise is who represents China. Can anyone say that the present Government of the Island of Taiwan represents China? Factually can any undertaking given by the government of Taiwan be carried out in China? Obviously not. They cannot give assurance on behalf of China. Therefore it becomes completely unreal, artifical, to talk about China being represented in the United Nations or in the Security Council by someone who cannot speak for China, who cannot do anything in China, and cannot affect China. This is one of the basic things which have been levelled against the politics of the United Nations."

The Peace Conference of the Asian and Pacific Regions

Peking, October 2—12, 1952

The Address to the United Nations adopted by the Conference expressly points out that China has the right to a seat in the United Nations and in its Security Council.

Speaking in the discussion, Mr. Louis Wheaton, leader of the United States delegation, said:

"...that the People's Republic of China shall take its rightful place in the United Nations as the true spokesman of the whole Chinese people. Already People's China is recognised by nations that comprise half the human race; how can one speak of the United Nations unless this will of the peoples is recognised?"

NEW ZEALAND

External Affairs Minister Mr. T. Clifton Webb told the House of Representatives that China should be admitted to the United Nations.

This statement was widely welcomed by the Australian press. The "Sidney Morning Herald" pointed out that, in accordance with article 23 of the United Nations Charter, the People's Republic of China must be one of the permanent members of the Security Council. Since the People's Government exercised real control over China, it could not reasonably be contested that Peking's demand was not legitimate since it had, in fact, been recognised by the majority of Asian States and by Great Britain and the Soviet Union among the Five Great Powers.

The "Courier Mail" and the "Telegraph", two Brisbane dailies, supported Mr. Webb's statement in editorials. The "Telegraph" pointed out that by restoring to the Peoples' Republic of China her rightful place in the United Nations the cause of peace could be strengthened.

What the Press is Saying

Appearing on the world scene for the first time, the Peking Government has clearly been recognised, both in Western Europe and in Asia, as the real government of China.

NEW YORK TIMES

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR

The question of China's admission to the United Nations must not be examined from the point of view of reward or punishment, but as a means of best ensuring world peace.

On Eve of Debate in Parliament

French Nation Proclaims its Rejection of E.D.C.

Festivals were held during August to celebrate the tenth anniversary of the Liberation and they gave the French people the opportunity to express forcefully their opposition to German rearmament before the great debate on E.D.C. in the French Parliament.

Wave of Popular Protest

In the Paris area and in villages off the beaten track the people commemorated the heroes of the Resistance in a way which showed how the national energy is being mustered to force rejection of E.D.C.

In response to the slogans issued by the National Council of the Peace Movement by resistance and trade union organisations and by the organisations of the women and young people, French men and women of all points of view affirmed the national will at demonstrations of all kinds.

The people's vigilance was demonstrated at many local and Departmental rallies, by the sending of deputations to elected representatives, by petitions to the President of the Council of Ministers, by factory meetings, and the laying of wreaths at the war memorials.

In a public appeal, 47 personalities who took part in the Resistance said: "All those who fought and suffered for the Liberation from 1940 to 1945, whether they wore uniform or not, will not allow the reconstitution of the Wehrmacht."

The signatories included: the wife of General Delestraint, General Joinville, General Vincent, Colonel Manhes, Admiral Moullec, and the writers Aragon, Louis Martin Chauffier and Vercors.

This has become the pledge of the whole nation.

New Voices are Heard

This broad and growing opposition to E.D.C. has brought about shifts in position in political circles and given rise to new moves, for example, the meeting in Royaumont of a number of political figures who are opposed to the E.D.C. Treaty.

This Royaumont Assembly held several sessions and then issued a declaration which said:

"The present situation in Europe and Germany creates a permanent war danger. Therefore, in spite of past failures, it is necessary to envisage over-all negotiations on a new foundation between the interested powers to study the possibility of a political agreement and the details of European security. An opportunity to do this has been given at the present time. It should be studied, it being understood that a time-limit would be set for the talks . . .

"These considerations justify the rejection not only of the Paris Treaty but of any substitute resulting from purely formal modifications, from the addition of conditional or suspensive clauses. They also justify the appeal that has been made to the French Government and its leader to extricate themselves from the strait-jacket which is being forced on France and Europe and to take with all urgency the necessary steps which can alone produce a real chance of peace."

The Royaumont meeting was attended by Deputies and Senators from the Socialist Party, the M.R.P. (M. Georges Bidault's party), the Radical Party whose President is Edouard Herriot, and the U.R.A.S. which is composed of former members of General de Gaulle's R.P.F. The sessions were chaired by M. Marius Moutet, former Government Minister, and M. Francisque Gay, former M.R.P. vice-president of the Council of Ministers.

HOSTILITY OF FRENCH ARMY

In an interview with the newspaper Combat on August 13th, General de Monsabert, former supreme commander of French troops in Germany, made some very serious statements. Questioned as to the army's reactions were E.D.C. to be ratified by the French Parliament, he said:

"All kinds of reactions are possible! Passive resistance — we had an example of that in 1940 with the 'armistice army' — resignations etc., all that is possible. In any case, no one should be surprised if the French people do not show fervent enthusiasm in assuming an obligation which does not correspond to an ideal firmly rooted in their hearts . . . Behind the drama of the army there lies the drama of the whole nation . . ."

Pastors call on the World Council of Churches to take Action for the Banning of Atomic Weapons

Pastors of the German Evangelical Church have just sent the Assembly of the World Council of Churches, which is meeting in Evanston in the United States, an appeal against the installation of atomic guns in the German Federal Republic.

"As pastors of the Evangelical Church in these districts", they write, "we are responsible for our parishes; this obliges us to speak up, so that the stones may not have to cry out once more. The mere presence of these atomic guns hinders understanding between East and West; their use and the countermeasures that would inevitably be taken would mean nothing less than complete annihilation. We therefore ask the representatives of the world's Churches who have met in Evanston to take action to make the powers remove these atomic guns, the military measures accompanying them and the threat they represent . . .

"We ask the representatives of the world's Churches who have met in Evanston to take action to make the powers of the whole world give up their atomic arms and sign a general prohibition of all atomic weapons . . ."

Protests in Belgium

M. Huysmans, President of the Belgian Parliament, told journalists that he personally had voted against E.D.C. and that he would always be an advocate of all-European talks. He said that serious talks could not be conducted by brandishing a clenched fist. E.D.C. symbolised this fist. He was convinced that the Soviet Union wanted a genuine agreement.

Young Belgians including representatives of Catholic, Social Democratic and students' organisations and members of the international movement for peace and the Belgian Youth Movement have issued an appeal to all young Belgians, asking them to take action for peaceful coexistence, against war and for the establishment of collective security in Europe. The Belgian Committee for the Peaceful Settlement of the German Problem, which includes people of widely differing political opinions, has published a letter to Deputies and Senators condemning E.D.C.

PEACE DAY AND PEACE WEEK IN GERMANY

One of the most striking facts in recent weeks has been the growing opposition of German public opinion to the Bonn and Paris Agreements and its support for a Peace Treaty with a united and peaceful Germany. This movement has reached a new high level.

Both in the German Democratic Republic and the Federal Republic the anniversaries of the first and second world wars were the occasion for a number of demonstrations of different kinds in which the German people gave forceful expression to their will for peace. These demonstrations will undoubtedly ensure a further development of the struggle.

September 1 — "Peace Day" in the German Democratic Republic

The German Peace Council has made public the programme for "Peace Day" on September 1st. Since August 1st — 40th anniversary of the First World War — there have been thousands of rallies, peace meetings and popular festivals in the towns and villages of the German Democratic Republic.

One of the highlights of this campaign will be a friendship rally with 800 guests from Denmark, Sweden and Norway who will arrive in Rostock at the end of August. They are the participants in the Baltic Peace Cruise in the Polish ship, S.S. Batory; they will come to Rostock from Stockholm and Copenhagen and will thereafter proceed to Leningrad. The other highlights are: a choral festival in Wartburg with people's choirs from all over Thuringia; a mass rally in Frankfort-on-the-Oder; and a great popular festival in Berlin with the slogan: "Life will be more beautiful if we have peace."

September 1-7 — "Peace Week" in the Federal Republic

The West German Peace Committee has called for the organisation of a "Peace Week" in West Germany. It will be marked by many rallies, meetings, popular festivals, artistic evenings and excursions to the regions threatened by war preparations.

The collection of signatures to the referendum on E.D.C. is being continued during this period of preparation.

In Hamburg, where the port Peace Committee took the ballot to the port workers, 1915 out of the 2061 who took part (that is 95 percent) opposed E.D.C. and demanded a Peace Treaty.

Growing Opposition to SEATO in Asia

The supporters of the Southeast Asia Treaty Organisation recently declared that they were envisaging the possibility of going ahead without the participation of the countries of Indo-China. This possibility has become a certainty. In accordance with the Geneva agreements, Viet-Nam, Laos and Cambodia will not conclude any military pacts. Everywhere in Asia, even in Government circles, the SEATO project is rousing strong opposition. Here are a few examples:

INDIA

In a recent letter to the Chairman of the Congress Party Committees in the State of Pradesh, Mr. Nehru said:

"Peace can only be preserved by peaceful methods... We in India are sure that peaceful coexistence between countries with different political systems is possible..."

And in his reply of August 12th to a letter from Sir John Kotelawala, the Prime Minister of Ceylon, Mr. Nehru reaffirmed his opposition to the SEATO plan, declaring that he did not think the time was ripe for a meeting of the Colombo States, the more so as a majority of these countries was already opposed to the Southeast Asia Treaty Organisation.

INDONESIA

Mr. Tambunam, vice-president of the Indonesian Parliament, has made a declaration opposing the proposal to discuss the creation of a military grouping in Southeast Asia.

He said that the Indonesian Government would continue to follow its independent policy and that it is therefore opposed to such a pact.

The Executive Council of the Partai Rakjat Indonesia (Indonesian Popular Party) has also rejected the attempts to involve Indonesia in the organisation of the Southeast Asia Treaty. This decision is expressed in a resolution adopted at the fourth session of the Executive Council which recently ended in Surabaya.

The Indonesian press is also voicing strong opposition to this pact. On August 4th, the newspaper Suluh Indonesia declared that Indonesia would certainly not be a signatory of the proposed Southeast Asia Treaty Organisation because by joining it Indonesia would have to abandon her independent policy and join the American bloc.

The newspaper Abadi stated on the same day that all Indonesian political parties are unanimously opposed to joining any military pact that runs counter to Indonesia's independent policy.

Other papers, including Pemandangan and Harian Rakjat express the same point of view.

NEPAL

According to the Indian Information Service, Mr. Regmi, Nepalese Minister for Foreign Affairs, stated to the press on August 7th that he remained opposed to the Southeast Asia Treaty Organisation because, at a time when the cease-fire in Indo-China was being put into operation, it would not help the cause of peace to talk of taking measures to create two blocs of powers in Southeast Asia.

CEYLON

Reuter announced from Colombo on August 12th that Ceylon will not take part in the discussions on the treaty. In agreement with Sir John Kotelawala, the Prime Minister, the Cabinet decided that Ceylon must not take part in the discussions on the organisation of a Southeast Asia Treaty proposed by the Western powers.

Friendly Relations preferable to a Military Alliance says Japanese Public Opinion

The United States plan to form a North-east Asian war bloc including Japan, Syngman Rhee and Chiang Kai-shek is meeting considerable opposition in Japan. A.F.P. reported on August 4th that "the highest authoritative sources" in Tokyo regard the US plan as both "impracticable and undesirable".

The Right wing conservative Japanese paper Yomiuri Shimbun carried an editorial on August 5th entitled "Friendly relations preferable to an unnecessary military alliance". There was no reason, the editorial said, for Japan to involve herself in the already complicated issues of Taiwan and South Korea by forming a military alliance with them.

It was a great mistake to ignore the fact that the armistice in Indo-China had greatly changed the world situation. There was now a better chance of peace by negotiation, the paper said. The projected "alliance" would prove of no gain to Japan but would end up by sowing the seeds of a new war in the Far East.

In a Tokyo dispatch dated August 4th, International News Service said:

"The fear that Japan will become isolated from the rest of Asia has been expressed in many clearly non-Communist circles, including some of the career officials of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and members of the right-of-centre and generally pro-American, Progressive Party."

Their view, according to this report, was that "Japan, by tying its future to American policy, may never establish friendly relations with Southeast Asia nor with Red China." "These countries", I.N.S. added, "are vital to Japan's economy, because it is here that she can expect to overcome her trade problems."

In a message read at the inaugural session of the National Council of Signature-collecting Movements the famous Japanese physicist, Hideki Yukawa, states that to prevent the use of atomic energy for destructive ends the prohibition of atomic weapons should become a universal demand: "As a victim of both the atom and the hydrogen bombs, the Japanese people have the right and duty of undertaking this task".

According to the latest information, the National Council of Signature-collecting Movements has counted 18,900,000 signatures in favour of the banning of thermo-nuclear weapons.

CALCUTTA

The Council opened its session by sending a message of greetings to Prime Ministers Nehru and Chou En-lai supporting the five principles of their agreement.

These five principles are one of the most important bases of the activity of the Indian Peace Movement. According to the reports made at the session, powerful support is being given to the main slogans of the Peace Movement, which deal with such issues as the US-Pakistan Pact and the five principles of the Sino-Indian Agreement.

The main issues under discussion at the Council Session were: the security of nations, with special reference to Asian security; weapons of mass destruction; and economic and cultural exchanges.

The main resolution adopted by the Council called for Asian security, solidarity and co-operation and for a campaign in support of the five principles. The resolution raises the key questions which face Asia today: first and foremost, the question of the seating of the People's Republic of China in the United Nations, and then the questions of Korea, Indo-China and Malaya. The month of September is to be observed as an Asian Solidarity Month, when signatures will be collected and meetings and demonstrations will be held.

This campaign will be devoted to activity in support of the five principles, for they are a basic guarantee of peace and the Asian peoples' solidarity.

The All India Peace Council also decided to give the campaign against weapons of mass destruction special emphasis. The resolution adopted calls for an end to all experiments and for an agreement by the powers concerned not to use these weapons.

Special forms of action were advocated, including meetings of scientists and doctors, signatures, deputations to M.Ps and other representatives of the people.

The Cultural Commission, which was very widely attended by some 1,200 writers, artists and musicians, made a number of valuable proposals for intensifying cultural exchanges and for the development of national cultures: the observing of anniversaries and the holding of festivals, encouragement of cultural exchanges and fostering creative work in the interests of peace. Organisational questions were discussed at the end. Great emphasis was laid on the necessity of using various forms of activity — such as exhibitions, cultural performances and festivals — and not confining the Peace Committees merely to the holding of public meetings and conferences.

The Council decided to call a great National Congress for Peace and Asian Solidarity in Madras on December 30th, 31st and January 1st and 2nd, 1955. This will be the Fourth Congress of the Indian Peace Movement. Since the last Congress the Movement has grown considerably and the Indian people have played an important role in the conclusion of peace in Indo-China. There is, therefore, every reason to expect that this forthcoming Congress will be an important event for the Indian Peace Movement.

All India Peace Council Session

LAUNCHES ASIAN SOLIDARITY MONTH

"The People's Republic of China must be given its rightful place in the United Nations without delay"

The All India Peace Council held its session in Calcutta on July 30th and 31st and August 1st. The session, in fact, took on the character of a national assembly with over 1,500 delegates, observers and guests present at all the main sessions of the Council, and over 50,000 people present at the concluding public rally.

No less than 15 provinces were represented and strong delegations came from other regions to greet the Council and take part in its work. Such was the case with Andhra where the Movement collected 100,000 signatures in one district alone in the course of a fortnight.

Over 170 Trade Unions of Bengal State held meetings and elected delegates to attend this session of the Council. Leading Trade Union figures representing the All India Trade Union Congress, the United Trade Union Congress, and national organisations of different sections of workers played an important role at the session.

The Bengal State Kisan Sabha (peasants' organisation) observed a "Peace Week" in honour of the Council Session and collected several thousands of signatures to an appeal for Asian solidarity.

In addition to the representatives of workers' and peasants' organisations, there were representatives of women's organisations, student's and youth organisations, and cultural and social organisations and clubs.

Of considerable significance was the participation of official representatives of the Indian Medical Association, which is the recognised body of medical men in India.

The Resolutions Adopted

The following are large excerpts from the resolutions adopted at this Session of the All India Peace Council.

On Asian solidarity

This meeting of the All India Peace Council welcomes the growing desire among all sections of the Asian peoples for peaceful cooperation, solidarity and unity...

The peoples of Asia view with alarm the attempts to divide the Asian peoples by forming military pacts such as the US-Pakistan Military Aid Pact and the proposed SEATO. We firmly oppose the measures taken to remilitarise Japan and build hundreds of war bases on its territory. Such attempts by interested powers are aimed at maintaining their colonial rule, thwarting the freedom desire of the peoples of this region and endangering the sovereignty of Asian countries.

The refusal to seat the People's Republic of China in U.N.O. is one of the main reasons for the present tensions in Asia and the world. To ensure peace, the People's Republic of China must be given its rightful place in U.N.O. without delay.

This meeting calls for the early resumption of negotiations for the settlement of the question of Korea. Peace in Korea can be maintained only on the basis of the independence of the Korean people and the withdrawal of all foreign troops from their soil...

We appeal to all sections of the Indian people to join in a united campaign for Asian solidarity and security, based on the acceptance of the Five Principles enunciated in the above declaration...

On Asian solidarity month

The All India Peace Council calls upon all its constituent committees in all parts of the country and all organisations and individuals which support it, to observe the month of September as an ASIAN SOLIDARITY MONTH to popularise the call of the Council for Asian solidarity on the basis of the Five Principles enunciated in the Nehru—Chou-En-lai Agreement.

The Council goes on to suggest the forms of action that the Peace Movement could employ to popularise these principles.

On the Hydrogen Bomb

...An agreement between the powers for the banning and international control of atomic and thermo-nuclear weapons is the only way to remove this menace from the face of the earth...

We call upon all people, all organisations, elected bodies, and religious people to come out openly in protest against the use of the H-bomb. We call upon scientists in particular to resist stubbornly all attempts to use this precious discovery of the human mind for the destruction of man...

The Five Principles

- Mutual respect for each other's territorial integrity
- Mutual non-aggression
- Mutual non-interference in each other's internal affairs
- Equality and mutual benefit
- Peaceful coexistence

Message sent to Prime Minister Nehru and to Prime Minister Chou En-Lai

Fifteen hundred delegates, observers and guests present at the inaugural session of the All India Peace Council held in Calcutta on July 30, welcome the initiative taken by you and Prime Minister Chou En-lai in enunciating the Five Principles of your agreement, which constitute a Charter and which must become the basis of relations between nations all over the world and particularly between the nations of Asia.

The peoples of Asia are growingly aware that no longer can outsiders be permitted to decide and manage their internal affairs, impose military pacts to cover aggressive imperialist intentions and to reinforce colonialism.

The agreement for a cease fire in Indo-China is a great victory for the determination of the peoples of Asia to ensure their national independence and to preserve world peace.

The All India Peace Council and its constituent branches, and all other organisations and individuals which support it, pledge themselves to launch a countrywide campaign in co-operation with all other organisations of the Indian people, for Asian unity and peaceful co-operation, security and solidarity, on the basis of the acceptance of the Five Guiding Principles outlined in your historic agreement with the Prime Minister of China, which has been endorsed by the Prime Minister of Burma.

Message to Supervisory Commission for Cease-fire in Indo-China

The All India Peace Council sends it greetings to the members of the Supervisory Commission for effecting the cease-fire agreements in Indo-China.

We are particularly happy that India has been elected chairman of the commission, which is a recognition of the contribution India has made towards the cease-fire.

The Indian people have hailed the cease-fire in Indo-China as a victory for peace and a triumph for the peoples of Asia and the whole world. It has been demonstrated in actual practice that negotiations can succeed in halting war...

The cease-fire must be followed by a political agreement, which guarantees full independence to the three peoples of Indo-China and their right to decide freely their own form of Government, without the presence of foreign troops on their soil and without foreign intervention in any form whatsoever.

If the United Nations is to realise the hopes the peoples always reposed in it, it must return to the path marked out for it by the peoples since the days of its foundation and, as a first step in this direction, must secure as soon as possible a meeting of the Five Great Powers: the United States of America, the People's Republic of China, France, Great Britain, and the Soviet Union, for the examination and peaceful settlement of current differences . . .

We demand that the problem be dealt with by the Security Council at full strength — that is, including the representatives of the People's Republic of China . . ."

Address to the United Nations
Second World Congress of Defenders of Peace
Warsaw, November 22nd, 1950

It is by methods of negotiation and conciliation that the agreements essential to the peaceful development of the world will be established.

Since such agreements must extend, in particular, to Asia, considerations of justice and a realistic view of international policy require the admission to the United Nations of the Government of the People's Republic of China . . .

Appeal to the United Nations and to the Peoples of the World
Second Session of the World Council of Peace
Vienna, November 1—6, 1951

Negotiations will fundamentally change the course of events. The United Nations can become the instrument of this change by keeping faithfully to the spirit of its Charter. It must admit the countries which have applied to enter. China, like other nations, must be represented by the Government of her choice.

Personalities Give their Views

At the request of the Editorial Board, a number of well-known people have sent the following statements for the Bulletin.

PROFESSOR J. D. BERNAL PHYSICIST (GREAT BRITAIN)
VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

The right of the Government of the People's Republic of China to its place in the United Nations is incontestable in international law.

As the successful result of the Geneva Conference shows, it is certain that once China took its place on the Security Council the way would be open to a peaceful solution of disputes at present embittering the world.

In view, however, of the powerful opposition to this reasonable and just step, it is clear that it will be necessary for peace-loving people in every country of the world to demand it with growing insistence until it can be resisted no longer.

PROFESSOR H. BRANDWEINER
PRESIDENT OF THE AUSTRIAN PEACE COUNCIL

According to the statutes of the United Nations China is a member of the United Nations and a permanent member of the Security Council. Her representation in international organisations and bodies is laid down in public international law which stipulates that, in accordance with the principle of effective rule, it is the government which has real control over a people and country which has the right to send representatives with full powers abroad. In virtue of this principle and in accordance with international law the Central People's Government of the People's Republic of China, with its seat in Peking, is the legitimate government of China and alone has the right to represent its country in the United Nations and elsewhere. As long as its representatives are not allowed to take their rightful place in the various United Nations bodies, particularly the Security Council and the General Assembly, these bodies are not constituted in accordance with the statutes and one has the right to ask whether their decisions can be put into execution without contravening the statutes. Deliberate efforts are being made to confuse this state of affairs and this legal position with the quite different question of the recognition of the Chinese Government by other States. Certain great powers already recognise the Chinese Government "de jure", others have not yet done so. But this must not prevent the United Nations from functioning in the manner laid down by its statutes. When the United States claim that it is up to the Security Council itself to decide which Chinese representatives should sit on the Council, the reply must be made that, according to the statutes, this is not within the jurisdiction of the Security Council.

It is for this reason that — as we said above — the question must be settled in accordance with public international law.

The American Assembly

The American Assembly, a conference of about 60 leaders of business, education and labour which is held every year in Arden House, issued, on August 2nd, a declaration on the country's attitude to the United Nations which contains the following passage:

"We believe that the United Nations should, in principle, be an organisation of universal membership, and that the application of each state for membership should be approached on this basis. The question of what Government should represent China in the United Nations is not, technically, a question of membership, but of proper representation of a country already a member."

The declaration is signed by such people as: Mr. Thomas Watson, chairman of the International Business Machines Corporation, Mr. David Rockefeller, vice-president of the Chase National Bank, Mr. Erwin Canham, editor of the Christian Science Monitor, and Mr. John Cowles, the Minneapolis newspaper owner who was one of Eisenhower's principal supporters in 1952.

Czechoslovakia	Norway
Denmark	Pakistan
Finland	Poland
Great Britain	Rumania

The Stockholm Meeting for the Relaxation of International Tension

(June, 1954)

The United Nations Organisation, whose existence is essential for peace, must be based on a true appreciation of international life, and it must be universal. Therefore, the People's Republic of China and all States which have asked or might ask to be admitted, must be admitted to the United Nations Organisation.

General Resolution

The participants in the Meeting for the Relaxation of International Tension consider . . . that the People's Republic of China must without any further delay take its rightful place in the United Nations Organisation.

Recommendation Adopted by the Political Section

With a view to contributing to the relaxation of the present international tension, the Meeting proposes:

Maintenance of diplomatic relations between countries without regard to differences in their economic and social systems, which is essential for the development of trade relations and trade agreements between nations, as well as membership in the United Nations for all countries willing to accept the obligations of the Charter. In particular it must be realised that no sound development of world trade and world economy is possible without the establishment by all countries of diplomatic relations with the People's Republic of China and without the admission of its representatives to the United Nations.

Recommendation adopted by the Economic Section

China's Trade Relations

In the four and a half years that have passed since the establishment of the People's Republic of China, more than 50 nations all over the world have begun to trade with her. The total volume of her foreign trade in 1953 was six times greater than in 1949, the year of liberation, and was the biggest of any year since 1930.

Besides the trade between China and the Soviet Union and the People's Democracies, which is constantly growing, China has concluded formal trade arrangements or established trade connections with the Governments or industrial and commercial circles of capitalist countries such as India, Indonesia, Japan, Pakistan, Ceylon, Burma, Great Britain, France, Italy, Finland, Belgium, Switzerland, West Germany, Holland, Egypt, Chile etc.

Even trade between China and the United States has not been stopped entirely in these last years. A survey by the American Exporter Publications, the results of which were published on December 10th, 1953, shows that U.S. businessmen want trade with China. This survey covers 576 export managers of firms doing an aggregate international export business of U.S. $ 1,500,000,000. It revealed that 361 of these managers, that is 73 percent, expressed a wish for the resumption of fuller trade with Hongkong. Everyone familiar with world trade knows that business in Hongkong depends chiefly on business with the mainland of China.

Activity of the Hungarian Peace Movement

The Hungarian Peace Committee has sent out 100,000 copies of a questionnaire which asks the ordinary people of Hungary questions like the two that follow:

"What proposals have you for activity that the Hungarian Peace Committee could conduct in order to strengthen peace?", and "In what way, in your opinion, would Hungary's participation in a European system of collective security serve the interests of the Hungarian people?"

Another form of activity is "Peace Meetings". The participants have a friendly discussion on their activity in defence of peace in the sphere of their work.

The campaign conducted by the Hungarian Peace Movement these last few months culminated in a "Peace Week" which was held throughout the country. The Peace Committees organised "Peace Weeks" in many communes, districts and important towns, and varied programmes based on popular customs were put on.

For example, in the town of Szeged a youth peace meeting was held in which several thousand young people took part.

The Austrian Peace Council opposes Soldiers' Meetings

In a press statement the Austrian Peace Council has protested at the calling of two soldiers' meetings in Graz and Ischl for the month of September. They were called by the German Union of Soldiers in Austria, which is led by Kesselring. The announcement of these two demonstrations, organised from West Germany, was received with anger in Upper Austria and Styria.

In this statement, the Austrian Peace Council makes the following demands of the security authorities, especially the Ministry of the Interior:

The Graz and Ischl meetings must not be allowed to take place!

The German Union of Soldiers has no right to organise in Austria demonstrations which endanger our external and internal security.

The H-Bomb is a Diabolical Weapon

Such is the title of a booklet published by the Austrian Peace Council (See photograph).

It is 16 pages long, strikingly illustrated, and ends with an appeal to the Austrian Parliament to demand an agreement between the Great Powers for the banning of the atom and hydrogen bombs. The appeal is filled in by the reader and sent to the parties represented in the Austrian Parliament.

94,000 copies have been printed.

REPLY OF THE VIET-NAM COMMITTEE FOR THE DEFENCE OF WORLD PEACE TO THE SECRETARIAT OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

We received the message of greetings from the World Council of Peace on the signature of the armistice in Indo-China at the very time when our people were joyfully celebrating this victory.

We are aware that this victory is not only the victory of the peoples of Indo-China but of peace-loving people the world over. It is the victory of the Peace Movement, that of the stand for negotiation adopted long ago by the World Council of Peace. It has contributed to the lessening of international tension. It eloquently proves, once again, that all international disputes, including the most serious ones, can be settled through peaceful negotiation.

Now, our people are enthusiastically beginning the work of healing their war wounds by gradually restoring their peaceful life and making preparations for national reconstruction...

We express our heartfelt thanks to the World Council and ask it to convey to all peace fighters our fraternal greetings and our pledge to fight resolutely for lasting peace and for friendship among the peoples.

Manifesto of Lebanese Peace Committee

The Lebanese National Peace Committee issued a manifesto on the occasion of the restoration of Peace in Indo-China. It was well received by newspapers of widely differing points of view, including Al Hadaf, Al Telegraph, Al Yur, Al Sarkha and Al Tarik. Four thousand copies of it were printed.

Here are some extracts:

"Today millions of men and women throughout the world are rejoicing at the ending of hostilities in Indo-China, after seven years of massacre during which thousands of human beings have perished and thousands of old people, women and children have suffered.

"This event, following the ending of hostilities in Korea, has raised mankind's hopes for the establishment and consolidation of peace in Southeast Asia and their hope that the right of all peoples to self-determination will be respected...

"This result is a defeat for the policy of military alliances and a victory for the policy of peaceful negotiation. It means that peaceful negotiation is the best and nearest road to the fulfilment of the peoples' aspirations for national liberation and peace..."

Three Government Ministers come out in Favour of Negotiation and the Banning of Weapons of Mass Destruction

Mr. Rashid Karame, Minister of the National Economy, Mr. Khazem el Khalil, Minister of Agriculture, and Mr. George Hrawi, Minister for Home Affairs, recently showed their desire for peace in statements made to the Peace Movement.

Giving his views on the armistice in Indo-China, the Minister of the National Economy said:

"I believe that no one with any human feeling can be other than grieved when men kill each other... I therefore think that the armistice in Indo-China brings joy to all free men who desire the happiness of their fellow men, apart from any other considerations.

"Nor is there any doubt that the settlement of such questions — the object of a dispute which has led to war — by an armistice is a proof that the parties concerned have begun to think of peaceful means as a way of settling conflicts. It is an ideal method which must be supported and to which we must resort above all others..."

Mr. Kazem el Khalil believes that weapons of mass destruction can be banned:

"After the First World War, the States agreed to prohibit the use of poison gas, and as a result of this agreement gas was not used during the Second World War. It is therefore possible to reach agreement on the banning of atom and hydrogen bombs which are much more destructive and horrible, and to respect such an agreement..."

On the settlement of current disputes he had this to say:

"In my opinion, everything that prevents the spilling of innocent blood is an act of humanity that deserves our support; and it is possible to attain the settlement of conflicts by means of peaceful negotiation..."

Mr. Hrawi, the Minister for Home Affairs, said that he was "in full agreement with those who urge the need to ban the atomic and hydrogen bombs, especially since the hydrogen bomb tests in the Pacific have clearly shown the extent of the damage caused by this destructive weapon..."

Of the armistice in Indo-China he said:

"I was one of those who followed with interest the progress of the negotiations on the question of Indo-China. I therefore welcomed the announcement that the armistice had been signed with great satisfaction, for the slaughter which had made thousands of victims had been brought to an end. I feel that it is necessary to seek a peaceful settlement of all current disputes before conflicts break out and blood flows..."

"SET PEACEFUL COEXISTENCE GOING"

Mr. Richard Coudenhove-Kalergi, president of the Pan-European Union, has issued a statement in which he says:

"The only way of preventing the threatening atomic war is to prevent the third world war. For the cold war will either end in atomic war or in the restoration of world peace. Now, there is only one way that leads to world peace, and that is a Peace Conference between the Western powers, between East and West, between America, the Soviet Union, the Commonwealth, China and Europe...

"We do not want to repeat the tragic experience of the wars of religion; we should have the courage to try and set peaceful existence going before the third world war breaks out..."

September 8—15:

Solidarity with Guatemala Week

The attitude adopted by the military junta in Guatemala as regards the right of political asylum for the political refugees and the illegal proceedings against them have roused great anger among the peoples of Latin America.

Protest after protest at these violations of the law is being sent to the military government in Guatemala.

On July 18th, a meeting was held in the Iris theatre in the Mexican capital. Those present called for continental solidarity against the terror in Guatemala and demanded that the right of political asylum be respected. The meeting, which was chaired by General Heriberto Jara, was prepared by the following organisations: the National Peace Council, the Women's Guatemala Committee, the National Front of the Plastic Arts, the Mexican Democratic Women's Union, and the Solidarity with Guatemala Committee of the School of Plastic Arts.

In his speech Professor Rafael Ramirez, founder of the Mexican School of Agriculture, said:

"We denounce the wave of terror which has been let loose on a brother country. We ask the other nations of Latin America to see to it that at least the right of political asylum is guaranteed to the Guatemalans against whom action is being taken..."

Other speakers pointed out that those who organised the invasion of Guatemala are threatening other Latin American countries, and that the peoples should put a stop to these plans at the same time as they show their support for Guatemala.

The meeting adopted two important resolutions. One of these asks the United Nations to intervene to end the terror in Guatemala; the other asks the President of Mexico to intervene and demand that the right of political asylum be respected.

An Appeal of the Latin American Confederation of Workers

The Confederation of Workers of Latin America has published an important statement condemning the terror in Guatemala and demanding that the right of political asylum be respected.

The Confederation asked the national trade union centres and trade union and labour organisations in general to make a stand in defence of the right of political asylum which has been violated by the military junta in Guatemala and to make September 8th—15th a week of solidarity with the workers of Guatemala throughout Latin America.

The Brazilian Trade Unions

The Brazilian Confederation of Workers has issued an appeal to all workers and trade unions in the country asking them to strengthen their solidarity with the workers of Guatemala.

The Confederation denounces the terror unleashed by the military junta against trade union leaders, and the leaders of peasants', students' and other organisations in Guatemala, and calls on all trade unions to "increase their protests and support the resolution for a Solidarity Week with the Workers of Guatemala, adopted by the Latin American Confederation of Workers".

Polish Ecclesiastics oppose the Hydrogen Bomb

The Polish episcopate has just made public a statement which, referring to Pope Pius XII's condemnation of the use of atomic, biological and chemical weapons, says:

"The whole world is watching with great attention and profound anxiety the latest developments in the field of atomic energy. For, on the one hand, if used positively, atomic energy can have an enormous and beneficial influence on the rapid development of civilisation and culture; while on the other, in the shape of atom and hydrogen bombs, it can bring about the mass destruction of men and the wealth they have created."

This statement is signed by the Secretary of the Polish episcopate, Bishop Zygmunt Choromanski.

"Prevent the Horror of an Atomic War"

The Sao Paulo Peace Committee has just published a 26-page booklet entitled "Fight to Prevent the Horror of an Atomic War". It contains an analysis of the international agreements regulating the use of weapons of mass destruction and of the position of the powers in the United Nations with respect to this question. It also contains the positions of official organisations, the Pope's message, the resolutions of the World Council of Peace and statements by eminent people in Sao Paulo.

The last part of the booklet is devoted to an analysis of the possible effects of an atomic explosion on Sao Paulo and the surrounding districts.

The booklet ends by demonstrating the possibility of using atomic energy for the welfare and progress of mankind.

UNITED STATES

Active Struggle against Thermo-nuclear Weapons Developing

An enlarged spring meeting of the Peace Council Executive Board rallied peace workers from Redding to Santa Cruz. Reports from the areas and plans for future work showed a determination to step up peace work in the face of the H-bomb menace.

"People are ready to respond to peace leadership at this time, and we must find ways to give this leadership", said Peace Council Secretary, Mrs. Betty Winter. The Board agreed that events that have frightened and outraged people beyond anything else in recent years are the H-bomb tests.

Postcards to Eisenhower

The Board voted to throw main energies into one major campaign to send thousands of postcards to President Eisenhower calling for a world-wide ban on the H-bomb. Tables for the sale of the cards could be placed in shopping neighbourhoods, at factory gates and at meetings of labour and other organisations.

Cablegram to Hiroshima

On August 6th the Northern California Peace Council sent the following telegram to Mayor Shinzo Hamai of Hiroshima:

"Congratulations to the Japanese people for your leadership of fight to ban nuclear weapons. We pledge our support. May Hiroshima live in peace."

Churches and Trade Unions

Representatives from 6,000 Congregational churches throughout the United States at the annual convention in New Haven, Connecticut, on June 28th, condemned "careless statements by public figures urging the use of hydrogen or atomic bombs in current disputes".

The Trade Unionists for Peace announces a new leaflet directed to the unemployed, called "A Job with a Future". The leaflet calls for a programme of school and house construction rather than a continuation of the war economy.

A Crusade against the Bombs

The Northern California Peace Council has issued the following slogans:

1) Get the issues of the H-bomb and NO MORE KOREAS talked about through forums, debates, large meetings and small house meetings.

2) Posters and sticky-backs to dramatise the effects of the H-bomb, and present peaceful alternatives.

3) Advertisements in local papers with space for name and address of those who wish to sign appeal to President Eisenhower.

4) Visits and letters to Congressmen and to local government officials, asking them to go on record against the H-bomb tests, and against sending troops to Indo-China.

5) Chain letters to be sent to five names from telephone book.

6) Church people are urged to appeal to their ministers for prayers for the Japanese fishermen.

7) Letters to editors, union papers included.

8) Ask your candidates for public office to take a stand on the H-bomb.

Anniversaries

The Italian reviews Rassegna Sovietica and Societa have decided to organise a joint competition for essays and articles on the works of Anton Chekhov. There are prizes of 100,000 and 50,000 lire for the two best essays and other prizes for the best articles published in the Italian press. The prizes will be awarded on December 31st, 1954.

On the occasion of Chekhov's 50th anniversary it is announced in Moscow that since 1917 there have been 1,015 editions of the various works of Chekhov in the Soviet Union, making a total of 40,000,000 copies. These figures are rapidly becoming out of date, for both the short stories and the plays are continually being reprinted and sell quickly.

INTERESTING MOVE FOR THE RECORDING AND SALE OF SONGS BY PAUL ROBESON

As part of the development of cultural exchanges the Othello Recording Company, whose President is Paul Robeson Junior, has just made an interesting proposal in the United States.

The company has let it be known that it is in a position to satisfy the many requests from foreign countries for record albums of songs by Paul Robeson. The albums would contain his famous songs and one or more songs of the country from which the request came, if desired. The latter would be specially recorded by the great American singer and would be sung as far as possible in the national language.

A recording matrix of these records would also be prepared and sent to the organisation or committee which had ordered the special album, and reproduction would be authorised in the country concerned.

At a time when there is warm support in every country for Paul Robeson's new application for a passport, so that at last he may be able to perform abroad, there is matter for rejoicing in this undertaking which will enable the well-loved voice of this great artist and ardent defender of peace to be widely heard throughout the world.

Czechoslovak Peace Committee presents Film on Dvorak to Israeli Peace Committee

The Israeli National Peace Committee has received the gift of a film on the life and work of Dvorak from the Czechoslovak Peace Committee.

The film, which is accompanied by a short commentary, is particularly suitable for Dvorak evenings in clubs, youth movements etc., where it can be shown to the accompaniment of records or performances of some of the great composer's works.

British Peace Movement honours the Memory of the great Scientist, Joseph Priestley

On the initiative of the Peace Movement, the 150th anniversary of the famous chemist, Joseph Priestley, was commemorated in Birmingham where he spent a great part of his life. The Birmingham Peace Committee organised a public dinner at which Dr. R. L. M. Synge F.R.S., Nobel Prize winner, gave a talk on the life and work of Priestley. Dr. Lilley of Birmingham University and Mr. Douglas Bulgin, member of the Executive Committee of Birmingham Trades Council, also spoke.

Pablo Neruda Celebrated in the Chilean Press

The writer Maria de Lourdes Teixeira, who has just returned from Chile with the Brazilian delegation which took part in the celebration of Pablo Neruda's 50th birthday, has begun to write a series of articles on the personality, life and work of the great poet.

In the first of the articles to be published, she gives her impressions of the celebrations: the impressive scene in the University Hall where Neruda was greeted by the Rector, and the dinner that was given to artistic and literary personalities from all over America and to guests from other countries. Neruda read some unpublished work during the dinner.

Preparations for the Latin American Youth Festival

In the ten countries of Latin America active preparations are now going forward for the Latin American Youth Festival which will be held in Chile in January 1955. An international preparatory meeting was recently held in Santiago, the Chilean capital, and it approved the general lines of the Festival programme. The Festival will take European experience of youth festivals into account and there will be an extraordinary programme of shows, dramatic performances, ballet, concerts of symphonic, popular and folklore music, mass choirs, sports competitions, film shows, poetry recitals, parades of typical costumes, art exhibitions, models showing the different forms of expression of popular art, etc. There will also be round-table discussions between young people who work in the same fields: architects, technicians, workers, musicians, office workers, sportsmen, engineers and writers.

The 200 important Chilean personalities and organisations who are sponsoring the Festival include the following:

Sr. Juan Gomez Millas, Rector of the University of Chile; Sr. Hector Mardones Restat, Dean of the Faculty of Architecture; the conductors Sr. Victor Tevah and Sr. Armando Carvajal; Sr. Patricio Bunster, assistant director of the Chilean Ballet; and the poets Sr. Pablo Neruda and Sr. Cruchaga Santa Maria. Sixteen M.Ps and many painters, writers, sportsmen and members of the liberal professions have also given their support.

Charles Chaplin invited to Visit India

Here is the text of the resolution to Charles Chaplin adopted by the Bengal Motion Picture Employees' Union:

"The film workers of West Bengal organised in the Bengal Motion Picture Employees' Union send their warmest greetings to brother Charlie Chaplin on the occasion of his being awarded the International Peace Prize. The film world in all lands should feel proud on this happy occasion — since this is a recognition of the honest service done by one of the most famous film artists and directors to the cause of world peace, humanity and liberty.

"In this connection B.M.P.E.U. requests the All India Peace Council to convey, on our behalf, a warm invitation to brother Chaplin to visit this great land of ours — as that would help create closer cultural ties with other lands as well as a strong and healthy peace movement among men and women engaged in the Indian film industry."

A meeting of the cultural workers of Madras expressed the same desire and requested Chaplin to "avail himself of the earliest opportunity to visit India and help to strengthen cultural relations between the people of the East and the West".

Tasks of Indian cultural workers in defence of peace were defined at a meeting held in Calcutta on August 1st in support of the Calcutta Session of the All India Peace Council which is reported on another page.

The meeting, which was chaired by the well-known dramatist Sachin Sen Gupta, came to the conclusion that Indian cultural workers have two responsibilities for defending peace:

1) The defence of national culture.

2) Cultural exchanges between different countries.

A committee was set up to discuss the ways and means of carrying out the decisions of the meeting. It is composed of prominent musicians, writers, actors, journalists and other cultural workers.

Italy — Movement for Abolition of Restrictions on Cultural Exchanges

The establishment of close cultural relations between the different countries is the common desire of all peoples. In the recent period considerable progress has been made in this field, but restrictions and obstacles remain to limit the development of rich cultural exchanges. Men of culture and public opinion in general cannot accept such restrictions on the development of mutual understanding and they take every opportunity to protest.

Let us take a few examples from Italy.

The film producer Giuseppe de Santis was invited to the Soviet Union by Soviet cinematographers on the occasion of the showing of his films, It Was Striking Eleven and No Peace Under the Olives which were a great success in the Soviet Union. Yet, after making him wait two months, the authorities still refused to make his passport valid for the Soviet Union so that he could go there. In the review Cinema, of which he is director, the Social Democratic Deputy, Sig. Ariosto, expressed his regret that De Santis found it impossible to take advantage of the Soviet invitation. He added:

"We stand for free, reciprocal cultural exchanges on the widest possible basis, and we are sure that visits such as that of De Santis to the Soviet Union can be instruments of improved understanding between the peoples — irrespective of political differences — and the occasion for beneficial meetings in the sphere of art."

This statement is particularly significant when one considers that its author is a member of the Italian Government and holds the post of Under-Secretary in the Ministry of Transport.

Then the Executive Committee of the Italian-Soviet Friendship Association has just launched an appeal "to men of culture, technicians, members of the liberal professions and workers of all walks of life and political views, warning them of the grave threats to the freedom of culture and the constitutional rights of the citizen . . ."

The appeal points out that serious obstacles are erected between the peoples of Italy and the Soviet Union with the aim of preventing them from making cultural contacts, exchanging experiences and demonstrating their friendship for one another.

The announcement that the Soviet Union was favourably disposed to the resumption of tourist relations with Italy met with a great welcome from Italian public opinion.

"But", the statement goes on, "the Italian Government is opposed to Italian tourists freely visiting the Soviet Union. The same refusal met the Soviet invitations to La Scala of Milan, which was to have given a series of performances in the Soviet Union, and to the football team Roma, which was to have played against Moscow Dynamo (Moscow Dynamo would then have come to Italy to meet Roma, Fiorentina and Inter). The Government refused visas to a delegation composed of some of the most eminent representatives of the Italian film industry and the correspondents of the newspapers Epoca, Tempo Illustrato, La Stampa of Turin, Il Corriere della Sera and Il Messagero.

". . . Such an attitude is in striking contrast with the conduct of other governments in Europe and elsewhere: for example, Great Britain, Belgium, West Germany, India, Iceland, Austria, Argentine, Sweden, Finland, Norway and Denmark. During the first half of 1954 all these countries have several times received Soviet artists. Such an attitude contrasts above all with the new spirit of reason which prevailed at Geneva."

The appeal concludes with the following words:

"Must Italy then give up her ancient traditions of hospitality and civility and remain so far behind in her cultural policy? Is it good for our country to return to a position of cultural autarchy based on mistrust? We ask these questions of all Italian intellectuals and citizens who wish to preserve Italy's good name."

Scarborough — 2,000 Doctors from 30 Countries Exchange Experiences

The Public Health Congress, organised by the British Royal Institute of Public Health and Hygiene, gave rise to a broad and deep exchange of experiences.

The Congress was held at Scarborough on the North Sea coast and was attended by about 2,000 doctors, scientists, hygienists, health inspectors and public health officials from more than 30 countries of East and West. Many problems were discussed in the 14 commissions and sections of the Congress, including the various aspects of preventive medecine and the struggle against epidemics, the protection of mother and child, the therapeutics of mental illness, and so on. During the discussions, which took place in an atmosphere of cordiality and mutual understanding, the doctors stressed the need for mutual co-operation if further progress in the field of public health was to be made. This point of view was expressed by a number of doctors who hold high posts in their respective countries, for example: Lieutenant Colonel Pasricha of India, Dr. Bouvier of France, Professor Khotzianov and Professor Tolysin of the Soviet Union and Dr. Henningsen of Denmark. Dr. Leff from London, Dr. Morgan from Manchester and other delegates spoke of the harmful influence of the present international tension, as a psychological factor, on the human organism.

Dr. P. Penciu, Inspector General of Health in the People's Republic of Rumania and member of the Rumanian delegation, had the following to say at the end of the Congress:

"During the talks we had with many doctors from Asia, Latin America, Great Britain and France we came to understand better the desire of scientists and doctors of all countries to co-operate and to inform each other of their researches and their achievements. There is no doubt that everything that helps to tighten the bonds of friendship between scientists of different countries also helps to strengthen peace and mutual understanding between the peoples."

Cultural Exchanges

EXHIBITIONS

As part of their Peace Conference held in the California Labor School on July 17th, the defenders of peace of North California organised a remarkable art exhibition devoted to the struggle for peace.

A large number of people attended an exhibition of Rumanian popular art held in Glasgow in Scotland. At the ceremony of inauguration the Lord Provost of Glasgow said that this was an opportunity to become acquainted with an art which was devoted to peace; it was really an exhibition of popular art. One of its characteristic features was that not one of the objects exhibited dealt with war or the spilling of blood. The exhibition did honour to the people of Rumania. It brought to Glasgow an element of peace and good understanding; it presented the art of ordinary people.

An exhibition of French 19th century paintings and engravings, together with many sketches by the great black-and-white artist, Honoré Daumier, is being held in Riga. It has been visited by many people.

An exhibition of contemporary Finnish graphic art is being held in Prague in the gallery of the Czechoslovak Union of Writers. It includes lithographs, engravings on wood, etchings etc., by the best modern Finnish artists.

THEATRE

The Moscow Puppet Theatre, which had a great success in France some months ago, gave performances at the London Casino throughout the month of July. The London public and press enthusiastically applauded the art, humour and humanity of the performances, which they had already got to know through the two appearances on television of the theatre's director, Sergei Obrastsov, during a visit to Great Britain last year.

CINEMA

The Republic of San Marino's first film festival was held from July 24th to August 8th. Italy, the Soviet Union, France and the United States were among the countries participating.

SPORT

The Henley Regatta in Great Britain is one of the most important international rowing competitions and attracts an ever-growing number of competitors. This year 18 national teams took part including, for the first time, the Soviet Union which won a number of prizes, the Grand Challenge Cup in particular.

CHESS

After its visits to Great Britain and the United States, which were widely commented on, the Soviet chess team took part in a tournament with the best Swedish players in Stockholm.

Around the World

Ceylon

On July 22nd, Mr. Teja Gunawandenem, Chairman of the Ceylon-China Friendship Association, wrote in the association's weekly organ, "Trine News Magazine":

"At Geneva China won the right to the respect of the whole world. The attitude the United Nations adopts to the fact that neither the settlement of major international issues nor the establishment of world peace are possible without the presence of People's China in the United Nations will enable us to judge whether the United Nations has a right to the respect and confidence of the world."

Great Britain

Two booklets by the Labour M.P. Mr. Ben Parkin have just been published. One is entitled "In Defence of European Peace" and the other "Our Nazi Ally?"

Mr. Parkin writes that agreement with the Soviet Union over the German question is possible. The Berlin and Geneva Conferences showed that it could be attained. On the other hand, the creation of E.D.C. would be a bad solution of the German problem. The arming of West Germany through N.A.T.O. would be even worse. A Germany whose unification and neutralisation were guaranteed by the four powers could ensure peace in Europe and open the way to general disarmament. This solution, says Mr. Parkin, is not only desirable but possible.

Czechoslovakia

At its 20th plenary session the National Peace Committee adopted a resolution which says:

"It is a new and great victory of the forces of peace and creative labour over the obscure forces of war and destruction . . ."

Denmark

A Nordic Peace Congress was held in Aarhus Town Hall and was attended by representatives of the Danish, Finnish, Norwegian and Swedish United Nations Associations. The Congress adopted a resolution which says:

"The armaments race and the catastrophic development of weapons of total annihilation are increasing world tension, and the war danger is causing growing anxiety on the part of the peoples. It is therefore urgently necessary to utilise every possibility of obtaining a relaxation of international tension and attaining disarmament, as is stipulated in the United Nations Charter. This Congress makes an urgent call to the United Nations and the Disarmament Commission to attain a positive result on disarmament as soon as possible."

A number of Senators, Members of Parliament and cultural personalities were present. In addition to Sr. Neruda and Mr. Ehrenburg, the following spoke: Sr. Baltasar Castro, President of the Chilean Chamber of Deputies; Sr. Alfredo de Amesti, President of the Chilean Peace Committee; and Professor Luis Quinteros Tricot, senator.

A very representative delegation of Chilean intellectuals has just gone to the Soviet Union. It includes Dr. Salvador Allende, Vice-President of the Senate and Professor of social medecine; Dr. Graf Marin, agricultural engineer, counsellor on agriculture for the Ministry of the National Economy and Director of the Institute of Agricultural Research of the University of Chile; Sra. Maria Lara Poblete, teacher of physics and mathematics; Dr. Acevedo Vega, a judge in the Court of Appeal; and Sr. Arredondo Urzua, architect, who was sent by the University Council and by the Faculty of Architecture of the University of Chile, of which he is secretary.

Austria

Meeting in Vienna on July 25th, 1954, representatives of resistance and deported people's associations from 14 European countries, including East and West Germany, decided to hold a meeting of all who have fought for their country's independence and human freedom, in Vienna in November.

They issued an appeal which says:

"In view of the fact that the Resistance can not remain silent before the threats to revive German militarism, the delegates present solemnly declare that, putting all other considerations aside, they have but one aim: to work for the restoration of confidence among the nations and peace among the peoples . . ."

The appeal was adopted and signed by delegates from the following countries: the German Federal Republic, the German Democratic Republic, Austria, Belgium, Bulgaria, Denmark, France, Holland, Italy, Luxembourg, Poland, Czechoslovakia and the Soviet Union.

Norway

In response to an invitation from Moscow Municipal Council to its counterpart in Oslo to appoint a delegation to study, among other things, questions relating to communications, the following have been chosen to represent Oslo Municipal Council: Mr. Bull, Chairman of the Municipal Council, and Mrs. Bull; Mr. Stranger, Chairman of the Cultural Committee; Mr. Auden Baastad, Chairman of the Transport Committee; Mr. Storstein, Counsellor for Finance and Mr. Fredrik Schreiner, Counsellor for Communications.

Australia

The Australia—China Friendship Society urges recognition of the People's Republic of China in a statement issued on August 11th.

The statement says that the geographical proximity of Australia to China and her 600 million people is a fixed and unalterable fact, and a dominant one in the shaping of the future of the two countries.

Brazil

On "Trade Day", which is held every year to commemorate the opening of Brazil's ports in January 1808, Sr. Joaô Di Pietro, President of the Sao Paulo Trade Association, gave a press statement favouring the expansion of trade with every country in the world.

The Association's treasurer, Sr. Alexandre Horenstein, stated:

"The traders of Sao Paulo are satisfied with the trade between Brazil and Czechoslovakia, Poland and Hungary. It shows the immense possibilities that exist for expanding the market for our goods."

Burma

Mr. U Nu, Prime Minister of Burma, has expressed the fervent desire that international relations in Asia will improve. He said that if China could take her seat in the United Nations international relations would be improved.

A Fact of Importance!

Commenting on the need to recognise the People's Republic of China and the stubborn refusal of certain circles to entertain this, Professor R. Wright of the Physiology Department of Melbourne University, said:

"If some people do not recognise that the earth goes round the sun, it is nevertheless a fact of importance."

BULLETIN OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

INFORMATION BULLETIN PUBLISHED BY THE SECRETARIAT OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

N° 18 SEPTEMBER 15th 1954

STATEMENT BY PROFESSOR FREDERIC JOLIOT-CURIE, PRESIDENT OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

The efforts of all who are working for peace have won new and great successes.

The rejection of the European Defence Community by the French National Assembly, the result of three years of tireless and growing activity on the part of the French people, has removed the greatest obstacle to negotiation in Europe.

The Geneva Conference has proved that the method of negotiation and mutual concessions enables the most difficult and daunting problems to be solved.

For years, governments, international and national bodies, eminent persons and movements in the fields of politics, social questions and religion have been proposing solutions for the most pressing international issues.

Today, for the first time in twenty years, there is no longer the roar of guns in the world. It is necessary to open negotiations for they can succeed in settling the questions which are still dangerously dividing it.

The atmosphere of decreased tension is favourable to agreement. Once obtained, agreement, even if it is only on a few, definite points, will diminish even further the causes of tension, open up new avenues to peace and contribute to the security and welfare of all peoples and all nations.

World public opinion has exerted great pressure for the relaxation of tension; its action undoubtedly led to the ending of the war in Viet-Nam and the rejection of the European Defence Community.

Public opinion has become aware of its power. Any governments or coalitions which wish to use the pretext of defence to impose peace by force of arms and thus ensure their domination, know that they must reckon with world public opinion. The tasks that lie before it are great: to work for genuine negotiations so as to consolidate peace in Europe and Asia and to turn the governments onto the road of disarmament and the banning of weapons of mass destruction.

The Bureau of the World Council of Peace, meeting in Vienna from September 13th to 15th, will consider the ways in which world public opinion can express itself and take action in favour of negotiation and peace.

THE PEOPLES WELCOME

the final defeat of E. D. C.

AS A FURTHER VICTORY FOR PEACE

The peoples, and in the first place those directly affected by E.D.C., hailed the rejection of the treaty by the French Parliament as a further victory for the forces of peace.

We give below some news items that demonstrate this, together with statements, including one by Sig. Pietro Nenni, Vice-President of the World Council of Peace, on the new prospects opening out before the peoples in their work for peace as a result of this victory.

GREAT BRITAIN

On 1 September the British Peace Committee issued the following statement:

"The rejection of the E.D.C. Treaty by the French Assembly is a great victory for the Peace forces in France and throughout the world. It gives a new opportunity to the Great Powers to find a way of reuniting Germany and ensuring security in Europe.

Yet the danger of a rearmed Germany remains. Those who favour the rebuilding of German militarism are already intensifying their plans to find new ways of achieving their aims.

The British people, who have already shown their opposition to any form of rearmament of a divided Germany, now have an even more urgent task.

The British Peace Committee calls for the maximum effort to ensure that the British Government takes the lead in calling a meeting of the Four Great Powers to seek by negotiation a peaceful solution of the German problem.

BELGIUM

The Belgian Union for the Preservation of Peace has issued a message in which it "warmly greets the French people's victory over the plan to reconstitute the Wehrmacht through the European Defence Community."

AUSTRIA

At a conference of the leading members of the Vienna Borough Peace Committees, held on September 1st, Professor Heinrich Brandweiner, President of the Austrian Peace Council, spoke on the rejection of E.D.C. by the French National Assembly. He said:

"The vote in the French National Assembly rejected E.D.C., thereby making it impossible to rearm West Germany under the camouflage of a "European Army". By doing so, the French people have rendered a huge service not only to France but to all the peoples of Europe and the world and made a fundamental contribution to the preservation of world peace.

"It is a victory not only for the friends of peace in France but for the peace front the world over."

ITALY

The Italian Peace Committee sent the French Peace Committee the following telegram:

"On behalf of an enthusiastic Italien people, we associate ourselves with you in your rejoicing over the great victory won by the peace forces. We shall pursue together the struggle for the unity and security of Europe and for world peace."

In Italy the vote in the French National Assembly was received with many demonstrations of joy and determination.

In Milan, the factories were draped with Italian and peace flags, and the workers held meetings at which they adopted motions calling for the continuation of the struggle.

In Naples, meetings were organised in the various districts...

In Turin, the Peace Committee held a formal public session and there were meetings in the factories.

In Genoa, the workers met and adopted motions addressed to the Government and Parliament demanding a foreign policy based on security and the easing of tension.

In Bologna, there was a stoppage of work while the workers elected deputations to go and demand a new foreign policy from the authorities.

Everywhere, public meetings and extraordinary meetings of the Peace Committees were called.

STATEMENT BY SIG. PIETRO NENNI, VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

Fifteen years ago, Hitler's armies invaded Poland and unleashed the Second World War. It is a most painful memory for all the peoples who endured six years of invasion, the unprecedented terror of a cruel war and of Nazism.

Although Hitlerism was defeated in 1945, peace is not yet assured. The peoples are once more confronted with the same dangers.

But the friends of peace have found the way to stop war and build peace.

The peoples are taking their destiny into their own hands and are increasingly forcing the abandonment of the ploicy of strength and the adoption of negotiated solutions. On this 1st of September, 1954, they have already achieved a Korean armistice and a cease-fire in Indo-China and, through the French National Assembly's vote against E.D.C., they have on their first victory in the struggle against the revival of German militarism. These victories are due to the united action of the peoples and to the co-operation of eminent people who have exerted their influence in favour of national independence and world peace.

Mankind is advancing step by step along the road to peace. It does not vant to see the destruction of Warsaw and the Auschwitz massacres repeated.

The question to be settled now is that of joint security. This joint security alone can open the way to progressive, simultaneous and controlled disarmament. Then Germany, reunited, democratic and peaceful, will no longer be a danger to Europe and the world, and will be able to regain her national sovereignty.

GERMANY

According to the German press Herr Ollenhauer, President of the West German Social Democratic Party, said, following on the failure of E.D.C., that European security and the unification of Germany should be considered as a whole.

He urged the holding of another Four Power Conference on Germany and the creation of a European system in which Germany's position would not be a threat either to the United States or to the Soviet Union.

And Herr Johannes Dieckmann, President of the People's Chamber of the German Democratic Republic stated:

"The real solution of the problems that E.D.C. was supposed to settle lies in a European security treaty."

HOLLAND

The Dutch Peace Council wrote the following to the French Peace Movement:

"All peace-loving people in Holland had great pleasure in learning that E.D.C. had been rejected by the French National Assembly."

United States – Campaigns against the H-Bomb

UNITED-STATES

The H-Bomb . . . or us?

The North California Peace Council has organised a popular ballot on the banning of the H-bomb. It has widely distributed a leaflet entitled: "The H-Bomb . . . or us?" (See photo) which asks the reader whether he agrees with the following four points:

- Big power negotiations to outlaw the H-bomb.
- Big power negotiations to stop all H-bomb tests.
- Big power negotiations to set up a strict system of international control of hydrogen and atomic weapons.
- Big power negotiations to pool information for the development of atomic energy for peacetime.

In this way the various shades of opinion in favour of banning the H-bomb can find expression.

The leaflet also contains a statement by the California Summer Conference of the Methodist Church:

"There is no defence against the hydrogen and cobalt bombs except peace", and another by the California Federation of Teachers (A.F.L.):

"We should let our representatives know we want no more war."

In the leaflet the North California Peace Council says:

"Chemical warfare was prevented in World War II because of international agreement. Big power negotiations can win agreement to outlaw the bomb."

A sticky-back: "Talking is better than dying" has been issued in support of the campaign.

ARGENTINE

Letter to U.N.O. from Doctors of Rosario

In Rosario, the second city of Argentina, a number of doctors have sent a letter to the United Nations asking that atom and hydrogen bombs and all weapons of mass destruction be banned.

The letter was printed in the daily paper, La Tribuna, and aroused great interest. The main signatory is Dr. José Imhoff, Dean of the Faculty of Medecine of the National Coast University.

Other newspapers published interviews with well-known doctors such as Dr. Ernesto Falcoff, who stated that no doctor in Rosario could refrain from taking part in such a move. Dr. Eiris, Assistant Professor of Dermatology in the Faculty of Medicine, who did not sign the initial manifesto said that it was desirable that more messages of this kind should be sent to U.N.O.

In an interview with Por La Paz, organ of the Argentine Peace Council, Sr. Bustos Fierro, a Deputy of Peron's party and the author of a draft law to ban the use of atomic weapons, says:

"If we do not ceaselessly work to enlighten the people and create a real universal awareness which will ward off this terrible danger and force the creation of the technical, legal, social and other instruments for the absolute banning of the use of atomic weapons . . . then mankind and the earth on which they live might well be destroyed . . ."

BRAZIL

Meeting in Sao Paulo

The Humanitarian Crusade for the Banning of the Atom Bomb of Sao Paulo organised a meeting at the end of July. It was attended by many people from political, social and religious circles in the State of Sao Paulo and other parts of Brazil.

In a public statement the meeting asked the Brazilian Government to present a resolution on the banning of atomic and thermo-nuclear weapons to the United Nations, and called on the people to carry on a tireless struggle to this end.

Many priests made public statements which contributed to the success of the meeting. For example, Father Miguel Rizzo junior, Secretary of the Institute of Religious Culture and director of the review Unidas, said:

"Our task as defenders of peace is to oppose war; to create, by the written and spoken word, an anti-war atmosphere and social conscience which will oblige the Great Powers to sign a peace pact and purely and simply ban all weapons of mass destruction."

Furthermore, the Peace Movement in the State of Rio Grande do Sul has issued a petition condemning the H-bomb with the aim of collecting 50,000 signatures. The radio gives special broadcasts twice weekly containing information on the campaign.

Support for the People of Guatemala

The anger aroused in Latin America by the aggression against the people of Guatemala is still being widely expressed. Demonstrations of solidarity are still being held in Cuba, Mexico, Brazil, Argentine and so on, and are being favourably received in certain government circles, as can be seen from the statement by the President of the Republic of Ecuador given below.

MEXICO

Demonstrations and meetings of support for the people of Guatemala have been held in Morelia, Yucatan, Guadalajara, Torreon and Mexico City. They were organised either by the Peace Movement or by the Society of Friends of Guatemala, or by both together.

BRAZIL

A statement expressing the Brazilian workers' support for the people of Guatemala and signed by many people was sent from Barra Mansa in the State of Rio to the Guatemalan ambassador in Brazil.

A number of Deputies of the State of Rio Grande do Sul and Municipal Councillors from Porto Alegre took part in a meeting jointly organised by the Peace Movement, the League for National Emancipation and the Students' Union.

In Sao Paulo, Sr. Campos Vergal, Deputy in the Federal Parliament, spoke at a Conference in the Teachers' Centre of the State of Sao Paulo.

Of the many statements by public figures quoted in the press, we may mention that of Sr. Roberto Silveira which reflects the general opinion. He said:

"All American democrats are at the side of the Guatemalan people in their struggle for their country's economic freedom."

ECUADOR

In a recent statement Dr. Velazco Ibarra, President of the Republic of Ecuador, con demned the aggression against Guatemala and reaffirmed the right of all countries to their national sovereignty.

The statement ends with the following words:

"The fight against subversive ideologies is a strictly national problem and other States cannot be allowed to impose or determine it."

ARGENTINE

The Central Committee of the Movement for the Democratisation of the Argentine Trade Unions has issued an appeal to the workers asking them to promote "a broad movement of support for the people of Guatemala".

In a statement the Argentine Peace Council says:

"Our aims are clear: Guatemala must be given back its full sovereignty and national independence, this being the only guarantee, in the eyes of the peoples of Latin America, including our own people, that they will be respected in future . . ."

SOUTH EAST ASIA'S OPPOSITION TO THE MANILLA CONFERENCE

In spite of the growing opposition of the peoples of South East Asia to the South East Asia Treaty Organisation the originators of the plan decided to hold conservations on the setting up of this military bloc on September 6th in the Philippines. In the words of Le Monde, this Conference is a "very curious cocktail" in its composition, since "South East Asia will only be symbolically represented". Indeed, all the efforts of the initiators of S.E.A.T.O. to bring countries like India, Indonesia, Ceylon and Burma into the coalition ended in failure. These countries did not even agree to hold a preliminary conference to discuss the possibility of their participating.

INDONESIA

Recently, following a number of other statesmen of his country, Mr. Tambunan, Vice-President of the Indonesian Parliament, made a statement opposing the proposed conference in the Philippines.He said that the Indonesian Government would continue to pursue its independent policy and that he was therefore against such a pact.

The Indonesian Minister of Information, Mr. F. L. Tobing, told pressmen that Indonesia was not interested in S.E.A.T.O. Indonesia would not join the projected organisation in any form whatsoever, he said, and consequently would send no observer to the S.E.A.T.O. conference.

INDIA

Opposition to this military treaty is the main subject of comment in the press.

Amrita Bazar Patrika writes in an editorial that the conversations on the setting up of a South East Asia Treaty Organisation are threatening signs that the West is determined to keep up the tension in this region. It urges the Colombo Powers to refuse immediately to take part in the conference at which it is intended to set up S.E.A.T.O.

The Bombay daily, the Free Press Journal, writes that the United States have failed in their pressure tactics to make Southeast Asia accept S.E.A.T.O.

The Urdu daily, Assam Tribune, points out that the S.E.A.T.O. project is nothing more nor less than a direct invitation to war.

The Allahabad paper, Leadere, states that the military alliance will aggravate international tension as a prelude to war.

The National Herald and the Deccan Herald stress the fact that the S.E.A.T.O. project will rudely disturb the atmosphere of peace brought about by the cease-fire in Indo-China.

The Hindustan Standard says that India's position regard to S.E.A.T.O. is clear. Instead of creating an atmosphere of peace and mutual understanding, such an alliance would directly involve the countries of Southeast Asia in the cold war strategy.

Finally, the Bengali daily, Amanda Bazar Patrika, writes that the proposal to call a conference for the purpose of discussing a project such as S.E.A.T.O. is without rhyme or reason at the present time and in the present circumstances.

NEPAL

Apropos of the conference in the Philippines for the creation of a military bloc in Southeast Asia Mr. Regmi, Nepali Minister for Foreign Affairs, stated that Nepal had no intention of sending its soldiers into a war, especially if it was a war against their Asian brothers.

He added that Nepal welcomed the refusal of India and other Asian states to be incorporated in military blocs proposed by the West.

CEYLON

Strong opposition to Ceylon's joining the Southeast Asia Treaty Organisation was voiced in the Ceylonese Parliament on August 4th.

Mr. R. G. Stephen Senanayake, former Minister of Commerce and Trade, asked in the course of the debate why the need for a S.E.A.T.O. should arise at this stage when the world was at peace.

Former Prime Minister Dudley Senanayake said that Asia's paramount objective should be the "preservation of peace".

Mr. C. Suntheralingam, Independent, asked the Prime Minister to repudiate S.E.A.T.O.

Mr. S.W.R.D. Pandaranaike said that any country participating in S.E.A.T.O. would have to "toe the American line". He urged that Ceylon enter into bilateral agreements with neighbouring countries on the basis of the five principles enunciated in the Sino-Indian pact.

In reply, Prime Minister Sir John Kotelawala said that he would work to maintain the neutrality of Ceylon and would call a meeting of the Colombo powers to discuss joint action.

BURMA

Mr. U Nu, Prime Minister of Burma, declared that the Burmese Government refused to join the conference in September to discuss the formation of a Southeast Asia military bloc. He made this statement in a cable sent to the Prime Minister of Ceylon, Sir John Kotelawala, on August 4th.

Military Pacts

"a Camouflage for Colonialism"

The President of the Egyptian Council of Ministers has recently declared that Arab peoples would not take part in a Middle East pact together with the big Western powers because, as he said, "Our people look on such an organisation as a camouflage for colonialism."

Let us recall in this respect the position taken up by the Executive Committee of the Conference in Defence of the Rights of the Peoples of the Middle East which recently met in Damascus and which was attended by public figures from Syria, the Lebanon, Jordan and Iraq.

"Confronted by the immense danger contained in these alliances, pacts and conventions", said the Executive Committee's Manifesto, "we quite clearly feel the need, more than ever before, of a wide and united national struggle to put a stop to all war plans . . ."

Israel - Appeal to Scientists and Intellectuals

The Israeli Peace Committee has issued a special appeal to scientists and intellectuals, public organisations and the Government asking them to support the Peace Movement's demand for the banning of atomic and hydrogen bombs. The appeal says:

"The Israeli Peace Committee specially invites scientists, teachers in technical schools, writers and intellectuals, the Israeli Medical Association and all public organisations in this country to speak out in the press and in public against these horrible tests and against the infinite danger which will face mankind if the hydrogen bomb tests are continued and if this weapon is not banned by an international agreement."

Posters against the Hydrogen Bomb

In Tel Aviv and Jaffa the Israeli Peace Committee has distributed big posters bearing authentic photographs of the Bikini H-bomb tests and the demand that the tests be stopped and that these weapons be banned by an international agreement.

They met with the approval and lively interest of the people.

The signature-collecting campaign organised by the Israeli Peace Movement is going from success to success:

296.367 signatures

had been collected by August 13th. The same day, a National Rally of Peace Committees opened in Tel Aviv. It was attended by 3,000 delegates and guests from 131 towns and villages throughout the country.

First NORTH GUJARAT Peace Conference

The one thousand year old historical town of Visnagar was the meeting place for the First North Gujarat Peace Conference. Delegates from the three North Gujarat districts of Mehsana, Banaskantha, and Sabarkantha attended the conference. They included Shri Purshottam Patel and Shri Chavda, members of the Legislative Assembly of Bombay; Shri Sankalchand Patel, ex-President of the District Congress Committee; and Shri Natavarlal Pandit, ex-member of the All-India Congress Committee.

Messages were received from the Madras Peace Committee, the Punjab Peace Committee, Dr. Sumant Mehta, Shri Yashvant Shukla and others.

Shri Ravishankar Raval, leading Gujarati artist and member of the World Council of Peace, presided. The opening speech was given by Shri Indulal Yagnik, President of the Gujarat Peace Committee, President of the All-India Kisan Sabha and member of the World Council of Peace.

Five resolutions were adopted. The first resolution welcomed the Nehru-Chou En-lai meeting and their joint statement. It appealed to Prime Minister Nehru to take the initiative in convening an Asian Conference. Another resolution condemned the hydrogen bomb.

The Conference formed a North Gujarat Peace Committee.

The Conference was followed by a largely attended public meeting where speeches concerning the problems of the Peace Movement were made.

September 1—7

"PEACE WEEK"
in the Federal German Republic

September 1—7 was "Peace Week" in West Germany. First reports on the organisation of the Week and the demonstrations that took place show that it was a success for the peace movement.

Thirty-eight carefully prepared public meetings were held in the province of North Rhine-Westphalia, particularly in the big towns: Bonn, Duisburg, Aachen, Cologne, Gelsenkirchen, and so on. Most of these meetings were made more attractive by artistic programmes, in which groups from the German Democratic Republic took part.

In Hamburg, the demonstrations were accompanied by theatre and film shows and a sea trip.

In the province of Baden-Württemberg a number of organisations collaborated closely in the preparation of a demonstration called "Peace Hour"; they included the "Community for Peace", the "Happy Holidays Club", the "Union of Germans for Peace and Freedom" and others. Their plans also included seven big demonstrations with the participation of the Thuringian cultural ensemble; several evenings of discussion in Heidelberg and Mannheim; a boat trip, a film show, etc.

The "German Youth Labour Community" of Nuremberg issued an appeal approving the organisation of the "Peace Week". The appeal asks German young people to give their full support to the demonstrations organised on this occasion.

On the initiative of the Mörfelden Peace Committee a ballot was held in the area on August 15th. Of the 1,247 people consulted, 1,199 were in favour of a peace treaty and only 13 voted for E.D.C.

Dr. Joseph Wirth, the former Chancellor, the Reverend Kurt Essen, Herr Klemens Kraienhorst, secretary of a Shop Stewards' Committee, and Herr W. von Ameln, a landed proprietor, spoke together at a meeting in Duisburg which was organised by the "Movement for Peace and the German People's Right to Self-determination". The resolution passed by the participants demanded the conclusion of a peace treaty and asked the Government to heed the will of the people who were opposed to E.D.C.

The World Council of Churches, which has recently held its General Assembly at Evanston U.S.A. expressed its attitude to armaments in the following words:

"The banning of all weapons of mass destruction, including the atom and hydrogen bombs, and international control to ensure the implementation of this ban, together with a large reduction of all other kinds of armaments."

The motion also demands "that no country should commit aggression or subversive acts against another country, nor should it support aggression."

It urges the countries of East and West "to continue negotiating" and "to seek ways of avoiding fear and suspicion".

The Austrian Peace Council's Campaign for the Banning of SOLDIERS' MEETINGS

At a conference attended by representatives from 32 factories, members of Shop Stewards' Committees and trade union leaders, together with representatives from the press, Professor Heinrich Brandweiner, President of the Austrian Peace Council, presented telling facts about the organisation of so-called soldiers' meetings in Austria by circles in West Germany.

These documents were published in the Österreichische Friedenszeitung, organ of the Austrian Peace Council, at the same time as they were presented to the public. They included the "Information Bulletin of Artillery Regiment 112", signed by former Wehrmacht general Kreppel (who is at present living at 14., Bayreutherstrasse, Schnaittach-Lauf, West Germany), in which we read:

"It is our first attempt to organise a big meeting in Austria . . . Let no one be afraid of the great distance . . . Compared with the distances we covered in the East for five years, it is nothing . . . Graz has special attractions for many comrades, even if it is a little far for Germans from the Reich . . ."

The orders signed personally by this former general of Hitler's army prove that the soldiers' meeting which was to have taken place at Graz was organised by the Association of German Soldiers of West Germany, commanded by Field Marshal Kesselring. Other documents prove that the same is true of the Bad Ischl meeting which it is planned to hold on September 11th and 12th. There will be no less than four former Hitler generals at this meeting, including the all too well-known Commander of the Steffel Division, General Theisen.

The Austrian Peace Council's campaign for the banning of these soldiers' meetings, which make propaganda for annexation and encite to war, has met with a big response from public opinion. A delegation of Shop Stewards from the big factories of Lower Austria went to Upper Austria on August 28th to ask the mayor of Bad Ischl and the Upper Austrian authorities to ban the Bad Ischl meeting. The same day, a delegation from the Free Austrian Youth Movement held a poster parade in front of the Ministry of the Interior demanding the banning of soldiers' meetings. They carried birch crosses with helmets on them to remind people of the hundreds of thousands of Austrians who fell in the war. The Graz Democratic Women's Association has called on all women to join a silent march on September 2nd to protest against the proposed meeting in favour of annexation.

In the Catholic periodical Die Österreichische Nation, which is published in Salzburg, Dr. Adolf Merkl, Professor of Public Law, has written an article in which he says that the holding of meetings of Austrian and German soldiers is incompatible with the interests of the Austrian State.

British People Express Growing Opposition to re-arming a Divided Germany

Campaign for World Security Developing

Following on the British Peace Committee's appeal for 'special urgent action' on the German problem, reported in a recent issue of the Bulletin, have come many new reports showing how strongly opposition to rearming a divided Germany is growing in Great Britain.

Six different trade unions with a total membership of half a million, including railwaymen, shale miners, Jewish bakers, and firemen, have tabled resolutions against German rearmament for discussion at the annual Trades Union Congress this month.

The Weavers Amalgamation, comprising a number of cotton trade unions with a total membership of over 88,000, has passed a resolution opposing German rearmament.

For the forthcoming Annual Conference of the Labour Party 58 resolutions have been tabled on German rearmament; of these 56 oppose.

Recently the secretary of the Committee for the Peaceful Solution of the German Question, Mr. John Elton, announced that he had received an invitation from the Speaker of the East German Parliament for a Labour delegation, saying 'in view of the claims that we are rearming, come and see for yourselves'. Among M.Ps. who accepted the invitation were Mr. Frank Beswick and Captain Mark Hewitson.

Ex-Servicemen have been active in recent weeks campaigning against any attempt to rearm West Germany. In connexion with their campaign the Ex-Service Movement for Peace published a special issue of its Newsletter devoted to this question. This special issue contained a form to be cut out and posted to Sir Winston Churchill saying:

"I am convinced that NEGOTIATION is the only way to solve the German problem and that the rearming of Germany will lead to World War III. I urge you to take the initiative in calling a Big Four Conference to negotiate a German Peace Treaty and the reunification of that country. I urge you to abandon your support for E.D.C. or the granting of sovereignty to West Germany."

The Idea of the Easing of Tension is progressing in Parliamentary Circles

(From our special correspondent)

The annual conference of the Interparliamentary Union was held in Vienna from August 26th to September 2nd. Eminent members of parliament from 37 countries took part; they came from countries with different social systems and represented different ways of thinking.

To show the importance the various Parliaments attach to this meeting, we need merely mention a few names:

M. Gillon, President of the Belgian Senate; Herr Ehlers, President of the Bundestag in the Federal German Republic; Mr. Ronai, President of the Hungarian National Assembly; Senator Wiley, Chairman of the United States Senate Foreign Affairs Committee; Mr. Kulichev, President of the Bulgarian National Assembly; Sig. Macrelli, Vice-President of the Italian Chamber of Deputies; Mr. Simitch, Vice-President of the Federal People's Assembly of Yugoslavia; and a number of other eminent parliamentary figures. M. Georges Picot, Assistant Secretary General of the United Nations, also took part in the conference.

This makes it all the more important to note that at this great meeting of parliamentarians, apparently so heterogeneous, where the supporters of a policy of strength were unrelenting in their activity, not only were voices raised in favour of the peaceful settlement of international issues but resolutions were adopted which would be likely to lead to such a settlement. For example, the conference rejected an amendment which put forward the demand made by certain circles for the abolition of the unanimity rule in the Security Council, and pointed out that the United Nations could not be made to work better by "overthrowing the guiding principles of its creation".

In response to the demand, expressed by certain speakers, that the People's Republic of China take its rightful seat in the United Nations, the resolution adopted gives an indirect answer by stating that the United Nations "will only be able to fulfil its mission by coming as near as possible to universality". A Hungarian amendment was adopted calling on the parliaments of the world to intervene and get their respective governments to support the admission to the United Nations of the countries that have demanded to be admitted. The conference also called on the governments to seek "ways and means of banning the manufacture and use of atomic weapons". Several delegations supported the proposal of Senator Rolin of Belgium on the possibility of concluding without delay a convention pledging the signatory States not to use atomic weapons and to refrain from testing them.

Some delegates emphasised in their speeches the need for peaceful coexistence between countries with different ideologies. Mr. Chand of India, for example, said that since it is the mission of the United Nations to establish contact between peoples who hold different views, it is a capital error to exclude China. Mr. Osborne of Great Britain stated that he was highly pleased by Mr. Attlee's trip to Peking. Mr. Elwyn Jones, also of Great Britain, emphasised that the People's Republic of China ought to be in the United Nations and that "the transformation of U.N.O. into an anti-Communist bloc would be the end and the negation of the United Nations". Mr. Finn Moe of Norway, Senator Rolin of Belgium, Mr. de Perera of Ceylon and other delegates expresed the same point of view, while a number of others demanded the banning of weapons of mass destruction. "The security of the peoples cannot be ensured if atomic weapons are not outlawed", declared Sra. Parodi from Argentine. Mr. Terao of Japan demanded the banning of atomic weapons and tests, and proposed that the conference should help further the peaceful use of atomic energy. "Recourse to discussion is much more efficacious than any atomic bomb", said Mr. Chand of India to loud applause.

"There are no disputed issues that cannot be settled through negotiation", said Mr. Mihalyfi of Hungary.

There is one irrefutable conclusion to be drawn from the Vienna meeting of the Interparliamentary Union. This conference, which reflected the views of certain parliamentary circles in a large number of countries, showed that the idea of the relaxation of international tension and peaceful coexistence which the people support is making progress in this sphere.

A Victory full of Hope...

The Press Service of the French Peace Movement has been good enough to send the Bulletin of the World Council of Peace a description of the atmosphere that reigned in France at the end of August.

These few lines will give some idea of the wide and intensive activity through which the people of France achieved the great victory of the rejection of E.D.C. by the National Assembly.

Writing in July, we said: "It is a month that will count in the struggle for peace." We are tempted to say the same of this rainy month of August 1954. August 1954! on the last day of which the Peace Movement won one of its finest victories: the rejection of E.D.C. by the National Assembly.

After the vote the Prime Minister M. Mendès-France said: "It is possible that eighteen months ago the decision would have been in favour of E.D.C. I don't know." Nor do we! But what we do know is that during these eighteen months no effort has been spared to persuade the members of Parliament, one after another, to reckon with the country's will.

An even greater effort has been accomplished during this month of August, in spite of the holidays; all available forces have been thrown into the battle.

From the most distant villages letters were sent to the M.P.s; joint appeals signed by people of all points of view were issued. Hundreds and hundreds of meetings were held throughout the country.

Le Figaro of August 31st published the following eloquent figures:

"In the last three days nearly 500 deputations have besieged the doors of the National Assembly: 200 on Saturday, 160 on Sunday and 140 yesterday."

Yes! Frenchmen of all points of view came in their thousands to inform their M.P.s of their opposition to the Bonn and Paris Agreements.

Ten bus-loads from the Pas-de-Calais, two from the Alpes Maritimes, two from the Bouches-du-Rhone, one from Isère, one from Charentes Maritimes, one from the Haute-Garonne, and so on... Factory, miners' and railwaymen's deputations were particularly numerous and stood for hours round the Palais Bourbon.

At the headquarters of the Peace Movement we were able to have discussions with several of them, particularly the deputation from the Dordogne. It was composed of M. Boucharel, Socialist County Councillor; M. Rousseau, Departmental delegate of the R.P.F.; M. Peron (Communist); M. Paillandier, President of the Radical Federation of Bergerac; M. Mangel, of the Peace Movement; M. Germain, District Secretary of the "Young Republic" and an ex-member of the M.R.P.; and Dr. Dupuy (Socialist), Vice-Chairman of the County Council. The deputation brought with it 80,000 signatures, including those of 150 mayors and 20 county councillors, of whom 14 were Socialists, two were Communists, two were Independents and two were Radicals.

That explains a lot... For example, why all the deputations were received at the National Assembly and at the Quai d'Orsay, and why it was impossible for the protagonists of E.D.C. to postpone the debate.

We must also mention the rallies which were held during these last days of August in Lyons, Toulouse, Grenoble, La Rochelle, Angouleme, Chaumont, Nice and other towns, and which were attended by thousands and thousands of people.

There was not a single empty seat at the meeting which was held in the Vélodrome d'Hiver in Paris on August 27th, and thousands of people stood to hear the speeches. All present will undoubtedly remember the powerful rendering of the Marseillaise which brought them to their feet and the never ending cry of "E.D.C. shall not pass!" which resounded through the hall.

A great deal of work was also done to persuade mayors to oppose E.D.C. quickly before the debate opened in Parliament. Within a few days, 100 municipal representatives of the Department of Loiret, 116 mayors of Saône-et-Loire, 40 mayors of the Côtes-du-Nord, the mayors of two cantons of Gironde and others, went on record against E.D.C.

L BY THE FRENCH PEACE MOVEMENT ON THE REJECTION OF E.D.C.

of German Rearmament once for all • Build Security in Europe

During the debate there was a non-stop flow of deputations to the National Assembly to ask the Deputies to reject E.D.C.

The workers of France played a great role in the struggle against E.D.C. which went on throughout the month of August. Their actions often included strikes. This was the case on building jobs and in factories in the important centres of Gennevilliers, Gentilly, St. Ouen, Vitry, Orly and so on in the Paris region.

The dockers of Dunkirk, Boulogne, La Pallice, La Rochelle and Bordeaux, and the miners of Hussigny and Audun-le-Tiche in the Eastern coalfields also stopped work.

Stoppages also took place in many towns in the provinces, as for example Marseilles, Belfort, La Rochelle and Dunkirk.

STATEMENT

STATEMENT BY THE STANDING COMMITTEE OF THE NATIONAL COUNCIL OF THE FRENCH PEACE MOVEMENT

The National Assembly has rejected the European Defence Community which would have ratified the domination of Western Europe by German militarism and prepared for war.

This historic vote conformed to the will of the French people who irresistibly opposed one of the gravest dangers that the nation has ever known. It is an encouragement to the peace forces in Germany and the whole of Europe. It heightens our country's prestige in the world.

With the achievement of the cease-fire in Indo-China and the rejection of E.D.C., two of the main objectives put forward by the Peace Movement in these last years have been attained. We owe it to the magnificent united movement which succeeded in rallying the vital forces of the nation.

The Peace Movement gratefully salutes the tens of thousands of men and women — modest fighters for a noble cause — whose patient work made the people of France understand the gravity of the danger and organised their action. It thanks all who contributed to these victories by their individual activity or by joining in the common struggle. It asks all to continue to serve together the cause of peace and independence.

Unity in the struggle remains more necessary than ever in order to eliminate finally the continually renewed threats to rearm Germany in one form or another.

It is clear to Frenchmen of all points of view that the reconstitution of a German army, whatever screen is used to mask it, would accentuate the armaments race, aggravate the division of Europe and hinder the much needed negotiations between the great powers.

The claim that this rearmement is inevitable is a sheer attempt to deceive the French people.

In view of all the treaties she has signed, France has a great role to play as one of the Five Great Powers recognised by the Charter of the United Nations. Her interests are closely bound up with the ending of the cold war and the maintenance of peace in the world.

She can with authority support the peaceful moves which alone can enable the settlement of the German problem, thereby ensuring the security of all the countries of Europe including Germany. She can herself put forward proposals for the organisation of collective security and assume responsibility for a new effort to reach agreement as soon as possible on general and controlled disarmament and the banning of weapons of mass destruction.

The French people will enthusiastically support all acts towards this end on the part of the Parliament and Government.

Paris, September 3rd, 1954

"We want a peaceful Europe; we want a place in it for Germany just as we want a place in it for Russia . . .

"You will not find peace by looking for it along the road to war . . .

"We do not want a solution by rearmament or superrearmament, we want a solution to be found for a united Europe, the whole of Europe, and not a Europe composed of five or six powers . . . We want peace by peaceful means and not by the rearmament of certain countries . . .

"I prefer the guarantee contained in four power agreements to the compromise of a six power Europe . . .

"I will have nothing to do with E.D.C.; I want a rapprochement with Germany and with all the other countries of Europe, based on other principles . . .

"I don't see what opposition can be put up against the idea of Europe, the whole of Europe united."

(Excerpts from the speech of M. Edouard Herriot, Honorary President of the French National Assembly, in the debate which resulted in the rejection of E.D.C. — August 30th, 1954.)

As the debate goes on in the National Assembly, we want to reaffirm that the rearmament of Germany in any shape form would — prevent for years the reunification of Germany and the establishement of peace throughout Europe, and — deliver up France to a coalition in which, as Brussels showed, she would find herself isolated and overpowered.

Nothing, not even a skilled diplomatic manoeuvre, justifies the taking of such risks and such a surrender. There is no alternative to E.D.C. other than negotiations on Germany and an inter-European agreement.

We ask the French Parliament and Government to take the initiative in making this supreme effort for peace by inviting all interested countries to give details on the conditions of negotiation.

(Statement by a group of eminent people including M. J. M. DOMENACH, editor of the review Esprit, Pastor ROSER, the writer VERCORS and M. J. VITOUX, a leader of the Catholic youth movement — August 30th, 1954.

Among the public figures who went on record against E.D.C. on the eve of the debate in the National Assembly were:

M. Francisque GAY, former Vice-President of the Council of Ministers (M.R.P.).

M. Léon NOEL, ambassador.

M. Jean RATY, President of the Iron and Steel Works of Longwy.

General WEYGAND.

General DE GAULLE.

The Count of PARIS, the pretender to the French throne and others.

Activities for Peace

The Peace Movement in Bulgaria

The Bulgarian National Peace Committee is doing intensive propaganda work under the watchword: "The peaceful settlement of differences through negotiation."

This work takes various forms, enabling all sections of the people to play an active part in the activity of the Peace Movement in Bulgaria.

For example, the National Committee is organising peace meetings at which a short report is given, after which those present ask questions on the present development of the Movement. They are generally followed by an artistic programme. Such meetings were held, in the Tirnovo district in May, attended by 15,000 people; in Sliven, at which more than 30,000 were present, in Stara Zagora, with more than 40,000 participants, and elsewhere.

The local peace committees are also successfully organising "Peace Evenings". In the Houses of Culture or in private houses — especially in the countryside — women meet in the evening and, while knitting or doing embroidery, they discuss current questions in the struggle for peace. This form of work has brought a great number of housewives into the Movement.

During the harvest season supporters of the Movement take advantage of the rest hours to inform the peasants of the Movement's activity throughout the world.

The local peace committees in Bulgaria play an active part in sporting events which are all held under the banner of peace. Banners and peace prizes are awarded to the winners.

The Bulgarian Committee has made a great effort to improve the publication and distribution of leaflets and booklets devoted to the struggle for peace. More than 20 booklets have been published, together with portraits of eminent figures in the World Peace Movement, special bulletins, plays and so on.

Popular Discussion and National Day in Finland

In October 1953, there began in Finland a great "discussion of the Finnish people on negotiations, independence and peace", organised by the Peace Movement. Folders containing statements by eminent Finns and the National Peace Movement's appeal to the Government to support the principles of the peaceful settlement of international differences and of free cultural and economic exchanges were printed and distributed. The people and organisations could either support this statement or put forward their own proposals for activity in favour of peace. The "discussion" went on until the early months of 1954. Nearly 2,000 meetings were held and they were attended by more than 100,000 people.

The popular discussion made it possible to organise a "National Peace Day" in Helsinki on February 22nd. This day, which was a real peace congress, was organised by the Finnish Peace Movement and the Union for Peace (Finnish United Nations association). It was attended by 1,738 delegates and observers from all over the country.

The resolution adopted demanded negotiations to put an to the wars going on, for the peaceful settlement of the German question, the banning of atomic weapons and disarmament, and for the development of economic and cultural exchanges.

An Important Step towards Unity

On the evening of February 22nd, the Peace Movement's Committee for Cultural Exchanges held a great festival in honour of the national epic, the Kalevala. Forty thousand people attended.

The National Peace Day was an important event in the history of the Finnish Peace Movement. It was not only the greatest meeting the Movement has so far organised; it was also an important step towards uniting all the country's forces in defence of peace.

The national discussion did not stop on February 22nd. After the atomic tests in the Pacific, petitions forms bearing the texts of a letter to the United Nations and a letter to the Finnish Government demanding that measures be taken for the banning of atomic weapons were distributed among the people or submitted to meetings. Both the individual signatures and the collective votes were sent to the United Nations and to the Finnish Government.

Finnish Peace Movement's Plan of Work

The activity of the Finnish Peace Movement took special forms during the summer period, such as the organisation of summer fêtes, participation in the Baltic Peace Cruise and so on. And the Movement is already preparing its Autumn and Winter campaigns.

The development of the international situation and recent events in Finland — the signature of the commercial treaty with the Soviet Union, the joint declaration of the Finnish and Soviet Governments, and the visit of a Finnish parliamentary delegation to the Soviet Union, etc. — have created conditions which will enable the Finnish Peace Movement to broaden its action and strengthen its organisation.

On September 4th, anniversary of the armistice between Finland and the Soviet Union, a campaign was launched for the collection of signatures under the text of a letter of greetings to the World Council of Peace.

This will strengthen the campaign for negotiations, for the prohibition of atomic weapons and for collective security in Europe. It will enable the Finnish Movement to make its work and the results obtained more widely known.

Leaflets and Sticky-backs in Portugal

At the present time there is a broad and growing movement of protest against the H-bomb in Portugal. Under the impulse given by the Peace Movement it is reaching circles and public figures who have hitherto refrained from taking a public stand in favour of peace.

Recently, for example, a number of personalities sent the President of the Republic a message in which they declare that they support all moves "to bring about international negotiations which would enable the latest weapons of mass destruction to be abolished and, in general, prevent recourse to war".

The message was signed by the writers Sr. Joao de Barros, Sr. Casais Monteiro, Sr. Cardoso Pires, Sr. Aquilino Ribeiro, Sr. Vespeira, Sr. Branquinho da Fonseca; the scientist Sr. José Blank Portugal; General Ferreira Martins; the sculptor Vasco da Conceiçao; Professor Vieira de Almeida; the painters Julio Pomar and Luna de Freitas; and the writers José Marinho, Fidelino de Figueiredo, Ferreira de Castro, Carlos d'Oliveira, Fernando de Azevedo, Antonio Sergio and others.

The Portuguese Peace Movement has also done much to acquaint the Portuguese people with the proposals of the World Council of Peace in favour of the relaxation of international tension and the peaceful solution of differences between nations.

During the last few months thousands of copies of the resolutions of the Berlin Session of the World Council of Peace have been put out and sticky-backs bearing slogans such as "Demand Negotiations!" and "Peace is the only Civil Defence!" have been spread throughout the country.

The aggression against Guatemala has aroused a wave of anger which took the form of letters of protest against foreign intervention in Guatemala, demonstrations and the distribution of leaflets.

Portuguese public opinion is showing great interest in the campaigns of the Portuguese Peace Movement. The peasants, in particular, are becoming more and more aware of the relation between their economic difficulties and the burden of armaments expenditure.

Meeting against the H Bomb in Ireland

A meeting against the H-bomb was held in Belfast on August 8th on the initiative of the local Committee of the Irish Peace Campaign. It adopted a resolution calling upon "political, social, trade union, religious and cultural organisations to consult together, both nationally and internationally, on how best to obtain an agreement by the respective Governments to prohibit the manufacture and use of all weapons of mass destruction".

The speakers at the meeting included a British M.P., the Chairman of the Irish Trade Union Congress and the Chairman of the Belfast Trades Council.

The meeting was an immense success and press comment was favourable; the Belfast and Dublin press in particular carried detailed reports of it.

The Experiences of the Italian Peace Movement in the Struggle against E.D.C.

The Italian Peace Movement's campaign for international negotiation and against E.D.C. passed through a number of stages.

In the first stage the Movement was practically alone in holding this point of view; large sections of public opinion did not consider it to be of pressing importance, and the supporters of E.D.C. strove to keep the public in ignorance of the content and the texts of the treaty.

Because of the political situation, it was impossible to submit the treaty for ratification in Parliament, at least straight away.

This was undoubtedly a first victory for those who wish to bring about a relaxation of international tension and who are resolutely opposed to E.D.C., in view of the intention of the treaty's supporters to submit it for ratification without giving anyone a chance to set public opinion on its guard.

Great care was taken to keep the text of the treaty from the public, and so the Italian Peace Committee's first task was to have it printed and to have many thousands of copies distributed with a simple introduction explaining this omission on the part of the Government.

The publication of the text was accompanied by booklets, leaflets, posters and wall newspapers containing excerpts from and commentaries on the articles of the treaty. Short films showing the possible consequences of the ratification of E.D.C. were also made and proved to be extremely good publicity among the peasants. During this first period the best arguments were: the preservation of national independence and sovereignty and the danger of German rearmament. The actions of the local Peace Committees went on at the same time as the commemoration of the tenth anniversary of the Resistance, and often they even became part of the organised ceremonies.

In spite of the efforts of the supporters of E.D.C. the people were put on their guard and began to be alarmed at the threats to peace and Italian independence contained in the project.

Debates with supporters of E.D.C. were organised. Often, speakers, even European federalists, taking part in the debates without knowing the real content of the treaty, opposed E.D.C. when they learned the clauses of the treaty in the course of the discussion.

E.D.C. and European Security

The second stage opened in April 1954, with the tabling of the project in the special commission of the Chamber of Deputies.

The supporters of E.D.C. could no longer keep silence. All organised political forces were forced to take a stand. At this stage, the peace committees continued to put emphasis on the arguments of national independence and the threat to Italy contained in German rearmament. But when these arguments became the theme of other organisations the Peace Movement was more and more able to concentrate on the themes peculiar to it: the easing of international tension and the struggle against the division of the world into opposed military blocs. In this framework, one argument stood out, that of unity and European security.

The Soviet proposals for a security pact at the Berlin Conference laid the foundation for particularly fruitful actions, which were, quite naturally, related to the campaign for the banning of the H-bomb in which the Italian Peace Movement had just had important successes.

At the last Federalist Congress Sig. Parri, former President of the Council of Ministers, and one of the most respected founders and leaders of the Federalist movement, openly broke with the policy of the movement and made a clear stand against E.D.C., which he had formerly supported. Along with him the whole Unita Popular group and many constituency leaders of the Social Democratic Party went on record against E.D.C. Even among the Christian Democrats and the Catholic Action organisations more and more people began to express reservations about E.D.C. which was not able to get past the Special Commission of the Chamber of Deputies.

Geneva and Brussels

Meanwhile, the Geneva Conference and the ending of hostilities in Indo-China came to strengthen and stimulate the campaign against E.D.C. and to provide it with new arguments. Through the initiative of the peace committees, the people in cities such as Milan were informed of the ending of hostilities in Indo-China by the blowing of factory hooters. In others, leghorn for example, balconies were draped with peace flags. Everywhere meetings and rallies were held on the initiative of the peace committees. The line laid down by the National Committee was as follows: agreement was reached at Geneva because the principles of peaceful coexistence and respect for national independence and sovereignty were accepted as a basis for negotiation. Why not adopt the same principles in seeking a settlement of European problems? Besides, the failure of the Brussels Conference brought further proof of the correctness of these principles. The National Committee summed this up in the following words:

"At Geneva, agreement was reached between belligerent powers which were furthermore divided by great differences in their respective political systems, because the principles of peaceful coexistence were accepted as a basis for negotiation. At Brussels, even though it was meeting between governments with the same political system, agreement was not reached because the negotiations were based on the principles of the division of Europe into opposed military blocs."

The organisational methods employed throughout the campaign were very varied. They included mass meetings, meetings for different sections of the community, village meetings, factory meetings, public debates, deputations and so on. In Italy these methods are distinguished by what one might call their "capillary action"; in the most diverse ways they bring the slogans and actions of the Peace Movement right into the families, the blocks of flats and the small farms.

How the Peace Movement works in Cosenza

Here is a concrete example: the work of the Cosenza Departmental Peace Committee during the month of July. This is an agricultural district in the South of Italy.

The Departmental Committee organised 54 mass meetings in the parishes with its own speakers, as well as organising, public meetings with local speakers elsewhere. In addition, the Committee, together with other supporting bodies, organised a series of demonstrations against E.D.C. designed to reach particular groupings. The Department of Cosenza is one of those in which a beginning has been made on agrarian reform and there is a very active association of peasants who have received allotments of land. During July the Departmental Committee organised 30 meetings of the local committees of this association, 30 general meetings and 60 meetings against E.D.C. on the farms. In the same way, in conjunction with the Small Landowners' Association, 30 local committee meetings and 40 general metings were organised. With the Co-operative Association, 30 Executive Council meetings and 20 general metings of the co-operators were arranged. The trade union organisations, of course, played their part in this activity. There were 100 meetings of trade union branch committees or Trades Councils, 100 trade union meetings and 100 factory and job meetings. Lastly, ten local committee meetings and 20 general meetings were arranged with the women's organisations; in the case of the youth organisations the figures were 60 and 80 respectively.

Furthermore, the Departmental Peace Committee put out a lot of publicity material and co-ordinated the actions against E.D.C. which were conducted jointly with the parties supporting the Peace Movement. The Italian Socialist Party, for example, made a big contribution to the struggle in this Department during July by organising 50 branch committee meetings, 60 branch meetings, a one-day Departmental rally and mass meetings.

APPEAL TO THE WORLD'S CINEMATOGRAPHERS

We have already described in these pages the brilliant film festival which was held recently in Karlovy Vary. We are now happy to be able to publish the appeal to the world's cinematographers which was adopted by the guests and film workers of every kind before they parted.

The appeal runs:

"We cinematographers from 29 countries who have met at the Eighth International Film Festival at Karlovy Vary, after seeing many films from many countries and having once more had an opportunity to see the progress the film industry has made in serving the cause of peace and the independence of the peoples . . .

"Note that a great deal has been done to put the idea of the expansion of international relations into practice. Yet much remains to be done.

"Film workers throughout the world! In the name of the freedom, independence and happiness of the nations and in the interest of the future development of the film art . . . put your whole strength unreservedly at the service of peace! Use your art to increase the possibility of settling all questions through negotiation and agreement. Support the nations' struggle for social progress. Wherever we may live and make our films, we all of us bring the victory of peace nearer through our work. Let us do away with the mistrust which has been artificially created between the nations and establish bonds of friendship!"

Exchanges

A delegation of Italian agricultural technicians went to Moscow during the month of August to visit the Agricultural Exhibition which has been opened in the Soviet capital. They were invited by the Soviet Ministry of Agriculture. The delegation included Professor Mario Bandini, President of the Ente Maremma (a company for the distribution of land in the Maremma region); Professor Orlando of the Institute of Agrarian Economy; and Professor Roberto Milletti of Perugia University.

It may be remembered that the East Berlin Opera Company recently gave some very well received performances in Paris. In return, the Paris Opera Ballet is going to Berlin on September 12th. After its stay in Berlin it will tour the main towns of the German Democratic Republic.

The French National People's Theatre is about to leave for a tour of Canada where it will give a series of performances during September. It will then go to Poland where it will put on a number of plays — including Don Juan, Le Cid and Ruy Blas — between October 4th and 20th.

The Progress of International Scientific Co-operation

From the point of view of the future of culture there are encouraging things in the present international situation; one of them is the number of scientific congresses which have been held in different parts of the world during these last few weeks. They were attended by people working in very different fields — haematologists, astronomers, psychiatrists, gynaecologists, philosophers and physicists — but they all had one common feature: they were the meeting-ground of scientists from nations which differ not only in their geographical, historical and linguistic characteristics, but also in their social systems. By exchanging their views and experiences, the delegates from East and West gave a practical demonstration of the fact that peaceful coexistence is not an illusion but a practical proposition.

And not only practical. It is also a valuable proposition, a source of great benefits for the whole of mankind.

It is easy to prove this statement. Very often, especially when the enemies of peace sought to divide the world into irreconcilable blocs, the finest minds were alarmed, and not without reason, at the great harm inflicted on science and culture in general by this artificial division.

Fortunately, those who tried to sow discord between the nations did not succeed in overcoming the will of the peoples. The persistent struggle of the Peace Movement and all who want to put an end to international tension succeeded in restoring contacts which seemed to be at breaking-point. Cultural relations are being resumed, as is proved by the much more widely representative nature of the scientific meetings mentioned above.

Who would dare to deny the advantages of such an ecxhange of experinces, methods and results between the most qualified experts of different countries? How could one possibly underestimate the benefits the peoples would reap from this co-operation?

We may quote a few recent examples. Psychiatry has made great progress during these last years, but it is very uneven and the lack of knowledge of discoveries made in certain countries creates serious obstacles to progress in others. Quite recently, nearly 2,000 psychiatrists from 54 countries met in Toronto in Canada. They included a large number of very famous specialists whose contributions caused observers to consider this Fifth International Congress of Psychiatrists the most important and most fruitful that has been held to date. The same could be said of the International Cancer Congress which was recently held in Sao Paulo in Brazil. There many reports and informative statements were made and theories advanced which will certainly make it easier to combat this terrible scourge in future. We may presume that the Haematology and Blood Transfusion Congresses which are soon to be held in Paris will give similar results.

Professor Joliot-Curie recommended such exchanges in his opening speech at the Congress of the Peoples for Peace in December 1952. He said:

"Science is without doubt the sphere of human activity which provides the most striking examples of the immense benefits mankind could enjoy through the free circulation of ideas and free travel. No discovery has been made anywhere that was not the happy result of combined work carried on in different parts of the world and without knowledge of which on the part of all concerned the discovery would never have been made.

"The progress of Science — and hence that of civilisation — requires the free diffusion of scientific information. This does not only concern the specialist; it is of the greatest concern to the general public."

The steps that have been taken in this direction since then are an obvious progress, but they are only the beginning of the real scientific collaboration desired both by the scientists and the peoples.

No friend of peace, no man of culture must be sparing in his efforts to make it a splendid reality.

CONGRESSES and MEETINGS

The International Congress of Gynaecology, which was held in Geneva at the end of July and the beginning of August, was attended by 1,600 doctors from various countries. For the first time, a delegation of Soviet doctors took part in the discussion.

The reports put forward at the International Cancer Congress, which was held in Sao Paulo in Brazil, were followed very attentively by medical circles throughout the world. Some of the participants, such as Dr. Charles Huggins, Professor of Surgery at Chicago University, and the members of the Soviet delegation, gave press conferences at which they described the research they are doing and the results they have obtained to date.

The Fifth International Astronautical Congress was held in Innsbruck (Austria) during the month of August.

A delegation of ten Soviet orientalists, led by Professor Gruber, took part in the International Congress of Orientalists which was held in Cambridge, Great Britain. at the end of August.

The Fifth Annual International Congress of Psychiatrists opened in Toronto on August 14th. A number of preliminary conferences had been held to prepare the discussion themes: mental hygiene in childhood; the relations between industrial mental health and public mental health; alcoholism. Two thousand eminent specialists from 45 countries of East and West took part in the meeting.

Sport, that close Bond between the Peoples

The European athletics, swimming, rowing and other championships have recently been held in a number of countries — Italy, Holland and Switzerland, for example. It was noticeable that interest in these events was greater than ever before and that amateurs followed them with much more enthusiasm. Why? One of the main reasons is that they were really all European, many countries took part and there were no unfortunate and ridiculous exclusions. And so the Scandinavian, British, French and Italian champions were able to compete with their Soviet, Hungarian and Czechoslovak counterparts. Because the athletes were able to meet regardless of the political systems of their respective countries, these championships were intensely interesting. Each winner had to beat the best of the whole continent.

This greater scope was the distinguishing feature of the celebrated Olympics in Helsinki two years ago and it is becoming more and more characteristic of the various international sports competitions. All who love sport — and they are the overwhelming majority of the people in every country — find only gratification in this state of affairs. There is no doubt that sports meetings are becoming more interesting nowadays: competition is hotter, the athletes have to prepare themselves better and put more into it. As a result, there has been a great improvement in performance recently compared with only a short time ago. Records have been beaten right and left, and the new figures have astounded the specialists.

We have mentioned some of the purely technical advantages from the point of view of the development of sport. But, from the point of view of the improvement of the international climate, the advantages are also great. For these meetings have above all enabled sincere bonds of friendship to be established between the sportsmen of different nations, they have helped to dissipate the fear that has been sown between the peoples and have done much to create a better mutual understanding. In sport, the only things that count are competition and healthy, fraternal rivalry. When the contest is over, the friendship born of this fruitful large-scale contact continues and grows stronger. The great popularity of sport everywhere gives added importance to its role as a real bond between the peoples.

However, much remains to be done. One could wish that there were no exclusions or discrimination of any kind at any sports meeting. Fortunately, the People's Republic of China will be able to take part in the next Olympic Games in Melbourne, but admission is still refused to other countries, such as the German Democratic Republic. Furthermore, it would be a good thing if sporting contacts between different countries were not limited to championships and the sending of official delegations. All clubs, big or small, which have anything to do with physical culture, should be able to take part in these exchanges. Clearly this does not apply only to professional athletes. In every country, thousands and thousands of people devote their leisure time to sport, either in sports clubs or in workers' and students' associations. They, too, should, in various ways, be able to enter into relations with their fellow sportsmen in other countries and meet them in friendly competitions. This international athletic brotherhood too needs to be developed on the widest scale, so that it is shared by millions of sportsmen and lovers of sport.

There is another aspect of the problem that merits careful examination — the exchange of delegations of journalists, critics, and leaders and representatives of sport. Some time ago the Soviet Union, for example, invited sports writers from various Italian daily newspapers and, more recently, a delegation of the leaders of French sport. These visits have had good results as is shown by the statements made by both delegations on their return. Is there any reason why the number of such visits should not be increased and why they should not be reciprocal?

The World Council of Peace has frequently stressed the importance of exchanges in the sphere of sport. Those who support it have done valuable work in improving these exchanges and they know that by working even harder along these lines they will succeed in making sport one of the closest bonds between the nations.

This is a message addressed to the scholars and orientalists of the world by Iranian students on the occasion of the thousandth anniversary of Avicenna which was commemorated by the Iranian Government at the beginning of the year.

Let us recall that in 1952 the great philosopher's anniversary was celebrated internationally by an ad hoc World Committee on the initiative of the World Council of Peace.

The Great Anniversaries

INDIA

The Cultural Section of the All-India Peace Council organised a meeting in Delhi in honour of Anton Chekhov; it was attended by many intellectuals, artists and writers. Writers, critics, poets and journalists and the Soviet ambassador to India spoke. There was a small exhibition of photographs of Chekhov.

Other literary associations have celebrated the anniversary. Various newspapers have published articles on his life and work, particularly periodicals in the various languages of India such as the Urdu monthly literary review, Shahrah, and the Hindi Weekly Hindustan.

Three dramatic groups will present one-act plays by Chekhov this month.

In addition, the Indian Radio broadcast a special programme of recordings of works by Antonin Dvorak on the anniversary of his death.

GERMANY

At a ceremony in memory of Dvorak in Dresden, Dr. Eberlein, a member of the Secretariat of the German Peace Committee, stressed how important the commemoration of the cultural anniversaries is for the strengthening of peace and friendship between the peoples. The Dresden Philharmonic Orchestra then performed some of Dvorak's famous works.

Similar ceremonies have been held throughout the German Democratic Republic. The life and works of Dvorak have been dealt with at length in many newspapers and periodicals, and the Ministry of Culture, in collaboration with the German Peace Committee, has published a booklet entitled In Memory of Anton Dvorak.

A Chekhov memorial evening has also been held in the Maxim Gorki Theatre in Berlin. After a lecture by Herr Wolfgang Dübel, a staff member of the Slav Institute of the Humboldt University, the actors of the Maxim Gorki Theatre read several of Chekhov's short stories — Vanka Sadness, Corporal Prishibieieff — and then acted scenes from The Seagull and The Cherry Orchard. The evening which ended with a musical programme, was highly appreciated.

The Hans Otto Theatre Company is also on tour giving performances of two one-act plays by Chekhov — The Bear and The Proposal.

URUGUAY

During a broadcast celebrating the ending of the war in Indo-China, during which Sr. José Luis Massera, Secretary of the National Peace Council, gave a speech, the drama group of the Uruguayan National Broadcasting Company acted scenes from Aristophanes' comedy The Peace.

BULGARIA

A Dvorak Memorial Concert has been held in Sofia. After the opening speech by Academician Nadjakov, President of the Bulgarian Peace Committee, and a lecture by the musicologist Veneline Krestev on the life and work of the great composer, the Sofia Philharmonic Orchestra gave a concert of Dvorak's best known works.

Similar memorial evenings have been organised in the main towns of Bulgaria.

In addition, the Bulgarian daily newspapers and periodicals have published a series of articles on Dvorak and there have been a number of radio broadcasts on the life and work of the Czech composer.

Around the World

Holland

In a statement to the Dutch people, the Executive Committee of the Peace Council says:

"Now that peace has been restored in Asia, European security is more than ever the centre of attention and struggle. As long as the plans to revive German militarism are not abandoned . . . the security of Europe and of Holland will be in danger."

The Committee therefore considers that "the conversations between the powers interested in the German problem must be resumed as soon as possible".

The Committee also demands a substantial reduction in military expenditure.

Egypt

In an interview with the periodical "U.S. News and World Report", Colonel Nasser, Prime Minister of Egypt, expressed his astonishment that the United States have not yet recognised China.

"China is a reality they will be forced to recognise, and that will be a step forward towards the ending of the cold war", he said.

Brazil

Commenting on the possibilities of trading with the Soviet Union and the countries of People's Democracy Sr. José Floriano Toledo, Vice-President of the Commerce Association and President of the Chamber of Foreign Commerce of Sao Paulo, had this to say:

"Brazil's present economic position demands that our trade be increased . . .

"I consider that it is the task of a government which wants its country to prosper to win back lost markets."

In the State of Ceara the Peace Movement organised a literary competition for school children on the theme of peace. The contributions could be either in prose or verse. The pupils took part in the competition with enthusiasm.

Indonesia

Indonesian newspapers have published a statement by Mrs. Pandit, President of the United Nations General Assembly, who went to Indonesia on the invitation of the Indonesian Government.

Mrs. Pandit said that China must be given her rightful seat in the United Nations.

Nepal

A number of prominent figures of Katmandu, the capital of Nepal, decided, at a meeting on August 17th, to form a Sino-Nepalese Friendship Society. A committee of five was appointed to draw up the society's constitution.

Poland

In Warsaw on September 1st a great meeting took place to commemorate the 15th anniversary of the invasion of Poland by Hitler's armies.

In one of the resolutions adopted the meeting declared:

"We support the universal demand for the calling of a Four Power Conference to settle the German question and of a conference of all European States for the conclusion of an all-European treaty of collective security."

Denmark

The Polish liner S.S. Batory, with 800 passengers on board, put in at Copenhagen, first port of call on the Peace Cruise, at the end of August. During the reception organised by the Danish Peace Committee, Prof. Mogens Fog, its President, stated:

"Everywhere the Batory has gone, the participants in the Peace Cruise have seen that the peoples do not want war, but peace. The will of the peoples must be fulfilled."

A Danish commercial exhibition will open in Moscow on September 17th. Eighty Danish firms are represented and 30 Danish businessmen will be present. The aim of the exhibition is to increase trade between Denmark and the Soviet Union.

A booklet by Mr. I. B. Noerlund, entitled "The Cold War Can Be Ended", has just been published in Copenhagen.

The booklet shows the harmful effects on Denmark of its participation in the Atlantic Pact.

"The example of Geneva", says the author, "shows that it is possible to settle the most complex international problems peacefully and holds out the prospect of organising a system of collective security.

"This would eliminate the danger of a revival of German militarism and ensure Denmark's independence."

Germany

On the invitation of Japanese meteorologists, meteorologists from the German Democratic Republic have decided to exchange with foreign colleagues observations on the contamination of the atmosphere by radioactivity and on unusual atmospheric phenomena which might be connected with the explosion of hydrogen bombs. The German meteorologists associated themselves with the appeal of the Japanese Meteorological Society for stopping immediately all atomic bomb tests.

Approximately 1,200 engineers and technicians from industrial undertakings in the Leipzig region of the German Democratic Republic took part in a discussion on the use of atomic energy for peaceful purposes and the part that technicians can play in activity for the peaceful solution of the German question. The discussion was organised by the district Peace Council.

Professor Robert Havemann of the Humboldt University in Berlin gave the report on the prospects which the peaceful use of atomic energy holds out for mankind.

Puerto Rico

At its last annual congress the Film-workers' Union adopted a resolution supporting the Peace Movement and calling for the banning of weapons of mass destruction and the conclusion of a peace pact between the five great powers.

China

Speaking at a press conference at the end of the British Labour Party delegation's visit to China, Mr. Morgan Phillips, Secretary of the Party, said:

"We have been deeply impressed by the efforts of the Chinese people to build their nation on modern lines. We have seen great exertions of the people in the face of primitive industrial techniques and the consequences of so many centuries of social stagnation. We are convinced that the peace of the world depends upon the closer communion between China and the rest of the world. The policy of exclusiveness can only imperil peace.

"We believe that peaceful coexistence along with active co-operation and mutual trade based upon it would ripen understanding and bring us all closer together and thus reduce the danger of war.

"Though there are undoubtedly great ideological differences between new China and the democracies of the West, nevertheless it seemed to us, as it did to the leaders of the Government, that these are not a barrier to peaceful coexistence and co-operation in the many fields where we have common interests."

Iceland

At a meeting held in Reykjavik the Foreign Ministers of Sweden, Norway, Denmark and Iceland concluded that it was necessary for the People's Republic of China to be represented in the United Nations.

Rumania

There took place in Bucharest recently a big meeting of representatives of different religions. During the course of the meeting the Orthodox Priest Ion Irimia pointed out that there was not a single peace-loving person in the whole world who did not welcome the ending of the war in Indo-China joyfully. The Christian ethic, he said, condemns those who would unleash war.

The representatives of the various religions demanded the establishment of a system of collective security in Europe in order to carry further the success won at Geneva.

Australia

The Australian Labour M. P.s Calwell and Ward have criticised the Government's plans to involve Australia in S.E.A.T.O., reports the Australian paper Tribune of August 18th.

Mr. Calwell said:

"What the world needs today is the new order that was promised after the war and never given. Asians will not fight for the old order, for starvation, blood and tears."

The Atomic Clock will tell you the Exact Time

Atomic energy will now be used to measure time. A Reuter despatch from Moscow announces that Soviet scientists have just constructed an atomic clock which is not more than one millionth of a second out over 24 hours.

This new clock is therefore very much more exact than any other astronomical clock in use.

BULLETIN OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

INFORMATION BULLETIN PUBLISHED BY THE SECRETARIAT OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

No. 19 OCTOBER 1st 1954

Statement of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace

A meeting of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace was held in Vienna from September 13th to 15th.

A number of guests, representing many National Peace Movements, took part in the work.

At the opening session Professor Bernal F.R.S., Vice-President of the World Council of Peace, presented a report on the international situation and the tasks resulting therefrom for the World Peace Movement.

The Bureau session adopted the following statement.

Great events have brought a new hope to the world and rewarded the efforts of all who are working for peace.

An armistice has been signed in Korea and in Indo-China; the French Parliament has rejected the treaties on the European army which would have brought about the rebirth of German militarism.

The proposals and campaigns of the World Council of Peace have made it possible to bring the peoples into action and organise their efforts. To-day millions of people in every country feel justly proud of the share they have had in winning this great victory.

Nevertheless, other dangers remain in the world which still call for the vigilance of the forces of peace. One immediate threat hangs over Europe and may well destroy the results already obtained. The reconstitution of a German army as part of a military coalition, which still remains the objective of certain governments, would perpetuate the division of Germany, sharpen the opposition between the two parts into which Europe has been arbitrarily separated, and stimulate the armaments race.

The Bureau of the World Council of Peace calls on the peoples to oppose the rearming of Germany in any form or under any pretext. It calls on them to press the governments of the U.S.A., the Soviet Union, Great Britain and France to resume negotiations without delay. None of the participants must hamper the negotiations by adverse actions or by imposing preliminary conditions.

The peaceful settlement of the German problem must be acceptable to each of the powers concerned and also to the German people. It must put an end to the division of Germany, prevent that country from being used to threaten any of its neighbours and permit, at the same time, the organisation of European security.

Security cannot be assured in a world divided into opposing blocs nor by military coalitions. It demands peaceful co-existence of all states, whatever their political system or social structure, co-operation between them, and agreement on general disarmament and the prohibition of weapons of mass destruction.

To concentrate all the forces of peace in order to achieve these great objectives, the Bureau of the World Council of Peace has decided to call a session of the World Council on November 18th, 1954. It will propose the following points for the agenda:

1) Co-operation of all the states of Europe in the organisation of their common security.
2) The situation created in different parts of Asia by foreign intervention and by the system of military blocs and coalitions.
3) The situation created in Latin America by interference in the internal affairs of nations.
4) Action of peace forces to secure disarmament and the prohibition of weapons of mass destruction.
5) Preparation of an Assembly of representatives of the forces of peace in all countries during the first half of 1955.

What the Press is saying...

The establishment of the Southeast Asia Treaty Organisation by the Manila Conference roused strong opposition from public opinion, particularly in the countries of Southeast Asia. This is reflected in the columns of the international press, from which we take a few excerpts.

The purpose of S.E.A.T.O. is not so much the stability and security of Southeast Asia as an alliance against China. They say that it is to be defensive, but United States policy has been unambiguous enough to expose its offensive intentions. Apart from N.A.T.O., the use made of the Inter-American Organisation in the Guatemala affair has confirmed the impression that the long arm of the United States will be offensively thrust into the interior of Southeast Asia through S.E.A.T.O.

NATIONAL HERALD (India)

Peace in the Far East will mainly depend on the desire to ease tension on the part of the two camps which confront each other.

It is doubtful whether the Manila pact confirms this desire on the part of the anti-communist powers.

LE MONDE (France)

The military pact concluded at Manila aims to undermine the peace and security of Asia.

Certain countries of Southeast Asia only recently acquired their independence and need peace and security. But the new aggressive bloc, to which the most important Asian countries do not belong, is purely and simply a threat to their national independence and to peace. This bloc is visibly aimed against the movement of national liberation in the countries of Asia.

TAKUNGPAO
(People's Republic of China)

Six of the eight participating countries are not Southeast Asian countries and the three Asian countries taking part, including Pakistan, have already concluded military pacts with the United States. In other Southeast Asian countries, including Indonesia, opposition to S.E.A.T.O. is ever mounting.

HARIAN RAKJAT (Indonesia)

It is the duty of all New Zealanders to give this plan the closest scrutiny, because it threatens to line up our country in a military grouping whose purpose is to commit aggression against our neighbours in Asia.

We advocate the setting up of a mutual security system, not comprising a few Western Powers plus Australia and New Zealand, but all the nations of the area. Under this, all would guarantee each other against aggression.

PEOPLE'S VOICE (New Zealand)

The text of the treaty which has been signed confirms that it is a new attempt on the part of the United States to create a military grouping of countries which, at any time and under any pretext, can launch armed intervention on any Southeast Asian territory.

The peoples of Asia realise that the aggressive military pact signed at Manila is aimed at aggravating the situation in this part of the world. They look upon it as a conspiracy against peace and security. That is why the peace-loving peoples of Asia are stiffening their struggle for peace and international security.

PRAVDA (U.S.S.R.)

The world's demand for peace must not be ignored. S.E.A.T.O. is to be set up by the Western imperialist and colonial powers, which will demand military bases and manpower from the Asian countries. No patriot should accept such conditions.

IMROZE (Pakistan)

The truce that is at present reigning in Indo-China after years of war is threatened by the Manila decision to include the associated states in the zone covered by the treaty.

This decision must be looked upon as a violation of the spirit of the Geneva agreements.

FREE PRESS (India)

S.E.A.T.O. is mostly composed of non-Southeast Asian countries. Those Asian countries which have joined it were in need of American military aid.

SULUH INDONESIA (Indonesia)

This military bloc is clearly aimed at supporting European colonial rule in Asia.

MORNING NEWS (Pakistan)

The most important Southeast Asian countries, India, Indonesia and Burma, rejected the S.E.A.T.O. pact. It has therefore miscarried and cannot exist in the atmosphere of Asia, the peoples of which want peace.

The countries of Asia need no guardian. They are capable of deciding their own destiny. The peoples of Asia want peace.

BERITA INDONESIA (Indonesia)

The separate protocol to the treaty mentioned Cambodia, Laos and Viet-Nam and this is apparently aimed at disrupting the Geneva agreements.

Over 500,000,000 people of the principal Southeast Asian countries stand outside and oppose S.E.A.T.O. From the point of view of history, S.E.A.T.O. reverses the process of Asia's liberation from foreign imperialist control.

HINDUSTAN STANDARD (India)

The Colombo powers' refusal to take part in the S.E.A.T.O. military organisation is already a sign that the conference has failed.

The Asian countries taking part in the conference included Thailand and the Philippines; and the only Colombo country to attend the conference was Pakistan. All three were already militarily connected with the United States.

MERDEKA (Indonesia)

With five of its eight signatories non-Asian, its non-regional character is obvious. The Southeast Asia treaty seeks to use Asians against Asians; Western domination threatens to return; and it is also blind to realities.

INDIAN EXPRESS (India)

The protocol to the treaty has been specially designed to mar the Geneva agreements which stipulated that the three Indo-China states should not join any military alliance with other countries, nor allow foreign troops to station in their territories.

The real purpose of the Southeast Asia treaty is not to make Southeast Asia secure and prosperous ... its primary purpose is to encircle the People's Republic of China from the southeast.

Since India, Burma and Indonesia, inhabited by 500,000,000 people, are opposed to it, it is not clear how the signatories propose to "protect" these areas in spite of the wishes of the population. To thrust protection on those who do not want it is direct repudiation of the principles of sovereignty of nations and the self-determination to which the signatories pay lip-service.

The S.E.A.T.O. pact signed at Manila marks a departure from established and accepted principles of international policy although both the treaty and the Pacific charter which accompanies it repeat all the high-sounding platitudes with which all of us have now become familiar.

The most remarkable thing about this treaty is that it refers to an area the vast majority of whose inhabitants are not associated with it, and it is signed mostly by nations farthest away from it.

HINDUSTAN TIMES (India)

The results of the Manila Conference would neither be supported by most Southeast Asian countries, nor reduce world tension ... except the United States, the other countries participating in the Manila Conference recently lauded the Geneva agreements ... We all hope that the Geneva agreements will be carried out successfully, but we are aware that the present circumstances could have disturbing consequences.

DUTA MASJARAKAT (Indonesia)

The Peoples of Southeast Asia will not accept the Manila Pact

Commenting on the results of the Manila Conference in its editorial for September 9th, Le Monde said:

"At the moment the analogy between S.E.A.T.O. and N.A.T.O. seems to be more theoretical than real . . . Indeed, it is in this very region, Southeast Asia, that American plans have been cold-shouldered, not to say boycotted. The list of the Asian countries absent speaks for itself . . ."

Neither India, Indonesia, Ceylon or Burma were present, having officially refused to take part in the conference. Cambodia and Laos were also absent, since, according to the Geneva agreements, they must not make any military commitments. Even the three Southeast Asian governments that were represented at Manila are confronted with a growing wave of protest from their peoples.

● According to information from Karachi, Imroze, an Urdu language daily, stated that S.E.A.T.O. would upset the present relaxation of tension in Asia and the world resulting from the Geneva Conference and worsen the situation again.

● The New Zealand paper, People's Voice, says that "S.E.A.T.O. is denounced as a scheme for aggression against Asians by leading people and parties, newspapers and politicians of all shades of opinion in Asian countries, as well as in many others . . ."

● In Australia, the Council of Railway Shop Committees passed a resolution on August 15th branding the Menzies government's support of S.E.A.T.O. The resolution attacked S.E.A.T.O. as "a scheme for aggressive war against the Asian people". It urged: "In place of such acts of aggression as S.E.A.T.O., we need a policy of friendly relations." At their recent annual conference in Sydney, the Building Workers' Industrial Union expressed a similar view. Mr. G. Whitlam, an Australian Labour M.P., urged the Government to adopt a realistic foreign policy, saying: "We may only delude ourselves by joining S.E.A.T.O."

● In India, Mr. Nehru had the following to say of the Manila pact:

"We must ask ourselves whether taking this step in the present situation will not result in increasing the feeling of insecurity. I, for my part, fear that it will completely upset the good atmosphere created by the settlement in Indo-China."

"Certain countries", he added, "are getting together in order to protect other countries which do not want protection. These are very strange goings on and I don't understand them . . ."

● In Indonesia, Mr. Mangusarkaro, Second Vice-Chairman of the Indonesian National Party, declared in a recent statement to the weekly Berita Mingguan that the formation of S.E.A.T.O. would only worsen the critical situation in Southeast Asia.

The Communist countries have shown that their foreign policy reflected the possibility of preserving peace, while the S.E.A.T.O. plan once again revealed that the imperialist countries were contemplating future wars, he said. By means of S.E.A.T.O., the imperialist countries wanted to kick Asian countries around to maintain their colonial rule.

In the eyes of the Asian peoples, S.E.A.T.O. reflected a new style of domination over Southeast Asian countries by foreign colonialists, Mangusarkoro added. He urged more initiative on the part of Indonesia to establish friendly relations with Asian peoples on the basis of peace.

Excerpts from a Statement by the Australian Peace Council on S.E.A.T.O.

Australia occupies a unique position in the world, and reality demands an independent Australian foreign policy in keeping with this position. It is courting disaster to model our policies towards Asia on those of other countries with completely different geographical positions and different reasons for their interest in Asia . . .

Australia's peaceful future and her independence are being undermined by a false conception of her relations with Asia. The Prime Minister's statement on August 24th that "massive and concerted strength" and "definite military commitments" are to be the basis of Australia's relations with that great continent can have tragic results for our country.

In particular, the commitment of Australia to the S.E.A.T.O. organisation will arouse the hostility of hundreds of millions of our neighbours, who see this organisation, in the words of the Indian Prime Minister Mr. Nehru, as "an international organisation designed to hold Asian aspirations in check by force of arms". Other Asian countries, including China, Burma and Indonesia, support this view, and S.E.A.T.O. will be, if consummated, almost entirely non-Asian in composition.

"We do not want to be protected by S.E.A.T.O."

says Mr. Krishna MENON

India's delegate to the United Nations, Mr. Krishna Menon, dwelt on the question of S.E.A.T.O. in a speech in the Council of States of the Indian Parliament. "By no stretch of imagination or interpretation of the U. N. Charter can this S.E.A.T.O. come under the Charter", Menon declared.

The U.N. Charter provided for regional organisations, Menon said, "but this is not a regional organisation; it is an organisation of some people to protect the region. It is a modern version of a protectorate. It is an organisation of some imperial powers and some others who may have an interest in joining together to protect a territory which they say is in danger. We are part of that territory and we say we do not want to be protected. An association of this kind has no place under the Charter of the United Nations as a regional organisation".

"To reverse the process of conciliation or lowering of tension that has probably followed the Indo-China conference is a diplomatic and political tragedy", Menon continued. "The very fact that, with the exception of Pakistan, Thailand and the Philippines, the countries of Southeast Asia are not participating in the S.E.A.T.O. conference, proclaims its character to the world. We have no ill-will towards any of these countries, Asian or European, but at the same time it is our bounden duty to condemn any attempt to build up a military alliance of any kind."

The three countries of Indo-China had somewhat entered into the field of the conception of collective peace, Menon added. It was basic to the Geneva agreement that other countries should respect the territorial integrity of each one of them. The three countries of Indo-China should not enter into military alliances with other countries, nor accept military aid except as specified in the Geneva agreement itself, he asserted.

"Today, Peace and Co-operation between the Peoples are more urgently necessary than ever"

Dr. Regmi, Nepal's Foreign Minister, described the S.E.A.T.O. pact signed in Manila as a "new attempt to drag the countries of Southeast Asia into a war".

"Today, peace and co-operation between the peoples are more urgently necessary than ever", Dr. Regmi stated. "We cannot tolerate a repetition of the wrong and unreasonable behaviour which led to the last two world wars. All proposals which tend to strengthen peace must be supported in every possible way. But the treaty signed in Manila is directed not towards supporting peace and co-operation between the peoples, but towards dividing the peoples."

S.E.A.T.O. menaces Peace,

says Burmese Minister

S.E.A.T.O. menaces the peace of Asia, declared U Ba Saw, Burmese Minister of Relief, Resettlement and Social Welfare, at Lucknow.

The Minister said that the time had come for the Asian countries to work out proposals to negate the effects of S.E.A.T.O.

The Burmese Government, he stated, would adhere to the five principles enunciated in the joint statements of the Prime Ministers of China, India and Burma.

India
Celebration of Asian Solidarity Month

The All India Peace Council's call to observe the month of September as Asian Solidarity Month met with an encouraging response and brought wider and wider circles into the Movement. An important feature of the campaign is the support which mass organisations of workers, peasants, students, etc. have given to the Asian Solidarity Month.

All India Trade Union Congress

The A.I.T.U.C. has issued a circular letter to all its provincial units asking them to take the initiative in mobilising the workers and other sections of the people during this month.

All India Students Federation

Similarly, the A.I.S.F. issued a statement describing the call of the A.I.P.C. for the observance of the Asian Solidarity Month as "very timely". Lending its fullest support to the call, it "urges upon all students and student bodies to join hands in observing this Month of Asian Solidarity by taking common and effective measures for this. Widespread holding of debates and discussions on the problems related to security and peace in Asia is one of the appropriate means for students to contribute to this cause".

Madras

Various trade unions in Madras have pledged their support to the campaign. Many major trade unions in the city are holding independent meetings during the month to explain the Five Principles enunciated in the Nehru—Chou En-lai agreement.

The Madras Peace Committee is holding meetings in various centres of the city to explain the necessity for Asian nations to come together in defence of the freedom and security of the Asian peoples on the basis of the India-China Agreement. The inaugural meeting was held on August 31st at the Memorial Hall and was attended by citizens representing all shades of opinion.

Peace workers in the city are working with determination to make this campaign a great success; in different parts of the city broad-based committees have been organised to run the campaign in the month of September. A display of the Photographic Exhibition of the Nehru—Chou En-lai meeting in various parts of the city is one of the features of the month.

Bengal

The main form of activity in Bengal is the collection of signatures to an appeal. Leaflets and printed posters are being brought out in large quantities.

The Bengal Provincial Trade Union Congress is taking an active part in the preparations and is planning to bring out a pamphlet in Hindi, Urdu and Bengali entitled "Asian Solidarity and the Working-class".

Punjab

On August 22nd, a meeting of the Ludhiana Peace Committee was held to discuss the programme for the Solidarity Month. An important decision was taken to organise a Workers' Convention on September 5th on the issue of Asian Solidarity. Invitations were issued to all unions and trade unionists to join in this Convention. The Convention ended in a public rally and mushaira. Writers in Ludhiana also held a special meeting on September 1st.

The Ludhiana Peace Committee planned to collect 10,000 signatures to an appeal during the Month.

Uttar Pradesh

The General Secretary of the U.P. Peace Council, Mr. Maulana Ishaq Sambhali, appealed to all political parties and democratic groups in Uttar Pradesh to observe September 6th as Asian Solidarity Day.

He welcomed the Nehru Government's refusal to join the S.E.A.T.O. Conference and declared that it was all the more necessary to rally the entire Indian People round the call for Asian solidarity and peace on the basis on the Five Principles laid down by the Nehru—Chou En-lai declaration.

Andhra prepares for Peace Conference

The Working Committee of the Andhra Peace Council met at Bezwada on August 25th, endorsed the decisions of the Calcutta Session of the All India Peace Council and made detailed plans for the observance of Asian Solidarity Month, including the collection of thousands of signatures, assisting in the holding of broad conventions in support of the Five Principles and Asian solidarity in at least 15 centres, meetings of trade unions and kisan sabhas, etc.

The Working Committee heard a report on the immediate campaign of the World Peace Movement from Shri Romesh Chandra, General Secretary of the All India Peace Council, and resolved to begin preparations for the coming All India Congress for Peace and Asian Solidarity in Madras in December.

"Men must live together like Brothers"

Sheikh al Islam Alizadeh Akund Agha, President of the Moslem Council of the Caucasus has just made an appeal to the world's Moslems to defend peace. He says:

"I speak to the millions of Moslems in Turkey and Pakistan, Egypt and Iran, Afghanistan and Iraq, Syria, the Lebanon and Saudi Arabia.

"If we follow the precepts of Allah, we must consider it our duty to oppose war. Remember the seventh verse of the Koran: 'Do not create disorder on the earth after it has been ordered', and the eighth verse which says 'Men must live together like brothers'. Other verses of the Koran ask man to seek peace and avoid war. Is it possible that those in Turkey, Pakistan and the other Moslem countries, who should remember the precepts of Allah, have forgotten them?"

The People of Hiroshima to the Secretary General of the United Nations

In the province of Hiroshima in Japan, 1,013,472 signatures have been collected for the prohibition of atomic and hydrogen bombs since last May. They were sent to the Secretary General of the United Nations with the request that they be communicated to the session of the General Assembly. The message to the Secretary General of the United Nations, Mr. Hammarskjöld, which accompanied the signatures, says:

"We inhabitants of the Prefecture of Hiroshima were the first to suffer from the atomic bomb. We do not want the whole of mankind to suffer our fate. We express our conviction that the United Nations will prohibit atomic and hydrogen bombs."

New South Wales Peace Council demands Friendship with the Peoples of Asia and the Prohibition of H-Bombs

More than 100 delegates, elected observers and visitors took part in a conference organised by the New South Wales Peace Council in Sydney.

The conference, which was presided over by Rev. Dr. E. Collocott, concentrated its attention on: Australian relations with Asian peoples, the campaign to end the testing of atomic weapons, and the need to develop cultural exchanges with other nations.

In a warmly applauded address, the Reverend A. M. Dickie, national Chairman of the Australian Peace Council, emphasised how world events had borne out the correctness of the basic policies of the World Council of Peace. He said that the widening movement for peace in Australia had benefited, and would continue to benefit, from the consistent contribution made through the work of the World Council.

The conference agreed that Australian policy towards Asia must be based on the cultivation of friendly relations, assisted by cultural and trade exchanges. It called for the development of active contact by Australian people with the peoples of Asia.

The participants agreed to undertake a selling drive with the Council's new booklet, What are the Horror Weapons?, as part of the campaign against A- and H-bombs.

As a result of the work of the Conference, a new Council of 27 members was elected.

Here are some excerpts from the resolutions adopted at the conference:

On relations with Asia:

The position of Australia as a neighbour of the Asian countries should be the guiding factor in Australia's foreign policy, in relation to Asia.

Such policy should not be based upon fear of, or antagonism towards, Asia and upon regional military alliances such as the ANZUS pact and S.E.A.T.O. (which are contrary to the principles of the U.N. Charter), and the rearmament of Japan.

Our foreign policy should be based upon a desire for good neighbourly relations with Asian nations, respecting their right to self-determination, and upon trade and cultural exchanges which are in line with the U.N. Charter.

This Conference therefore supports:

1) The replacement of the S.E.A.T.O. plans and the already existing ANZUS treaty with immediate discussions between the Australian and all Asian Governments, whatever their political character may be, to secure regional agreements guaranteeing security and peace to all the countries concerned, as was envisaged in the U.N. Charter.

2) The admission of the People's Republic of China to the United Nations and to the Security Council, and the establishment by Australia of diplomatic relations with China.

Atomic Weapons:

For the preservation of the human family, we urge Australians to press in every way possible for agreement among all the Powers to stop all experiments with H-bombs and A-bombs and to forbid their use. This can best be done by securing Australian Government action to this end, in the international sphere.

Such agreement would ease the task of obtaining total abolition of these weapons at a later date. It would reduce tension, improve prospects for general disarmament, and hasten the peaceful applications of atomic energy.

Meeting in Tokyo
to welcome back the Japanese delegates to the Stockholm Meeting

In Tokio on August 21st 15,000 people gave an enthusiastic welcome to the Japanese delegates who had just come back from the Meeting for the Relaxation of International Tension in Stockholm. The meeting ended with the enthusiastic singing by 15,000 people of the patriotic song, "Mountains and Seas of the Fatherland".

Before the "immediate threat hanging over Europe" the French people are more united than ever

The rejection of the E.D.C. treaty by the French National Assembly gave rise to enormous enthusiasm and great hope throughout the world.

However, as the Bureau of the World Council of Peace pointed out at the end of its meeting in Vienna, September 13—15, an "immediate threat hangs over Europe". Indeed, recent events clearly show that certain people are trying to find an alternative to E.D.C. that would rearm West Germany just the same.

Now, no matter how it was accomplished, the remilitarisation of West Germany would prevent genuine negotiation. It would ruin all chances of negotiation in advance by perpetuating the policy of military blocs and the division of Europe, and by speeding up the armaments race.

East and West, particularly with a view to a policy of disarmament.

On the same occasion President Herriot recalled that he is being faithful to his whole past in advocating the organisation of a European system of collective security.

Other voices are being raised to condemn the dangerous myth of the inevitability of German rearmament. Those of the well known publicist, M. Maurice Duverger, in two articles in Le Monde, and of M. Marcel-Edmond Naegelen, former Socialist candidate for the Presidency of the Republic, in l'Express, for example. M. Gaston Palewski, R.P.F. Vice-President of the National Assembly, describes the conclusion of the three Western powers' reply to the Soviet proposals to resume negotiations as being "unreasonable".

MESSAGE FROM THE SECRETARIAT OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE TO THE NATIONAL COUNCIL OF THE FRENCH PEACE MOVEMENT

The Secretariat of the World Council of Peace sent the following message to the National Council of the French Peace Movement:

"The Secretariat of the World Council of Peace voices the great response there has been throughout the world to the rejection of E.D.C. by the French Parliament. In all countries and in the most diverse circles this news was hailed as a great victory for peace.

"The peoples received the news of the failure of E.D.C. with joy and enthusiasm, and saw in it the result of the tireless and irresistible activity of the forces of peace in your country and all the countries of Europe and the world. This latest success, following on that of the Geneva Conference, enables world public opinion to realise how powerful is the effect of its action.

"The National Peace Committees and influential persons and organisations have stressed the world-wide importance of this victory. They have also pointed out that it renders signal service to the peoples of Europe in general by eliminating the major obstacle in the way of the peaceful solution of European problems.

"Allow us to add our warm congratulations for the important contribution that the French Peace Movement has made to the realisation of our common aims.

"Please accept our best wishes for further successes in the struggle against the threat of German rearmament in any shape or form and in your efforts for genuine negotiation to ensure the common security of all the peoples of Europe and consolidate world peace."

This obvious fact is coming to be understood by more and more people, and by a constantly increasing number of representatives of the most various forces and trends of opinion.

French public opinion rejoiced at the extraordinary development of tendencies hostile to German rearmament at the last Annual Conference of the T.U.C. in Great Britain.

The West German Social Democratic Party's position in favour of the resumption of four power negotiations, recently reaffirmed by Herr Erich Ollenhauer, and the result of the September 12th elections in Schleswig-Holstein, which were to be a test, have had great repercussions in France as well as in Germany. Events like these help to rally new currents of opinion in France in opposition to the latest manoeuvres to rearm Germany and for the genuine security of all the countries of Europe.

In France, throughout the discussion on E.D.C., M. Daniel Mayer, Chairman of the Foreign Affairs Commission in the National Assembly and M. Jules Moch, who reported to the National Assembly, recommended that vigorous efforts be made to effect a rapprochement between the countries of

The forces which were mainly responsible for the rejection of E.D.C. are getting ready for a new effort to frustrare German rearmament. Throughout the country, the committees set up in the struggle against E.D.C. are now setting themselves the task of working for the peaceful settlement of the German question. This is especially true of the Departments of Dordogne and Seine-et-Oise. Meetings are being held in the localities and factories to celebrate the victory of August 30th and fix new objectives for popular action.

The Peace Movement will work out the line to be followed in rallying the national forces on an ever wider scale at a meeting of its National Council on October 2nd and 3rd.

The University Teachers' Movement for Peace is asking German university men for closer co-operation, and the French Committee for the Peaceful Settlement of the German question will meet very soon. The latter will work out its contribution to the French campaign to meet the new threats and, in the international sphere, will seek ways of strengthening solidarity with the German people and helping to bring the peoples of Europe together to organise their common security.

Telegram from the German Peace Council

The German Peace Council congratulates the French Peace Committee and all peace-loving Frenchmen on the rejection of E.D.C. by the National Assembly. This decision by your Parliament shows us that the French people have decided in favour of peaceful co-operation with all European peoples rather than a policy of strength in alliance with German and other militarists. Our thanks go to the millions of French men and women whose action has obtained this result. In all the important towns, in many big factories, and in the rural districts, the German Peace Council organised meetings and evenings of discussion with the aim of strengthening the struggle against the E.D.C. treaty and the remilitarisation of West Germany and supporting the conclusion of a treaty of European security.

In East Berlin, 40,000 people took part in the demonstrations, while in West Berlin, in spite of the ban, 1,600 people voted against the E.D.C. treaty. In Erfurt, Rostock and Zittau respectively, 40,000, 30,000 and 25,000 people took part in our demonstrations. During Peace Week in West Germany peace demonstrations were held in Essen, Düsseldorf, Hamburg, Munich, Nuremberg, Aachen, Osnabrück, Oldenburg, Stuttgart and other towns. There were French speakers at a number of these meetings. Everywhere, the participants expressed their joy at the French Parliament's decision and their high regard for the French people. Everywhere, the desire was expressed that the peaceful forces of our two peoples should unite even more closely than at present in opposition to any attempt to revive German militarism, and to encourage all efforts to improve the friendly relations between our two peoples. We wish you further success in your work for the common cause.

The German Peace Council
Professor Walther Friedrich

Telegram from the Czechoslovak Peace Committee

The Czechoslovak Peace Committee sent the National Council of the French Peace Movement a telegram congratulating the Movement on the decisive role they played in the rejection of E.D.C.

The telegram points out that the Czechoslovak Peace Movement is quite aware of the still existing danger of the revival of German militarism. Together with the French people and the other peace—loving peoples of Europe, they will continue to struggle, with more energy than ever, to guarantee the collective security of all the nations of Europe.

Workers in the Federal Republic oppose Rearmament

Throughout the Federal German Republic, now that E.D.C. has been rejected by France, a growing number of people are demanding another great power conference for the peaceful settlement of the German question.

The workers of West Germany have shown their hostility to the rearming of their country by taking part in the popular referendum held at factory gates.

In West Berlin, for example, 627 workers and employees of the Siemens factory in Spandau (British zone) voted against E.D.C.; so did 129 workers in the Osram factory. In Mülheim in the Ruhr, 327 workers in an important engineering factory voted for the peaceful reunification of their country. In the same town, 364 of the 416 miners in the Rosenblumendelle pit condemned remilitarisation.

In Witten, 174 railway shop workers voted against remilitarisation and for a peace treaty, as did 143 strikers of the Faun factories in Nuremberg-Doos. In Recklinghausen, 52,000 miners demanded the banning of a Stahlhelm meeting which was to be held on August 28th and 29th. In Iserlohn (Westphalia), the representatives of 6,000 engineers vigourously protested at a meeting of former members of the S. S. which was to be held in September. In the Palatinate, 21 shop stewards and trade union leaders signed an appeal against E.D.C.

The Dortmund and Dusseldorf sections of the engineering union asked their trade union headquarters to oppose the recruitment and rearming of German youth.

In Platting, the executive of the Food, Hotel and Restaurant Workers' Union asked that the forthcoming Congress of the D.G.B. (German T.U.C.) declare itself in favour of the peaceful reunification of Germany and against remilitarisation. The building workers' union in Munich and Regensburg, and the painters' union in Rosenheim (Upper Bavaria) have also demanded concrete measures against remilitarisation.

Dockers

During Peace Week a meeting of delegates of the dockers and shipyard workers of the North Sea ports was held in Bremen. A representative of the Bordeaux dockers and a docker from Rostock were present as guests. The conference ended with the adoption of an appeal to all portworkers.

The debates and discussions between the delegates, especially those of Hamburg, Bremen, Emden and Nordenham, were preceded by a report by a representative of the West German Peace Committee, who said:

"The unloading of war supplies is a deceptive way of giving work to the workers, so that they may earn their living. The existence of Germans can only be ensured by peaceful work, and this depends on the peaceful trade relations that a reunited Germany will maintain with all other peoples. The constant transporting of war material into Germany is nothing but preparation for a third world war."

In conclusion, the speaker called on the dockers to work to have the German question dealt with at a conference on collective security on the basis of a common German point of view. An interesting discussion then started. It showed how well the dockers understand and follow the struggle for peace. They forcefully expressed their opposition to remilitarisation, referring to the success of the referendum held in the various ports.

M. Picot, Secretary of the Bordeaux Port Peace Committee, brought greetings from the French dockers and gave a description — which was eagerly followed — of the struggle of the Bordeaux dockers against the loading of war supplies during the conflict in Indo-China and the unloading of war material sent from the United States.

"To date the organised workers of Bordeaux have unloaded no war supplies", concluded M. Picot to enthusiastic applause.

At the end of the conference, the dockers adopted an appeal to all portworkers. It says:

"Oppose the unloading of war material and the revival of German militarism in any shape or form; work for the reunification of Germany, the conclusion of a peace treaty, and Germany's participation in a security pact for the whole of Europe!"

FOLLOWING THE "PEACE CRUISE"

Arriving in Leningrad as one of the participants in the Peace Cruise on board the Polish liner, S. S. Batory, Mr. Bengt Gunnàs, Secretary of the Swedish Peace Committee, said to press representatives:

"The participants in the Peace Cruise include 566 Swedes, 18 Norwegians, 113 Finns, 79 Danes, 4 representatives of the German Democratic Republic and 4 from Poland. Also, of course, there is the Polish crew of the S. S. Batory. The passengers include scientists, doctors, lawyers, journalists, housewives, workers, directors and works managers, men and women of different political and religious views. The cruise is being held under the slogan: "Peace and Friendship between the Peoples of the World."

Before the end of the Peace Cruise the passengers aboard the S. S. Batory adopted a statement from which we take the following excerpts:

"The participants would like to state that the cruise met with no obstacles from the point of view of formalities and that it was devoted to strengthening peace and friendship between the countries of the Baltic sea, countries which have different social systems; that co-operation between the Baltic countries in favour of international negotiations would strengthen peace; that a contribution by the Baltic countries to the peaceful solution of the German problem and the establishment of guarantees for security in Europe would be of great importance for the stabilisation of the international situation as a whole."

Resistance to German rearmament focal point of the struggle for Peace

Appeal by Chairman of British Peace Committee

A powerful appeal for united action, under the heading "No German Army in Any Form", by Mr. Gordon Schaffer, Chairman of the British Peace Committee, has just been issued in the Commitee's illustrated Newsletter.

"For five years now", Mr. Schaffer says, "the resistance of the peoples to the rearmament of West Germany has been the focal point of the struggle for peace . . . Today the majority of the peoples of Western Europe are against German rearmament . . . The peoples have made up their minds. However the supporters of German Rearmament manoeuvre, they will face the resistance of the peoples of all the Western European countries."

At the same time the British Peace Committee has published an invitation to all organisations to take part in a British Congress for World Security in London on October 30-31. Recalling the successes in the struggle for Peace of recent months it underlines the danger of atomic war, threatening all nations with destruction, and says:

"Military blocs are being set up, despite the vote of the French Assembly against E.D.C., efforts to rearm Germany continue, whilst proposals for negotiations are still being rejected".

The invitation calls upon all organisations to meet together to discuss the problem of German rearmament and European security, Asian security, and similar issues, and stresses that outstanding differences between the Great Powers on such questions can be resolved through British leadership if public opinion is strong enough.

The weight of opposition to German rearmament among the British people was once more clearly shown at the session of the Trades Union Congress at Brighton at the beginning of September. The General Council of the Congress put forward an emergency resolution supporting the rearming of Germany within N.A.T.O. In spite of very heavy pressure from the leaders of the Congress, the resolution was carried only by an insignificant majority, 4,090,000 votes against 3,622,000. This result was mainly secured by the votes of two very large unions whose members had never been consulted and many of whom had voted against the rearming of Germany in local meetings. Throughout the Press, not only of Great Britain but of other European countries, this result was recognised as a moral defeat for the supporters of German rearmament.

Activity of the Spanish Peace Movement

Though it is confronted with soecial difficulties, the Spanish Peace Movement is exerting a growing influence on public opinion.

The peace Movement's appeals against the military pact between Spain and the United States, signed on September 26th, 1953, are distributed in the factories, the universities, and at other places of work and leisure in both town and country, and thousands of signatures have been collected. In many factories in Madrid, Barcelona, Asturias and the Basque country the workers have signed resolutions against the pact and in favour of peaceful coexistence. For all Spanish patriots, the struggle against the military treaty has become the basis and the hub of work for peace.

In France, where a great number of Spanish refugees live, a broad Peace Movement has been organised in more than 60 important towns and in hundreds of small places. People of all shades of political opinion take part in it. Periodically it publishes booklets containing information on the development of the World Peace Movement, and popularises the texts adopted at international meetings, bringing out their connection with Spanish problems.

After the signing of the military pact, the Movement issued an appeal to all Spaniards, which has already won 50,000 signatures. At the same time, 100,000 postcards and stamps bearing the Appeal were printed and distributed to Spaniards living in France, together with other publicity material.

This September, a year after the signing of the pact, the Peace Committee published a statement, thousands of copies of which have been distributed.

STATEMENT BY THE SPANISH PEACE COMMITTEE

On the organisation of a great day of protest and struggle against the military pact

It is nearly a year since the military, economic and political treaty between the Franco and U.S. Governments was signed.

The twelve months that have gone by have clearly shown the tragic and grievous consequences for Spain implied in the pact.

Our country has been transformed into a military camp for a foreign power.

The independence and sovereignty of the nation have been handed over to foreigners.

The economic crisis is thrusting the country into bankruptcy and ruin.

The already low living standards of the people have been forced even lower, increasing the poverty, privation and hunger from which the people suffer.

These are the agonizing and nightmare results of the pact...

Grave Dangers are threatening the Country

Launching ramps for remote-controlled projectiles and runways for pilotless bombers to carry atom bombs are under construction at Carthagena. The United States Senate has voted to spend 11.5 million dollars on the construction of bases "for special weapons in Spain".

Every day new bases, new aerodromes, strategic runways and underground stores are constructed in Spain. These military installations are so many citadels of foreign occupation on the soil of our dear country.

The pesants' land is expropriated, as in Prat de Llobregat, Castrillon in the province of Asturias, Moron in the province of Seville, and in the provinces of Madrid and Galicia.

Even cemeteries are destroyed, as in Barajas, so that military installations may be enlarged.

This Pact means Ruin

The State Budget has increased by several thousands of millions of pesetas, 70 percent of it being war expenditure... New taxes, such as local and provincial taxes, are forced on the people.

All persons from 18 to 65 years living in localities which have less than 10,000 inhabitants will have to do 15 days of unpaid labour per annum and lend their vehicles and horses for ten days...

Industrial enterprises are closing down, and there is a growing number of suspensions of payment and bankruptcies in the country's commerce. In Madrid, Cataluña, Levante and Asturias unemployment is growing in all branches of industry.

These are the results of the military pact after one year...

United Action of the People can avert Catastrophe

Wrath and indignation fill the hearts of the Spanish people and a powerful wave of protest is arising in all parts of Spain...

In the streets, sticky-backs and slogans appear telling the occupying power to go home. Thousands upon thousands of signatures are being collected to appeals and statements against the pact and all sections of the people are protesting and showing their discontent.

Thus, in their struggle against the pact, the Spanish people are taking part in the great world struggle for peace. The struggle to save Spain helps to prevent the world from being thrown into the horrors of another world war.

A Great National Day

The Peace Movement calls on everyone to unite in a nation-wide movement of opposition to the military pact.

The strength of the national will can put an end to the colonisation of Spain, for the power of the people is enormous when it shows its will in an unequivocal way.

On the first anniversary of the signing of this pact the Peace Mouvement calls on all patriots, on all Spaniards, to organise a great day of protest and struggle.

Let us all unite and make of the great national day of protest against the Pact an expression of the Spanish people's uanimous will to defend the peace, independence and national sovereignty of their country.

New local Peace Committee formed in the Cameroons

The development of the struggle for peace in the Cameroons, and particularly the activity against the war in Viet-Nam in recent months, has resulted in the formation of a new local Peace Committee in Maroua after the signing of the armistice in Indo-China.

The Cameroons Peace Movement is constantly growing in strength. During the past year a number of local committees have been set up in the main towns, and this latest success shows that the people of the Cameroons have confidence in the final outcome of the struggle for peace. It also shows that they are becoming aware of their responsibilities in this struggle alongside the other peoples.

Lebanon – Growing popular Opposition to Military Pacts

The central task of the Lebanese Peace Movement continues to be the struggle against military pacts in their various forms: Middle East Command, Turkey-Pakistan Pact, bilateral treaties, United States military aid, and so on.

The campaigns that the Movement is conducting against the projected military alliances are received with great sympathy by all sections of the nation and even in certain government circles.

We need merely quote, as an example, the statements by M.P.s and ministers opposing the use of the H-bomb, military pacts and foreign intervention in the internal affairs of the country, and demanding the end of hostilities in Indo-China.

Further, in recent months the development of trade with countries whose political system is different has become the slogan of all circles in the field of production, and the campaign for trade on a footing of equality has won notable successes in the signing of economic agreements with Czechoslovakia, the German Democratic Republic and, lately, with the Soviet Union.

Cultural exchanges are also growing in volume. Many delegations of sportsmen have taken part in international meetings. Four publishing houses handle the publication of works on peace in the Lebanon.

In this situation, which is developing alongside the victories won by the forces of peace in the world, the warlike circles are continuing their pressure to incorporate the Lebanon in the Turkey-Pakistan Pact.

Because of this danger, a special extended meeting of the National Committee of the Peace Movement was called to study the methods to be used to wage an effective struggle against these war plans.

The preparations for the Second National Congress of the Lebanese Peace Movement, which have already begun in a number of towns and villages, will enable the friends of peace in the Lebanon to widen their movement even more, since all the debates which will take place during the preparations and during the regional conferences will deal particularly with the problems of military pacts and military aid, about which nationalist circles are very sensitive.

Outlaw the H-Bomb and recognise the People's Republic of China immediately says the Canadian Peace Congress

An enlarged meeting of the Executive of the Canadian Peace Congress, attended by several guests, was held in Toronto recently with Dr. James Endicott in the chair.

In the course of the discussion on relations with the People's Republic of China, Dr. Endicott told the Executive that he had already sent an urgent letter to External Affairs Minister, Lester B. Pearson, in which he asked Mr. Pearson to use his influence with Washington to restrain U.S. naval chiefs from taking aggressive action in Chinese waters.

The Committee then approved the text of a statement demanding the immediate recognition of China. It also decided to continue to press for:

the peaceful settlement of all disputes;
the outlawing of the H-bomb;
a peaceful solution in Germany;
world trade and cultural exchanges.

It was noted that important church, labour and political bodies have spoken up in favour of the recognition of China.

Speaking on the campaign Mr. Bruce Mickleburgh stated:

"We will carry through this campaign on two levels. First of all will be the tried and tested door-to-door method which is the main basis of the victories already won by the Peace Movement. We will canvass thousands of homes to generate a mass expression on the grass roots level to the M.P.s and Governments.

"Secondly, we aim to approach all unions and other organisations, as well as a great number of public figures. We will ask them to speak up, separately or together, to make their influence felt.

"In addition, our committees will undoubtedly sponsor public meetings, leaflets and radio broadcasts."

The meeting rejoiced at the broadening of the Peace Movement. More than 60 peace committees exist in important Canadian localities, and a number of influential national organisations are affiliated to the Peace Congress.

For Peace, Recognise China now

(Excerpt from a statement issued on behalf on the Canadian Peace Congress)

To recognise China will be an important step towards lasting peace. It will give to Canadian industry and agriculture the opportunity to trade in the world's largest market.

It will help to end the exclusion of China from her rightful seat in the United Nations. This in turn would help the U.N. to function as an instrument for agreement.

Nobody contests the fact that the government in Peking is the effective government of China. The Geneva Conference has shown that great benefit in the peaceful settlement of disputes can come from establishing normal relations with China.

To recognise the government of any country has never meant approval of the social system in the given country. Our government has recognised this fact and it is no secret that government circles favour recognition of China.

Major church, labour and political bodies, as well as the Peace Movement, have spoken for recognition. Now is the time to act.

We call upon our government to recognise China now. We further call upon all citizens and organisations to make their views on this subject known to their M.P.s and to the government.

The Chilean Peace Movement in the Struggle to defend National Indepence

In the recent period, the Chilean Peace Council has sought to awaken the country to defend its national independence. Together with the Peace Movement, the trade union and cooperative organisations and the most important political groupings have gone on record for free trade with all countries and the denunciation of the Chile-United States bilateral military pact which alienates Chilean independence. The Amalgamated Workers' Trade Union Centre, which has more than a million members, included these two aims among the principles on which it was founded.

As soon as Sr. Baltasar Castro had returned to Chile from Europe where he took part in the Vienna session of the World Council of Peace, the Chilean National Peace Council organised a series of big demonstrations.

Sr. Castro, who is President of the Chamber of Deputies, spoke at a number of report-back meetings together with Sr. Pablo Neruda, Sra Olga Poblete, Colonel de Amesti and others. The meetings were very widely attended. The two great rallies held in Santiago and Valparaiso won support for the referendum on these two questions: free trade, and condemnation of the bilateral military pact.

The speakers then went on big publicity tours during which they visited the provinces of Antofagasta, Arica, Iquique, Valparaiso, Concepcion, Talca, etc.

The more and more open threats to Guatemala's independence did not leave the Chilean friends of peace untouched. The approaches they made to eminent people and organisations led to the formation of the Friends of Guatemala Organisation which has such wide support that 70 per cent of the Chilean Deputies joined it and the Parliament declared its support for Guatemala. When direct aggression was launched against the people of Guatemala the Chamber of Deputies condemned it and popular demonstrations were held daily in response to the call of the "Friends of Guatemala".

Furthermore, the Chilean Peace Movement made its contribution to the organisation and holding of the Latin American Conference of Members of Parliament and Personalities which was held in Santiago from July 8th to 11th and whose central aim was the defence of the independence of nations.

The Chilean Movement took advantage of the celebration of Pablo Neruda's fiftieth birthday to show that the protection of the national culture and the development of cultural relations with all countries is up to the people.

Delegations of intellectuals from the countries of Latin America, the Soviet Union, China, Bulgaria and Czechoslovakia took part in the many festivals, conferences, public meetings, meetings of writers, exhibitions, recitals, etc., which were held between July 12th and 27th to celebrate the fiftieth birthday of the great poet, friend of peace and of mankind.

The commander of the Sao Paulo division of the Salvation Army, Sr. Henry Steinmetz, made the following statement to the Humanitarian Crusade for Peace:

"Our organisation considers the peaceful coexistence of different systems on the basis of peace pacts to be perfectly feasible. On the other hand, we are opposed to the use of atomic weapons under any pretext, and we believe that they should be outlawed.

Moòca's Crusade against atomic Weapons

In a leaflet, the Peace Crusade of Moòca, an important district of Sao Paulo, gives the views of representatives of the various religions practiced in the neighbourhood on the question of atomic energy.

The leaflet contains statements by Catholic priests, by a Methodist minister, the leaders of the Spiritualists' Federation, a Buddhist religious leader, a Protestant minister and others, accompanied by photographs.

They all implicitly condemn atomic weapons and demand the peaceful use of atomic energy.

"Catholics must take part in peace crusades", said Father Esviglio Concilio, vicar of the church of Sao Januario.

Speaking on behalf of the many Japanese living in Brazil Mr. Schincho Ikoma said: "800 million Buddhists condemn atomic weapons."

The leaflet also points out that the Moòca Peace Crusade collected 260,000 signatures during the campaign round the Stockholm Appeal.

It ends with a demand for the banning of atomic weapons and the peaceful use of atomic energy.

A part of the leaflet is detachable; it can be signed by the reader and sent to the Peace Crusade to support the campaign.

The great Soviet composer Dimitri Shostakovitch receives the International Peace Prize

The International Peace Prize was presented to Dimitri Shostakovitch at a formal ceremony which took place at the Hall of Trade Unions in Moscow on September 4th. The large audience, mostly of composers, writers, artists, scientists and representatives of Soviet factory clubs, paid a moving tribute to the author of the Leningrad Symphony. On the platform were Messrs. Jean Laffitte, General Secretary of the World Council of Peace, Ivor Montagu, Secretary of the World Council of Peace, Nazim Hikmet, President of the International Peace Prize Jury, etc.

Mr. Tikhon Khrennikov, General Secretary of the Union of Soviet Composers, made the opening speech in which he said: "The name of Dimitri Shostakovitch is known throughout the world. His works are filled with a deep feeling of love for his country, with an immense love of life and of mankind. This evening at this formal gathering we express our great esteem for our friend Shostakovitch and we congratulate him on his prize and his title of Laureat of the International Peace Prize which confers so great an honour."

SPEECH BY M. JEAN LAFFITTE

I have the honour this evening, on behalf of the World Council of Peace and its President, Professor Frédéric Joliot-Curie, to present the International Peace Prize to Dimitri Dimitrievich Shostakovitch. It is not only to the artist, the eminent citizen of his country, who is recognised throughout the world as one of the greatest musicians of our time, that it is being awarded. It is being awarded to the man whose creative genius has made an exceptional contribution to the cause of peace and friendship between the peoples throughout these last years...

Speaking of science, Jean-Jacques Rousseau, a French writer who is well known in your country, said:

"What to begin with was the genius of one man later becomes the common sense of the human race."

Similarly, it seems to me that a great work of art, which is the first expression of a stroke of genius, attains its supreme fulfilment when people in all countries find in it the expression of their own ideas or the image of an ideal they share. It was works of this kind that the World Peace Movement decided to celebrate from the day of its foundation, by awarding the International Peace Prizes once a year. It was for these same reasons that the International Peace Prizes for 1953 were awarded to the great Soviet composer, Shostakovitch, and the famous British artist, Charlie Chaplin.

I am not capable of giving an appreciation of the great work of Shostakovitch in all its aspects. But what I and millions of other people know is that, in the peoples' great battle for peace, Shostakovitch's music unfolds like a banner. In it they find love of peace and hatred of war. In it they find the glorification of the Soviet people's peaceful labour. In it they find friendship for and confidence in all other peoples. That is why in so many popular demonstrations in London or Paris, New York or Tokyo, people march under the banner of the Peace Movement to tunes by Shostakovitch.

Dear Shostakovitch, for us you are something more than the artist whose work has won the gratitude of the peoples. You are also the comrade-in-arms who marches in the ranks with us. In 1949, you were in the delegation which, in spite of obstacles and threats, took part in the congress of the American Peace Movement. We had the pleasure of seeing you at the Second World Peace Congress in Warsaw in 1950. Later, we met again at the Vienna and Berlin sessions of the World Council. Allow me, in presenting this prize to you, to convey the warm congratulations of all your friends in the World Peace Movement. On their behalf, I thank you and salute you.

SPEECH BY Mr. SHOSTAKOVITCH

The World Council of Peace has done me a great honour in awarding me the International Peace Prize.

With us Soviet people the whole of our daily work is indissolubly bound up with lofty propaganda for peace throughout the world. The great struggle for the well-being of all workers inspires the work of the splendid patriots working on virgin land, of the heroes on the collective and state farms, of the miners in the Donbas, the engineers in the Urals, the women working in the textile mills of Ivanovo. The work of Soviet composers, playwrights and artists is imbued with strength and optimism. The work of Soviet scientists and inventors is characterised by a great drive towards the progress of all mankind.

It gives me great happiness to belong to this splendid community of Soviet people cemented as it is by the fraternal friendship of those who work — a fact which is without precedent in human history.

This friendship is based on boundless love for man, for the worker. We understand — which is why we appreciate it so much — the self-denying love of parents, the happiness and hope that fills young people, and the joyous, carefree chattering of children. We know what benefits man's work can bring him, which is why we shall never cease to spread ardently the great idea of peaceful, creative labour.

I am proud to belong to this community and, in receiving this honorific prize, I feel it my duty to mention, with gratitude, the help and attention that my work receives, like that of every member of our Soviet community.

I should like to recall today, with great satisfaction, the successes the Peace Movement has won in every country in the world. We rejoice over these successes. In spite of the immense difficulties and the ferocious opposition of aggressors in their savage greed, the workers of all countries and peoples are heroically strengthening the noble cause of peace, thus barring the road to the devastation of war.

We Soviet people admire the successes of the Peace Movement and are filled with sincere gratitude towards those best representatives of progressive humanity, the leaders of the World Peace Movement.

I send my warm greetings to the President of the World Council of Peace, Professor Frédéric Joliot-Curie, and to all defenders of peace throughout the world, wishing them success in their noble activity.

For my part, I assure you that I shall devote all my strength to the struggles for the cause of peace, so as to be worthy of this lofty award, so as always to bear honourably the name of a son of the Soviet people, the people which is at the head of the great Peace Movement.

Celebration of Neruda's Birthday

The recent celebration of the fiftieth birthday of the great poet Pablo Neruda in Chile was a cultural event of importance and also a reaffirmation of the close link between culture and peace. The various demonstrations—which received constant and enthusiastic support from the public—were prepared by a committee composed of one hundred eminent Chilean figures from all walks of life. They included national prize-winners for art and literature, M.P.s of different parties, representatives of all the cultural organisations, trade union leaders and others. In response to their invitation, well known intellectuals from the various countries of Latin America, together with delegations from China, Czechoslovakia and Bulgaria went to Chile. Many foreign personalities, who were unable to be present, sent messages of greetings. In this way, the demonstrations organised in Chile enabled the high quality of Pablo Neruda's work and his valuable contribution to the cause of peace to be brought out. But they also contained a strong element of cultural fraternisation and served to strengthen friendship between the peoples.

The celebration of Neruda's birthday began with a great public meeting in the Santiago Municipal Theatre at which the speech of Dr. Juan Gomez Millas, Rector of the University of Chile, was read. There after, the programme went on for a week — artistic performances, lectures, plays and ballets, art and bibliographical exhibitions, poetry readings by young poets, and so on. The week ended with a popular folklore festival which was attended by 8,000 people.

Many articles and books were published on this occasion. The cultural reviews gave a lot of space to the author of "Let the Railsplitter Awake", and many books were published, either monographs on Neruda's work or volumes of his poems. The University of Chile organised a fine exhibition of books and photographs of the poet.

During the week important prizes were awarded: the "Mistral-Neruda Poetry Prize" (recently inaugurated by the University of Chile) and the Alliance of Intellectuals Prize for novels.

One of the most significant and positive features of these birthday celebrations were the meetings between writers. They discussed questions of great contemporary interest, such as the preservation and development of national cultural characteristics, the strengthening of international relations between writers, and the moral, economic and social rights of writers. The meetings enabled the American writers present to have an exchange of experiences garnered since the Continental Cultural Congress in April 1953. The Brazilian delegates, for example, pointed out that as a direct result of the First Congress of Intellectuals held in Goiana in February 1954 and taking his stand on the resolutions it adopted, an M.P. presented in Parliament a bill for the preservation and development of the national music. Also, as a result of the support given to painters by the Association which the Congress set up on a permanent basis, a considerable reduction in the price of paints was obtained from the authorities.

In their turn, the Argentinian delegates informed the meeting that, in spite of the obstacles placed in the way of the Argentine Cultural Congress, a body of this name had been created by a large assembly of delegates who had approved a programme which opens up great prospects for future work.

The intellectuals of a number of other countries announced that National Congresses were in preparation, such as that of Uruguay which will take place at the beginning of 1955. The Chilean delegates spoke of organising a Congress of Popular Poets.

Finally, a general statement was adopted. It reaffirms the recommendations of the Continental Cultural Congress to defend the national culture of every Latin American country and the moral and material conditions of intellectuals. In view of the growing persecution of ideas, it also asks that every effort should be made to obtain full freedom of expression in these countries. Further, the statement recommends that congresses should be arranged in those Latin American countries where there have not been any to date. Lastly, it proposes that the Second Continental Cultural Congress might be held during 1955.

Various congresses of foreign writers were held at the same time. They were addressed by such eminent figures as Emi Siao, the Chinese poet, the novelist Jan Drda, President of the Czechoslovak Union of Writers, and Dimitr Dimov, author of the well known Bulgarian novel, Tobacco.

Inspired by the wave of solidarity in favour of the restitution of Paul Robeson's passport, the Mexican artist, Leopoldo Mendez has designed this beautiful engraving for the June number of the Mexican peace review "Paz".

Congresses and Meetings

The Fifth International Congress of Haematology was held in the Sorbonne in Paris and was attended by 800 haematologists from 53 countries of East and West. It enabled the greatest specialists in diseases of the blood to review the research work being done in their respective countries and to have an exchange of views. Scientific films were shown and there was also an exhibition of documents giving the history of haematology.

In the Sorbonne, too, was held the Fifth International Blood Transfusion Congress, which was attended by scientists from 33 countries.

The Eleventh International Congress of Industrial Medecine was held in Naples from 13th—19th September; scientists from many countries were present.

In Sofia, the Bulgarian capital, an international conference of agricultural students has been held. It was attended by students from Belgium, France, Great Britain, Hungary Norway, the Soviet Union and other countries. It studied important agricultural problems and the questions of agricultural training and co-operation between agricultural students the world over.

A delegation from the Soviet Academy of Sciences took part in the International Congress of Philosophy which was held in Zurich.

Exchanges

An Indian cultural mission of 25 musicians, singers and dancers recently spent six weeks in the Soviet Union.

The Indian Government presented 20 paintings to the Soviet Union through the intermediary of the Indian ambassador in Moscow. He handed them to the Soviet Minister of Culture at a presentation ceremony.

After his recent visit to Chile, the Soviet writer Ilya Ehrenburg spent some days in Argentina where he was welcomed by many intellectuals. The Argentine Writers' Society held a reception in his honour in the Writers' House.

A Modern Edition of Avicenna's "Canon of Medecine"

The Academy of Sciences of the Soviet Socialist Republic of Uzbekistan has just published in a Russian translation the first volume of the famous work, Canon of Medecine, by Ibn Sina (Avicenna). This is the first time that a complete edition of this thesis has been published in a modern European language.

It was in 1952, following on the decision of the World Council of Peace to commemorate the thousandth anniversary of Ibn Sina, that the Academy of Sciences of Uzbekistan started to prepare for the publication in Russian of this fundamental work.

Until the 17th century the Canon of Medecine, which is a very encyclopedia of medecine, was looked upon as the medical manual. It still is in many Eastern states.

The Russian translation of this remarkable work was accomplished by a number of well known Uzbekistan philologists and doctors.

Around the World

Norway

During the discussions of the General Council of the Liberal International, held in Knocke-le-Zoute, Mr. Christian Oftedal, vice-chairman of the Norwegian Venstre Party demanded that China be represented in the United Nations.

"Universal membership must be the basis of a universal organisation", he stated. "China must be given her place in the United Nations, not for tactical reasons but in conformity with the rules..."

Denmark

On the initiative of a number of well known people of Aarhus, hundreds of people met on August 29th to protest against German rearmament. The watchword of the meeting was: "We have not forgotten the sound of the jackboot — we don't want to live through that again."

After a speech of welcome made by Mr. Kaj Rasmussen, Chairman of the Typographical Union, Mr. Thomas Christensen, Secretary of the Jutland Confederation of Peasants' Organisations, said:

"Everywhere in the world rearmament is a curse. It weighs heavily on the people and wastes resources which should be used to improve the living conditions of ordinary people. In opposing German rearmament we want at the same time to work for disarmament in other countries, so that the whole world may be freed from the plague of militarism and the fear of war."

Great Britain

In an article published in the Labour Party monthly Fact, Mr. Harold Wilson, former Minister of Trade under the Labour Government, shows the need for an expansion of trade between Great Britain and the Soviet Union.

Mr. Wilson criticises the restrictions imposed by the Americans and stresses that the expansion of trade between East and West can guarantee a stable situation and full employment in those branches of industry which are meeting with sharper and sharper competition in Western markets.

Stalingrad — Coventry

The Executive Committee of the Stalingrad City Soviet has addressed the following letter to the Mayor of Coventry:

"The Executive Committee of Stalingrad City Soviet informs you that the proposal of the Coventry-Stalingrad Friendship Committee and of Coventry City Council to send an appeal for the banning of the hydrogen bomb to the U.N. Disarmament Commission has been received with enthusiasm."

United States

At their annual convention at Newhaven, Connecticut, the representatives of 6,000 congregational churches in all parts of the country, condemned the irresponsible statements made by prominent officials demanding the employment of atomic or thermo-nuclear bombs in the current disputes.

Brazil

In its resolution on international questions the Brazilian Students' Congress calls for a struggle to obtain respect for the national sovereignty of all nations, and for every people's right to choose their own rulers and the constitutional system they consider most suitable.

It also calls for cultural exchanges between the nations by means of delegations, for the banning of weapons of mass destruction, and for the establishment of relations favouring the national economy.

The resolution also condemns colonialism and "any other kind of economic or political oppression".

Hungary

In the work of the Hungarian Peace Movement an important role is assigned to the National Committee's publications.

These are Peace Fighter, a bi-monthly review; the Peace Movement's monthly bulletin; and an important series of Notes on Foreign Policy. An illustrated folder entitled From Budapest to Geneva has just appeared, giving an account of the victories won by the World Peace Movement between the Budapest session of the World Council of Peace and the recent Geneva Conference.

Greece

The newspaper 'Avghi' reports that a deputation of the inhabitants of Neas Anhialos, near Halmyros, went to see the Athens authorities to protest at the expropriation of 375 acres of the best land in order to construct an airfield.

Burma

In a recent statement the Moulmein local Peace Committee voiced support for the five principles for peaceful coexistence enumerated in the joint statement made by the Burmese and Chinese Prime Ministers.

In Prome, representatives of organisations and trade unions pledged their support for the five principles at meetings in preparation for the District Peace Committee session.

Costa Rica

The Costa Rican National Peace Committee has undertaken a campaign to ease the tension in the relations between the countries of Central America.

Postcards are being sent to the President of the Republic asking him to observe the principle of non-intervention in foreign policy.

Signatures have also been collected to a document addressed to U.N.O. and asking that organisation to deal with the tense situation in Central America.

Eleven thousand signatures were collected in a short space of time.

Iceland

In the periodical Thjodviljinn 40 prominent Icelanders have published an appeal in which they call for a struggle for the withdrawal of United States troops. The signatories include Messrs. Gudmundur Thoroddsen, a university lecturer, Stefensen, Chairman of the Reykjavik Unskilled Workers' Joint Trade Unions Committee, Bjarnason, Chairman of the Industrial Workers' Union, the writer Halldor Laxness, together with doctors, lawyers and others.

This appeal marks the beginning of a campaign for signatures which will enable the Icelandic people to express their desire to see the end of foreign occupation.

The appeal concludes by saying that this demand is not provoked by any antagonism towards an other people but it is inspired by the pressing fact that the Icelandic people must control their own destiny. This demand is made in the hope that the Icelandic people will make its best possible contribution to the struggle for peace of all the peoples by keeping the country beyond the pale of the armaments race and war preparations.

Italy

At its session the Italian Peace Committee noted with satisfaction the rejection of the European Army treaty by the French National Assembly. It decided to organise mass rallies on the problems of peace and European security throughout the country during the month of October.

Japan

A peace rally at Osaka in which 35,000 people took part, including representatives of Kochi, Tottori and Shimane and other prefectures, adopted a resolution and a statement demanding a ban on atomic and hydrogen bombs. A programme of songs and dances, in which the theme of peace predominated, was presented at the rally.

Peace Bonfires

On the occasion of Peace Week, organised by the German Peace Council, the German Democratic Republic's frontiers with Poland and Czechoslovakia were the scene of simple and moving demonstrations. In fifty German localities near the borders, the friends of peace lit bonfires as night fell after holding various demonstrations.

Suddenly, the people on the other side of the border replied by lighting their own fires.

An eye-witness says that the people on the German side were very enthusiastic and happy to see that their message had been understood as a message of peace and friendship.

The President of the World Council of Peace Issues a Warning to Public Opinion about the London and Paris Agreements

The coming weeks will be of vital importance for the future of peace.

The enormous dangers to the preservation of peace contained in the London and Paris agreements make vigorous action by world public opinion necessary. The peoples of the countries directly concerned must act without delay because the Governments which drew up and signed the agreements are striving to get them ratified as swiftly as possible. There is a reason for this haste: if public opinion had sufficient time, it could weigh up the dangers contained in these agreements and compare their worth with the possibilities offered by the Soviet proposals.

Was not the French rejection of the European Defence Community obtained by the joint action of all who see in the maintenance of national independence a guarantee of peace, and in the revival of German militarism a threat of war?

The dangers implicit in the London and Paris agreements can be perceived by all, regardless of personal preferences for one social system rather than another.

To anyone who has studied these agreements attentively and understood their real significance, their approval can only mean approval of the policy of armed peace and rigid, hostile blocs. This policy, which mistakes ultimatum for negotiation, can only aggravate international tension and increase the danger of incidents and war.

It would, therefore, seem as if the signatories of these agreements wanted to increase international tension in the most dangerous manner — and this at a time when this tension had greatly decreased. Today, there are no longer any armed conflicts; economic and cultural exchanges are being developed; the prospects for agreement on disarmament have never been so good; and the European Defence Community treaty has been rejected.

These circumstances warranted the hope for a peaceful settlement of the German question through negotiation between the great powers concerned. However, there would be a danger of jeopardising all this if the agreements signed in London and Paris were ratified, since they settle the rearmament of Germany and its incorporation in the Atlantic Pact.

If these agreements were finally ratified they would, in exactly the same way as E.D.C., maintain and aggravate the division of Germany and Europe. They would delay and endanger any real negotiation with the Soviet Union on the German question by creating an accomplished fact openly directed against that country.

The promise of disarmament contained in the recent debates in the United Nations cannot be reconciled with the rearmament of the Federal German Republic, which can only lead to a speed-up in the armaments race. In order to find some justification for the agreements, the Governments which signed them try to prove that the rearmament of the Federal Republic is inevitable and necessary. Neither in law nor in fact can this statement be justified. What is intended — in the name of an inevitability which cannot be justified by shouting it loudly — is the organisation of an armed coalition with the leaders of West Germany who have never concealed their territorial demands and who are being given a renewed assurance that their authority is the only one that is recognised over the whole of Germany.

Another reason given is the need for reconciliation with Germany. If the London and Paris agreements were ratified they would give military means of action to those who formerly promoted and were responsible for the Hitler regime, who have never hidden their dream of a new European crusade and who would not long be restrained — as history has demonstrated — by the mere pledge not to use force contained in the agreements. Just as after the First World War, the efforts of the Western powers have been wholly directed towards restoring the least democratic and most warlike elements to power. Once again, just as in the past, while powerful currents of opposition to the revival of militarism are revealing themselves among the German people, every attempt is being made to isolate and weaken the peace-loving forces in Germany.

It is, on the contrary, by relying on these Germans, who are very numerous and are fighting courageously, that the way to reconciliation and peace could be opened.

I cannot do better than ask you to ponder the following warning that was given me in 1946 by a German scientist from the Federal Republic. He said: "If the Allies continue along the road of collaboration with former Nazis, there will be another Führer in ten years' time".

What the Press is saying...

"In the other countries, and particularly in France, it is not without apprehension that the people see a new Wehrmacht arising from the ashes of the old, nine years after the unconditional surrender of Hitler's Reich. To the specific dangers of German militarism is added the fact that Germany remains divided and that no one can with certainty predict what she will do with the arms and authority that are being restored to her."

Under the title: "What is Collective Security?", the Social Democratic newspaper Neuer Vorwärts has published an article by Herr Fritz Erler, a member of the Bundestag. Mr. Erler writes:

"It is sheer deception of the people to present any military alliance as a system of collective security. A military alliance is directed against a power which has stayed outside it; a system of collective security includes even the possible aggressor. The way the system works is that all participants pledge to unite against whichever one of them breaks the peace.

Erler stigmatises "the people who, in fact, do not want such a system but can only envisage a unified Germany as part of a military alliance dominated by the United States, even if that should wreck reunification", and adds:

"It is true that such a system of security can only function if the present tensions are eliminated; there is no way out of this situation unless there is at least some desire for peaceful coexistence. But neither can German unity be obtained without this minimum desire."

"The hardest and most tragic thing about the decision taken by Parliament yesterday is that Denmark has thereby thrown its weight into the scales in favour of a policy which increases tension and the danger of war in the world and speeds up the armaments race. Those who voted for such a policy must indeed have great confidence in Russia's peaceful attitude, otherwise they would never have dared to do it. Since they have this confidence, the basis of their reasons for supporting the rearmament of West Germany collapses like a house of cards. Thus it must be recognised that the rearmament of West Germany is not a necessary act of defence but a gratuitous act of an aggressive nature."

Holbaek Amts Venstreblad
(Journal of the Danish Radical Party)

"The recent decisions on the rearmament of West Germany taken at the London Conference are practically the same as those involved in the European Defence Community.

"The rearmament of West Germany represents a serious threat to the German Democratic Republic and the neighbouring countries. It is an obstacle to the unification of Germany; it increases world tension and the danger of war. It can only bring destruction on the countries of Europe and catastrophe to the German people."

Harian Rakjat (Indonesia)

GERMANY: "Security and Peace" Day

The West German Peace Committee called on all peace committees and the whole people to observe October 31st as "Security and Peace" Day.

Demonstrations took place in Kiel and Flensburg. The participants sent letters to the members of the Federal Parliament demanding the rejection of the London and Paris agreements and the resumption of great power negotiations. A similar demonstration took place the evening before in Lübeck.

A ballot was organised in the big "Goliath" motor car factory in Bremen. More than 90 percent of the workers who took part voted for the conclusion of a peace treaty and against rearmament.

At Herne in Westphalia, 200 miners of the Shamrock I and II pit sent to the local M.P. a resolution demanding the rejection of rearmament in any form.

Other meetings and demonstrations were held in Mannheim, Thübingen, Aachen and other towns.

The "Working Group of the International Conference for the Peaceful Solution of the German Problem" of West Germany met in Düsseldorf on October 31st. There was a discussion on the Paris agreement with foreign visitors: Sig. Basso and Sig. Pajetta, both M.P.s, from Italy; M. Stern and M. Ducastel from France; and Mrs. Minnaert from Holland. The meeting proposed the organisation of a European Conference at which the representatives of all the countries of Europe could discuss what to do to prevent the ratification of the Paris agreement.

On the occasion of "Security and Peace Day" the North Rhine-Westphalia Peace Committee issued an appeal to the people of which the following is an extract:

"The London Conference has created an immediate threat to Germany and Europe... The reconstitution of a West German army incorporated in a military coalition — such is the aim of the London agreement, as it was of the E.D.C. treaty...

"The rearmament of West Germany runs counter to the wishes of all honest Germans and creates the danger of a fratricidal war between Germans.

"The example of Korea should be a warning to us all. In addition to the mortal danger which threatens our country, the German people would also have to bear the huge burden of rearmament and to pay for arms to be used for the destruction of our country and those of other peoples. Twice in a generation German militarism has brought death and destruction to the whole world. It must not happen a third time. The German people and the peoples of Europe long for security and peace."

Provincial Meetings in ITALY

In the centre of the Italian Peace Movement's activity is the campaign against the London and Paris agreements. The movement is relating to this central theme all other questions, such as national independence, the struggle against foreign military bases, the expansion of trade and cultural co-operation. Meetings on a very broad basis are to be held in all provinces in preparation for a big national meeting.

In the larger provinces — Rome, Milan, Florence, Bologna, Genoa and Naples — the meetings are being preceded by local assemblies.

In Rome, for example, the peace committees sounded public opinion district by district and held interviews with well-known figures and various political groupings in order to find out their opinion on the major international issues. These opinions will be presented to big meetings either by those who collected the statements or, in some cases, by the notabilities themselves and will be discussed.

In Bologna, the provincial meetings are being preceded by assemblies in each of which a number of villages take part. The villages are grouped in zones according to their political, social or economic characteristics, for example: a zone in which the struggle against the nazi occupation was more highly developed and where, in consequence, the people are more alert to the danger of German rearmament; an industrial zone in which trade and production for peaceful purposes are the vital questions; cultural centres (the city of Bologna, for example) where debates on the problem of cultural co-operation are being organised.

In Sienna and Modena a ballot has been organised, presenting the alternative: German rearmament, or the unity and security of Europe. In South Italy activity centres on the theme: disarmament and peaceful investment, and is conducted in collaboration with the great Renaissance movement which works for the modernisation and industrialisation of these backward regions.

In a statement issued by the Italian Peace Committee we read the following:

"The popular forces which thwarted the plans of division and war involved in E.D.C. can face the threat to rearm Germany with new confidence and can forestall it. On the eve of the days during which the Italian people commemorate the victims of the two world wars unleashed by German militarism, the National Committee invites all local and provincial committees to promote and support all actions which can express our people's opposition to German rearmament and to the ratification of the pacts of division and war signed in Paris, and their desire for the unity and security of all the peoples of Europe, for the relaxation of international tension and for peace."

On October 5th, the Executive Committee of the National Union of Primary School Teachers, which has a membership of 48,000 — that is to say, practically all the primary school teachers in France — adopted a resolution which says in part:

"A genuine peace policy demands of men who claim to speak on behalf of the peoples that the four powers occupying Germany should agree to restore that country's unity on the basis of free elections, restore its independence through a peace treaty and keep it disarmed and outside any military coalition, while they themselves proceed with a great reduction of their armed forces."

FRENCH Peace Movement Appeals to the Country

The Executive Committee of the National Council of the French Peace Movement has decided to appeal to the country. It asks the people in their millions to sign the following text:

"To all elected representatives.

"If the agreements prepared in London and signed in Paris on October 24th, 1954 were to be ratified by Parliament they would give the green light for the revival of the Wehrmacht.

"They give Adenauer's Germany an army of 500,000 men, 8,000 tanks, 1,500 planes and 180 warships.

"They hand over Africa to the magnates of the Ruhr.

"They reconstitute a powerful armaments industry which, three times in 70 years, has hurled Europe into war and poverty.

"These decisions are opposed to the new possibilities of disarmament and will lead to a new armaments race.

"We French citizens hereby inform all elected representatives of our undying opposition to the rearmament of Germany.

"We say to the members of parliament:

"Do not ratify the London and Paris agreements!

"Ask the Government immediately to accept Four Power negotiation for the peaceful settlement of the German question!"

On October 31st most of the towns and villages of France demonstrated their determination to intensify the struggle to prevent the ratification of the London and Paris agreements. Their activity took the most diverse forms.

There was a continual stream of deputations into rooms which were often too small, where they were received by the Sponsoring Committees and in a number of cases by the Municipal Council.

For example, the Socialist Mayor of Alfortville (Seine Department) received 36 deputations; in Toulon the Socialist Mayor M. le Bellegou, barrister, together with his two Socialist deputies and two Communist councillors, received 47 deputations; in Le Havre (Seine Inferieure) the Radical Mayor M. Abadie received the Sponsoring Committee which had previously received 55 deputations in the Municipal Council's reception room; in Roanne (Loire), two Socialist and two Communist municipal councillors received 31 deputations in the Town Hall. In Auxerre, the deputy mayor M. Jean Moreau, an Independent, received the deputations, in Sanvic (Seine Inferieure) M. Siefridt, a member of parliament belonging to the M.R.P.... and so on. In Argenteuil (Seine) there were 82 deputations, in the IInd arrondissement of Paris 46, including 16 from the factories, in the 18th arrondissement 16 factory and 26 local deputations, in the 6th arrondissement 53 deputations.

All these deputations — and they were more numerous than on the national day of action against E.D.C. on July 11th — handed in the first results of the campaign against the revival of German militarism, among them 25,000 signatures in Lyons, 5,000 in Toulouse brought by 85 delegations, 4,000 in Roanne, 3,000 in Tarbes, 5,000 from Narbonne, 5,000 from Limoges, 1,800 from Oyannax, 4,000 from Maubeuge.

Rallies, demonstrations and meetings were held, with hundreds of people participating, in the Corn Exchange at Auch (Gers), at Aix en Provence (Bouches du Rhone), in the Town Hall at Ivry (Seine) where there were 500 people, at St. Florentin (Yonne) in front of the war memorial, before the plaques dedicated to those who were shot by the Nazis in the 6th arrondissement of Paris, and in many other places.

This day of activity has certainly given a new energy to the action of the peace forces in France, thus ensuring a good start to the national petition in which millions of Frenchmen will take part in the coming days. For it is necessary to move quickly and everyone knows it.

Already, a number of County Councils have gone on record either for Four Power negotiations or for disarmament. They are those of Aude (23 Social Democrats, one Communist and seven Radicals), of Corrèze (one Communist, 10 Social Democrats, 10 Radicals and one Independent), of Haute Vienne (22 Social Democrats, one M.R.P., five Communists and one Socialist).

The County Council of Aisne sent a message to M. Mendès-France asking him to accept on behalf of France the invitation to a Four Power Conference.

There is a growing amount of activity, and particularly of deputations to M.P.s, to ensure that the national will is expressed in Parliament, as it was over E. D. C., by the rejection of the London and Paris agreements.

GREAT BRITAIN: Congress for World Security

A call for immediate action against the London and Paris agreements was adopted unanimously by the British Congress for World Security in London on October 31st.

The Congress was attended by 650 delegates, of whom two fifths represented organisations of the trade union and Labour Movement, local and regional, and a third were from local peace committees. Many of the peace committees were represented by members of the Labour Party, trade unionists and co-operators.

Typical of the growing sentiment in the Labour Movement in favour of action for peace and with the Peace Movement were the speeches of Mr. John Burns, President of the Fire Brigades Union, and Councillor Edward Dixon of Coventry. Both called for a massive campaign to lift the bans on participation in the Peace Movement and for the democratic right of trade unionists and Labour Party members to take part in the work for peace.

Notable reports were made to the Congress by the Chairman of the British Peace Committee, Mr. Gordon Schaffer, on security, by Mr. John Elton, who analysed the Nine-Power agreements on Germany and their dangers, and by Dr. E.H.S. Burhop, who spoke on disarmament and weapons of mass destruction.

The conviction and confidence of those taking part were expressed by Mr. William Wainwright in his closing speech.

In an appeal the British Congress for World Security "calls on all supporters of peace to demand that their Members of Parliament vote against the rearmament of Western Germany and call for the immediate re-opening of Four-Power talks on Germany.

"There is no time to lose: summon meetings; form delegations; approach your Members of Parliament; send letters and telegrams. Save Britain and Europe from the revival of German militarism . . ."

The Congress also adopted a declaration on Germany, a resolution on the Movement's organisational principles and a Declaration on World Security which states:

"The solution of the issues dividing the world and threatening mankind with war can only be attained by the common effort of all toward agreement and co-operation . . .

"We welcome the calling by the World Peace Council of its great new campaign and of a World Assembly for Peace in 1955. We call on supporters of peace in this campaign to urge the governments to start implementing their professions of peace now, and to replace policies based upon blocs and threats of force by a policy of the co-operation of all, without exception, for the security of all."

Statement by British Peace Committee

"No country can be secure if Europe is divided into opposing sides, with a divided Germany at its heart.

"The security of each country can only be guaranteed if all states, whatever their way of life, agree to live together in peace.

"This requires co-operation between all the states of Europe.

"The German problem must be settled in a way that is acceptable to the U.S.A., the U.S.S.R., Great Britain and France, to the other states of Europe and to the German people.

"This settlement must end the division of Germany, prevent that country from being used to threaten any of its neighbours, permit the organisation of European security, and lead to an agreement on general disarmament including the abolition of weapons of mass destruction.

"This can only be achieved by negotiation between the 4 Great Powers. The Soviet proposals for European Security, and the British-French and Soviet proposals on disarmament provide the basis on which these negotiations could begin."

Women and Workers of Norway

A women's demonstration against the rearmament of West Germany has taken place in Oslo. The women sent to Parliament a motion protesting against the remilitarisation of West Germany and its incorporation in N.A.T.O.

At a recent meeting, the workers of the big Freia chocolate factory in Oslo passed a resolution against West Germany's participation in the North Atlantic treaty. It says:

"We call on all organised workers to protest and demand a popular referendum so that the people may be able to make their voices heard on this important question . . ."

A worker's meeting held in Trondheim sent to Parliament a protest against the remilitarisation of West Germany.

From the saltpetre works at Eidger 404 workers sent to the president of the Parliament a letter in which they say:

"We are against any remilitarisation of West Germany . . ."

Denmark says "No":

"We Remember the Sound of the Jackboots"

For several months a wide movement of protest against the remilitarisation of West Germany has been developing in Denmark. Already in August hundreds of people met in Aarhus to protest against German rearmament. The meeting was called by a number of well-known figures and was held under the slogan:

"We remember the sound of the jackboots. We do not want to go through it again."

The Danish people's struggle against the creation of a new German Army in any shape or form, and particularly against Germany's entry into the Atlantic Pact, became even stronger after the French Parliament's rejection of E.D.C.

The decisions of the London Conference were condemned by the Danish people, and the Danish Peace Committee issued an appeal to the country in which it said:

"We call on the Government and Parliament not to decide hastily on Denmark's attitude to the London plans as they have done in recent years in relation to foreign policy decisions of equal importance, but to settle this question through a referendum . . ."

This statement was issued as a leaflet which the people of Denmark were asked to sign.

The Danish Press

Persons of mark gave the protest movement their support in public statements. For example, Professor Jörgen Dich, a well-known Social Democrat, wrote two important articles in the newspaper Politiken condemning the rearmament of Germany and its incorporation in the Atlantic Pact.

In an open letter published by the newspaper Fyns Venstreblad the young writer Carl Scharnberg called on all Danish citizens to ask their M.P.s to condemn German rearmament.

Many newspapers, including the Conservative Aarhus Stiftstidende, the Christian Kristeligt Dagblad, the Communist Land og Folk, the Venstres Folkeblad and the Middelfart Venstreblad also reflected the great national trend against German rearmament.

Parliament

The Danish Parliament was asked to vote on the London agreements on October 19th. A majority of the members of parliament, voted for the ratification of the London decisions which put German militarism back in the saddle. During the debate the Radical M.P. Jörgen Jörgensen said:

"The remilitarisation of West Germany makes the reunification of Germany impossible . . . The negotiations for a peaceful settlement of the German question must continue to be conducted as long as the West German army is not a reality . . . The Soviet Union's proposals for disarmament open the way to new negotiations . . ."

Today, from all parts of the country protests against the ratification of the London agreement are flooding in to the Government and Parliament. The collection of signatures goes on.

Popular Ballots

In many factories ballots on the question of West German remilitarisation have been organised. Out of the 223 workers of the "Gutemberg House" printing works, 201 voted against German rearmament.

The Peace Committee of the Bronshoi Husum borough of Copenhagen organised a referendum in the borough and 1,345 out of the 1,500 who took part voted against the remilitarisation of West Germany.

The Copenhagen foundry workers' and engineers' unions, the Aalborg painters' union and the Fredrikshavn naval carpenters' union passed protest resolutions at their last meetings.

In an open letter published in Land og Folk a number of important officials of the Social Democratic Party in Jutland, including Professor Jörgen Dich, called on all Social Democrats to fight against German militarism.

Far from putting an end to the Danish people's struggle against the rearmament of West Germany, the vote in Parliament has provoked a revival of the protest movement.

Belgium — Socialists Declare their Opposition

"German rearmament is a thing to be feared and which we cannot accept with a light heart at the very time when the German trade unions are almost unanimously rejecting rearmament.

"Moreover, today in Europe the political barometer is set towards the relaxation of tension. The London agreements threaten to become obstacles in the way of lessening of tension, negotiation and the reunification of Germany."

(Speech of Senator Rolin at the General Council of the Belgian Socialist Party.)

"Our opposition to German rearmament arises from our awareness that the division of Germany is in danger of bringing catastrophe.

"The temptation to unify Germany will become stronger and stronger, particularly if there should be an economic crisis. Reunification can be accomplished either through negotiation or by force. We are afraid that a rearmed Germany will seek to force a solution through reunification and drag us into war."

(Speech of Alderman Sluzny at the General Council of the Belgian Socialist Party.)

Belgian Miners Reaffirm their Opposition

A resolution adopted by the miners of the Tertre, the biggest mine in the Borinage region, says:

"We greet the German labour movement and thank it for refusing to launch itself once more into an adventure from whose tragic consequences the workers themselves have suffered.

"We would recall that when the miners of our pit were asked to vote on the rearmament of Germany, an overwhelming majority rejected it . . ."

In conclusion the miners of the Tertre pit reaffirm their opposition and reject the London agreements.

The resolution was signed by the following: Georges Gabriel, delegate of the Amalgamated Union, Louis Leconte, delegate of the Independent Union, Gustave Declerq, delegate of the Christian Union.

Meeting in Madras

On October 10th, 1954, a public meeting was organised by the Madras Peace Committee at the Crescent Hall, Triplicane, to protest against the decision of the Nine Nations Conference in London to rearm West Germany. Shri V. Parameswaran, member of the World Council of Peace, presided.

Mr. Charles Coutts from Great Britain, Editor of World Youth, and Mr. William Devine from Canada, Secretariat member of the World Federation of Democratic Youth, addressed the gathering.

Mr. Coutts strongly critised the decision of the London Conference and said that British youth and workers will not support it. He pleaded for unity between the youth of India, Britain and other countries to prevent the rearmament of West Germany.

Opposition to S.E.A.T.O. in Burma

A meeting to express opposition to the South East Asia Treaty was recently organised in Rangoon by the Rangoon District Committee of the Burma Peace Committee. Representatives of Burmese trade unions and other mass organisations, members of Parliament, monks and people of all walks of life took part.

The Chairman of the meeting, U Shwe Pyu, said that the signing of the South East Asia Treaty, which was designed for the purpose of war, endangered peace in the world and especially in South East Asia. The signing of this treaty aggravated world tension. The people of the whole world were opposed to war and longing for peace. South East Asian countries such as India, Burma, Indonesia and Ceylon had all refused to take part. He called on the Burmese people resolutely to oppose this aggressive treaty.

A declaration of the Burma Peace Committee against the South East Asia Treaty was read at the meeting, which adopted a resolution calling for closer solidarity between Asian countries to preserve security in Asia. A demonstration was held after the meeting.

Local branches of the Burma Peace Committee, including those of Mandalay and Letpadon, also held meetings and launched signature campaigns against the South East Asia Treaty.

Protests in Australia

The New South Wales Peace Council has called for the utmost public opposition to the ratification of S.E.A.T.O. by the Australian Parliament.

In Surry Hills a local Peace Group has decided to organise a deputation to Mr. Sheehan M.P. to discuss the S.E.A.T.O. pact. A local petition is being circulated before the deputation goes.

India to hold Asian Solidarity Conference

At a press conference at the end of October Dr. Mulk Raj Anand, Vice-President of the All India Peace Council, announced that the All India Congress for Peace and Asian Soldarity would be held in Madras from December 30, 1954, to January 2, 1955.

The convening of the congress, Dr. Anand said, was inspired by the popular enthusiasm in India aroused by recent advances of the peace movement in Asia, the success of the Geneva Conference and the growth of friendship between the two great Asian peoples of China and India, symbolised in the exchange of visits by the Prime Ministers of the two countries and their joint statements.

"The congress has also been inspired," continued Dr. Anand, "by popular indignation against the efforts to divide the Asian peoples and to dominate them through the conclusion of military pacts, particularly the U.S.-Pakistan pact and the latest S.E.A.T.O. agreement."

Dr. Anand expressed confidence that the congress would be "one of the most important demonstrations of our united will for the peace and freedom of all countries of the world." This would pave the way for that Asian solidarity which alone could effectively ensure world peace.

The campaign for Asian Solidarity launched by the All India Peace Council with the observance of the Asian Solidarity month in September is being intensified. The campaign is being linked with the coming All India Congress for Peace and Asian Solidarity.

Various Peace Committees are approaching the local and district units of popular organisations to elect delegates to the Madras Congress.

Central India

A resolution supporting the five principles for peaceful co-existence embodied in the joint statement of Prime Ministers Chou En-lai and Nehru was adopted by the North Madhya Bharat (Central India) Regional Convention held on October 3 in Gwalior.

The resolution stated that these five principles could "lead to the lessening of international tension".

Other resolutions passed by the Convention condemned Western interference in the internal affairs of Asian countries, as exemplified by S.E.A.T.O., as "dangerous to peace in Asia".

Pepsu

Hundreds of Patiala citizens greeted with loud applause Pandit Chatur Narain Malviya's declaration that "no power on earth can turn Asia into an arena of war" at a public meeting on October 1, organised by the Patiala Asian Solidarity Committee. The meeting was presided over by Shri Sunderlal, General Secretary of the Pepsu Pradesh Congress and was addressed by Bhagwant Singh, a Congress party member of the Legislative Assembly, S. Rajinder Singh, Akali leader; Shri Surinder Nath Khosla, Pepsu United Front Assembly Party Secretary and member of the Legislative Assembly, and Shri Ramesh Walia, Secretary, Pepsu Peace Council.

Madura

At a public meeting in the Rajaji Playgrounds organised by the City Peace Committee to observe Asian Solidarity Month, Shri K. Sethuraman, B.A.B.L., a leading lawyer, presided. About 2,000 people attended the meeting.

In his opening remarks the, chairman explained the necessity for the peoples and the governments of Asian countries to raise their voices in protest against S.E.A.T.O.

Prof. S. Ramakrishnan appealed to the Asian peoples to unite. He emphasised the achievements of the Peace Movement and appealed to all Asian nations to accept the Five Principles of the Nehru-Chou statement.

Shri Iman E. Inamdar, a discharged worker of the May and Baker Co. of Bombay, has collected more than 2000 signatures to the Asian Solidarity Appeal in his own village of Knuer.

Punjab

A well attended public meeting at Phagwara was addressed by Shri Lajpat Rai, General Secretary of the Punjab Peace Committee, and S. Bhupinder Singh. A large number of local mill workers were present. The meeting unanimously adopted the Asian Solidarity Appeal issued by the All India Peace Council.

Hyderabad

Five public meetings were held in the Nizamabad District for the Asian Solidarity campaign. The local Kisan Sabha is collecting signatures. Public meetings were held by the workers of Hathi Gold Mines and Shahabad Cement Factory where Shri Makhdoom Mohiuddin, member of the Legislative Assembly, and Shri Raj Bhadur Gour M. P. spoke. Resolutions supporting the Five Principles were unanimously adopted.

In Hyderabad City meetings have been held in various districts to explain the Five Principles.

Engineering workers

The inaugural Session of the General Body of the General Engineering Employees Union, held on October 2, has unanimously passed a resolution appealing to the employees to participate actively in the Asian Solidarity campaign and collect signatures to the Appeal issued by the All India Peace Council.

The resolution denounces S.E.A.T.O. as a move towards war and welcomes the steps taken by Prime Minister Nehru in keeping India out of the pact.

It wholeheartedly supports the Five Principles and demands that the government of India conclude treaties of friendship and co-operation with all peace-loving countries.

... and Petroleum workers

The General meeting of the Bombay Petroleum Workers' Union has passed a resolution welcoming the principles enunciated in the joint declaration of the Prime Ministers of India and China and has urged upon the Government of India to effectively implement the declaration.

The resolution calls for banning the atomic and hydrogen bombs and protests against the U.S.-Pakistan Military Pact.

Statement by Professor OYAMA

Professor Ikuo Oyama, the well-known Japanese peace leader, has said that the speedy progress of the Peace Movement in Japan this year is a reflection of the victory of the peace forces in the world struggle between the forces of war and peace. Professor Oyama made the statement in the October issue of the Japanese magazine Kaizo.

Japan's peace movement, Professor Oyama writes, is not only an international movement but also a patriotic movement of the masses of the Japanese people. The increased subordination of Japan to United States imperialism, he says, has caused the Japanese people to begin to think about their country's political and economic independence. This has resulted in a growing demand for trade and cultural exchanges with Japan's neighbours, China and the Soviet Union in particular.

Professor Oyama points out that this point of view is shared not only by Japan's workers, peasants, fishermen and intellectuals, but also by owners of small and medium enterprises and other capitalists, excluding only a handful of monopolists.

The five principles for peaceful coexistence enunciated by the Prime Ministers of China, India and Burma are an embodiment of the unanimous desire of the Asian people for peace, Professor Oyama declares. He calls upon the Japanese people to struggle, on the basis of these five principles, for Japan's independence and for peace in Asia.

Work of the Indonesian Peace Movement

The First National Peace Congress of Indonesia, held at the beginning of 1954, paved the way for the development of the Peace Movement and assured it a place in the social life of the country.

The various campaigns to implement the Congress recommendations have made possible the wide diffusion of the idea of peace, as is shown by the statement recently made at Bandjermasia by the Prime Minister, Mr. Ali Sastroamidjojo: "Indonesia requires peace in order to reconstruct the country."

First Plenary Assembly

The first plenary assembly of the Peace Movement was convened at the same time as the Geneva Conference. Among the resolutions passed were one on the constitution, one on the formation of a full executive committee and one on the organisation of the Movement.

Resolutions were also passed in support of the decisions taken at the meeting of the Secretariat of the Peace Liaison Bureau of the Asian and Pacific Regions and of the decisions of the Extraordinary Session of the World Council of Peace in Berlin.

Activities and Campaigns

On receiving a delegation from the National Congress President Soekarno said:

"The Peace Movement enjoys the support of the whole Indonesian people because its ideals correspond to their desires . . ."

Indeed, everything the Peace Movement has undertaken concerns Indonesian life very closely. Here are a few examples.

Anti H-bomb Movement

The H-bomb tests in the Pacific aroused the anger of the people and Government of Indonesia. Protest demonstrations were organised in Makassar — the region nearest the site of the tests — by the Makassar Peace Committee and thousands of people joined in. The demonstrations culminated in a unanimous declaration urging the immediate ending of the tests and the absolute banning of the H-bomb as a weapon of war. This action received support from all sections of the people as well as from the Government which later officially demanded the banning of the H-bomb.

For Negotiation and the Relaxation of Tension

A campaign for the relaxation of international tension was conducted on the occasion of the successful conclusion of the Geneva Conference. This campaign, too, was enthusiastically welcomed and supported by the whole Indonesian people, and this was reflected in the telegram sent by the Indonesian Prime Minister to the Foreign Ministers of Great Britain, the Soviet Union, the People's Republic of China and France. He said:

"We hope that this first step to peace will be followed by others and that it will be a first step towards collective security and well-being for the whole of mankind."

Action against S.E.A.T.O.

The attempts to involve Indonesia in military pacts have so far met with failure, especially the attempts made by the United States to involve Indonesia in S.E.A.T.O. The absolute refusal of the Government of Indonesia to take part in this organisation reveals very clearly the Indonesian people's desire to live at peace with the rest of the world. The Peace Movement's activity in favour of a relaxation of international tension has become so popular that even social and political organisations which are usually antagonistic to peace efforts have taken part in the campaigns against S.E.A.T.O.

The Five Principles

The Indonesian Peace Movement's main task in the future is to work for the conclusion of pacts of friendship based on the five principles enunciated in the joint declaration made by Mr. Nehru and Mr. Chou En-lai.

At the present time the need to support the principles of peaceful coexistence is more than ever felt by the people of Indonesia and their Government, who are playing an important role in the consolidation of peace in Asia.

Memorandum of Israeli Peace Committee

The Israeli Peace Committee has presented to the Government and to every M.P. a memorandum on the restoration of the rights of the People's Republic of China in the United Nations. We give the following excerpts:

"It is an utterly unnatural, and also illegal, state of affairs that a state with over 600 million inhabitants, without which no important international problem can be permanently solved, as has lately been proved in international relations, should be kept outside the United Nations Organisation, to whose name the peoples' hopes for peace and international co-operation are attached. With People's China outside U.N.O., the latter cannot fulfil its task properly . . .

"The particular importance of the Geneva Conference lies in the fact that it has recognised the necessity of associating the Chinese Government in all important international negotiations . . . .

"We should like to mention that two years ago 401,000 citizens in Israel of all sections (43 percent of the adult population) signed a petition organised by us for the convening of a Conference of the Five Great Powers, including the People's Republic of China, to settle all the international questions now in dispute and to lay down guarantees for the maintenance of peace. The acceptance of People's China in U.N.O. would facilitate to an unmeasurable degree the calling of such a conference, whose importance has already been demonstrated by the happy results of the first meeting of the Great Powers in Geneva, which brought about the ending of the war in Indo-China . . ."

Australian Senator Advocates Recognition of China

Mr. R. Kendall, Liberal Senator of Queensland, advocated the recognition of China in an address to the Victoria branch of the Australia-China Society. He said that inclusion of China in the United Nations, together with Western recognition, would remove the war threat.

Taiwan was an internal Chinese issue; China should be left to solve her own problems, Mr. Kendall added.

Appeal of Uruguayan National Peace Council

"Abrogate the military treaty with the United States!"

The arrival in Uruguay of war supplies and United States military technicians by virtue of the stipulations of the bilateral military treaty between the United States and Uruguay has been commented on by many Uruguayan newspapers and has aroused great indignation among all sections of the population. The National Peace Council immediately issued the following appeal:

"There is great haste to implement the military treaty with the United States. Dozens of military aircraft and other war supplies are arriving in the country through the port of Montevideo and Carrasco airport. Several dozen North American instructors have also arrived to reinforce the military and civilian personnel who interfere in every aspect of the national life.

"The tragic experience of Guatemala has made clear, even to the most naive, what the aim of such preparations is. These armaments and military treaties serve to drown in blood the freedom and the national independence of the countries of Latin America. They bring war to our peoples.

"Furthermore, the arms deliveries and the upkeep of foreign military technicians necessitate the expenditure of tens of millions of pesos, which are paid by the people. Every delivery of military aircraft means further increases in taxes and in the prices of bread and meat. The military treaty increases the poverty from which the people are suffering.

"Many political parties are now speaking out for peace. The National Peace Council rejoices at this for it means that the correctness our of people's struggle for peace is being recognised — our people who prevented the sending of troops to Korea, courageously fought the ratification of the military treaty and expressed their ardent solidarity with Guatemala. But today it is not enough to talk of peace; the will to preserve peace must be demonstrated in concrete acts. The Government can do this by immediately abrogating the military treaty.

"The National Peace Council calls on the people to intensify their activity for peace by demanding the non-implementation and abrogation of the treaty, an end to buying armaments and the departure from Uruguay of the North American military men and technicians."

Support for the People of Guatemala

In Uruguay demonstrations of solidarity with the people of Guatemala continue. During September a further meeting in Montevideo called by the Movement for the Defence of Guatemala was a great success. The speakers, who included two M.P.s, condemned the policy of aggression which made a victim of Guatemala and which is a permanent threat to the peoples of Latin America.

Speaking at a meeting organised by a students' association, Dr. Eduardo Jiminez de Arechaga, Professor of International Law at Montevideo University and General Secretary of the National Council of the Uruguayan Government, had the following to say of the attitude adopted by the United Nations Security Council to the complaint lodged by the Arbenz Government at the time of the aggression against Guatemala:

"It must be pointed out that Guatemala's request did not merely refer to an international dispute of a regional character — a contingency covered by article 52, paragraph 2 (of the United Nations Charter Ed.) which was invoked by the United States delegate — but, on the contrary, to something much more serious and urgent, namely, an act of international aggression and the non-observance by the aggressors of the provisional measures taken by the Security Council.

"It may be said that the Security Council's negative attitude to a step of this kind constitutes a violation of the provisions of the Charter which lays down the Council's special responsibility for the maintenance of security in any case of aggression . . ."

Colombia

National Conference

A national conference of the Friends of Peace has been convened for the second half of November in Bogota.

In addition to the general questions confronting the Peace Movement, the conference will take up what is at present Colombia's most acute problem: the artificial lowering of the price of coffee through foreign economic interference. To remedy this situation, business circles are widely urging the restoration of normal commercial relations with all countries without distinction.

The conference will also examine organisational questions, particularly the following: how to strengthen the various units of the Movement and bring the widest sections of the people into action for peace.

An Article by the Secretary of the Mexican Peace Council

In an article entitled "For Security and Peace" Sr. Juan Pablo Sainz, teacher, secretary of the Mexican National Peace Council, says:

". . . At present, their (those who want war Ed.) strongest efforts are concentrated on rearming Germany and perpetuating the division of that country. They intend to use Germany as a shock brigade against the peoples of Europe, trampling on their right to self-determination and independence, and especially against the Soviet Union.

"It is because of this that the German question must receive priority and that the activity of the Peace Movement throughout the world must be concentrated on achieving its peaceful settlement.

"This question and those arising from the creation of aggressive blocs, the use of violence against the peoples to suppress their right to self-determination and independence, interference in the internal affairs of other countries, the armaments race and the manufacture of weapons of mass destruction make the fight for security the central task of the peoples. The best formulation of security is to be found in the principles put forward by Mr. Nehru and Mr. Chou En-lai . . .

"Our country's security is inseparably bound up with the preservation of our national independence and sovereignty . . . The essential characteristic of the Movement is that it is wide, popular, democratic and non-party . . . Experience shows that mass actions are the fundamental necessity . . ."

Theme of Movement's current Campaign in Chile

In a statement issued on October 14th, the Executive Committee of the Chilean Peace Movement gives the following definition of the principles on which the current work of the Movement is based:

"We advocate peaceful coexistence between East and West as the sole way of preserving peace . . .

"On the national level the central theme of our struggle is respect for Chile's sovereignty, with all the rights it entails: freedom to have the government of one's choice; free and sovereign rights over the national production to trade with all countries, seeking the most suitable prices; the establishment of diplomatic relations with all countries; the denunciation of treaties and pacts which restrict our national independence, and so on."

Paraguay — Campaign for a Peace Budget

In its Information Bulletin the Paraguayan Committee of the Friends of Peace advocates a peace policy and points out that 49.8 percent of the new Paraguayan budget is devoted to the Ministries of Defence and the Interior.

"This situation", says the bulletin, "has harmful consequences for the people of Paraguay . . . Paraguay must have a policy of peace and the relaxation of international tension . . . The National Peace Movement publicly denounces this state of affairs and draws the Government's attention to the fact that unproductive expenditure must cease and that the parts of the budget devoted to the well-being of the people must be increased. The people of Paraguay want and fight for a policy of peace and prosperity."

From the same bulletin we take the following statement:

"Guatemala possessed a democratic regime which had the support of the people. It was advancing along the road of national independence and democratic rights for the people. The agrarian reforms, which were opposed to the influence of the United Fruit Company, were transforming the general structure of the Guatemalan economy . . .

"In Paraguay, as in Guatemala, the story of United States diplomatic, economic and military intervention is a bloody one . . .

"The struggle for peace, democratic freedoms and national independence is closely bound up with the struggle against North American interference in the State of Paraguay, with the departure of the North American military mission and the recovery of our wealth from the big foreign monopolies."

Sweden:

After the Peace Cruise

Recently those who took part in the Peace Cruise, members of the Swedish Peace Movement and many well-known figures held a meeting in the big hall of the House of Citizens in Stockholm.

Dr. Varenius, President of the Swedish Peace Committee, stressed the great importance of the cruise for friendly relations between the Baltic countries. He then spoke of the contribution the Nordic countries were making to the world movement for the relaxation of international tension, the banning of atomic and hydrogen bombs, the reduction of armaments and the restoration of the right of the People's Republic of China to a seat in the United Nations.

The documentary film, Peace Cruise, which was taken on board the Batory, was shown.

Japanese People demand Banning of H-Bomb

The Bureau of the National Council of Signature-collecting Movements for the Banning of the Atomic and Hydrogen Bombs, meeting in Tokyo on October 5th, decided to continue the collection of signatures till the end of the year.

On this occasion the message sent by the World Council of Peace to the National Council of Signature-collecting Movements was published.

Fishermen

Japanese fishermen have once more come forward with the demand that hydrogen bombs be banned and that full compensation be paid by the United States for damages suffered as a result of the hydrogen bomb tests.

U.S. hydrogen bomb tests have brought heavy losses to Japan's fishing industry. By September 30th more than 155,000 pounds of tuna had been condemned as unfit for consumption in the Tsukiji central fish market in Tokyo.

A resolution to this effect was adopted at a national fishermen's rally held in Tokyo on October 12th to commemorate the death of the late hydrogen bomb victim, Aikichi Kuboyama. The rally was attended by nearly a thousand representatives of fishermen from all over Japan.

Following the rally the fishermen divided into separate groups which then presented their demand to the U.S. Embassy, the Upper and Lower Houses of the Diet and the Government.

Catholics

The New York Catholic Worker has published a communication from the Catholic Social Problems Association in Japan concerning the American hydrogen bomb tests, demanding that the Japanese victims of the Bikini explosion be compensated. The communication states:

"Following the will of his Holiness and with the permission of Bishop Furaya, a campaign for the banning of H-bombs has been undertaken by three churches in the city of Kyoto ... A similar campaign is being carried on by many Catholic churches in Japan ..."

Scientists

A resolution against atomic energy research for war was adopted on October 21st at a meeting of the Japan Science Conference, a major organisation of Japanese scientists.

The meeting also adopted a resolution to promote Sino—Japanese scientific and cultural exchanges.

IN THE UNITED STATES

Election Appeal by American Peace Crusade

Meeting recently in New York, the American Peace Crusade Resident Board urged American voters to seek support on a number of peace issues from all candidates for public office. These issues include: a strengthened, all-inclusive United Nations; the opening of markets to American business and the creation of jobs for American workers by ending restrictions on East-West trade; participation in a programme of international cultural exchange to encourage goodwill and better understanding among all.

Speaking of the coming elections, the American Peace Crusade Resident Board pointed to the need for people to influence candidates to speak for peaceful negotiations.

Noting that the people of all nations had compelled an end to the wars in Korea and Indo-China through peaceful negotiations, the American Peace Crusade stated that "negotiations can also settle all other disputes which carry the risk of new conflicts".

The Crusade warned of explosive grounds for new wars in a divided, remilitarised Germany and a divided Asia. It noted further incitement to war in a policy of repression of colonial peoples' struggles for freedom and independence.

"The peoples of all nations, fearful of H-bomb destruction, demand that their governments get together and solve these problems so that all countries, regardless of political and economic systems, live together in peace", stated the Resident Board.

The Board also decided that there be the widest observance of the Eighth Anniversary of the United Nations on October 24th.

For Collective Security

The last number of the monthly review Mir, published by the Czechoslovak Peace Committee, is entirely devoted to the question of the security of nations. The articles contained in this issue describe the untiring activity of the peoples of Czechoslovakia, Germany, France, the Soviet Union and other European countries for the establishment of a system of security.

Our photo shows the cover of the review bearing the title: For Collective Security, and illustrated by the French artist, Jean Effel.

Argentine:

The campaign against the H-bomb goes on throughout the country. Following the action taken by the doctors of Rosario, which was a great success, the doctors of Buenos Aires are intensifying their campaign for the banning of the H-bomb and other weapons of mass destruction.

In an interesting article published in La Prensa, Dr. Bustos Fierro, M. P. demonstrates the importance of such international meetings as the one that took place in Stockholm and stresses the necessity of the campaign against the use of thermo-nuclear weapons. Furthermore, at the Vienna session of the Interparliamentary Union Mrs. Delia de Parodi, the Argentine delegate, put forward a motion urging the stopping of the armaments race and the banning of thermo-nuclear weapons.

Stalingrad Receives the Mayor of Coventry

On the invitation of the Mayor of Stalingrad, the Lord Mayor of Coventry, Alderman John Fennel, and five other council members, have made a three week visit to the Soviet Union. We have already reported in the Bulletin that the Coventry City Council proposed to the Stalingrad Council that they publish a joint appeal of the two martyred cities demanding the banning of atomic and thermo-nuclear weapons.

As the delegation left Coventry by air Alderman John Fennel declared that the visit would reinforce the relations between the two countries. He added:

"Our primary object is to get a joint statement with Stalingrad and ourselves on the agenda of the Unites Nations conference for outlawing atom and hydrogen bombs.

"If possible, we want to suggest an international conference respecting disarmament."

An old Labour Party member, Councillor Arthur James Waugh, said:

"We intend to start a new chain reaction with the Russians and launch total peacefare."

THE CULTURAL ACTIVITIES OF THE PEACE MOVEMENT

Since its foundation the World Council of Peace has devoted particular attention to the question of cultural exchanges and has sought to encourage all individual or collective cultural activities which favour peace. It has done so not only for humanistic reasons, which in themselves are sufficient justification for this attitude, but also, and mainly, to frustrate those who, with the aim of dividing the world into two irreconcilable parts, try by every means to break the bonds that link all the cultures of the world.

In vast regions of the world where, because of the atmosphere of mistrust and hysteria, this scheming has been able to sow confusion in certain sections of public opinion, this work of the World Council of Peace is not easy. Nonetheless, it has given quite appreciable results. In spite of the many obstacles that international tension places in the way of cultural exchanges, it can easily be seen that these exchanges are being established and increased in every field and in all directions on an ever broader scale and in an ever more sustained and fruitful manner. But here, as in every other sphere of international relations, the successes won cannot conceal all the obstacles that still bar the way.

Our Movement itself suffers from weaknesses in the organisation of its cultural activities. The idea of the celebration of cultural anniversaries is a good one, but it must be materialised in all countries, it must be made to live, and the masses of the people must be brought into it by explaining its real meaning and making them play an active part in it. This is also true of the International Peace Prizes, which every National Committee and every member of our Movement should know and make known to others. We must also support in an active and sustained way meetings between men of culture, we should help to bring them about and publicise their results.

Lastly, we must be more energetic and take many more measures to implement the recommendations, resolutions and appeals of the World Council of Peace in this field. At the forthcoming session of the World Council the cultural commission will be of particular importance. The recommendations which it will certainly draw up must be put into practice by every National Committee, and every member of the Peace Movement must have his or her own task in this field. Cultural activities are not of special interest only to a more or less numerous elite. Nothing should be allowed to restrict this campaign whose results will exert such a great influence on the life of the scientist and the worker, the future of artists and students, the well-being of peasants and officeworkers. Our Movement lives and grows on the support of hundreds of millions of men and women. For all of them, cultural activities and exchanges must mean what in reality they are: the finest basis of understanding and friendship between the peoples; a living source of respect for the diverse characteristics of the national genius of every people; a climate favourable to the peaceful coexistence of different economic and social systems; a lasting bond of peace between men and nations.

AN EXAMPLE OF TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

During its recent visit to the People's Republic of China the Soviet Government delegation made the Chinese people a gift of a complete set of equipment for a 50,000 acre farm. The gift includes: 94 caterpillar tractors; four tractors of the Byelorussian type for weeding; 100 combine harvesters; 30 lorries; four petrol tankers; four lorries for petrol distribution; two mobile workshops; 9 cars; 10 side-cars; six two-wheeled trailers; 8 four-wheeled trailers; 128 tractor-drawn ploughs; 120 tractor-drawn sowers; 100 cultivators and ploughs for ploughing stubble; 1,600 harrows; 16 machines for cleaning grain; 16 hay-gathering machines; 14 different machine-tools for equipping the repair shops; two complete sets of electric welding equipment; installations for a power station; 13 wireless transmitters of different kinds; a telephone exchange for one hundred telephones; and a mobile cinema.

This gift constitutes a concrete aid in the technical development of Chinese agricultural production. There are no conditions whatever attached to it and it may be considered as an example to follow in the sphere of international technical assistance.

Sports Meetings Mean International Friendship

In recent weeks there has been an increased number of international sports meetings, particularly between the countries of East and West. Events have confirmed the correctness of the persistent campaign the World Council of Peace has conducted in this field; sports meetings are a valuable contribution to the reinforcement of friendship between the peoples. Each sports meeting has become a festival of physical culture and international friendship.

The British public gave a very friendly welcome to the Soviet athletes who competed in the London-Moscow sports meeting. The 50,000 spectators in the White City stadium received the visitors with loud applause to which they answered with the cry of 'Peace and friendship between the peoples'. The many men's and women's events were fiercely contested.

The World Weight-lifting Championships took place in Vienna and the results were sensational. The best weight-lifters from many countries took part, including the United States, the Soviet Union, Iran, Egypt, France, Burma, Czechoslovakia, the Federal German Republic, Austria, Finland, Italy and Sweden. Several new world records were established.

Moscow Dynamo have visited France to play against the Girondins and other clubs, after which the Soviet team toured several European countries.

The Fifth World Modern Pentathlon Championships were held in Budapest; there were teams from Sweden, the United States, Switzerland, France, Hungary, Finland, Austria and other countries.

The Czechoslovak and French men's national volley-ball teams met at the Coubertin Stadium in Paris; there was not an empty seat.

Belgium has received a visit from Spartak, the Moscow football team, which played teams from Anderlecht and Liège.

In London, the famous Hungarian football team, Honved, played West Bromwich Albion.

The Rumanian International Athletic Championships have been held in Bucharest; teams from Poland, Hungary, the German Democratic Republic, the Soviet Union, Sweden and France participated.

Egypt's weight-lifting champions went to the Soviet Union where they competed against their Soviet colleagues in Leningrad.

Austria's footballers have met a Bucharest select eleven. The Austrian visitors were given a cordial reception by more than 100,000 spectators and expressed their satisfaction, saying that their team's visit to Bucharest would create a warmer friendship between the Austrian and Rumanian peoples.

In Amsterdam there have recently been a large number of international competitions between athletes from East and West.

Charlie Chaplin dist ibutes Peace Prize money, says:

"I believe in Peace"

On October 15th Charlie Chaplin received the Abbé Pierre at the Crillon Hotel in Paris and gave him two million francs to help build houses for the homeless. This amount was a third of the International Peace Prize for 1953 which the World Council of Peace awarded to the eminent British artist.

Three days later, Charlie Chaplin was in his native Lambeth, where he presented the Mayor with a cheque for £2000 at a ceremony in the Town Hall. As he handed over the cheque he said:

"I can think of no better way to distribute the money that came from peace than to help the poor, the old and the homeless."

Addressing the Borough Council, Chaplin recalled the results of the blitz:

"I have seen Lambeth and I know that poor old Lambeth has been knocked about a bit. I don't want to see it knocked about any more." Then he paused and added, "I believe in peace not through the hydrogen bomb but through disarmament."

The people of Lambeth gave an enthusiastic and affectionate reception to the most famous son of this London borough.

Vienna has also benefited from Chaplin's distribution of the International Peace Prize money; the Austrian Peace Council has set up a "Charlie Chaplin Peace Fund" and initiated on November 1st a series of competitions open to writers, musicians, painters, workers, students, professional people and the general public. The theme of all these competitions is peace and friendship between the peoples.

20th Anniversary of the Discovery of Artificial Radioactivity
Tribute to Irene and Frédéric Joliot-Curie

A view of the platform during the speech of M. Louis de Broglie, Permanent Secretary of the Academy of Sciences

An official ceremony in honour of Irene and Frédéric Joliot-Curie, commemorating the 20th anniversary of their discovery of artificial radioactivity, took place on October 21st in the amphitheatre of the Sorbonne in Paris. In the presence of many scientists, members of the Institute, research workers, students, etc. the most eminent figures in the French scientific world expressed their admiration and affection for Irene and Frédéric Joliot-Curie.

Presiding over the ceremony was the Minister of Education and those present included the Secretary of State for Scientific Research and Technical Progress and M. Louis de Broglie, the Permanent Secretary of the Academy of Sciences, M. Maurice de Broglie, President of the Academy of Sciences, M. Armand Faral, the Administrative Head of the Collège de France, Professor Joseph Pérès, the Dean of the Paris Faculty of Sciences, M. Gaston Dupouy, the Director of the National Centre for Scientific Research, M. Francis Perrin, the High Commissioner for Atomic Energy, Professor Lacassagne, member of the Institute and Director of the Radium Institute, Professor Bénard and others.

First to speak was Mr. Louis de Broglie. He recalled the first discoveries of radioactivity, in which "the magnificent work of Irene and Frédéric Joliot-Curie marked a decisive stage"... "We were given a veritable fortune of knowledge"... "We owe them our thanks and congratulations".

Professor Bénard read a message from the Dean of the Academy of Sciences which ended with these words: "The fruits of the labours of M. and Mme. Joliot-Curie are already so great that they deserve the gratitude of every doctor and even more that of the patients."

M. Armand Faral mentioned the great debt which is owed to Professor Joliot-Curie and his wife.

M. Joseph Pérès recalled the scientific tradition of Mme. Joliot-Curie's family.

After Gaston Dupouy and Francis Perrin had spoken, Professor Lacassagne said: "We are celebrating this twentieth anniversary as a national victory."

The Minister of Education, M. Berthoin, expressed the official congratulations of the government, recalling that it was the work of M. and Mme Joliot-Curie which had enabled France to have its first atomic pile.

Replying on behalf both of himself and of Mme. Joliot-Curie, Frédéric Joliot-Curie thanked all the speakers and said: "As we see it, these praises are really due to those to whom we owe so much, our parents, our teachers, our laboratory colleagues and our fellow citizens from whose earnings comes the money with which science is financed."

He recalled his studies at the school of Physics and Chemistry under Paul Langevin and expressed his gratitude to this school and its masters and especially to Paul Langevin, "that outstanding teacher who brought me to love science". He then went on to show the necessity for research workers to have laboratories, payment and equipment on a scale commensurate with the services which they render to the nation.

He concluded his speech with some remarks on the value to scientific progress of international co-operation:

"International contacts between research workers, which were frank and cordial in those days, made a great contribution to the extraordinary harvest of discoveries before 1939. Then came the war and science was used to make terrible weapons of mass destruction. Measures of secrecy and discrimination have resulted in great difficulties in scientific relations, both nationally and internationally. We should all work to improve these relations and to see that our country of which we are so fond uses all its scientists fully.

"At a time when science is in danger of loosing its standing because it is so widely used for destructive purposes and when the advance of civilisation itself is likely to be affected as a result, we must oppose the misuse of science. But the solution of this problem does not depend on scientists alone. When these noble aims become reality, we will once more be able to work without suffering agonies of conscience and experience the joys of discovery in all their fullness."

Hungarian Music and Folklore in Paris

The Hungarian cymbalon player Ida Tarjani-Toth, Professor at the Budapest Conservatoire, and other artists recently gave a concert of Hungarian music at the Salle Gaveau in Paris.

The programme included works by the best modern Hungarian composers, and Ida Tarjani-Toth brought out their full richness with her solos on the cymbalon, an instrument peculiar to Hungary.

An exhibition of Hungarian folklore which was opened in Paris recently includes costumes, pottery, embroidery etc..., all showing the rich centuries-old tradition in Hungarian decorative art.

International Congress of Mathematicians

The International Congress of Mathematicians, held recently in Amsterdam, brought together 1,600 specialists, as delegates and individuals, from almost every country in the world including the United States, the Soviet Union, Italy, France, Poland, Hungary.

Besides participating in stimulating debates and other events, the mathematicians were also able to make useful personal contacts in a cordial and co-operative atmosphere and some delegations met together with the aim of organising an exchange of publications. For example the Rumanian Delegation established relations with the United States Mathematical Review and with specialised bookshops in Amsterdam.

Soviet Musicians in Belgium

The composer and conductor Konstantin Ivanov, who conducts the U.S.S.R. Symphony Orchestra, has been invited by the Liège Conservatoire to make a concert tour of Belgium. He is accompanied by the pianist Malinin and the violonist Igor Bezrodny.

The Great Anniversaries...

Fielding in the U.S.S.R.

In commemoration of the 200th anniversary of the death of Henry Fielding many ceremonies, to which British writers have been invited, have been held in the Soviet Union.

The State Publishing House for Belles-Lettres has issued a two volume collection of the works of the great English writer. The first volume contains plays, pamphlets and the novels "Jonathan Wild" and "Joseph Andrews", and the second "Tom Jones". An essay on the life and work of Fielding by Dr. Elistratova has also been published. The works of Fielding have been nine times republished in the Soviet Union, seven times in Russian and twice in English. The total issue is more than a quarter of a million copies.

Fielding's plays are included in the repertory of the Moscow and Leningrad theatres. Exhibitions presenting different editions of Fielding, illustrations and monographs, have been opened. The Leningrad exhibition includes English, German, French and Russian editions dating back to 1772.

A Fielding memorial meeting was held in the Great Hall of the Moscow Conservatoire on October 11. (See photograph.) Organised jointly by the Soviet Peace Committee, the Union of Soviet Writers and the Society for Cultural Relations with Foreign Countries, the meeting was attended by writers, representatives of the sciences and the arts, members of the Peace Committee, workers and students.

Following the writer V. Kataev, who praised the memory of the great humanist and democrat, A. Elistratova, Doctor of Philology, gave a detailed appreciation of the work of Fielding. The English writer Jack Lindsay also spoke. The meeting closed with a reading of extracts from Fielding and other English writers.

Chekhov in Czechoslovakia

In every big town in Czechoslovakia, the 50th anniversary of the death of Chekhov was marked by lectures, exhibitions, and theatrical performances.

In Prague, in the course of a memorial meeting at the National Theatre, Mr. Zdenek Nejedly, former Minister of Culture, President of the Czechoslovak Academy of Sciences, and Dr. Julius Delansky, University Professor, spoke about Chekhov and the importance of his work.

Similar meetings have been held in Brno and Bratislava, with performances of the Cherry Orchard and Uncle Vanya and exhibitions on the life and work of Chekhov.

Many professional theatres, as well as local amateur bodies in the towns and villages, have put Chekhov's plays in their programme.

In addition two special postage stamps have been issued.

In Argentina: The Mascara Theatre of Buenos-Aires is presenting Chekhov's play Uncle Vanya.

Centenary of the Argentinian Scientist Ameghino celebrated in Moscow

A memorial meeting for the centenary of the Argentinian scientist Florentino Ameghino was held in Moscow during September. Scientific figures, representatives of scientific reviews, students, etc., took part in this meeting in the presence of Mr. Bravo, the Argentine Ambassador and other official representatives of Argentine and the Soviet Union. Academican Oparin pointed out the happy coincidence that this meeting was taking place at the same time as cultural relations were being re-established between Argentine and the U.S.S.R. by the visit of well-known Argentinians to the U.S.S.R. and the visit of several Soviet performers and sportsmen to Argentine.

Academician Orlov, Director of the Institute of Paleontology, spoke warmly of the work of Ameghino, one of the great twentieth century scientists, and of his contribution to Paleontology.

In the name of his country the Argentine ambassador said that he agreed with Professor Oparin in considering cultural relations as an effective means of building friendship between the peoples.

Professor Lipschutz, the eminent Chilian pathologist and physiologist, recently visited China at the invitation of the Chinese Society for Cultural Relations with Foreign Countries. He gave several lectures in Peking, Shanghai and Tientsin and had discussions with Chinese scientists. He also saw some of the achievements of the Chinese People's Republic in the field of science and medicine. From China Professor Lipschutz went on to the U.S.S.R.

The President of the World Council of Peace Issues a Warning to Public Opinion about the London and Paris Agreements

Certain of the countries which signed the agreements are bound to the Soviet Union by treaties which have not been denounced. The clauses of the London and Paris agreements flagrantly contradict the spirit and the letter of these treaties. By failing to honour their signature these countries would set a dangerous example and would nullify the pledge not to resort to force.

I would urgently ask all of you to study the texts which are going to be submitted for ratification by your Parliaments. Examine them carefully, weigh up their full consequences. Your representatives must not be made to vote before you have acquainted them with your personal opinion.

The decision they are going to have to take is fraught with dire consequences and you will not have done your duty to your family or your country unless you forcefully express your feelings to them.

There are other roads open to the Governments if they want to guarantee their peoples' future and contribute to a lasting improvement in international relations.

The responsibility that this choice places on them must be brought home to the Governments concerned. For at the present time everything is possible:

— the settlement of the problem of the democratic and peaceful reunification of Germany;

— the organisation of collective security for all the countries of Europe regardless of their economic and social system;

— the promotion of general disarmament;

— the deliverance of mankind from the terrible threat of weapons of mass destruction and a great improvement in the standard of living through the use of atomic energy for peaceful purposes.

But, while it is true that rarely have such possibilities been brought together, there is nonetheless a very pressing danger that they may all be destroyed together by adverse actions.

Do not allow the implementation of the policy that will only negotiate from positions of strength.

Negotiation is not made easier by piling up arms, by increasing the size of armies and by stockpiling atom and hydrogen bombs — on the contrary, that means heading for atomic war. We must immediately prevent the starting of a mechanism which would take us away from the genuine paths to peace and risk crushing us all.

Professor Frédéric Joliot-Curie

A Sign of the Times

In San Francisco and other United States towns, collections of peace stamps have been put on sale in the 10 cent stores.

It is well known that throughout the world, this type of shop is only interested in goods which have a wide appeal.

Thus this fact is a tacit but significant recognition of the growing concern of the American people for peace.

Around the World

Spain

Under the title "Spain — an Atomic Arsenal" the paper of the Spanish Peace Movement publishes an article which strongly condemns the construction, near Cartagena, of launching installations for guided missiles. The article mentions various news items received from Associated Press according to which "work has been started near Cartagena to construct launching sites and underground stores of guided missiles" on the base, which would be used by "squadrons of bombers equipped for carrying thermonuclear weapons".

Rumania

A demonstration of Bucharest workers took place on October 29 as part of the struggle against the rearmament of Western Germany. Professor Radaceanu, Vice-President of the Peace Committee, spoke on the theme: "The interests of peace in Europe demand the setting up of a united, democratic and peaceful Germany." The speaker said that the London and Paris agreements represent a new danger to the life and liberty of the peoples of Europe, the German people included.

Austria

The Alsergrund People's University in Vienna has organised a discussion meeting on the topic: "Can the atomic bomb prevent war?"

Professor Holländer, a Roman Catholic priest, supported the banning of all weapons of mass destruction.

Dr. Kent pointed out that, as President Truman himself admitted, it was only the moral force of public opinion that prevented the use of the atomic bomb in Korea.

Those taking part were unanimous in giving their support to a policy of disarmament and decreased international tension.

Australia

The Australian Peace Council has held a reception in honour of Professor Hromadka, member of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace; 450 people were present. The Rev. Alfred Dickie, President of the Australian National Council, welcomed Dr. Hromadka and the Rev. Frank Hartley presented him with a collection of books on Australia.

Professor Hromadka spoke with great enthusiasm of the work of the World Council of Peace and said that he was proud to be associated with the Council's activities.

Great Britain

The Executive Committee of the Medical Association for the Prevention of War has published a statement asking for a ban on weapons of mass destruction. In addition the Committee calls for the conclusion of an agreement to make the manufacture and use of atomic weapons illegal and to set up an effective international supervisory body.

Italy

Sig. Andrea Gaggero was presented with the Stalin International Peace Prize by Sig. Pietro Nenni at a formal ceremony in Rome. In acknowledging the prize Sig. Gaggero stressed how certain he was that men of good faith would succeed in bringing about an atmosphere of fraternal friendship between the peoples and would make further contributions to the cause of peace.

German Federal Republic

The North Rhine-Westphalia Parliamentary Commission on the frontier areas has protested against the plan to set up a new air force station in the Schleiden district near Dahlem-Schmidtheim. It pointed out that the occupation forces had already taken over more than ten percent of the area.

The destruction of 5,000 acres of trees, which is involved in the plan to build the airfield, would put the district at the mercy of extensive damage from floods.

BULLETIN OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

INFORMATION BULLETIN PUBLISHED BY THE SECRETARIAT OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

No. 23—24 DECEMBER 15th, 1954

The Stockholm Session

18—23 November 1954

The World Council of Peace met in Stockholm from 18th to 23rd November.

The session took place in the beautiful setting of the Swedish National Park at Skansen; three hundred and thirty three guests and members of the Council from 55 countries took part.

The following points were included on the agenda:

1 Cooperation of all the States of Europe in the organisation of their common security.

2 The situation created in different parts of Asia by foreign pressure and by the system of military blocs and coalitions.

3 The situation created in Latin America by interference in the internal affairs of nations.

4 Action of peace forces to secure disarmament and the prohibition of weapons of mass destruction.

5. Preparation of an Assembly of representatives of the forces of peace in all countries during the first half of 1955.

This Bulletin contains the texts of all the documents adopted by the Council and extracts from many of the speeches made in full session.

Skansen

At Skansen, the most popular place in Stockholm

The Skansen National Park, where the World Council session was held, was founded by the historian Artur Hazelius who, in 1872, undertook to save the ethnographical remains and the relics of Sweden's past from destruction. This is what gives Skansen Park its character of an open-air museum presenting the different aspects of Swedish national life since the Middle Ages in a living and picturesque way.

Old country buildings, manors, mountain chalets, farms, Lapp camps, wind and water mills, sheep folds, sacrificial stones, belfries and gold and glass workshops are reverently preserved there and form a natural background for the old rural customs which are revived every year in the dark shadows of Skansen's fir trees: the songs of St. Lucy before Christmas, village dances round the maypole, Midsummer Day celebrations, etc.

The two million Swedish and foreign visitors who climb the slopes of Skansen hill every year see spread beneath them the magnificent panorama of Stockholm, the "old town" with its quays reflected in the waters of Lake Mälaren.

The name Skansen reflects this unique situation because it is a reminder of the fact that in days gone by there was a fort there. The ancient muzzle-loading cannon standing round the big esplanade are further evidence of this.

Skansen also has Sweden's only zoo. The fauna of the country is to be found there, breeding in captivity.

Concerts, theatrical shows, art exhibitions and displays of old dances are frequently held in the park. This makes it a cultural centre which is very much appreciated by all foreign visitors and very popular with the Swedish public in whose eyes it is a symbol of "the national culture and national independence", as Pastor Sven Hector said in his opening speech.

THE SWEDISH PRESS

The Swedish press carried reports on the work of the session of the World Council of Peace.

Articles on the session and interviews with persons taking part in it were published in a number of newspapers representing the various shades of Swedish opinion. They included Dagens Nyheter, Svenska Dagbladet, Morgon-Tidningen, Ny Dag, Aftonbladet, Arbetar Tidningen, Vecko-Journalen, Norrskensflamman and the official Swedish press agency Tidningarnas Telegrambyra.

Statement by Swedish Artists

A group of Swedish artists greeted the World Council of Peace on November 21st. The painter, Mr. Svenolov Ehrén, came to the rostrum to read the following statement, signed by 62 Swedish artists:

"Sweden's artists have often shown their solidarity by taking part in assistance to countries which had suffered from war and the catastrophes of war. In various ways they have shown their interest in work for peace and their detestation of war and militarism. There are, at the present time, very special reasons for recalling peace demonstrations against Nazism and militarism.

"The Berlin Conference, which led to peace in Korea and to the agreements on Indo-China concluded at Geneva, opened the way to negotiations for peace and the lessening of international tension. And this way is the only one which can lead to the reunification of a peaceful and democratic Germany in accordance with the Potsdam Agreements concluded by the victorious powers. The agreements on German rearmament recently signed in London and Paris can become an obstacle rendering the future uncertain.

"For this reason we artists welcome any move from any quarter which can help to bring about peace and the relaxation of international tension. World peace demands the taking of immediate measures against German rearmament and the creation of guarantees for European security. We share the hope of the majority of the Swedish people that our Government will do its part for world peace and the lessening of international tension by taking steps both in and outside the United Nations."

On November 19th, a deputation of Swedish participants in the Baltic Peace Cruise brought their greetings to the World Council of Peace.

The Women of Stockholm:

"We shall go from house to house and speak to every mother in our city"

The World Council session also received a deputation of Swedish mothers and their children.

The following is the text of the declaration they made to the Council on behalf of Swedish women:

"We members of the Stockholm Section of the Swedish Democratic Women's Society are proud and happy to welcome to our city, as dear friends, the eminent members of the delegations from near and far participating in this big international Peace meeting.

"The Stockholm Appeal has made our city known all over the world as a symbol of the fight against the atomic weapon, as a symbol of Peace. Since then the idea of Peace has won many great victories. But we are still not safe from the evils of war and new threatening clouds are appearing on the international horizon, especially as a result of the militarisation of Western Germany. This necessitates new and speedy efforts by all friends of peace.

"We wish you every success in the work of the Session to ensure a life of peace for all mankind, and we promise, as at the time of the Stockholm Appeal, to go from house to house and make the decisions of this meeting known to every woman and mother in our city. We promise to do everything possible to live up to the tradition implied in the name of Stockholm. We want negotiations between all countries on the question of war and peace which is so important for our children's future. We want life to conquer war."

Decisions of the Session

ADDRESS TO THE PEOPLES

JUST AS THE ENDING OF THE WARS in Korea and Indo-China and the rejection of E.D.C. had given the world the hope of seeing the quarrels that divide the nations grow less, the London and Paris Agreements have suddenly confronted the peoples with the fearful danger for them all involved in the revival of the Wehrmacht.

Just as new proposals have been advanced that make possible the unification of Germany, the London and Paris Agreements are about to deal a heavy blow to the democratic and patriotic forces of the German people, to feed the ambitions of German militarism and set a seal on the division of Germany and Europe.

Just as the progress achieved at the United Nations on the vital question of disarmament and weapons of mass destruction has strengthened these hopes of Peace, the London and Paris Agreements are about to give the signal for an arms race which will rapidly become a crushing burden upon everyone.

The ratification of these Agreements, far from leaving intact the possibility of negotiation would create a situation fraught with new dangers to Peace in Europe and throughout the world.

The peoples are thus faced with a crucial alternative: either negotiation with every possibility of reaching a fair agreement, or an arbitrary act that risks nullifying the progress made toward reduction of world tension, namely, the rearmament of Western Germany and its inclusion in a military bloc.

The peoples must oppose the ratification of the London and Paris Agreements.

The peoples must demand the immediate opening of negotiations between the Four Powers with the object of reuniting Germany by free elections and concluding a State Treaty on Austria.

The peoples must demand immediate opening of negotiations including all European states, whatever their political system, with the object of ensuring their security and common prosperity through the cooperation of all.

It is not within the power of any government, of any Parliament, to settle the fate of a people against its will.

The people will not let the irreparable happen.

They will stop the rearmament of Germany and, by action all together, will open the road to European security and world Peace.

APPEAL

FOR THE CALLING OF A WORLD ASSEMBLY FOR PEACE

In a world in which there are still great chances of Peace, new dangers appear which may destroy them all.

Only a powerful movement of the peoples can prevent the division of the world into opposing blocs, prevent the rebirth of the armies that have been the source of so much misery and mourning, and free mankind from the crushing cost of arms budgets. Only such a powerful movement can ensure the cooperation of all nations for their welfare, their independence and the security of all.

The World Council of Peace calls to all those whose activities make for Peace, to every man and woman who longs to live free from fear, mistrust, and hate for other peoples. It calls on them to get together before it is too late.

It resolves that a great World Assembly shall be held, including representatives of all the forces and tendencies that make for Peace, to meet in the second half of May 1955.

Resolution

on the Action of the Peace Forces in Favour of Disarmament and the Banning of Weapons of Mass Destruction

Four years ago the Appeal for the absolute banning of atomic arms was made in Stockholm.

The campaign for this Appeal by all peoples prevented the use of the bomb in Korea and Indo-China. The determined action of the peoples has also compelled the governments to stop the fighting in Korea and Indo-China.

Nevertheless, today we are once more faced by the danger of war resulting from intensification of the arms race and the continued development of still more destructive weapons of mass extermination.

Once more, the will of the peoples can and must avert the danger.

The World Council of Peace is gratified by the progress made at the United Nations Organisation in the discussion on disarmament and the banning of atomic weapons. It points out that this result has been achieved by negotiation, thus demonstrating that agreement is possible on the basis of compromise. It is precisely this method which has enabled the General Assembly to pass unanimously a resolution which clears the way to a solution of these problems. But the expressed desire of the Western Powers to rearm Western Germany and to include it in a military bloc, in the framework of the London and Paris Agreements, is undermining the efforts now being made to achieve disarmament and endangering the results so far achieved.

The World Council of Peace acclaims the conversations now in progress concerning the peaceful use of atomic energy. It declares, however, that mankind will not be able to make full peaceful, industrial use of nuclear energy until the use of such energy for military ends is banned. It is convinced that agreement in this field is entirely possible and that a satisfactory system of inspection and strict control is entirely capable of being established.

It calls on the Great Powers to redouble their efforts to secure speedy agreement on these vital questions on the basis of the proposals now being discussed. It demands that they meanwhile reach immediate agreement on the banning of all experimental explosions of atomic and hydrogen bombs, a measure which the present state of scientific knowledge makes susceptible of easy and immediate control. It likewise demands urgently that all governments without exception immediately undertake never to use nuclear weapons whatever may be the pretext.

These measures would, nonetheless, be but an urgent interim step that must in no way hinder the attack on the cardinal problem: the elimination of all weapons of mass destruction, atomic, bacteriological and chemical, and general disarmament. On the contrary, these measures are in themselves a great step towards a wider and more important agreement on the general reduction of armaments, the banning of weapons of mass destruction and the establishment of an international control system including the dispatch of inspection teams to all countries.

The World Council of Peace urges strongly that the credits now used for military purposes, but which would be made available by general controlled disarmament, should be devoted to raising the living standards of the peoples, in particular the economically under-developed countries.

It calls upon all the peoples of the world to demand, constantly and everywhere, the banning of weapons of mass destruction and general disarmament — without which a policy of Peace is impossible.

The will of the peoples can and will achieve these aims if the peoples unite in this sacred struggle, if all the nations press upon the governments and the United Nations, in one single effort, the expression of their tremendous longing for Peace, for mutual understanding and human solidarity.

Resolution

on the Situation Created in Various Parts of Asia by Foreign Pressure and by the System of Blocs and Military Coalitions

The Session of the World Council of Peace, examining the situation in Asia, expresses its deep satisfaction with the significant and welcome developments which have contributed to the ending of the wars in Korea and Indo-China, created the conditions for Peace in Asia and helped to lessen international tension.

The Geneva Conference was a victory for the forces of Peace. A cease-fire has taken place in Indo-China, and for the first time for many years no major war is in progress in this region.

The joint declaration of the Prime Ministers of India and China has given practical shape to the ideal of peaceful coexistence on the basis of the following five principles:

1. Mutual respect for each other's territorial integrity and sovereignty,
2. Mutual non-aggression,
3. Mutual non-interference in each other's internal affairs,
4. Equality and mutual benefit,
5. Peaceful coexistence.

These principles have been warmly welcomed by the peoples of Asia and the world, and have been accepted by the Governments of Burma, the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam, the Soviet Union and by Government leaders of Indonesia. The five principles have not only laid the foundations for collective Peace and security in Asia, but their acceptance would provide the basis for peaceful coexistence and friendly relations among all countries.

These events have strengthened Asian unity and solidarity, frustrating the efforts of those who hope to make "Asians fight Asians". However, the makers of war, desperate at the setbacks they have suffered, are striving to develop their plans to dominate Asia, by the construction of war alliances and pacts, by provocative military adventures, by growing interference in the internal affairs of the Asian nations, and by increased violence against the peoples.

In order to defeat these designs and to ensure Peace and security for Asia, the World Council of Peace appeals to the peoples of Asia and the world:

1) to widen and strengthen the area of Peace in Asia and establish collective Peace and security on the basis of the five principles;

2) to oppose and defeat S.E.A.T.O. and all plans for military blocs, such as the U.S.-Pakistan Pact, which set Asians against Asians, and constitute a threat to world Peace;

3) to demand an end to foreign domination and intervention in every part of Asia — including Malaya, West Irian (Dutch New Guinea) and Goa — the withdrawal from Asian soil of all foreign military forces and the abolition of all foreign military bases in Asia, and the immediate cessation of the dangerous atom bomb and hydrogen bomb tests which have already had deadly effects in the Pacific and have poisoned Asian air and waters with life-destroying elements;

4) to demand an end to foreign intervention in the Chinese territory of Taiwan (Formosa) and insist that the People's Republic of China take its legitimate place in the United Nations;

5) to demand the speedy resumption by the countries concerned, with the participation of neutral Asian states, of the Conference for the peaceful unification of Korea, in accordance with the aspirations of the Korean people, and demand the strict observance of the armistice terms in Indo-China;

6) to oppose the remilitarisation of Japan, which threatens the Peace and security of Asia and the world.

Only thus can the peoples of Asia secure Peace, freedom and opportunities of progress for themselves, as well as play their part in ensuring Peace in the world.

Resolution

on the situation created in Latin America by foreign interference in the internal life of the nations

In the guise of pacts and agreements supposedly intended to guarantee the collective security of the American Continent one state alone is continously increasing domination over the countries of Latin America and the interference of this state in their lives constitutes a factor of general insecurity.

The conditions which the countries of Latin America are now experiencing are an obstacle to international relaxation.

They are:

— the insecurity resulting from the policy of preparation for war which finds its expression in certain pacts and regional agreements impairing the sovereignty and the liberties of the states of Latin America, and in foreign intervention such as that which recently brought about the fall of the legitimate Government of Guatemala;

— the signing of bilateral military pacts and regional agreements which further the political decisions of the Conference of Caracas and which integrate the countries of Latin America in aggressive blocs, obliging them to devote a large part of their natural wealth to purely warlike ends and running the risk of dragging peaceful peoples into wars contrary to all their interests and their hopes;

— the costly and unjustified intensification of the arms race in the Latin American countries, to the great detriment of their national economy and the already precarious conditions of life of their people;

— the pressure exercised on the countries of Latin America which has shown itself many times by their votes in numerous international organisations, thus opposing an obstacle to the improvement of international relations and the solution by means of negotiation of the pending conflicts and problems;

— the restriction of the freedom of trade and distribution of raw materials of Latin America with the object of creating a forced market with unilateral fixing of prices and preventing the strengthening of the bonds of friendship with other countries on a basis of reciprocal advantage;

— the limitation of cultural exchanges with all the countries of the world and the pressure which is brought to bear on national cultures in order to impose alien forms on them.

Fighting to safeguard their sovereignty and to win real security for each and every one, the peoples of Latin America are contributing effectively to the struggle for Peace in America and the whole world.

The World Council of Peace considers that it is only by cooperation between the peoples of the American continent on the basis of equality and mutual respect that the peoples of Latin America can gain prosperity and security.

Appeal

for great cultural anniversaries

During 1955 throughout the world the peoples will join together in honouring great representatives of their common cultural heritage:

SCHILLER — 150th anniversary of his death.

MICKIEWICZ — 100th anniversary of his death.

MONTESQUIEU — 200th anniversary of his death.

ANDERSEN — 150th anniversary of his birth.

CERVANTES — 350th anniversary of his publication of Don Quixote.

WHITMAN — 100th anniversary of the first edition of Leaves of Grass.

In this way the peoples will speak to one another across the frontiers, learn to understand one another better and strengthen and develop peaceful cooperation.

The World Council of Peace appeals to all peoples, to writers and artists, to scientists, historians and teachers, to all cultural and popular organisations to join in celebrating these great anniversaries.

STOCKHOLM 23 November 1954

Resolution

on the situation created in the dependent and semi-dependent countries by foreign pressure and by the system of blocs and military coalitions

The World Peace Movement has always, ever since its foundation, considered as a grave menace to Peace the violence used to maintain peoples in a state of dependence and colonial oppression.

It has always considered that foreign intervention in the internal affairs of semi-dependent peoples, the inclusion of their countries in aggressive pacts and the establishment of foreign strategic bases on their territories, aggravate international tension. The London and Paris Agreements do not only constitute a menace to the security of the peoples of Europe and world Peace, but their application would have direct and burdensome effects upon the lives of colonial and dependent peoples who are already suffering such a hard and at times tragic fate.

The World Council of Peace draws the attention of world opinion once more to the dangers for Peace resulting from the situations created in various dependent and semi-dependent countries.

In Malaya, in Kenya, in North Africa, there is a danger that armed conflicts may become open wars and may jeopardise world Peace.

Concerning the Indo-Chinese war, the World Peace Movement proclaimed the need and the possibility of ending such conflicts by peaceful means. We have been justified by the event.

In the Middle and Near East foreign meddling in different forms in the internal affairs of the peoples in order to force on them pacts and military blocs — the Turkish-Pakistan Pact, Near East Mutual Defence Pact, and others — constitutes a threat to Peace.

The World Council of Peace calls for the earliest possible settlement of these conflicts by peaceful means.

The World Council of Peace declares that relations between all states, great or small, should be founded on respect for the five principles enunciated in the mutual declarations of India, China and Burma — principles conforming with the United Nations Charter.

The World Council of Peace considers that the ending of the armed conflicts now in progress, respect for independence and the realisation of the national and democratic aspirations of all peoples are essential factors in the relief of international tension.

It calls on world opinion to demand the adoption and the application of these principles, which are indispensible to the safety of us all.

OPENING SPEECH

Pastor Sven Hector — Sweden

I believe that I speak today for all true friends of peace in Sweden, when I bid you all a warm welcome to Sweden, in this capital made known to the whole world by one of the most noble actions of the world peace forces — the campaign for the Stockholm Appeal. We are truly delighted that this Conference should take place at Skansen, which, for every Swede, is a symbol of that national culture and national independence which all of us want to see develop in our own country against a background of world peace . . .

We are all aware that these are decisive times. Will we carry on to reach further milestones of victory on the road to a lessening of international tension? Or will new plots against peace force us to retreat? . . .

The day has now come when the peoples must put all their strength into the task of making known their proposals for the solution of the questions which still block the road to a lessening of international tension. Today we have much to defend, but we have still more to win in the future. In this spirit I once again bid you welcome to Stockholm. Let us make this new meeting in our capital the starting-point for new victories of the forces which speak for peace and understanding on behalf of the whole world.

Point One of the Agenda

COOPERATION OF ALL THE STATES OF EUROPE IN THE ORGANISATION OF THEIR COMMON SECURITY

Senator Ambrogio Donini — Italy

First Report on Point One of the Agenda

Allow me first of all to review the development of the international situation since the last meeting of the World Council of Peace, in Berlin from 24th to 28th May this year.

Above all, there have been the Geneva Conference and the signing of the agreement on Indo-China: a triumph of the spirit of negotiation over the policy of strength. The success of the Geneva Conference has shown to the world the part played by the peaceful peoples of Asia, and primarily by India and China, in spite of all the differences in their social and political systems, in building peace and easing international tension. But the participation of France, Great Britain and the Soviet Union in the work at Geneva, in an atmosphere of friendship and mutual respect, has shown at the same time the real possibilities of collaboration between the European Powers, and the concrete possibility of a new policy of agreement and unity in Europe.

This new prospect of peace and cooperation in Europe was increased by the French Parliament's rejection of E.D.C. . . .

In all the countries of the world, in Latin America as in Africa, in Asia as in Europe, this success was interpreted as proof that it is possible to link the ordinary people mobilised by our Movement with other trends of public opinion: with trade union and religious organisations, with cultural circles and even with Parliamentary bodies, neglecting no alliance, however partial or temporary. It is an important lesson for us, a lesson which we must not lose sight of, at a time when we are meeting together to discuss the problems raised by the present international situation . . .

The changes which occurred in the international situation with the failure of E.D.C. also had repercussions among groups which had not yet worked with us and do not intend to, but which have realised that there is a definite possibility of contributing to the solution of world problems; even those who believed the promises of a sham European unity saw with increasing clarity the new paths opening for the establishment of security and cooperation in Europe. With the rejection of E.D.C. the road was opened for the creation of real European unity which is the basis for indivisible security and a guarantee of national independence, national sovereignty and peace in Africa, Asia and Latin America. The road was opened for the establishment of a united and democratic Germany; for the implementation of a policy of agreements and disarmament at the United Nations, against the dangers of atomic war and of thermo-nuclear destruction.

Others have sought a solution of these problems along different and perilous lines . . .

The agreements signed by certain countries in London and Paris have a very clear meaning — to make negotiations impossible; to perpetuate the policy of opposing blocs and of the division of Germany and Europe; to re-establish the German army on an aggressive basis and to impose once more on the peoples of the world the burden of a new armaments race and the danger of atomic extermination and the end of civilisation . . .

With the danger of the rearmament of Western Germany a whole series of dangers loom on the horizon:

1. A sudden halt on the road to an easing of international tension, where certain progress has been made since 1953.

2. The division of Germany, the prolongation of the allied occupation and the political servitude of Germany for an indefinite period. In this case the real heads of Western Germany would be the Nazi generals.

3. The impossibility of the peaceful unification of Germany and of the creation, in the heart of Europe, of a democratic and free country, which is the wish of the German people themselves in both West and East Germany.

4. An insurmountable obstacle to the creation of a system of general collective security in Europe, with the participation of all countries, great or small.

5. Finally, the perpetuation of the division of the world into opposing blocs, and the continuation of the armaments race with the terrible consequences that history has many times shown us . . .

These protocols, these agreements, these conventions are now being submitted for ratification by the parliaments of the countries concerned. They talk of haste, but we must not confuse this haste with the real possibility of carrying out this plan . . .

We believe we can say that the work accomplished by the Peace Movement in the last few years confirms the possibilities of a popular victory over this new danger. The possibilities are real, and the peoples' recent successes in the fight against E.D.C. demonstrate this . . .

The only alternative to the real and immediate dangers inherent in the London and Paris Agreements is the speedy creation of a system of security in Europe which will make possible a peaceful settlement of the German problem and free elections in Germany by an agreement between the Four Powers, an agreement acceptable to the German people who want national unity and sovereignty in conditions of peace and democracy . . .

Therefore, at this session of the World Council our movement must study every means of immediately translating into deeds the existing will to avoid the irreparable.

The problem of European security is our central task. The solution of this problem would, in fact, open the way to the settlement of all the present international disputes — from the problems raised by the peoples of Latin America and Africa, to the problems of safeguarding the newly regained peace in Asia, where the guns no longer roar; from the problem of the national, social and cultural demands of the colonial peoples to the problem of the indivisibility of security and peace . . .

Certain press organs put forward the theory of parallel negotiations held by certain members of Western governments. Parallel negotiations, certainly, but parallel in the sense that they should meet and not at infinity as in geometry. Parallel negotiations, certainly, but dealing with the concrete reality of the preservation of peace; parallel negotiations between the Four Great Powers on the German problem; parallel negotiations between the countries of Europe to establish real security; parallel negotiations at U.N.O. for disarmament and the peaceful use of atomic energy, but not parallel negotiations aiming at German rearmament and disarmament, at war and peace, at unity and division, at one and the same time . . .

Today, all the peoples of the world are interested in the immediate holding of negotiations, beginning with the central problem, which is the establishment of security in Europe.

The struggle will be hard and will not be won in one single battle. But all the forces of peace must rally now in order to win victories in this sphere and so ward off the terrible threat of a further conflagration . . .

Ladies and Gentlemen, dear Friends, you see, therefore, that our Movement has now entered a new phase — doubtless, the most important in its existence. Our movement has gained prestige, but there are still forces, trends and even countries around us which can be won over to the struggle for the establishment of security in Europe, for the peaceful settlement of the German question and of all outstanding international disputes.

We must continue to discuss and even carry on a polemic with these forces. I believe that today we have the possibility of uniting them around this great common ideal, though we make no claim to a monopoly of the struggle for peace. At the same time, we should point out the results of the experience we have gained and the possibility of using this to pave the road towards unity and European security. It is along these lines, I believe, that we must direct our preparatory work for calling, during the early part of next year, a great Assembly of the forces of peace of all countries and of all trends, irrespective of social, economic or religious opinions. We must direct our work towards this Assembly, while realising that the essential problem of the fight for the security of Europe and the world is facing us now, that time is short and that this meeting must issue a clear message, which will resound among the peaceful peoples of the world.

Mr. Gilbert de Chambrun — France

DEPUTY IN THE FRENCH NATIONAL ASSEMBLY
SECRETARY OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

Second Report on Point One of the Agenda

The basis of the London and Paris agreements is exactly the same as that of E.D.C. and they are both equally dangerous. In both cases it is a question of the unilateral rearmament of Western Germany . . .

When the military danger implicit in these texts is pointed out to them, official circles put forward an unforeseen argument in their defence . . .

The proper way to negotiate with the Soviet government would be to start off from a position of strength, they say. The ratification of the rearmament of Western Germany is necessary, they conclude, in order to negotiate better with the Soviet Union.

So at the present time the following alternative is put to us — negotiation beforehand or negotiation afterwards.

If negotiation takes place before any debate on the ratification of the London and Paris agreements, it is clear from all that I have said on the development of international politics that the time is very favourable for avoiding the revival of German militarism, for reuniting Germany by free elections, for signing the Austrian treaty and for bringing the negotiations on general, simultaneous and controlled disarmament to a decisive stage . . .

On the other hand, when they talk of negotiating after ratification, the question arises whether the fait accompli of ratification would not jeopardise or retard negotiation . . .

If twelve divisions are set up in Western Germany it is now clear that twelve divisions will answer them in Eastern Germany. What will be the consequences of such a state of affairs for the vital problems of the unification of Germany, European security and general disarmament?

The unification of Germany will become very difficult. After the setting up of these armed German forces has been agreed on, signed and ratified by both sides, we shall have set out on a road of no return. On the other hand, no country anxious for its security can then consent to the reunification of Germany if there is the slightest risk that at any given moment it might find these 24 German divisions joined against it . . .

In conclusion, it is necessary to negotiate before taking the irreparable step.

Negotiate on what? A simple reminder of the views consistently held by the Peace Movement gives the answer.

Negotiation should deal in the first place with the peaceful solution of the German problem and secondly with the organisation of real security for all the countries of Europe which should, without exception, enjoy the same rights and accept the same responsibilities, thus precluding the division of Europe into two antagonistic blocs . . .

The campaign has already started. At the moment, I can only speak for France, where hundreds of thousands of signatures have already been collected to a petition which ends: "Don't ratify! Negotiate!" . . .

It depends on world public opinion whether the year 1955 will be the year of security and disarmament, the year of the entry of a unified Germany into the community of peaceful nations, the year of the relaxation of international tension and peace. It is essential that millions of people should feel their responsibility and show themselves equal to the task that faces them.

Mrs. Thea Arnold — German Federal Republic

Third Report on Point One of the Agenda

The most significant formula of the London and Paris agreements is the one which proclaims that the Bonn government is the only body which can legitimately speak for the whole of Germany. One does not have to do any subtle legal and political research to recognise that in this matter the Adenauer government has succeeded in making the Western Powers accept a point of view which in no way corresponds to the historical facts and which, for as long as it is accepted, makes the reunification of Germany impossible . . .

The Paris Treaties render impossible the peaceful reunification of Germany. They threaten the security of Europe, they increase international tension and lead to a renewed armaments race and to the brink of another war. This explains why the intention to ratify the new agreements is meeting a quite different welcome from the West German people, the Federal Parliament and even the Coalition Government than was the case with the Bonn Treaty and the E.D.C. Agreements. Awareness of the danger has grown and the sense of national responsibility is making itself more strongly felt than hitherto . . .

It is as if a flash of awareness and a wave of national feeling for peace were sweeping through the people of the Federal Republic.

This movement is not confined to the man in the street, although he and he alone is, of course, the deciding factor. Under the pressure of public opinion signs of crisis are appearing in the Bonn coalition government...

Today, the people of Western Germany realise that the world no longer wants lip service from them, but expects action. They realise that responsibility for the fate of Germany rests not with the occupying Powers but with themselves.

In this decisive phase in the struggle for world peace, West Germany, too, will, as the events of recent months have shown, raise its voice louder than hitherto and call for a new and different line of policy, the creation of a strong public opinion and acts indicative of a desire for agreement.

Mr. Wilhelm Elfes — German Federal Republic

(Message read by Mrs. Thea Arnold)

Whatever religious and political opinions each one of us may hold personally, we are none the less in perfect agreement in our great World Peace Movement that peace is a most precious possession, an indispensable prerequisite for the well-being and happiness of all mankind. So we must faithfully preserve our unity across all frontiers; we will not be discouraged by our present difficulties and we will put all our strength into the achievement of international friendship and World Peace.

Mr. Gordon Schaffer — Great Britain

In opposing German rearmament, the Peace Movement in my country, although still banned by some organisations, still boycotted by the press, radio and television, is the real voice of the British people. It is the voice of true patriotism against those who would trust the fate of our proud little island to the goodwill of Nazi generals and would condemn our sons and grandsons, yes, and our great-grandsons to occupy the European continent for the rest of this century.

The alternative to the Nazi generals is a united Germany. The alternative to a new Wehrmacht is collective peace in Europe. And peace in Europe would be the harbinger of peace throughout the world. And with peace would come the possibility of genuine disarmament and the release of the illimitable resources of science for the betterment of the peoples...

If we can reach the millions of little people.. we shall rally immeasurable and innumerable forces behind the banner for peace...

Our task must be to widen our horizons, to ensure by deeds as well as words that our Movement embraces every man and woman who wants peace and excludes only those who plan war. We must take new and decisive steps to break down the barriers dividing the peoples.

Mr. Jiichiro Matsumoto — Japan

MEMBER OF THE SENATE; FORMER VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE DIET

In Asia, Japan, and in Europe, Western Germany are intended to serve as the spearhead of a new aggressive war against the Soviet Union and the people of China in the interests of the U.S.A.

Dear European friends, especially from Germany, France and Great Britain, we Japanese people suffered incalculable damage during and after World War II begun by the Axis, the military bloc at that time. Consequently, we have been fighting and will continue to fight resolutely against the incorporation of Japan in any military bloc or its participation in any aggressive war.

At the same time, we should also oppose the participation of France, Western Germany, Great Britain and any other European countries in the London and Paris Agreements. Europe must not be divided into two opposing groups. Every European country is an integral part of Europe. Coexistence and cooperation among nations is indispensable in Europe as well as in Asia. The European version of the "let Asians fight Asians" policy must never materialise.

At no time in the past have European problems been so closely connected with the interests of the people of the whole world.

Mr. Ilya Ehrenburg — U. S. S. R.

The possibility of peaceful coexistence is as simple as ABC. The peoples now want more...

We must insist, not only on the possibility of peaceful coexistence, but also on the indispensability of the cooperation of all states both to ensure the security of each, and to raise the material and cultural level of mankind.

Not only fear, but also hope, not only hate of war, but also love of peace, bid us examine the position in Europe today with special attentiveness.

How is it possible to ensure peace in Europe? The supporters of the policy of strength say that it can be done by reinforcing one military bloc, by increasing armaments and, in particular, by the rearmament of Western Germany. It is unlikely, however, that the final division of Europe into two mutually hostile blocs will further cooperation of the Eastern states with the Western, or even their peaceful coexistence...

The history of the last 80 years has demonstrated that, despite pretty adequate records of belligerency scored by the governments of certain other European states, the champions' laurels for launching war belong to the German militarists and the bosses of German industry. Surely it cannot be possible that now, when not yet ten years have passed since the end of the late atrocious war, there is only one way of preserving peace — the revival of the Wehrmacht and the arsenals of the Ruhr?...

The revival of German militarism threatens every people in Europe, the Germans among their number. That is why many political figures remote from any sympathy with the German Democratic Republic are protesting against the London agreement: Mr. Bevan and the Christian Democrat Sig. Melloni, Herr Ollenhauer and the Belgian Senator M. Rollin. As for France, her feelings were well described by the Paris correspondent of the New York Times: "No bridegroom obliged to undergo a shot-gun wedding ever showed such reluctance as France showed this week in agreeing to the entry of Germany into the Western Military Alliance."

The supporters of the policy of strength have led the states of Western Europe into an impasse of contradictions...

I am, of course, convinced that France will contrive to emerge from the impasse, and that her will to peace will show her a course worthy of her. Recalling the phrase of the New York Times correspondent about the shot-gun and the bridegroom, I think that maybe some match-makers have been a bit precipitate with the wedding programme. Much yet depends on the French people. This summer, in an American newspaper, France was called "the land of big disappointments". For the supporters of peace, in whatsoever corner of the world, France was, is and will be a land of great hopes and great possibilities.

People who, sincerely or reluctantly, defend the London agreement say that there is no other way out for Western Europe, that the Soviet Union does not want a united Germany and refuses all proposals for free elections. The defenders of peace must, in every country, on every street corner, in every home,

Mr. Jiichiro Matsumoto on the rostrum denounce this new lie of the enemies of peace. The Soviet Union has proclaimed that it seeks the unification of Germany; it proposes conversations with the three Western Powers and is agreeable to examine the Western proposals for free elections in Germany. Why then is its offer to this day not accepted? Why, instead of negotiations with their allies in the war against German militarism, do some French Radicals and some Bitish Labourites prefer to rearm S.S. men, revive the Wehrmacht and repeat the tragicomedy that led to the second World War?...

Neither military blocs nor an armed Germany can safeguard the future for the cornfields and the children of Europe. It is necessary to find another path — a new path, the path of peace. The Soviet Government proposes the calling of a conference of all European States, with the participation of representatives from the United States, to examine how joint measures can be taken to ensure the security of Europe. Any participant in this conference may propose his plan. From such a joint examination must emerge some concrete agreement acceptable to all.

To wait longer is impossible. The time has come to call on all European states to cooperate, regardless of the principles that guide their internal policy. The representatives of all European States can and must agree on the organisation of collective security.

The United States of America should likewise be included in this union, because twice it has happened that she has been dragged into a war begun in Europe, and because the American people have close economic ties with many of the peoples of Western Europe...

Our session is meeting in days that may decide the future of Europe and the whole of humanity. The peoples may yet avert the supreme misfortune. The peoples may yet avert the splitting of Europe and a new arms race. The peoples must not allow the spectre of war to be ensconced anew in the very heart of Europe...

Every day is precious. Friends, remember what we pledged in the past, here in this lovely city. From here went out our Appeal, that maybe saved the world from the horror of the atomic bomb. At that time we were much weaker than we are now: now the stream has turned into a broad river. With us, now, is the public opinion of the entire world. But we must rouse in our hearts the fire of old. We must find the passion of the days of the Stockholm Appeal. Do not let the irreparable come to pass. Protect the road to peace!

Professor H. L. Hromadka — Czechoslovakia

DEAN OF THE FACULTY OF EVANGELICAL THEOLOGY, PRAGUE UNIVERSITY

A collective security conference would give all European nations a feeling of relief and establish a basis of real trust and cooperation, whereas the London and Paris Agreements would seal the division of Germany, of Europe, and above all they would seal the division of the whole world. We have to face all the consequences of their eventual implementation. What are we going to do? The agreements would force our nation and our neighbours to take all indispensable measures for our security.

May I, once more, point to the sinister experiences of our people under the Nazi regime? How often we were assured by the western nations that, in the end, our country would be protected against the dangers of Nazi militarist threats and that we should not be unduly alarmed! And what was the real end of our security in those dark days of 1938—39? We are encouraged by the earnest proposal of the Soviet Government and have a feeling of satisfaction about the fact that the Government of my country and the Government of Poland have decided to be co-organisers of a Collective Security Conference.

Mr. Gabriel d'Arboussier — French West Africa

VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

If genuine collective security were organised between all the peoples of Europe the face of Africa would at once be changed.

Do not misunderstand me, I am not saying that the particular problems of the African people would be resolved as though by magic, but that their solution would be made easier. And anyway, I am absolutely convinced that European insecurity and the plans leading to war make the fulfilment of their national and democratic aspirations more and more difficult.

As Mr. Donini truly said this morning, the clauses of the London and Paris Agreements providing for the installation of atomic plants in Africa are a direct threat not only to the peoples of Europe and Africa, but to all the peoples of the world.

Africa wishes to be neither an apple of discord for Europe, nor a refuge in the war plans which are increasing the poverty and oppression to which our peoples are subject.

And there, in my opinion, is the real basis for solidarity between the peoples of Europe and Africa in the struggle for peace.

Prof. Jean Dembowski — Poland

SPEAKER OF PARLIAMENT; PRESIDENT OF THE ACADEMY OF SCIENCES

The enemies of peace, the enemies of peaceful cooperation, are trying to give the impression that the problem of West German rearmament is already finally settled and that one must resign oneself to it. That is not true. We must not give way to this fatalistic enemy propaganda, whose aim is to disarm the peoples' will to peace. It is on our efforts to make known the real character of the London and Paris Agreements, to show what they entail, it is on our work and our struggle that the failure of their calculations depends...

There is still time to halt the course of events which, beginning with the rearmament of Germany, would lead to an aggravation of international tension and create a dangerous centre for warlike adventures and provocations in the heart of Europe...

It is not by creating closed military groupings but by uniting the efforts of all the European states that peace can be assured on this continent. An agreement of this sort would offer real guarantees of security to France, Poland, Great Britain and the Soviet Union, and to all the states of Europe, great and small. An agreement of this nature would bring about a real and lasting relaxation of the tension in international relations and would put a stop to the armaments race which weighs so heavily on the backs of the population and in some countries prevents the satisfaction of their needs...

It goes without saying that Germany's neighbours, who have already twice in one generation fallen victims to aggression by German militarism, cannot allow it to be rebuilt once more; they cannot remain passive before the development of this threat to their national existence. The peaceful peoples of Europe who are menaced by the reconstitution of the neo-hitlerite Wehrmacht are vigilant and will unite their efforts to safeguard their security and independence.

Professor Heinz Kamnitzer — German Democratic Republic

The Paris Agreements propose to rearm the very part of Germany which twice in the twentieth century has provided the biggest arsenal and the most dangerous armoury of two world wars. They give the merchants of death of the Rhine and the Ruhr the instruments of military power so that they may pursue for the third time a policy of strength.

In this respect the Paris Agreement offers even better initial conditions than did the Versailles Treaty. The Reichswehr was then a strong regular army of 100,000 men but was not allowed to have aircraft or tanks. It took them some time to transform themselves into the Wehrmacht of the Second World War.

The new Wehrmacht is not only to be five times as big but, by means of conscription, will train several million soldiers for active service in a short time. It possesses an air force, armoured units and all the modern means of mass destruction. What justification is there for the assumption that the Federal Army of 500,000 men can be more easily controlled than the Reichswehr of 100,000?...

If the agreements are ratified they will bring into being a military State which will sweep away the illusory controls and petty restrictions, the moment it is fully rearmed...

We owe it to the world, to our people and to our neighbours to issue a public warning. If weapons are again placed in the hands of the groups and the men who blame Hitler for losing the last war, then the same beginning will pave the way for the same terrible consequences...

It will be just as difficult in the future as it was in the past to know which way the guns will be pointed...

Germany must cease to a bone of contention. Neither part of it must be made into or used as a political bulwark or military outpost. No doubt even then international disagreements and power blocs would still exist. But by the neutralisation of the whole of Germany, the very country in the heart of Europe where the acute tension between the great powers threatens to break out into a conflagration would then be excluded from the calculations of power politics...

Neutralisation of Germany, as we envisage it, would in no way mean that it would be powerless. On the contrary. It would ensure the harmonious development of economic, political, and cultural relationships with all neighbouring countries and the whole world. Neutralisation would, on the one hand, preclude the possibility that Germany, or any part of Germany, would undertake military commitments in any direction. But, on the other hand, Germany would, whether divided or united, take its place on an equal footing in the system of European security and would honour this equality of status by maintaining uniform relations with all the other treaty partners.

On the grounds of self-preservation, Germany has every reason to: —

1. keep out of any unilateral military or political committment such as are embodied in the Paris Agreement.

2. seek to associate herself with an all-embracing alliance such as the system of collective security for all Europe.

This possibility can now result in a settlement in the interests of the German people and all the peoples of the continent.

The Soviet Union's new proposal has found an extraordinary response both in East and West Germany because the people on both sides see in such a conference a great possibility of obviating threatening dangers by way of negotiation.

Once again Germany stands at the parting of the ways. Not only have we a vital interest in seeing that the fatal London and Paris decisions are not ratified and that the door is left open for European understanding, but also as Germans we accept the major responsibility for this . . .

Mrs. Isabelle Blume — Belgium

SECRETARY OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

The people are saying that to give arms once again to Germany at a time when she has not yet regained her unity, nor accepted her present frontiers, means both undermining the basis of German democracy and endangering peace . . .

The average Belgian smiles when he hears talk about the limitation of German strength and armaments which have been fixed at a high level in any case. Already there are agreements which provide that this level can be changed if N.A.T.O. demands it and that it would only need a simple majority vote of the Western European Union to do so.

The peace-loving people of Belgium quite naturally think that the doctrine of peace through strength must be replaced by the policy of collective security and disarmament . . .

Our struggle for European Security must therefore be waged on three fronts: —

a) The fight against ratification: Our ministers, having learned to their cost that it was bad policy to be in too great a hurry to ratify agreements before their French and German neighbours, will not this time start the procedure of ratification before France and Germany. So we still have some time left.

b) We must enlighten the people so that they realise that it is not possible to rearm Germany and negotiate a system of European security at one and the same time. Like many others, our rulers have made the people believe that with Western Europe organised and strong, it would be easier to deal with the Soviet Union and to obtain greater concessions from her. But it is becoming more and more difficult to make them believe such stupid nonsense. This year they have been impressed by the character of the genuine negotiations on Korea and Indo-China and they are beginning to understand that it is impossible to negotiate between a gun and an atom bomb . . .

c) Towards Collective Security: More and more the people remember that the concept of collective security was one of their greatest hopes between the wars and that it was because our Governments rejected all proposals for collective security presented to the League of Nations that the Second World War broke out. Understanding that for them there is only one alternative, collective security and disarmament or a war of total destruction, the peoples of the small countries say to themselves with good reason: we know the results of war, so why shouldn't we try seriously for once to live under the banner of collective security? . . .

Our Movement intends to carry through successfully its great campaign against German rearmament and for collective security, to ensure that negotiation precedes the ratification of the treaties. It has learnt from experience that it is often necessary for the peoples to show their governments the way, and that is why many public figures and groupings are replying favourably to the invitation to the European Conference which will be held in Paris at the beginning of December.

Indeed, it is necessary that in intelligent and fraternal unity, all the peoples of Europe should show their determination to organise their security and to develop their relations in every sphere . . .

Mr. Tsai Ting-kai — China

MEMBER OF THE STANDING COMMITTEE OF THE NATIONAL PEOPLE'S CONGRESS OF CHINA

The present struggle of the European peoples against the revival of German militarism and for the establishment of Europe's collective security and peace is a movement of the utmost importance for the defence of world peace. We Chinese people, as well as the other peoples of Asia, are extremely concerned with this struggle. We all live in the same world, and the peace and security which we all need is so closely knit together that it is indivisible . . .

Nobody can conceal the fact that the rearming of West Germany and the revival of German militarism, under whatever form, will contain unbounded dangers. For this will perpetuate the division of Germany and make impossible the democratic unification of the country so eagerly desired by the German people. Furthermore, it will divide Europe into opposing military blocs and let a revanchist West Germany play the main role in an aggressive bloc. It will create tension, thereby aggravating the danger of war. It will bring to the peoples of Europe infinite horror and calamity. So this will not only seriously menace the peace and security of Europe but will also seriously menace the peace and security of Asia and the whole world . . .

The Metropolitan Nikolai — U. S. S. R.

We are again met together to examine the obstacles blocking the road to peace, to concentrate our constructive efforts on the most dangerous point of the world contradictions.

It is clear to all that at the present time this point is the continued division of Germany which is leading to the revival of militarism in the heart of Europe. There is an equally clear understanding, especially after the Soviet Government note of 13th November, of the deep meaning of the problem of European security, the solution of which would also enable the German problem to be settled. Likewise, there can be no doubt as to the way in which this double task can be accomplished provided it is clearly understood by all the Governments and peoples of Europe. Indeed, after the Berlin and Geneva conferences, it would seem that no one should entertain any doubt that contacts with a view to the peaceful discussion of the questions in dispute — in other words negotiations — can reduce international tension and even produce results as important as the ending of bloodshed in Indo-China . . .

Who would dare to affirm that a family can live without the mutual trust of its members?

The peaceful life of Mankind is likewise impossible without this trust, the more so since each new victory of science over time and space makes mankind more of a great united family. That is why from the Christian point of view, according to which each man is in the image of God, trust between the peoples and their governments must be the first condition for peaceful coexistence . . .

The Christian churches can and must press their governments to strengthen this spirit of mutual trust . . .

We know that pagan Rome knew no other law than that of force, but Christian love has shown itself stronger and more substantial than death. This same love, this same power of the Christian faith, this Christian unity for the defence of Peace, must now become one of the sources of this trust between men and between peoples without which victory over the imperialist policy of force and hatred is impossible . . .

But have the Christian Churches of the West done everything possible to establish complete unity with other Churches in the interests of peace? Could we not long since have started discussing this question on a world-wide Christian basis? . . . .

My country has recently shown the peoples of Europe that they can reap the advantages of security with confidence and cooperation which, answering the vital interests of the European countries, could have a decisive importance in consolidating peace in general. A big step could be made along this road, thanks to Christian trust, if all the Christian Churches of the West, together with the Orthodox Churches, in common with all peace-loving people, were to intervene in the interests of this cause upon whose success depends the well-being of Europe and of mankind the world over.

To all religious organisations, to all religions in the world, I make this fervent appeal: "In the name of Him in whom we believe, in the name of a happy life for our children, and our young people, in the name of the happiness of all mankind, let us spare no effort, let us work to unite in a massive endeavour in defence of peace on earth . . .

Mr. Yaari — Israel
MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT

Over 400,000 citizens of our country, 42 per cent of the adult population of the state, have, during the last few months, signed the demands of the People's Referendum, organised by the Israel Peace Movement. The first demand expresses opposition to the rearming of Germany in any form whatsoever. The results of this referendum prove that the masses of the people have not forgotten what crimes were committed against us and what are likely to be committed against us and the whole of mankind by the neo-Nazi militarism now being resurrected...

Mr. John Burns — Great Britain

It is true that the present British Government has agreed that German rearmament should be put into effect, and as soon as possible.

It is true that support for such a policy was carried at Scarborough. But the present Government will go.

And the policy of the Labour Party which will be the next Government in Britain can and will be changed...

So therefore I say to this Conference: let us not approach the future with any feeling of pessimism or what is worse in a spirit of defeatism, but let us support all efforts to bring about a meeting of all the European nations, or the Four Great Powers, before the wish of certain right wing elements is transformed into the deed. Let us do this, for we will gather friends and allies on the way and, as true as I stand here, the day will come when the common man will triumph over the forces of reaction...

Mr. Alain Le Leap — France
GENERAL SECRETARY OF THE GENERAL CONFEDERATION OF TRADE UNIONS OF FRANCE (C.G.T.)

Our people will not be satisfied with the rejection of the London and Paris Agreements, after having forced the rejection of E.D.C. They intend that France shall play her part in the construction of European Collective Security. This idea of collective security, supported, for example, by such men as Mr. Herriot and Mr. Paul Boncour, has spread throughout the most varied sections of the French nation...

Because we feel that the position of France can be the determining factor, as it was in the fight against E.D.C., it is our duty to tell you with the utmost gravity that we consider the situation to be serious. Serious because our Parliament does not reflect the wishes of our people. Serious because in the Chamber of Deputies those formerly hostile to E.D.C. are not yet taking a clear stand against the London and Paris Agreements, for a variety of reasons. But have no fear, we are without the slightest trace of discouragement, resignation or surrender. Our pressure will be forcefully exerted, there will be the maximum number of deputations, lobbying members of Parliament and making them listen to the voice of the nation...

Your friendship imposes on us the duty of telling you that the hour is grave, very grave; we must realise that. It is a question of the future and even of the lives of our peoples. By our common efforts we can still win a new success, a decisive success. It is upon us Frenchmen, but also upon all of you, especially those of you who represent the peoples of Western Europe, that the future of Peace and of the world depends.

Mrs. M. Minnaert-Coelingh — Netherlands

The feeling of uneasiness about the London and Paris agreements is widespread and much greater than it was over E.D.C....

Always the danger of an independent German army was pointed out in order to stress that a supra-national organisation was needed to avert it. Now the idea of a supra-national organisation has been thrown overboard and an almost independent German army with its own General Staff is proposed, as though nothing had happened in the interim. This has suddenly made the situation much clearer and warrants us speaking of a feeling of general anxiety.

Prof. H. Brandweiner — Austria

The Charter of the United Nations provides for regional agreements which can fulfil similar functions for certain parts of the world in so far as and so long as the Security Council does not intervene...

Such regional agreements, however, must not, under any circumstances, be directed against one or several of the Great Powers. This is so because the Charter of the United Nations has given them collectively the main responsibility for the maintenance of world peace and international security. This fundamental principle of the unanimity of the great powers is made abundantly clear in Article 27, paragraph 3, of the Charter.

Regional agreements which are directed against one or more of the Five Great Powers are, therefore, a violation of the Charter and are, like all other international agreements which contradict it, subject to the sanction that commitments arising out of the statute have priority. Every state which fails to honour these obligations, and in the execution of such regional agreements resorts to war, must expect to be treated as an aggressor.

Ladies and Gentlemen, I would ask you to give special attention to this point. So far, in the theory of International Law, no attempt has been made to define a criterion which would enable us to look upon agreements such as the Treaty of Rio de Janeiro, which founded the Organisation of American States, or the Sino-Soviet Treaty of Friendship as being regional agreements of the type provided for in the United Nations Charter, and which, on the other hand, will enable us to determine why military pacts such as N.A.T.O., the Manila Pact, the Anzus Pact or E.D.C., which met its end in Paris, are not regional treaties in the sense of the Charter.

The criterion rests on the fact that the latter treaties are directed against one or several of the Great Powers — against China and the Soviet Union. In this way they contradict the United Nations Charter because it links the building of a system of collective security with the principle of the unanimity of the Great Powers. This became abundantly clear when the Soviet Union offered to enter N.A.T.O. The refusal of the N.A.T.O. Powers to accept the Soviet Union in this treaty system clearly showed — what was never in doubt from the start — that in fact N.A.T.O. is directed against the Soviet Union. The Soviet Union's entry into N.A.T.O. would have transformed this treaty into a valid regional agreement...

In the light of these points of international law, we can say that the all-European collective security treaty proposed by the Soviet Union possesses all the requirements of a regional agreement in the sense of the United Nations Charter. In principle it is not directed against any country; it provides for the participation of the United States of America; it embraces countries of different social systems and forms of Government; it respects the national sovereignty of all the participating states. At the same time it makes impossible the use of the remaining national armies for purposes of aggression.

The parties to this agreement pledge not to attack each other and to refrain from any threat or use of force in their relations with each other...

Prof. Göran Von Bonsdorff — Finland

From the point of view of principle the security problem is not a question of power but a common interest for all the countries concerned. This question is of special importance for Finland bearing in mind the position of the country between East and West, and the more one considers the special position of Finland the more one sees how important it is for its people to contribute as much as possible to a relaxation of the tension in Europe. It should be observed that Finland as well as other small countries has a full right to work out and present its own proposals. And I do not hesitate to say that such proposals should be presented. That is that measures for the relaxation of international tension should not be regarded as the privilege of the Great Powers, in whose hands the final decision lies. They should rather be regarded as a common interest of the Great Powers as well as the small states, both those which are members of blocs and independent countries. Only in this way can we hope to obtain acceptable and reliable results from the standpoint of preserving peace.

Pastor Uffe Hansen — Denmark

It is illogical to open peace negotiations with Germany by providing her once again with the means of waging war; one can hardly make the Germans believe this any longer.

Doctor Sliman ben Sliman — Tunisia

These (London and Paris, Ed.) agreements, which have a barely concealed similarity to the plan for a European defence army, that was defeated by the struggle of the peoples and of the World Peace Movement, constitute a danger to the people. For they mortgage the future not only of Europe, but also of the peoples of North Africa, especially Tunisia.

So the question of European security has a direct interest for our country . . .

Mr. Piero Jahier — Italy

On the subject of this substitute for the European Defence Community, that is, the Agreements in the course of ratification which we have been discussing, it seems natural to me to ask our German brothers: "Isn't progressive disarmament one of the most urgent aims of the United Nations? Therefore, does not the disarmed Germany of the present time occupy an advance post on the road which all the European nations will have to follow?"

It will be for this disarmed but reunited Germany to decide its rearmament needs for itself in an atmosphere of collective security. Is it not humiliating for a great nation which has given Beethoven and Kant to the world to see its capacity for organisation and its military tradition looked upon as so much merchandise to be bought or sold? Are we going towards rearmament or disarmament?

Mr. Otto Nuschke — German Democratic Republic

VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL OF MINISTERS

The first and foremost task of all European peoples must be to eliminate the blocs and the aggressive military pacts which are disguised as security pacts. This saving idea came out in the proposals made by Mr. Molotov at the Berlin Conference of Foreign Ministers for the creation of a system of collective security in Europe . . .

Naturally, the new system of collective security in Europe would have to avoid the mistakes of the past. Under no circumstances should the participation of one of the largest European states — the U.S.S.R. — be renounced. On the contrary, the Soviet Union should be a guarantor of peace and security in Europe.

We in the German Democratic Republic also welcome the Soviet suggestion to bring America into the negotiations on collective security in Europe. Here the U.S.A. could make a contribution worthy of her great traditions. If, in this way, the collective security of Europe were also guaranted by the U.S.A., then France's desire to have her security guaranteed both by Washington and Moscow could be fulfilled. Finally, the participation of the great Chinese nation in such a conference would make it clear to the world that peace is global, that world peace is indivisible; that we must aim to ensure it collectively in every corner of the earth...

The hope for a change in the relationship of forces through the setting up of West German divisions is built on sand. First ratification, then negotiations, this is the argument of blackmailers. The chain reaction of the prophets of Western German power then goes on: first rearmament, then negotiations! first war, then negotiations! first capitulation then — perhaps — negotiations! These were Hitler's arguments. Let his imitators and followers remember this: Vestigia terrent, tracks frighten.

Those who really want genuine and honest negotiations must come to them unreservedly and without preconditions. Only in this way can peace be preserved.

In this connection allow me to say a few words on the elections. On this question the government of the German Democratic Republic has the following attitude: in preparing for the re-establishment of a united and democratic German republic the principles of the Weimar Constitution must of course be taken into consideration. Why should we not make use of the positive experiences of the Weimar Republic or even of the experiences we gathered in building up the state both in East and West Germany in the post-war years? This is particularly indispensable for the holding of free all-German elections. The government of the German Democratic Republic lays down no conditions for negotiations with the Federal Republic on the preparation and holding of free, all-German, democratic elections. We are also, of course, of the opinion that acceptance of the electoral system used either in the Federal Republic or the Democratic Republic should not be made a condition of the negotiations. The only thing that matters is to negotiate and to reach agreement . . .

The German question can be solved in a peaceful manner and peace in Europe can be secured if we observe the following principles:

1) In Germany the policy of understanding must be continually carried forward. This policy of understanding is after all the most sensible one.

2) The rearmament of Western Germany must be prevented whatever happens, because without German infantry there can be no third world war.

3) The settlement of the German problem cannot be achieved through a partial solution or perhaps even a violent solution. But such a settlement is possible through the reunification of Germany on a peaceful and democratic basis and through the establishment of a system of collective security in Europe.

4) Just as it is impossible to attain a partial solution of the German problem, so it is also impossible to try and solve this complex question by a policy of preconditions. It can only be solved on the basis of honest negotiations.

5) Today the greatest responsibility for the consolidation of peace in Europe rests with the German people.

It is by recalling their great and noble humanist and national traditions that the German people will be able to live up to this responsibility.

Point two of the Agenda

THE SITUATION CREATED IN DIFFERENT PARTS OF ASIA BY FOREIGN PRESSURE AND BY THE SYSTEM OF MILITARY BLOCS AND COALITIONS

Mr. Romesh Chandra — India

Report presented on behalf of the Indian delegation

In the months that have followed the Geneva Conference, the bonds of Asian solidarity have grown with a rapidity that must have startled those who thrive on Asian disunity. Friendship between India and China has grown since the June meeting between Prime Ministers Nehru and Chou En-lai as the vital factor in building the new Asian Solidarity.

Trade agreements have been signed, opening the door to a commerce, which can help the progress of both countries. Cultural delegations have crossed and continue to cross into each other's lands...

Prime Minister Nehru has again and again stated that his dominant impression of China — an impression which all the malicious propaganda of the imperialist powers will not be able to obliterate — is that the Chinese people and their Government desire peace above everything else, that they are busy reconstructing their country, that they have built a new life for themselves, and that they earnestly seek friendly relations with their brother Asian peoples and with the peoples of the whole world...

The Five Principles do precisely mean the removal of the fear of war and aggression.

1. The first principle guarantees the freedom of all countries. Unless all countries are free there can never be any lasting peace. Unless each country is guaranteed against threats to its territorial integrity and sovereignty there will always be fear and consequent preparations for war, military alliances and building up of armaments.

2. The second principle provides for a guarantee against aggression. Only such a guarantee can create that climate of peace which will make war impossible.

3. The third principle ensures that each country will be free to develop in its own way, to adopt whatever system the people may desire without foreigners interfering, directly or indirectly, in their affairs.

4. The fourth principle ensures the development of normal economic and cultural relations between nations without discriminations and restrictions, relations based on equality and mutual benefit, instead of the exploitation of the underdeveloped countries by the imperialist powers.

5. The fifth principle of peaceful coexistence is, of course, the key and most important principle of all. It recognises the right of different countries to have different systems. It firmly opposes the theory that different social systems cannot exist side by side and must inevitably come into armed conflict...

The concept of an Area of Peace in Asia has blossomed and has by now become the glorious vision of a continent of peace as part of a world of peace. May we say that we Indians yearn for the day when instead of poverty and hunger in the minds of men, the word "Asia" will become a synonym for peace. To make Asia a Continent of Peace, to make the world a world of peace — that is the goal of our endeavours...

The makers of war are now madly rushing forward to complete their plans for the domination of Asia.

The South East Asia Treaty Organisation has come into being. Its meaning is clear enough and it has been rightly condemned by the Government of India and by all sections of the Indian people...

All these sinister efforts cannot be fought back if the peoples of Asia remain complacent, if they feel that with the growth of India-China friendship and solidarity, with the increasing acceptance of the Five Principles, with the ending of wars in Korea and Indo-China they can now sit back and let events march forward by themselves.

We in India know well that it is not enough for the people to watch while the governments act alone...

That is why we of the Indian Peace Movement, together with the rest of the people of our country, know well that it is necessary for the peoples of Asia to struggle, to raise their voices for peace.

During the last three months, the campaign for Asian Solidarity has swept through our country...

The mass organisations of workers, peasants, youth and women are taking an increasingly active part in the Peace Movement.

At present, the Peace Movement is intensifying the campaign for Asian Solidarity, which has been given a new fillip both by the dangers arising after the signing of the S.E.A.T.O. arrangement and by the new perspectives of Asian Solidarity which have arisen after Pandit Nehru's visit to China.

The All India Peace Council has called an All India Congress for Peace and Asian Solidarity (the fourth Congress of the Peace Movement) at Madras from December 30, 1954 to January 2, 1955. For this Congress delegates are being elected on a mass scale from all types of organisations which support the peace Movement and the Five Peace Principles...

An announcement has recently been made regarding the formation of an Indian Preparatory Committee to convene a Conference of Asian Countries to assist in the promotion of peace in Asia and in the whole world. This preparatory Committee is headed by leading personalities, Members of Parliament and others, of the Congress, the Praja Socialist and Communist Parties.

The Conference is to be held in Delhi early in 1955 and is bound to be a great contribution to the development of the struggle for peace and towards the unification of the forces of peace in India and in other Asian countries. The people of Asia look forward now to the great world Congress of the Forces of Peace in all countries to be called next year: this Congress will help to forge new links between the peoples of the world and to plan new and greater efforts to outlaw war...

The aims of our movements for Asian Solidarity must be focussed clearly before the whole world.

First, we seek to build a Continent of Peace — a powerful Area of Peace — of countries bound together by a series of bilateral and multilateral agreements based on the historic Five Principles. Among ourselves and with countries of the whole world our relations shall be built on the basis of these Five Principles. We seek peace for our continent and peace for the world. We work together with each other and together with the rest of the peoples of the world.

Secondly, we demand an end to all military pacts which seek to divide and dominate us. Let the rallying cry of the Asian people be heard all over the world: "Down with the U.S.-Pakistan Pact! Down with the South East Asia Treaty Organisation! Down with the proposed Middle East Defence Organisation!"

Thirdly, we fight for an end to colonialism, to foreign interference in our affairs, to foreign bases and occupation of our soil. When we think of Asian freedom, let us not forget for a moment that in Malaya a savage war of oppression and brutality still continues. The Asian people say the Malayan people must be free.

Next our solidarity movement demands the immediate admission of the People's Republic of China to its rightful place in the United Nations. The campaign for the achievment of this simple demand of peace-loving people the world over must become irresistible. It is not enough to go on repeating the demand. We must see that our Governments take positive action which will compel the U.S.A. to end its unlawful and dangerous obstruction.

Fifthly, the campaign for Asian Solidarity must make every effort for a solution of the Japanese question to ensure the creation of a free and peaceful Japan without foreign bases on its soil, and with friendly relations with all powers. The fact that the U.S. Government is more or less in complete occupation of Japan and that the rearmament of Japan is being carried out has roused among the peoples of Asia and in the Far East the realisation that Japan is sought to be utilised by the American war makers for their aggressive plans of war. The campaign for Asian solidarity will assist the great Japanese people to free themselves from foreign oppression and domination and to ensure that a new Japan will emerge to take its rightful place as a free and independent country pledged to peace.

Lastly, the campaign for Asian Solidarity must ensure the carrying forward of the cease-fires in Indo-China and Korea to a successful peace guaranteeing the freedom and unity of the peoples of Korea, Viet-Nam, Laos and Cambodia...

The peoples of Asia know that as long as Taiwan is allowed to be a base for U.S. military forces so long will there be a constant danger of war.

Taiwan belongs by right to China and has always been recognised as such. The interests of Peace and Justice and national sovereignty demand that Taiwan be liberated and restored to the Motherland.

This must be done without delay — this is the demand of the peoples of Asia...

The peoples of Asia look towards the World Council of Peace for assistance and advice in their struggle for peace. They are watching closely the outcome of our deliberations. They are confident that this Council will lead to the carrying forward more rapidly than ever before of their struggle for Asian Solidarity, for the building of Asia into a Continent of Peace.

We look upon our movement for Asian solidarity as part of the world struggle for peace; our movement's success depends on the links we forge with our brothers in Europe and America, Africa and Australia. Our movement stands foursquare behind the peoples of Europe in their struggle for security and against German rearmament. Our movement stands solidly behind the peoples of Latin America in their struggle against foreign intervention and behind the African peoples in their struggle against colonial slavery...

Mr. Han Sul Ya — People's Democratic Republic of Korea

Facts clearly show that nothing will be able to hold back the movement of the Asian peoples who are firmly resolved to defend their liberty and independence to the end.

The ruling circles of the United States refuse to recognise the great historic changes which are taking place everywhere on this vast continent. They are trying to wipe out all the precious victories achieved by the peace forces at the price of enormous sacrifices; they are trying to complicate the situation in Asia and to impose their domination on the Asian peoples. To this end, not hesitating to endanger the armistices in Korea and Indo-China, the ruling circles of the United States are violating the armistice agreements and are creating various military blocs in Asia...

The peaceful settlement of the Korean problem is of tremendous importance for the maintenance of peace and security in Asia. That is why the Korean people, supported by all peace-loving peoples, have struggled and will struggle for the peaceful solution of the Korean question and for the reunification of their country, and consider that their struggle is a sacred duty, a contribution to the cause of peace in Asia and throughout the world...

But the ruling circles of the U.S.A., urging plans for aggression against Korea, tried to raise obstacles to the peaceful settlement of the Korean problem by all means and are continuing to raise these obstacles...

We consider that in the very near future a conference will have to be called on the Korean problem with the wide participation of the governments concerned; we stress this point.

The Korean problem can and must be settled on a peaceful basis without fail...

Today, North and South Koreans, vigorously supporting this appeal, have risen to fight for the establishment of contacts, for the strengthening and development of economic and cultural relations between the South and the North, and to hasten the peaceful unification of the country.

Without taking this into account, the Americans and Syngman Rhee, who abhor a peaceful settlement of the Korean problem, are attempting at all costs to prevent the appeal from succeeding...

The Americans intend to embark on a new military adventure in Korea and are continuing to elaborate their sinister plans to turn the Korean people into colonial slaves.

The Korean people do not desire bloodshed. The Korean people, whose mothers and orphans have shed so many bitter tears, know better than anyone the horrors and immense suffering following in the wake of war.

Mr. M. B. Alavi — Iran

The foreign interventionists are persecuting the Iranian people in order to drag our country into military blocs and to pillage her natural wealth. They are constructing still more air bases everywhere, at Hamadan, at Kimmanchak, Meched, Abadan, in the North and near Teheran.

The American military missions plan to build an army equipped with the most up-to-date weapons and which would be three times its present size...

You will soon be returning to your countries bearing the great decisions which will be taken during this important session. These decisions will open new prospects for all peace-loving people whose thoughts are turned to you. We ask your to transmit the Iranian people's greetings to your people and to your movement and to assure them that the Iranian people will, together with you, carry on their struggle for peace and independence, in spite of the cruel measures being taken against them. They will go forward because they know that they are not alone, that they have the support of all peace forces throughout the world. They will continue their struggle because they know that they will win victory, the victory of peace and friendship between the peoples.

Rev. J. S. Williams — India

GENERAL SECRETARY OF THE ALLINDIA FEDERATION OF NATIONAL CHURCHES

The Indian delegation considers that it is once again necessary to draw specific attention to the increasing violence being employed against the colonial peoples. We desire to bring before you the example of Kenya, which has seen two terrible years of killing, bombing and burning...

The Indian delegation draws your attention also to the struggle of the people of Malaya... There is no doubt in the minds of honest men and women that the struggle in Malaya is the struggle of the entire people against their rulers...

We should also like to draw particular attention to the character of the military pacts which are now being entered into. Prime Minister Nehru has again and again pointed out that the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation is intended especially to defend the colonial territories of the imperialist powers.

The latest military pact, S.E.A.T.O., is also clearly intended to consolidate the imperialist powers' strength in Asia and is directed at suppressing the rising tide of the Asian struggle for liberation... Immediately after the signing of the S.E.A.T.O. document, Prime Minister Nehru sharply debunked the pretensions of S.E.A.T.O. to be a champion of the right of self-government of colonies...

I would like to add a personal note to this brief speech on the violence being employed against the colonial peoples in order to continue their subjection.

I stand before you as a follower of Jesus Christ, the Prince of Peace. He came to this earth with the great and noble purpose of bringing about peace on earth and goodwill among men. I bow my head in shame, because it is on the pretext of bringing Christian civilisation to the world that the crimes I have enumerated are being carried out in Kenya and the other colonial countries...

What crimes are being committed in the name of Christ! I appeal with all my heart to the Christian peoples of the U.S.A., Britain, France, Holland, Portugal and all imperialist countries to compel their governments to act as Christ would have them act, to stop their violence against their colonies and to grant them their independence immediately.

God made all men equal. Let us pray and work to create the kind of world, to build which Christ gave His life for us.

Maulana Abdul Hamid Khan Bhasani — Pakistan

PRESIDENT OF THE EAST PAKISTAN AWAMI LEAGUE

The Geneva Conference has shown our strength and was able substantially to reduce international tension, but elements of another world war are present in the existing situation and it is our sacred task to prevent the unleashing of another war and remove the causes which create wars. In this connection I venture to suggest a few points for consideration...

The Korean question should again be taken up with the intention of solving the outstanding problems and of taking steps to bring about the unification of the country.

The withdrawal of U.S. forces from Formosa is essential for peace in Asia. For this purpose there should be world-wide demand to stop U.S. interference in this matter internal to China.

The five points of Peaceful Coexistence as outlined in the joint declarations of the Prime Ministers of China and India, and China and Burma, form the basis of lasting peace between the nations of the world and acceptance of them by other nations of the world would substantially reduce international tension and would provide a chance for the development of a period of cooperation and friendship between the countries...

I take this opportunity also to renew my pledge to do everything I can and to use all my strength in the cause of peace, in spite of my failing health at the advanced age of sixty-nine. There is no doubt that I want to live a long time so that I can see peace reigning in the world. If, however, I am to die before, my last breath will be dedicated to the cause of peace. This is not a wish alone, it is my determination which has emerged out of my conviction and faith in my religion — Islam, which means peace. The word "Islam" is derived from the word "Salm". "Salm" also means peace, and literally "Islam" means one who is dedicated to the cause of peace. Therefore, I take it to be one of my religious duties to work for the cause of peace and I am most sincerely determined to live up to the instructions of my religious faith...

Miss Raymonde-Hawkins — Great Britain

Particularly am I unhappy as a woman of British nationality at my country's activities in Kenya... As a woman I deplore this suffering and this injustice. From this rostrum I wish all countries represented here to know that there are in Great Britain many just and kind and peace-loving women, who will never condone this evil and will untiringly strive to restore Human Rights to all peoples...

Mr. Le Dinh Tham — Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam

VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE CENTRAL COMMITTEE OF THE UNITED FRONT

Peace returned to Indo-China more than three months ago as a result of the long and difficult fight of the peoples of Viet-Nam, Laos and Cambodia, alongside the French people and the peace-loving peoples of the world...

It the Geneva Agreement is scrupulously respected by both sides, the peoples of Indo-China will be able to build a peaceful and happy life and to establish friendly and peaceful relations among themselves, between the peoples of Indo-China and their neighbours, between the peoples of Indo-China and the French people, thus contributing effectively to the consolidation of peace in South-East Asia and in the world...

The whole world knows that before and during the Geneva Conference the American Government sought by every available means to sabotage it. When, in spite of their wishes, the Conference concluded successfully, it hurried to set up S.E.A.T.O.

S.E.A.T.O., far from being a defence organisation, is in reality an aggressive bloc created by the United States with the aim of enabling her to interfere in the internal affairs of the countries of South-East Asia, to plunder their natural wealth and to turn them into military bases for use against China in a third world war. Primarily this bloc is designed to sabotage the Geneva agreement, by extending its zone of protection to include Laos, Cambodia and South Viet-Nam. It is a crude violation of articles 18 and 19 of this agreement...

Nonetheless, in spite of the sabotage inspired by this sudden change, the people and government of Viet-Nam will do everything in their power to honour their signature. They are determined to scrupulously carry out the Geneva Agreement; they are ready to continue negotiations with France for the establishment of friendly relations between our two countries...

Whilst fighting for peace in Indo-China and South-East Asia, the Vietnamese people will support the struggle of the people of the whole world for national independence, the relaxation of international tension and peace. Especially will they support the French people's fight against West German rearmament, for they know that peace is indivisible...

The forces of peace are vast. Let us endeavour to mobilise them for the forthcoming Peace Congress in 1955. They must be invincible.

Mr. Liu Ning-I — China

VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE ALL CHINA FEDERATION OF TRADE UNIONS

There have been new developments in the situation of peace in Asia, but this does not mean that there is no longer the menace of war and aggression...

The United States fleet is still stationed in the Taiwan Strait and Taiwan has become a nest of traitors and pirates...

Taiwan is Chinese territory. This is an indisputable fact. The liberation of the Chinese territory, Taiwan Province, and the islands of the Chinese sea coast, is a matter of Chinese sovereignty and is her internal affair...

The Chinese people's opposition to U.S. intervention in and occupation of Taiwan or to interference in China's internal affairs, is fixed and unchangeable. The Chinese people's struggle to liberate Taiwan is also a struggle to defend world peace...

We want to point out the serious danger to peace in Asia of the so-called "South-East Asia Collective Defence Treaty". The signatories of this treaty, except the three Asian countries which have already signed military aid pacts with the United States, are not countries in Asia. Obviously, the organisation established by this treaty is only a military alliance of colonial powers. This military alliance supports the United States' hostile policy to China and facilitates United States aggression in all the Asian countries. As pointed out by the Indian Prime Minister, Mr. Nehru, this is "a sphere of influence controlled by great powers"...

The United States has already built up in Asia the aggressive A.N.Z.U.S. pact, the U.S.-Pakistan Military Aid Agreement and S.E.A.T.O. Now the U.S.-Chiang Kai-shek mutual security pact is being prepared. The United States is also preparing to organise a North-East Asia alliance which will drag in Japan. What we peoples of Asia demand is peaceful coexistence, whereas what the United States warlike clique is creating in Asia is division and war, which is completely opposed to the interests of the Asian peoples...

Therefore the tasks before us are:

1) To stop the United States occupation of Chinese territory in Taiwan, oppose the unreasonable interference in, and any form of obstruction of the liberation of Taiwan by the Chinese people...

2) To solve as soon as possible the question of the peaceful unification of Korea on the principle of respect for the national rights of the Korean people and safeguarding peace in Asia and the world...

3) To observe strictly the various agreements relating to the armistice in Indo-China and stop all direct and indirect acts of sabotage of the armistice agreement.

4) To resolutely oppose S.E.A.T.O., the rearming of Japan and other plans for military blocs which serve the purpose of division and war...

5) To extend the Five Principles of peaceful coexistence to all countries of Asia and to the countries outside Asia. To extend the area of peace and establish collective peace and security.

Mrs. Yves Farge — France

Two opposing policies are already confronting each other in Viet-Nam; one is a constructive policy which recognises the validity of the agreements made at Geneva, and wants on this basis to develop peaceful cooperation; the other seeks to maintain and impose, against all logic, a policy of force which has already been proved disastrous and which aims, perhaps, at avoiding the 1956 elections envisaged by the Geneva Agreements and which would enable the people of Viet-Nam to find Peace, unity and national independence again.

Unfortunately, the fears aroused by this latter policy soon proved to be well founded, for on 9th September last France signed the Manila Agreement which is completely opposed to the spirit of the Geneva Agreement ...

But I can assure you that the meaning of these dangers has not escaped the vigilance of the French people who understand that there is only one reasonable policy for France to follow, that of scrupulously observing the Geneva agreements and of concluding the economic and cultural agreements indispensable for the establishment of a lasting cooperation between our two countries...

This policy of mutual respect and cooperation which France ought to pursue with Viet-Nam, must also be the golden rule in her relations with the peoples of the overseas territories.

Mr. Salem Ahmad — Iraq

The Iraqi people fight the Middle Eastern military pact because they know that Peace means freedom and that war means increased subjection and atomic destruction.

The National Front which was formed six months ago between right and left wing parties adopted the following points in its programme:

1. The annulment of the 1930 Anglo-Iraqi Treaty and the evacuation of foreign troops from Iraq.

2. Opposition to all military and imperialist pacts, including the Turkey-Pakistan Pact.

3. Rejection of American military assistance.

4. To work to save Iraq and the Arab countries from the horrors of an imperialist war and for the adoption by Iraq of an attitude favourable to the peaceful settlement of international issues through negotiation.

Mr. Tawfiq Toubi — Israel

MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT

Wishing to make the Middle East an auxiliary base for their operations for carrying out their policy of power politics, armaments and military alliances, the authors of the London and Paris Agreements labour unceasingly to build up an aggressive military pact of the countries of the Middle East... and to lead the Arab countries and Israel into an arms race, which, while creating military reserves in our region, binds these countries hard and fast to the imperialist chariot even more than at present.

Doctor George Hanna — Lebanon

The peoples of the Near and Middle East — and I know them very well — have the greatest possible dread of the idea of war, not only because they understand all the horror and peril of its threat to human civilisation, but still more because they see that war is the only remaining pretext which the imperialists can invoke to enforce their plans and postpone liberation for as long as possible...

I am pleased to be able to tell you here that our people's struggle is always positive in content. Our people are no longer satisfied with passive resistance to the war plans and to imperialism. As a result of the growing effect of this struggle, trade is increasing between our countries and other countries of widely differing political systems, in spite of the imperialist pressure which formerly forced the governments to trade only with the Western Powers. The Great International Fair held in Damascus last summer helped this trade and showed how valuable it is.

Mr. Mustapha Amin — Syria

Our people fight the policy of war blocs and alliances and support with all their strength the timely proposal for the conclusion of a pact of collective security between the Great Powers in which all the other states would take part...

It is becoming more and more difficult for any people who hope for Peace and progress, and to enjoy their independence, their national sovereignty and their natural wealth, to remain unscathed by the policy of war pacts and blocs...

And it is for precisely this reason that the proposal for the conclusion of a pact of collective security meets with a warm response from small colonial or dependent nations.

Mr. Abdel Kader — Jordan

The people of Jordan, together with the other peoples of the Middle East, are beginning to understand the full importance of world peace and the extent to which it is linked with their freedom and their country's sovereignty and independence...

That is why we are defenders of peace and why we struggle for its consolidation as far as our poor means allow. That is why we have opposed and continue to oppose military pacts and blocs in any shape or form...

Mr. Sugardo — Indonesia

Only peace can give us the opportunity to build up our new Republic, to give back to our people the energy to endure any spiritual or material test, to restore the means of production, to nationalise those means of production which control the life of the nation, to produce the raw materials which are necessary for building up a national industry.

That is why we reject any idea of war or any idea which can lead to war, such as military pacts or embargoes. We, the government and the people, reject S.E.A.T.O. for instance...

West Irian, an integral part of Indonesia, is still a colony. Any form of colonisation is a menace to Peace.

This colonised territory of Indonesia is being used as a base for activities contrary to the interests of our people, our legal Government and our country. This too is a menace to Peace.

Not only is it being used as a base for aggressive purposes against Indonesia, but also it could be very conveniently used by S.E.A.T.O. as a base for aggressive purposes in East Asia. It is therefore a menace to world Peace...

I would draw your attention to the latest development in international politics in South-East Asia, namely the preparation by our government, heartily assisted by the Indian Government, of a conference of Asian and African countries at the beginning of next year...

We can contribute by holding a similar conference to put the people's point of view. It is for this reason that the Indonesian delegation welcomes the news of the Asian Peace Conference which is now being prepared by the Peace Movement in India...

Professor Schmidt speaking in the Cultural Commission

Point Five of the Agenda

SITUATION CREATED IN LATIN AMERICA BY INTERFERENCE IN THE INTERNAL AFFAIRS OF NATIONS

Mr. Jose da Frota Moreira — Brasil

MEMBER OF FEDERAL PARLIAMENT
GENERAL SECRETARY BRAZILIAN LABOUR PARTY

Report presented on behalf of the Brazilian delegation

The rousing of Latin American public opinion against weapons of mass destruction, against atomic and hydrogen bombs and bacteriological warfare, the great continent-wide campaign to prevent our peoples from being dragged into the Korean war, the movement against bilateral pacts which was conducted among the peoples and in the parliaments of various countries, the campaign for a peace pact between the Five Great Powers and for the peaceful solution of international issues, the consistent and ever more energetic action of our peoples to defend their countries' sovereignty against the attacks made on it as a result of the policy of war preparations — these are some aspects of Latin America's contribution to the cause of world peace...

In Europe and Asia, where the peoples are winning such significant victories, the forces interested in war feel the ground very shaky under their feet. They are therefore greatly increasing their pressure on Latin America. Really dramatic events are taking place in our countries and our peoples are menaced by grave threats...

A whole series of agreements, pacts and treaties — of which a typical example is the Treaty of Rio de Janeiro, the precursor of the Atlantic Pact, and in fact the legal instrument binding all the countries of Latin America to the Atlantic Pact — and bilateral pacts run counter at many points to what is specifically set out in the Constitutions of a number of Latin American countries. Moreover, they in no way correspond to the interests of our nations since they lay on the latter the legal obligation to take part in wars all over the world, without our peoples being consulted and even against their will. It is to be noted that this policy is so little to the liking of public opinion that in a number of countries these treaties have not yet been ratified by parliament.

Treaties, pacts and agreements can only be accepted and respected by the peoples of Latin America if they obey the Charter of the United Nations in the letter and in the spirit, that is to say if they further collaboration and cooperation between the nations on a world scale... Unfortunately, we are seeing the transformation of the countries of Latin America, alongside the United States, into a regional military bloc which limits our countries' participation in an overall policy of world cooperation. The restrictive nature of this bloc is so marked that up to now Canada, one of the most important countries on the American continent, has not joined it because it contains too many limitations...

What we are witnessing is a whole process of intensive militarisation of the countries of Latin America whose effects are to be seen in the growth of the war industries, above all the strategic minerals industry, to the detriment of the peacetime industries which are coming up against growing difficulties in all the countries of Latin America...

There is also a well-known fact to which the delegates of Uruguay and Ecuador at the Ninth General Assembly of the United Nations made constant reference. It is that the United States do not give credits to be used for improving the standard of living of the peoples of Latin America, whereas they always grant credit facilities for undertakings of a purely strategic nature... These works are not only unremunerative; they involve an increase in the burdens weighing down our peoples.

One aspect of the present situation in Latin America which cannot be mentioned too often is the discrimination and restrictions imposed on the diplomatic, economic and cultural relations between our countries and the other countries of the world on the pretext of differing and incompatible social and political systems. This artificial and forced restriction of our international relations to a narrow circle of countries is a cause of growing difficulties of all kinds, mainly in the economic and financial fields...

The national budgets of our countries are not peace budgets. The biggest items of expenditure in these budgets are for military purposes and they are increasing every year...

A wide network of newspapers, radio programmes and other means of publicity is being used for war propaganda... This propaganda is diametrically opposed to the peaceful traditions of our national cultures for its aim is to create a mentality favourable to war and seeks to subordinate all cultural activity to the interests of those who want war...

It is thus clear that in Latin America we are faced with open and direct interference by aggressive international forces in the internal life and affairs of our countries. The participation of the countries of Latin America in international life is not based on the needs of our national life, the real interests and the best aspirations of our peoples, but, on the contrary, reflects the interference of foreign forces in our internal affairs. Since this interference inevitably means the oppression of our peoples and can only be carried out by holding down their growing resistance, its champions are now beginning to use extreme methods. That is why Latin America is going through a period of states of emergency, of coups d'Etat setting up military dictatorships, of attempts to set our peoples against each other... and to provoke the foreign invasion of certain countries...

The reality of this situation on our continent is recognised and publicly proclaimed by a growing number of eminent people, especially now that the Tenth Inter-American Conference at Caracas has thrown a new light on these problems. For at Caracas the Latin American delegates had imposed on them an agenda the central aim of which was that the countries of Latin America should renounce their sovereignty. In spite of the insistence of a number of Latin American delegates it was impossible to get problems connected with the bad economic and financial situation of our countries discussed there. What they wanted to do, and what they did, at Caracas, in spite of the resistance of such countries as Guatemala, Mexico, Argentine and Uruguay, was to legally establish the principle of armed intervention by certain countries on the continent in the internal affairs of certain others under the pretext of defending the continent. This principle was immediately afterwards applied in the case of Guatemala.

On the international level this situation is leading the governments of the countries of Latin America to give systematic support to the policy of blocs, of collective insecurity and of the cold war. The most striking example of this, generally speaking, is the behaviour of the Latin American delegates in the United Nations. The countries of Latin America represent approximately a third of the member countries of this great world organisation and it is almost always they who decide the result of the votes and render difficult the implementation of the express principles of the Charter of the United Nations. In this way they make international disputes worse instead of seeking a peaceful settlement of them. It is not even necessary to say that this stand adopted by the Latin American delegations does not meet with the support of our peoples, who have never stopped demanding loyalty to the Charter and particularly the recognition of the legitimate right of the People's Republic of China to membership of the United Nations, which they look upon as a factor making for peace...

A people cannot rise to defend itself against aggression unless it has a heritage to defend, its freedom and its rights, its culture, traditions and customs, its particular way of life, and its own outlook. But the policy of war preparations — which is presented as being based on the need to defend ourselves against so-called aggressors from outside — tends to exterminate democratic freedoms and the rights of the citizens. It implies the spiritual deformation of the people and the imposition of the way of life of those who deal in war. Through all the difficulties of their development our peoples have created cultures whose most authentic and deepest characteristic — and we are proud of this — is their love of peace and of other peoples. How could we defend, as they are trying to make us do, a conception of international policy which presents the H-bomb as the principal guardian of peace? This, as we can see, is a gross distortion of our outlook . . .

It is in no way an exaggeration to say that in truth we are confronted with external aggression — real and palpable this time — which is working our economic ruin and our intellectual deformation, which is, in short, leading to the disappearance of the national sovereignty of our countries . . .

Within the general compass of the struggle for a relaxation of international tension during 1954 there developed in Latin America, and very strongly in certain countries, the struggle for free economic and commercial exchanges. Its results have been so significant that the barriers are already beginning to fall . . .

At the same time, there is a broad and deep development of activity for the defence of our national cultures and for free cultural exchanges on a reciprocal basis . . .

The decisions of the Caracas Conference gave rise to a wide movement of condemnation throughout our continent and this was expressed with great force in all the countries of Latin America without exception when, later, a blow was struck at the sovereignty of the Republic of Guatemala, sacrificed to the interests of the forces that want war. The wave of popular protest roused an echo and found support among many organisations representing all sections of Latin American society, in a large part of the press of the continent and from members of parliament who, in Chile, Argentine and Uruguay, adopted resolutions of protest against the invasion of this little republic of Central America. At Santiago de Chile — and this is something new on our continent — there was held a conference of members of parliament and public figures of Latin America in which eminent persons from nine countries took part. Men of the most diverse political views demonstrated their rejection of the resolutions of the Caracas Conference which grant the United States, with the complicity of the illegal governments of Latin America, a so-called right of intervention in the political and economic life of our peoples . . .

It is by struggles such as these, linked up with other struggles inspired by the appeals of the World Council of Peace, that the peoples of Latin America have taken further strides in the defence of peace, world security and national sovereignty.

The National Peace Movements are always to be found in the van of these struggles; they are the heart and soul of the struggle for peace on our continent. The development and success of the struggle for peace in Latin America are to a great extent due to the defenders of peace and to the National Peace Movements . . .

At the present time the peoples of the whole world are victoriously struggling against the policy of blocs and for joint security. The peoples of Latin America understand that the greatest contribution they can make to this noble cause is to struggle against the state of absolute insecurity to which they have been reduced by the policy of war preparations and to fight for true security.

The struggle for the security of the peoples of Latin America is first of all the struggle against the policy of military blocs which is at present in force on the continent, the struggle against interference in the internal affairs of our countries, the struggle for national defence and national sovereignty, for the right to decide our own future, for international cooperation with all countries on a footing of equality and reciprocal advantage.

It is, therefore, the struggle for free economic, commercial and cultural exchanges with all countries and all peoples, for a general agreement on disarmament including the banning of weapons of mass destruction and ensuring that strategic materials are used for peaceful purposes, the struggle against militarisation and for peace budgets, the struggle against war propaganda and for the preservation and development of our national cultures. It is the struggle to strengthen the fraternal bonds between the countries and peoples of Latin America . . .

Dr. Alvaro Uribe — Colombia

War preparation has led to the whittling down of democratic liberties and to a situation of insecurity for the people and states of Latin America with the result that all national aspirations are ignored or rejected as impairing the security of the continent. So long as the policy of war preparation is pursued, no Latin American state has the slightest possibility of becoming master of its own wealth or of freely electing a government even slightly democratic . . .

Nations with no problem of boundaries or national minorities, and which do not represent conflicting commercial interests, which, in short, are naturally inclined to peace, maintain great useless armies permanently and acquire the most modern and costly weapons.

However, these unnecessary forces do not, unfortunately, remain inactive; they are used to repress the people's demands and to open wide the door to the ruthless exploitation of the country by foreign companies.

As an illustration of what I have just said, I may quote the case of Colombia, an almost wholly agricultural country, whose military commitments amount to 33 per cent of the entire national budget while the amount destined to develop crops and livestock is no more then 1·8 per cent of public expenditure . . .

The state of international tension also favours, and even provokes, the erection of barriers and obstacles to free trade between the nations. Moreover it makes it impossible to send any possible surplus products to those new markets whose purchasing power has recently expanded . . .

The twenty votes of the Latin American countries at U.N.O. — a third of the total vote of the Assembly — have often been used to frustrate the proposals of the Asian and African countries expressing their will to get out of their position of dependence . . .

It is, then, necessary and urgent to initiate a mass campaign to have the votes of the Latin American countries in the United Nations express the people's will to peace and cease to serve as a brake on the national aspirations of other peoples of the world . . .

The success of a campaign with these aims would be the most solid foundation for making Latin America a powerful area of peace that would correspond, in our hemisphere, to what the Asian nations are developing on the basis of the five principles proclaimed by Mr. Nehru and Mr. Chou En-Lai.

General Heriberto Jara — Mexico

We must repeat over and over again what a quarter of a century of this era has amply demonstrated, that peaceful coexistence between peoples with differing political systems is possible, no matter how much they may be opposed to each other . . .

We must work to get a meeting of the Five Great Powers as soon as possible, including People's China; for not only would the exclusion of a nation containing a quarter of the world's population be unjust, but also peace could not be established on a solid foundation without having the opinion of such an important nation beforehand . . .

For the effective development of its economic prosperity, Latin America is concerned to avoid a war which, even if it broke out in Europe, would without doubt extend all over the world. But it is equally undeniable that peace in Europe would be strengthened by the firm resolve of the peoples of Latin Anerica to devote their energies exclusively to their own development, dissociating themselves from the forces which seek to involve them in a war economy.

Mr. Salvador Allende — Chile

VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE

The international commitments entered into by our governments have prevented and still prevent free trade; and the policy of blocs, along with that of military pacts, aggravates the crisis of markets for Latin-American raw materials.

Latin-American production has been arbitrarily classified — and not by the countries concerned — into two groups: strategic and non-strategic products. The first can only be freely sold on the world market according to the principles of supply and demand at the risk of incurring multiple economic and financial sanctions.

We have seen that past events in Indo-China and Korea have a strong repercussion in our countries.

We realise the dangers which the policy of blocs and the rearmament of Western Germany entails, not only for Europe but for the entire world.

The heroic sacrifice of the Guatemalan people — and let me here pay them a fraternal tribute — must awaken in America a spirit of rebellion against injustice and must strengthen the determination of the peoples to struggle for their independence, to win respect for their right to self-determination and sovereignty.

Just as the individual American demands the right to freedom, culture, work and health, the peoples of America want economic collaboration instead of exploitations, respect for their sovereignty instead of vassalisation, social justice instead of poverty.

That is why we struggle for peace and peaceful coexistence between all peoples.

Mr. Adalberto Ortiz — Ecuador

The countries of Latin America, including my own, have been forced to sign bilateral pacts of mutual aid which mean that in the event of war we should lose our national sovereignty and independence, of which we have little enough at the present time. These pacts violate the principle of non-intervention and the principles of the United Nations Charter . . .

In these circumstances, a new world war would force us to participate directly in the killing by sending big contingents of soldiers, and our small armies would go and fight on foreign territory, as in the tragic example of Colombia during the Korean war.

Mr. Vicente Lombardo Toledano — Mexico

PRESIDENT OF THE LATIN AMERICAN CONFEDERATION OF WORKERS

Because of their economic structure, which is reflected in their forms of government, and because of their geographical situation, the Latin American peoples, notwithstanding the differences in their historical development, are living in a difficult situation of which the principle characteristics are:

greater economic dependence on foreign countries than ever before, greater outside political influence on their internal political life than formerly, growing Anglo-American interference in their cultural development . . .

By historical experience and by instinct our peoples are convinced that they cannot play an important role in major world problems because in spite of the enormous extent of their territory, their big population and their great natural riches, they are clearly not masters of their own destiny. That is why they invariably link international problems of war and peace to the great problem of their national independence. For them the outlook is good if there are friendly relations between the nations, because that means that their historic development will not be held back by unreasonable demands and by the dangers which the economic expansion of the great powers has always represented for their vital interests . . .

In the foreground is Mr. Salvador Allende, Vice-President of the Chilean Senate

Mr. Alfredo Varela — Argentine

For example, at the moment a conference of Finance Ministers of all the Americas is taking place in Rio de Janeiro. It is purely and simply a repetition of the Caracas Conference in the economic sphere. From the point of view of the real interests of our countries, we can say now that it will fail, without fear of being contradicted by the facts. It is a stillborn conference, because of the scepticism of the peoples and of its promoters themselves. What the representatives of the war policy are seeking there, is clearly to legalise and intensify the submission of our countries, to complete their domination of our foreign trade to secure a wider monopoly of our oil and other strategic raw materials . . .

Our common action is not directed against the United States. We are not anti-American. We like the vigourous people of the North and we want to be friendly neighbours. We do not forget that their fight for independence preceded and inspired ours, that our statesmen learned from Lincoln and Washington and our poets from Walt Whitman. But we categorically oppose the tiny minority, the handful of influential aggressors, who trample on us, who want to "guatemalise" us, who impose their war-like plans on us and have converted countries which are so richly endowed by nature into wretched Cinderellas.

Mrs. Emilia Prieto Lugores — Costa-Rica

At the present time intrigues similar to those to which Guatemala was subjected are being carried on against Costa Rica. They take the form of blackmailing the present democratic government, prevailing upon it to destroy those liberties which we still enjoy. As a result of these intrigues our government found itself obliged to arm . . . in violation of the constitution which forbids the use of arms and the setting up of an army on our territory. American military missions undertake military instruction in the secondary schools, a fact which the whole press, even the most reactionary, has energetically condemned . . .

But this tendency to armaments is spreading everywhere on the much coveted isthmus of Central America, and we must continue to struggle tenaciously against it, considering it as the greatest menace to our small countries. At the same time we must strengthen the political consciousness of our peoples. In exposing them, we must emphasise that warlike intrigues are at the source of these manœuvres which I denounce here today . . .

Mrs. Prieto Lugores was unable to deliver her speech as she only arrived at the end of the session. She handed the text of her speech to the platform.

ACTION OF THE PEACE FORCES TO SECURE DISARMAMENT AND THE PROHIBITION OF WEAPONS OF MASS DESTRUCTION

Dr. E. H. S. Burhop — Great Britain

UNIVERSITY READER IN PHYSICS, LONDON

We cannot, we dare not rest until agreement has been reached on this issue. Every day's delay increases the difficulty of the problem technically, politically, and from a military point of view . . .

But from a political point of view the danger of delay in securing agreement on disarmament and the control of these weapons is gravest of all. We all envisage how profoundly the rearmament of Germany is likely to affect thinking on all questions related to disarmament. An entirely new factor will be injected into the discussions. How will we be able to go to the people of France, of Britain, of Belgium, of Holland, of Poland, of Czechoslovakia, of the U.S.S.R. and advocate they should all reduce their arms, destroy nuclear weapons, at precisely the same time as the former Nazi generals are again getting back their arms and getting access to nuclear weapons? Our two great campaigns for the defeat of German rearmament and for general disarmament and the banning of nuclear weapons are really two aspects of the same campaign. That is why it is so terribly urgent to see that agreement is reached . . .

It may perhaps be helpful at this stage to summarise the differences that have held up agreement on the question of the control of nuclear weapons during the past eight years.

In the first place there has been a difference about the aim of any control scheme. The Soviet view has been that the aims should be to secure the absolute banning of these weapons and that the production of these weapons should cease immediately and the dismantling of existing stocks should be completed within a few months of the coming into force of the control plan.

On the other hand, the American Baruch Plan (supported throughout by the governments of Britain and France) envisaged that when the control scheme was finally functioning there would be no nuclear weapons being produced by any national government, nor would there be any stocks of such weapons in the armament of any national army. But it still made it possible for nuclear weapons to be manufactured and held by an international authority, not necessarily responsible to the United Nations. Furthermore, the abolition of atomic weapons from national armies and the handing over of stocks and full productive facilities to the international authority would only occur as the final stage of a series of stages which would take an indefinite time to implement. During all this time national production of nuclear weapons would continue unabated.

Secondly, according to the Baruch Plan the international Atomic Development Authority (A.D.A.) would have the absolute right to send inspectors anywhere and everywhere without notice throughout the territory of every nation of the world, looking for violation of the control agreement. This would include the right to carry out unscheduled aeroplane reconnaissance flights over any country. It is now widely recognised that this proposal was quite unrealistic. One could not expect the Russians to agree to a system of inspection by an Authority under the virtual control of the U.S.A., which would have been the effect of the Baruch proposals. And it is quite unlikely that the U.S. authorities, who have refused to share atomic secrets even with their allies, would permit this type of inspection to take place on their territory if the authority were not under their virtual control.

In an ideal world where international tensions and misunderstandings have been removed such a scheme might be practicable. But how can one envisage either the U.S.A. or the U.S.S.R. allowing it to operate under present circumstances? The plain truth of the matter is that there is no way of obtaining an absolutely perfect system of security. In this respect the Russian proposals are perhaps more realistic. They provide for a high level of security and of safeguards against violations of agreements. But they do not go as far as the Baruch proposals. No doubt in further negotiations a compromise solution could be worked out. But such a compromise would have to ensure that any control plan did not provide a cover for an elaborate system of espionage.

As mentioned above, the Soviet plan provided for quite an elaborate system of inspection which could have been welded into an effective instrument of control. All atomic establishments in all countries would be subject to continuous inspection by the international authority. The teams of inspectors would be selected on an international principle. To guard against clandestine production in unscheduled establishments it proposed setting up a search warrant procedure. According to this, complaints about violation of the control scheme could be taken to the international authority. These complaints could be taken by individuals, by representatives of organisations, or by government representatives. The evidence produced could be circumstantial or could be based on suspicion only.

If the international authority decided that a prima facie case of violation had been made out, the government on whose territory the violations were said to have occurred would be required to throw open its territory for such inspection as would be needed to enable the authority to decide whether or not such violation had in fact taken place. All decisions of the international authority concerning its day-to-day working, according to the Soviet plan, and including the question whether a prima facie case of violation had been established, would be taken by a simple majority vote without any veto applying.

Thirdly, according to the Baruch Plan the Atomic Development Authority would actually own all atomic energy plants of any size, including power stations, in every country throughout the world. They would also have the right to decide where these plants would be located. The decision on their location would be decided not on the basis of where atomic power was most needed, but rather according to strategic considerations.

On the other hand the Soviet plan, while envisaging the authority as a body with considerable powers of control, was not prepared to agree to its owning all atomic facilities. It must be admitted that this question of ownership has proved probably the most substantial obstacle to agreement on international control of atomic energy. Clearly ownership is not a prerequisite for effective control. Indeed it is rather irrelevant to it. Why, then, the insistence on the part of the American Government that no scheme could be acceptable that did not include ownership? The repeated demand not only for control, but for actual ownership, has led to the suspicion that the true aim of the Baruch plan goes beyond that of the control of atomic energy and seeks to provide means of interference in the internal economy of states . . .

The remaining point of disagreement between the Western Powers and the Soviet Union concerned the question of the relation of the Security Council to the international control organ. According to the Baruch Plan, the Atomic Development Authority had either to be completely independent of the Security Council and endowed with sufficient power to enforce sanctions in the event of its deciding some breach of the control agreement had been committed by a state; or alternatively, if the question of sanctions for violation of atomic agreements continued to be the province of the Security Council, then the unanimity rule (the so-called veto) should not apply.

On the other hand, the Soviet plan definitely maintained that questions of sanctions for violations of international agreements in the field of atomic energy, no less than any other action threatening international Peace and security, should remain the responsibility of the Security Council. But that all the day-to-day activities of the International Control authority, including the question of deciding on special searches, should be decided on a simple majority vote with no veto applying . . .

In May 1954 a sub-committee of the Disarmament Committee consisting of representatives of the Great Powers met in London . . .

One of the most important developments of the London discussions was the tabling of a new plan on behalf of the British and French governments which did represent a substantial compromise compared with their previous position. Instead of postponing the cessation of atomic weapon production until an indefinite date in the distant future, it proposed that this should take place as soon as one half the agreed reduction in conventional arms had been achieved . . .

One provision of the Anglo-French proposals . . . provides that overall military manpower and overall military expenditure, atomic and non-atomic, should be limited to the levels in effect on 31st December 1953, and that the agreed reductions should take place from those levels. Acceptance of these provisions would effectively dispose of the question of German rearmament.

During the present session of the United Nations Assembly in New York, the change in the Anglo-French position was matched by a considerable change in the position of the Soviet Government as a result of which real progress has been made toward a solution of these problems . . .

According to the terms of the new Soviet proposals atomic and hydrogen bombs and other weapons of mass destruction would still be entirely prohibited eventually, while all other armaments, together with the size of the armed forces and budget expenditure for military purposes, would be reduced to agreed levels. It is clear that the Soviet Government has made a major concession.

Previously the U.S.S.R. has always insisted (and I believe in this they would have the support of the vast majority of the people), that the abolition of weapons of mass destruction with strict control of the enforcement of this abolition should begin right at the start of any disarmament plan. Since, however, the Western Powers have not agreed to this, the Soviet Government has now accepted a point of view similar in many respects to that set out in the Anglo-French proposals. Specifically, it now proposes that the disarmament should be carried out in stages, the abolition of nuclear weapons coming in the second stage. In the first stage half the agreed reduction in conventional weapons would take place. This stage would take between six and twelve months to complete. A provisional international control commission would check up on the carrying out of this stage.

At the beginning of the second stage the manufacture of all nuclear weapons would cease completely. During this stage, which would also last from six to twelve months, all existing nuclear weapons would be dismantled and the material in them made available solely for peaceful purposes. At the same time the remainder of the agreed reduction in conventional weapons, armed forces and military budgets would be made.

The carrying out of the second stage and the later reductions of armaments would be controlled by a permanent international body which would have the right of continuous inspection of all atomic energy establishments. This body would send its inspectors in right at the beginning of the second stage and would, of course, continue in existence for an indefinite period. It would have the right not only of inspecting but of giving appropriate orders concerning the operation of plants. The plants would operate according to a set of technical rules which would be drawn up in advance and would cover all types of process associated with the production and utilisation of atomic energy. Decisions connected with the day-to-day activities of the control body would be taken by a simple majority vote. If an atomic enterprise refused to operate according to the agreed rules, or if there were other breaches of undertakings, these would be reported by the control authority to the Security Council, together with recommendations for action. Action involving sanctions could only be taken by decision of the Security Council. Like the Anglo-French plan the Soviet proposals take the levels existing in December 1953 as those from which disarmament would commence . . .

Powerful interests are already arguing both in Britain and America that the new Russian proposals represent no change in the position. This is quite wrong. Two real steps have been taken to meet the views of the West. On the one hand it is no longer insisted as a preliminary to any control scheme that each state should make an unconditional renunciation of the use of atomic weapons. On the other hand, the principle of disarmament in stages has been accepted, the abolition of atomic weapons occurring in the second stage . . .

We must continue our campaign with renewed vigour for disarmament and the abolition of nuclear and other mass destruction weapons until these ends have been achieved. The race to accumulate nuclear weapons means that not only are we embarked on a path that could well end in the destruction of all that mankind has built and striven for through the centuries. It means, further, that we are largely depriving ourselves of many of the exciting peaceful possibilities that nuclear science could bring . . .

Before mankind arises the vision of a higher standard of life, of greater wealth than one could ever imagine, of the gradual elimination of much of the drudgery and many of the routine jobs by the fuller employment of mechanical means made possible owing to the development of ample sources of power . . .

The World Peace Movement can play a very important role in the struggle to secure the rapid and wide application of atomic energy to peaceful ends. It does not fight for Peace in narrow fields but is active along the whole broad front of the struggle for Peace. That is why I would appeal particularly to scientists throughout the world to support its efforts because its success in the struggle is the surest way to secure those conditions that would make for the widest application of science to the constructive peaceful uses we all have so much in mind. But in this fight we need the active support and participation of all people whatever their race, colour, creed or calling. The united action of large sections of the people for Peace has already stopped the war in Korea, ended the fighting in Indo-China and defeated the E.D.C. agreements. It can be successful too in the struggle for disarmament and the elimination of nuclear weapons . . .

Make nuclear energy the servant, not the scourge of mankind! Success in this great struggle can be and will be ours!

Mr. Gustave Cotelle — France

It was with the greatest enthusiasm and hope that we greeted the joint resolution on disarmament presented in the United Nations by the Canadian, French, British, American and Soviet delegations on October 22, 1954.

For, indeed, it was the first time since this important question began being debated in responsible international circles that the great powers had taken an important step nearer each other's positions . . .

There is no doubt that, if they are ratified, the London and Paris agreements will put off to an indefinite future the solution of the disarmament problem . . .

By bringing about a violent increase of tension, German rearmament will open a new and perhaps catastrophic phase in the vicious circle of rearmament, by destroying for a very long time, and perhaps utterly, all that has been accomplished with the aim of achieving general and controlled disarmament . . .

Because disarmament is one of the most substantial and promising of the results that we expect from a peaceful solution of the German problem, you will understand perfectly that this solution is of interest to all the peoples of the world and not only to the German people and their immediate neighbours.

Rev. Clifford H. Macquire — Great Britain

GENERAL SECRETARY OF THE FELLOWSHIP OF RECONCILIATION

Three years ago I was a guest of the World Council of Peace and on that occasion I was given the opportunity to speak and though even then I did not share all the things that you said I evidently did not offend you, because I have been invited again . . .

I am a Pacifist, that is, a conscientious objector to war . . .

I have spent many months travelling in America, in Europe and in the Soviet Union, and everywhere I go men speak with enthusiasm of peace. If talking about peace were enough there would be no more wars . . .

I believe that we shall not break through the present state of fear and suspicion merely by talking about it, but when some nation is prepared to have the courage to renounce the way of war and abandon the H-bomb and all other armaments. I believe, therefore that we should all be working in our own countries to that end . . .

There are good humanitarian reasons for renouncing war; there are good socialist reasons for renouncing war, as Mr. Ehrenburg reminded us; there are even commonsense reasons for doing so — but there are imperative reasons for the Christians to renounce war . . .

Professor Georgi Nadjakov — Bulgaria

One of the most important questions bound up with the international situation at the present time is without doubt that of disarmament and the prohibition of atomic, thermo-nuclear and other weapons of mass destruction. The peoples insist that an agreement on this question of prime importance must be concluded. They want the unlimited possibilities of atomic energy to be used not for the mass extermination of men, but for peaceful ends . . .

Mr. Josue de Castro, President of the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organisation, presided over the sitting of the World Council of Peace in which the action of peace forces to secure disarmament and the prohibition of weapons of mass destruction was discussed.

Mr. Alexander Korneichuk — U.S.S.R.

Loyal to its peace policy, the Soviet Union cannot accept that agreement is impossible because it has not yet been reached. It is for this reason that our Government has made a new proposal to conclude an International Convention on the reduction of armaments and the banning of atomic, thermo-nuclear and other weapons of mass destruction, and agreed to base this Convention on the Franco-British proposals. Desiring to reach this agreement as quickly as possible, the Soviet Union does not, in this new proposal, make the implementation of the programme envisaged depend on an immediate decision to renounce the use of the atomic weapon as a first step towards complete banning. A comparison of the Soviet and Franco-British proposals suffices to show that they are identical in their main lines . . .

The Soviet Union accepts the principle of stages advocated by the Western Powers and considers that the supervision must be organised in such a way as to correspond with the tasks of each stage. She is of the opinion that the rights and powers of the Control bodies must be defined in the International Convention and that, in consequence, the first task is to conclude such a Convention . . .

The bitter experience of the 20th Century has shown that the greatest, gravest and most real threat to peace and the peaceful life of Europe is German militarism.

Twice has it marched over Europe. Twice it has been crushed at the cost of millions of lives, and yet here it is reviving and rising up again before us. We must not under-estimate this danger, the more so as this time it is intended to put weapons of mass destruction — atomic weapons — in its hands . . .

The peoples of the world must redouble their efforts today in the struggle for the banning of nuclear weapons and for a reduction in all types of armaments.

We cannot fail to note that in the U.S.A., particularly in the last few months, representatives of different social strata are putting forward more and more demands for an end to the armaments race and for the banning of nuclear weapons. We wholeheartedly wish the great American people success in this noble fight for peace and goodwill between the peoples.

The peoples of the world are demanding that this great scientific discovery — the splitting of the atomic nucleus — shall never be used as a destructive force but only for the benefit of man . . .

At the present time in the Soviet Union atomic energy is more and more being used in agriculture, industry, medicine, and in many other branches of our national life . . .

While upholding the principle of international cooperation for the peaceful utilisation of atomic energy, we must stress that the solution of this problem can not claim priority over the problem that concerns the peoples of the world; the problem of banning the use of this mighty energy for military purposes. Only an absolute ban on atomic weapons will guarantee the necessary conditions for the peaceful use of atomic energy, will place a vast natural force at the service of man, will open up the really extraordinary prospect of a rapid increase in wealth and a tremendous improvement in the standard of living of all peoples . . .

Mr. Josue de Castro — Brazil

PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED NATIONS FOOD AND AGRICULTURE ORGANISATION

From the data collected by the U.N. Food and Agriculture Organisation, the F.A.O., of which I have the honour to be President we know that two-thirds of mankind are still living in hunger, or rather dying of hunger because their food supply is neither adequate nor sufficient . . .

The world has resources enough to support a much greater population than at present. Nature is not unkind, she has sufficient resources, she is good, she is generous. Those who have not been generous are certain groups of men who have seized the natural resources and divided them in a very unjust, very unequal fashion.

The joint budgets of all the international bodies which give technical assistance represent but an insignificant fraction of the war budgets of the great powers . . .

There is the case of the U.S.A. where war expenditure reaches the impressive figure of 70,000 million dollars. The cost of technical assistance does not reach one per cent of this figure. This clearly explains why the technical assistance programme meets with great difficulties, and why it cannot manage to rid the poverty-stricken peoples and areas of their squalour . . .

There are two paths open to us: the path of bread and the path of the atom bomb. We must make our choice quickly. The path of bread symbolises the path of social justice, by which everyone in the world will have bread to eat. It means inviting to the world's banqueting table the two-thirds of humanity who are at present excluded and who only from time to time receive a few crumbs from the table of the rich. Our world must really belong to us.

I think the time has long passed when poor people could act in accordance with the passage in the Scriptures: "Blessed are the poor for theirs is the Kingdom of Heaven." Now we must believe that the earthly kingdom, too, should belong to the poor, because the earth belongs to all men and not to a privileged few. And if we do not work hard everywhere to ensure that we move away from the path of the bomb, we will once more be cast out, we will not only lose the Kingdom of Heaven, but also the kingdom of earth.

Rev. H. J. L. Armstrong — Ireland

Patient endurance is the only safe policy today, coupled, of course, as it must be, with patient working towards the removal of injustices . . .

Keep on the side of Peace; and truth and justice will eventually prevail . . .

I believe:

1. That Peace must be sought in the context of religion.
2. That peaceful coexistence demands the acceptance of differing political systems, and that all these will be gradually modified as we near our goal of Peace.
3. That the answer to military threats must lie in better conditions of living, and
4. That we must face the challenge of the conscription of youth for the military machine.

Mr. Takashi Tanemura — Japan

The Japanese people were the first to experience the damage and evils of the A and H bombs. The fatal explosion of A bombs over the cities of Hiroshima and Nagasaki were so deadly that over 200,000 civilians were killed instantaneously, and even now, nine years later, there are still many who are suffering and dying from radioactivity . . .

In Japan the scale of anti A and H bomb activity is literally nation-wide and unprecedented. The people of Japan are against any militaristic policy backed up by the A and H bombs. No Japanese has ever been found who has not expressed his opposition to the A and H bombs. Both Houses of Parliament, almost all prefectural councils and nearly 200 city councils have adopted resolutions for the prohibition of A and H bombs . . .

The National Council for the Prohibition of A and H Bombs held a memorial meeting for the first H bomb victim, Mr. Aikichi Kuboyama. On this occasion it was decided to call for a World Convention for the prohibition of A and H bombs to be held in Japan on 6th August of next year, this date being the tenth anniversary of the explosion of the first Atom bomb to be dropped on people — the people of Hiroshima . . .

Point Five of the Agenda

PREPARATION OF AN ASSEMBLY OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE FORCES OF PEACE IN ALL COUNTRIES

The proposal that a world Assembly of representatives of the forces of peace should be prepared was mentioned with warm approval in a number of reports and in most of the speeches.

It was also dealt with in a number of speeches specially devoted to this question, from which we publish a number of extracts. The problems connected with the preparation of the World Assembly were examined in the Organisation Commission and the conclusions reached were presented to the Council by Mr. Jean Laffitte in a speech from which we also give some extracts.

Mr. K. A. Abbas — India

Welcoming the idea of a World Assembly of representatives of the forces of peace the speaker said:

The Geneva Conference, the Indo-Chinese armistice, the visit of the Chinese Prime Minister to India and the Indian Prime Minister's visit to China, the joint statements of the two Prime Ministers representing nearly one half of the world's population, and the subsequent adherence of Burma and Indonesia to the Five Principles of Peace — all these significant and happy events were envisaged in the proposals repeatedly made by us on the peace platform. We might even say that "what the Peace Movement says today, the world inevitably must say tomorrow".

As we begin to plan now for our next Congress, we cannot afford merely to look back with complacency and smug self-satisfaction, for our task is far from complete. It is true that the war which was imminent some years ago has been prevented, but the danger of war is not over...

I submit that as a movement we are now strong and mature enough to examine not only the immediate threats to peace but also the basic causes of world tension and war.

The prevention of war itself is but a negative though nevertheless important purpose. We should go forward to the positive purpose of consolidating the basis of peace itself. The doctrine of co-existence placed before the world by the wise statesmen of the U.S.S.R., and endorsed and further amplified by the Five Principles jointly propounded by the Prime Ministers of People's China and the Indian Republic provide an effective political basis for Peace...

But we also need to work out in our next Congress a concrete programme of building international unity through closer and more frequent cultural contacts and exchanges between the different peoples...

I submit that the next Congress keep this positive aspect of creating the climate of peace by cultural exchange in the forefront of its discussions and formulate a detailed and thorough plan of action in this respect.

Mr. Pierre Meunier — France

First of all, what is the reason for this Congress of world public opinion? Its justification is to be found in all the speeches that we have heard.

It has never been more clearly apparent that the world is at a turning-point in history and that it now depends on people's determination whether they ensure for themselves and their children a long period of peace rather than allowing themselves to be drawn towards a terrible tomorrow...

World public opinion must be given the chance to express itself with the boundless strength that unity gives. This is both the aim and the justification of the decision that you have taken to call the 1955 Congress.

I think that the best way to prepare for this Congress will be the struggle undertaken in each country to orientate government policy towards the relaxation of international tension, security and disarmament.

But to whom shall we address ourselves?

We shall address ourselves to the forces of peace without a single exception.

Because of our past activity, our experience and the confidence that many have in us, we claim to represent a great, peaceful force. But we do not claim to represent all the peaceful forces...

The speaker then gave a series of examples from which we take the following:

The German Social Democratic Party does not belong to our Movement, is has not even cooperated with us, but nevertheless it is helping the cause of peace when it goes on record against German rearmament and for a negotiated settlement of the German question...

In France, the people who want negotiation first — I mean those who consider it more urgent to negotiate a peaceful settlement of the German question and the questions of security and disarmament than to ratify German rearmament — are to be found in all circles and in all parties...

It must be said that a certain number of Frenchmen would resign themselves to accepting the rearmament of Germany in the end if they cannot see any alternative. But they hope that before this deplorable step is taken an effort at general negotiation will be made. I think they, too, have their place in the work and in the Assembly of the forces of peace because we offer them the possibility of remaining faithful to the interests of France, of contributing to the security of our country and all the countries of Europe, and also of avoiding having to reproach themselves one day for cowardly renunciation.

Our appeal must be addressed to all parties that make peace the keynote of their programme, to all spiritual forces which take their stand on the idea of peace. It must be addressed to all countries, since they are all threatened to more or less the same extent, and to all peoples, since they are all interested in consolidating or winning back their prosperity and in averting the fearful danger of an atomic war.

Mr. Jose Cueto — Chile

MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT

The peoples of Latin America are determined to win their independence and sovereignty so as to be able to discuss with all nations, in a dignified way and on a footing of equality, how to obtain peaceful coexistence.

In order that it shall be the peoples who discuss this problem of peace and decide on the form that the struggle to win it shall take, we support and welcome the suggestion to hold, in the first half of 1955, a great Assembly for peace at which all the peoples of the world will be represented.

Mr. Ivor Montagu — Great Britain

SECRETARY OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

This Congress must be our Congress — that is to say in the sense that we are responsible for calling it. It is needed now and we must take the initiative. But it must be not in the least our Congress in the sense of monopolising the conduct of it. Our appeal for it must go to all, not divided into "our movement and others", but to all supporters of peace, among whom ours of course strive always to be worthy of that glorious name. We have a unique and generous tradition. Right from Warsaw we said: every supporter of peace has a place in our world movement. At our meetings all are welcome, guests and members, all are free of the right of speech and vote if they choose to accept it. So it must be at this Congress, in discussion, in resolution, and in election of new vigorous representatives to the guidance of Council affairs...

Before us is the greatest campaign in the life of our movement against all these dangers, and, above all, to stop the rearmament of Germany and the splitting of Europe — to oppose ratification, implementation, arming and splitting with or without licence, before or after Treaties — in a word to stop it — to bring the nations together to agree to a peaceful solution before it is too late.

The campaign for our Congress can and must be an integral part, potentially one of the most powerful parts of this great policy campaign for Peace itself. From the British movement we want to bring here our experience. The significance of a Congress lies not in the meeting alone, perhaps not even primarily in the meeting. It lies in the work of preparation, in the work after it. A Congress is much more than half wasted if delegates are just nominated or listed, quietly, in a whisper, without anyone knowing anything about it. Delegates must be elected, supported, each backed by the sympathy and pennies of hundreds, even thousands of supporters. Nothing has so fired the imagination of ordinary men and women, in town or village, in factory, office, mine or farm, as the work for our past Congresses, the thought that they, the ordinary, for the first time in history can meet their like of other lands, discuss, exchange ideas, agree. They want to tell things, they want to learn. For the first time, through our movement, men can learn, and act, as one family. We want to be able, from now on, in the actual course of the great campaign for co-operation and security and against the splitting of the world that this Council will launch, to go to every group, every worker, every housewife and say: take part, you know what you want, choose your representatives and act; save the opportunity for world co-operation now by your action against the splitting of Europe; use at the Congress, in give and take discussion and agreement with others, the opportunity we win today.

Mrs. Mollie Fischer — Union of South Africa

Intimately bound up with this struggle for liberation is the struggle for a unified Peace movement... Racialism has always been a technique for dividing people and preparing for war. Thus in South Africa the fight against racialism is an integral part of the fight for peace...

We peace-loving South Africans warmly welcome the proposal to hold during the first part of next year an Assembly of the representatives of the peace forces of all countries. We are encouraged by the knowledge that in our struggle for a better South Africa we are not alone...

Mr. Jean Laffitte — France

GENERAL SECRETARY OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

Report presented on behalf of the Organisation Commission

The work and decisions of this session of the World Council stress the gravity and seriousness of the situation confronting us. This is a crucial time for peace, a time when, no doubt, the possibilities open to us confirm our belief that we can win, but also a time when the dangers of the moment, if they are not dispersed, carry the threat of a dreadful future.

The forthcoming World Assembly of the forces of peace forms part of a perspective of growing, redoubled and multiplied efforts, which can and must lead to a new rallying of the forces which today cannot escape from the dilemma of peace or war, life or death...

It transpired clearly in the Commission that the launching and preparation of such an undertaking should be carried on side by side with the development of the Movement's activities, that is to say, in close relation to the activities of the World Council, but at the same time, and before all else, in close relation to the developing work of each National Peace Committee and each local Peace Committee...

It was agreed that the World Assembly should be open to all the forces of peace. That is to say, it should be open alike to the forces of the Movement and those which, without considering themselves a part of the Movement, nevertheless cooperate with it. To these must be added the forces which, though they have refused up to the present to cooperate with the Movement, nevertheless defend the ideas which emanated from it and for which it still stands.

For these reasons the Commission thought it best to retain the name used by the Bureau in the appeal convening the Assembly. In other words the assembly will be convened under the following name: "World Assembly of Representatives of the Forces of Peace."

Mr. Laffitte then presented the Organisation Commission's conclusions as regards the convening, preparation, date and place of the World Assembly. After giving a picture of the changes that had marked each stage in the development of the World Peace Movement, the speaker ended in the following terms:

Changes have taken place not only in the situation, but also in people's outlook. Simple ideas which emanated from our Movement have met with a response from public opinion which opens up limitless horizons for the development of our Movement's influence. Big organisations, even governments, have adopted positions along the lines of the peace aims which we have never ceased to defend. Who can deny that in such circumstances it is possible to go much further in the common interest of mankind?

Certainly, and this has come out strongly in our work, the danger persists, immediate and present threats can put everything back into the melting-pot again. But though the danger is grave and more urgent, we are also at a time when everything can be won.

We have on our side the assurance of calm and genuine strength. We have the assurance, as was stated at our first Congress in the Salle Pleyel, that Peace has now become the concern of the peoples. We have the assurance that public opinion can even more strongly influence the course of events, and the assurance which experience has confirmed, that our Movement can make a decisive contribution here.

For these reasons the World Assembly, too, will be a new stage in the development of our efforts.

This stage should mark great new victories for our Movement, and through them, should assist in rallying the forces working for peace on an even broader scale.

CLOSING SPEECH

Mr. Riccardo Lombardi — Italy

MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT; SECRETARY OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

Events have produced a new trend in international politics. We have passed from the phase of propaganda to the phase of effective action. It is like the change from youth to the calm reflectiveness of maturity...

Our movement's powerful contribution to bringing about this change in the international situation is, however, so evident that it would be in bad taste to boast of it. It has been marked by three events of decisive importance, each one of which required a gruelling and prolonged effort by the popular forces guided by our Movement: the armistice in Korea, the end of the war in Indo-China, the rejection of E.D.C....

It is important to see the correct and proper perspective for the work that has now to be done.

This correct perspective will be gained if we look at it from the point of view that these victories have all been contested by certain circles. In Korea they are bent on disrupting the armistice. In Indo-China they are continuing to introduce American intrigues in the South in order to prevent the exercise of the rights guaranteed by the Geneva Treaty during the long period of preparing for the elections, and to put everything into the melting-pot once again. Finally, in Europe, they are trying to counter the collapse of E.D.C. by the new London and Paris agreements in order to achieve the rearmament of a part of Germany, and its incorporation in the military bloc led by America, in spite of everything.

This work, persevering and perfidious, insolent and sordid, is being carried out on a scale and with a bitterness without precedent, especially in Europe, for it is in Europe that the crux of the problem of war or peace now lies. To win peace in Europe would mean having the maximum chance of winning it on a world scale...

To lose peace in Europe would without doubt mean that it could never be regained, whatever successes might be achieved on other continents.

It is for this reason that in calling the present session of the Council, our Bureau proposed — and the Council adopted — an agenda which gave priority to the European question, not, of course, in order of importance, but of urgency.

For it would be dangerous folly to underestimate the enormous importance of what is happening in Asia with the setting up of S.E.A.T.O., American interference in Pakistan, the intrigues in Korea and Indo-China, in Iran and Formosa; of what is happening in Latin America where operation "Guatemala", followed by operation "Brazil", threatens to be extended and repeated, thus stifling the great desire of the peoples for the economic and political independence of this inexhaustible reservoir of raw materials and poverty-stricken peoples. It would be stupid to forget that there can be no real peace without guaranteeing all the peoples of Africa freedom from oppression and colonial exploitation.

Now, the road to the solution of all these problems lies in Europe...

The European problem, is, before everything else — and I do not say above everything else — the problem of Germany, and this is to a large extent the problem of German unification. We must at all costs preserve the necessary conditions for an equitable solution; the fight against the ratification and implementation of the London and Paris Agreements has no other meaning.

Messages Addressed to the Session

During the Stockholm session the World Council of Peace received many declarations and greetings from well-known people, organisations, associations, universities, factories, schools and others. These included hundreds of warm greetings from Sweden and the other Scandinavian countries; from nearly all the countries of Europe, especially Germany; and from Latin America, Africa, the Middle East and Asia.

Some extracts from these messages follow.

Mr. Jakobo Arbenz

former President of Guatemala

"This session of the World Council of Peace is of great importance for my people and for myself in particular, and I should very much have liked to take part in it in person... From where I am at present I send to all and each of those participating in the session my warm greetings and my most fervent wishes for the greatest possible success of the World Council's humanitarian efforts in the cause of peace."

Mr. Tetsu Katayama

former Prime Minister of Japan

"I have the honour to pay sincere homage to all my friends fighting for peace on the occasion of this session of the World Council of Peace which has extremely important tasks to perform in the present international situation...

"On behalf of the Japanese people, who are determined to defend their peaceful constitution at any cost and categorically reject the remilitarisation of the country, I should like to ask all my friends taking part in this session of the World Council of Peace to demand that all countries should solemnly declare that they will never resort to arms or threats in order to settle international conflicts...

"I express my profound admiration and gratitude for your untiring efforts to preserve peace and assure you that I am determined to struggle with you to banish war for ever from the earth."

Mr. Clotario Blest Riffo

President of the Amalgamated Federation of Chilean Workers

"I beg you to assure the eminent participants in this session of the World Council of Peace that I shall continue to fight untiringly for the noble aims of the Council and that I direct all my efforts to creating a peaceful attitude and a will to peace in all my dear fellow-countrymen."

Mr. Josef Weber

General Secretary of the Union of Germans for Unity, Peace and Freedom

"Be assured that I have every sympathy for your efforts and that I shall follow all your deliberations with close attention. I am particularly pleased that your agenda gives prominence to the question of the cooperation of all European states in the interests of their security... We are certain that the proposals of the World Council of Peace... will help to prevent the unfortunate history of Europe and Germany during these last fifty years from repeating itself. The dearest wish of the people of the Federal Republic is to forestall and ward off the dangers of a unilateral armaments race so as to make progress along the road of peaceful agreement and eliminate the possibility of Europeans taking up arms against Europeans — even more of Germans taking up arms against Germans — yet again."

Mr. Jacques Savary

on behalf of the World Council for the Peoples' World Convention

"If peace organisations established direct contact with the World Council of Peace, as we have done, they would lose their many prejudices towards the World Council...

"We consider the task being accomplished by the World Council of Peace as very useful, even indispensable, and we wish the forthcoming session every success."

Mr. Felipe Iniguez Medrano

Rector of Oruro Technical University, Bolivia

"Please accept this message of support for the discussions which will start on the 18th and believe that I am a convinced supporter of that noble aim: peace between the peoples of the world."

Messages were also sent to the Council session by Mrs. Ceza Nabarawi and Mr. Ibrahim Rashad of Egypt, by the Colombian Students' Federation and others.

Mr. Paul Robeson

U. S. A.

Again may I thank you for your invitation to be with you this evening. Somehow it seems that not long ago it was my privilege. Those most recent visits have been treasured deeply in my mind and heart. The splendid achievements of the Peace Councils throughout the world, the magnificent contribution of the British Peace Committee in stirring opinion and winning broad forces of all sections of British life to support the cause of peace, to force cultural exchange and mutually advantageous trade relations, have encouraged and inspired us here in our own land.

History moves speedily in these days and one senses the beginning of a real change in many regions of American life...

The American people, disturbed and confused, but in the main wanting peace like any other folk, have started to move. Many progressive-minded citizens active in the days of Roosevelt and through '48 are coming back into the public arena, so look for better news from this side...

The will of the people, the will of the world's people — and of them we are a part — shall prevail, for sanity, for peace and friendship. Know that I am in the middle of the struggle — I love that word struggle — and there I shall remain as long as duty and responsibility call. Let us hope that soon it will be my good fortune to join in some of the conferences to bring greetings from the growing thousands here fighting with you to help ensure peace and new freedom of many still pressing forward to new horizons.

All my best to you and to the people of your lands. My heartfelt wishes to my brothers and sisters of Africa and of the Isles of the Carribbean. We shall together build a world where we shall live in peace and yet with love of all for their fellows. In the words of the great Chilean poet, Neruda: "Though I am not there, I here pound the table with love."

Recommendations on the cultural activities of the World Peace Movement

The recommendations printed below and those on organisation printed on page 28, were adopted by the Cultural and Organisation Commissions respectively

CULTURAL RELATIONS constitute one of the most vital factors in the progress of human civilisation: they enable the nations to exchange of their best and mutually to enrich their national cultures.

The development of these relations needs a favourable atmosphere, an atmosphere of Peace. At the same time these exchanges influence the international situation and make easier better mutual understanding and the establishment of peaceful coexistence between all countries whatever their social system.

Intellectuals are particularly interested in the strengthening of cultural relations, for the exchange of the experience, knowledge and discoveries which they have in their respective fields is a fundamental necessity for their work. They have also a special responsibility to devote their talents to the service of the peoples in their struggle for Peace and security.

Many writers, artists, scientists and religious figures have already raised their voices strongly in recent years against war hysteria, racial hatred and incitement to war and have declared for peaceful cooperation. But the peoples, who see the intellectuals as among their best informed representatives, expect a still greater and more active contribution from them, wanting other circles to come in and strengthen the joint activities for a close cultural cooperation.

The World Peace Movement has the task of inspiring and supporting these efforts by the intellectuals and the ordinary people. It has already played an important part in the activities which have made the recent extension of cultural relations possible. Ever since it was founded the World Peace Movement has put forward clear and practical proposals to combat war propaganda, to defend and foster national cultures and to extend cultural relations.

In the struggle for the lessening of international tension and the end of the cold war, for real negotiations instead of the use of force, as the basis of mutual security, the peoples have considered it essential to destroy the barriers artificially erected between them. In recent years significant successes have been gained in this struggle.

The World Peace Movement welcomes the increased cultural cooperation between peoples living in different social and political systems, which has taken the form of, for example, tours abroad by large theatrical companies, by major orchestras and troupes of dancers; growing exchanges of teams of sportsmen, of films, of books in translation, of exhibitions of works of art and of children's art; the increased representation of the different countries at international scientific and professional conferences; the holding of specialists' meetings in the different fields of culture to study their special problems in connection with the question of Peace.

In many countries, the Peace Movement has helped and encouraged actions for the defence or the development of national culture against attempts to adulterate it by introducing alien brands of culture such as those films, strip cartoons and various publications, which seek to justify violence, war and racial hatred. Certain of these actions are developing into a real expression of national opinion and are having positive results. At the same time there has been increased interest in the development of different forms of culture such as popular and folk art.

In spite of all these positive developments, however, there are still great obstacles in the way of true cultural cooperation. Many efforts are being made to limit exchanges to one group of countries or to thwart them, for example by using them to support racial domination or to put across propaganda for hatred and war to the peoples, or to falsify history and permeate textbooks and schools with poisonous ideas.

At the same time in a number of countries the Peace Movement has not understood clearly enough that all these questions form an integral part of the struggle for Peace. There has been a tendency in some countries to regard them as being the concern of specialists and merely to leave such questions to persons and organisations outside the ambit of the Peace Movement.

The whole work of the Peace Movement is a struggle for good relations and mutual understanding between the nations, for the defence and development of civilisation. This struggle can only be successful if the Movement in every country concerns itself with these vital interests of the people.

In the interests of the rapid development of cultural relations the World Council of Peace recommends to the National Peace Movement:

— to promote action on the widest possible scale and among all sections of the people against every bar to increased exchanges, such as refusals to grant visas, to allow international conferences and meetings to be held, to permit the distribution of cultural publications, etc.

— to promote and develop further widespread action against propaganda for violence, war and racial hatred, open or concealed, direct or indirect, carried on by newspapers, books, broadcasts, films, comics and other means of expression.

— to develop the widest possible activity against inhuman and invidious uses of science and the use of scientific research to ends almost wholly destructive.

— to promote and to support every form of cultural exchange which serves the cause of peaceful coexistence and cooperation.

— to support all moves for the defence and the development of national culture and for improved contact and exchange in the fields of popular art, folk-art and sport.

— to support in every way the holding of gatherings and meetings of writers, film workers, musicians, painters, teachers and scientists to discuss their particular problems in relation to the cause of Peace.

— to promote and support actions among all sections of the people, and specially among teachers, to defend the education of children against the effects of war policies, against the introduction into the schools of unhealthy ideas and feelings, ideas rooted in brutality, force and racial hatred and to foster a spirit of understanding and friendship for other peoples.

Experience has shown that an important contribution to the aims given above has been made by two special activities proposed by the World Council of Peace: the celebration of great cultural anniversaries and the International Peace Prizes.

During the past three years the celebration of the great anniversaries proposed by the Council has helped the peoples to strengthen their respect for the cultural achievements of other nations and to draw together in defence of their common heritage. These celebrations have taken place on a wide scale and in all circles.

The World Council of Peace stresses the great importance of these celebrations. They make possible very varied activities both among writers, artists, scientists and professional people and among the population in general. The Council recommends to the National Movements to promote the celebration of the great anniversaries in a spirit of international brotherhood on a greater scale and the most varied ways, in particular encouraging academic, scientific, professional and popular organisations to take part.

The International Peace Prizes founded by the World Council have enabled the peoples to honour writers, artists and men of science for works of great human value which serve the cause of Peace.

The World Council recommends the National Movements to make the International Peace Prizes known to the people, to organise ceremonies of tribute to the prizewinners and their works, and to explain the importance and the meaning of these Prizes, which constitute a living link between the peoples and those who are the trusted voices of their desire for Peace.

The peoples have expressed more and more clearly their wish to know one another, to exchange all that is most valued in their culture and to create an atmosphere of mutual understanding which will be favourable to peaceful cooperation. The World Council of Peace calls once more on all friends of Peace to exert their efforts to achieve this aim. The perspectives are immense. Let us then work unstintingly to make them reality.

Recommendations on Problems of Organisation of the World Peace Movement

THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE draws attention to the essential contribution which the Movement made to the people's recent victories for Peace.

The ideas and campaigns of the World Peace Movement have had far-reaching effects. They are the chief source of the immense current of opinion which has developed throughout the world to demand the peaceful solution of international disputes. The increasing support of new forces is bringing about a marked growth in the influence and authority of the Movement.

The importance of the results obtained and the number of tasks with which the international situation presents us, face the whole Movement with the duty of ceaselessly improving its activities and methods of work.

In many countries national movements have demonstrated their ability to initiate actions bringing in all sections of the population and building the widest possible unity of the Peace forces. In this way they have acquired an authority and influence which, because they correspond to a national desire for Peace, are reflected in the attitude and statements of important political and popular forces and personalities representing wide sections of public opinion in their country.

This general strengthening of the Movement must not distract attention from certain organisational problems which still exist.

— The Movement has not always developed its organisation in proportion to the influence which its ideas and activities have acquired.

— In some countries, the action undertaken on the international level has not been adapted to the particular situation of the country concerned, and this has led to the formulation of abstract objectives and to reduced activity.

— In other cases the Movement, with the idea of broadening the Peace front, is abandoning its own programme of action, or is thinking only in terms of seeking the support of well-known people or organisations, to the detriment of the necessary work among ordinary people.

— Certain National Committees, by their principles of organisation, their methods of work and the formulation of their arguments, tend to ally themselves with political organisations and put out slogans too narrow to gain the attention of all sections of the population, irrespective of social origin or political or philosophical convictions.

The solution of these organisational problems must be sought for in the application of the decisions adopted by the World Council in the course of its meetings and Congresses, and in respect for the principles which the Movement has formulated for itself in the course of five years experience.

The Peace Movement is one which is able to achieve or assist the widest unity of the forces of Peace. It constantly strives to bring together, without distinction or limitation, nationally and internationally, all those who accept the principle of peaceful coexistence and the settlement of international disputes by negotiation. Through free discussion it arrives at aims and forms of activity acceptable to all.

The Peace Movement does not pretend to have the monopoly of the struggle for Peace. It asks all individuals and organisations representing forces of Peace to cooperate with it for the success of the actions which it advocates. The breadth of its aims, and its ability to promote activities which find a response in every country, make it a pole of attraction for those who wish to help in the preservation of Peace. The existence and the growth of the Peace Movement are thus essential conditions for the development of the activity and unity of the forces of Peace. But the Peace Movement also declares its readiness to support all actions, from whatever source, which bring together efforts made in the direction of international relaxation.

The Peace Movement is characterised by action. In every country its existence and its strength depend on constantly renewed activities, associating all people of goodwill in the achievement of precise and practical objectives based both on the requirements of the international situation and on national interests.

For the development of its activities, the movement depends on the existence of Peace Committees organised both in places where people live and where they work. These Committees, with their constant appeal to all sections of public opinion, are the guarantee of the widest unity and the greatest effectiveness of the actions undertaken.

The World Council proposes that each National Committee should be guided by the following recommendations:

— On all occasions to make clear the Movement's attitude to national and international events which have a bearing on the relaxation of international tension, either in the name of the National Committee or by means of statements made by its most prominent individuals.

By this means it is possible to bring out the independent character of the Movement. In this connection, the systematic condemnation of every action raising an obstacle in the way of relaxation of international tension, such for example as a call to open hostilities against a particular country, refusal to negotiate or acts of discrimination detrimental to the development of economic and cultural relations with all countries, should be its constant concern.

— To use the rich experience of joint actions, which have been carried through in cooperation with various well-known people and organisations, in order to strengthen and extend this cooperation, not simply with particular individuals or representatives of organisations, but also with the sections of people they represent. This aim can be achieved by initiating or supporting moves which can be jointly developed on the national and international levels.

— To safeguard the wide and democratic nature of the Movement: creation and reconstruction of Committees representative of ever-widening sections of opinion; joint formulation of objectives and forms of action; responsibility of all Committee members for the working out and implementation of decisions; election of Committees to organise Assemblies or Congresses.

— To seek the best way of developing permanent activity by the regional and local Peace Committees, bearing in mind the links between the different activities: collection of signatures, petitions or referendums leading to a campaign of deputations to all elected persons; local meetings and factory meetings preparing for larger meetings; local and regional rallies leading to a National Conference, days, weeks, and months of action etc...

Experience has shown the constant need for each Committee to find the method of work which best corresponds to the opportunities of joint action existing in each country, to seek and set out the arguments and facts which give a more practical form to the objectives of the struggle for Peace laid down by the World Council, linking them directly with the interests of the population.

— To consider as a permanent task of each Committee to find methods based on political activities for raising the funds needed for their development, the nature of the Movement making it impossible to lay down a membership fee for those taking part in the struggle for Peace.

— To maintain closer contact with the Secretariat of the World Council and with the other National Movements in order to bring about greater cooperation and better coordination of activities on a world scale. These contacts can be made by means of the delegates to the Council, by means of the Secretariat's information material, by visits and exchanges of delegations, and by exchanges of publications, films and documents. The Secretariat of the Council, as a permanent body, can assist this necessary cooperation.

On this basis, the strengthening of the organisation of the Movement and the solution of organisational problems which may arise, are the conditions for a better development of activities and a useful contribution to the widest mustering of the forces of Peace.

KUO MO-JO

SPEECH

DELIVERED AT THE EXTRAORDINARY SESSION OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

BERLIN, MAY 24 th — 28 th, 1954

At the last session of the World Council of Peace, held in Vienna in November 1953, millions of people throughout the world joyfully and enthusiastically welcomed the Korean armistice. The appeal which the World Council of Peace had been repeating for three years had finally been fulfilled. The Korean war, which had been a serious threat to world peace for three years, had at last come to an end, thereby bringing about some relaxation of international tension.

The Conference of Foreign Ministers of the Soviet Union, the United States, Great Britain and France, held in Berlin in the early part of this year, was the occasion for a broad exchange of views on the following questions: European security, the German and Austrian questions and the question of the reduction of armaments. Although no agreement was reached on these questions, the Berlin Foreign Ministers' Conference did achieve one important agreement — this was to hold in Geneva, on April 26th, a Conference in which the Soviet Union, the Unites States, France, Great Britain, the People's Republic of China and other interested states should take part, and which should discuss the questions of the restoration of peace in Indo-China and the peaceful solution of the Korean question.

Now that the Korean war, which lasted for three years, is ended, the only existing large-scale war is the war in Indo-China. This war has been going on for eight years and certain circles are trying to internationalise it. All people of goodwill in the world are now calling for the restoration of peace in Indo-China with the same eagerness as they called for the ending of the Korean war for more than three years.

Therefore it has become the earnest hope of the people of the world that the Geneva Conference may attain satisfactory results.

At the Geneva Conference the representatives of the United States, Great Britain, France, the Soviet Union and the People's Republic of China and other interested states have sat down together to examine and solve the urgent problems of Asia. This in itself is of great historical significance. The Geneva Conference is the first realisation of the Five-Power negotiation which the World Council of Peace has been demanding for five years. This means that there is a greater possibility of solving international disputes through peaceful negotiation. It also means that all important Asian and international questions must be solved with the participation of representatives of the People's Republic of China.

We Chinese people are profoundly aware of the fact that we have important responsibilities for the maintenance of peace in Asia and in the world. Our delegation, headed by Foreign Minister Chou En-lai, has gone to the Geneva Conference representing the will of the five hundred million people of China. They have the important task of making the Conference succeed by seeking to negotiate with boundless sincerity and patience. That is to say, they will make the Conference succeed so as to restore peace to Indo-China and transform the existing unstable armistice in Korea into a genuine peaceful solution of the whole Korean question.

The Geneva Conference has been going on for exactly one month, and its development has caused us increasing anxiety. Admittedly, the matters on the Conference agenda are important and complicated. If the representatives of all the countries taking part were sincere and eager in pursuing the discussions, then we should not need to worry. However, this is not so.

We should now like to recall to the members of the World Council of Peace and friends present at this meeting the development of the Geneva Conference. On April 27th, the second day of the Conference, as we all remember, Mr. Nam Il, Foreign Minister of the People's Democratic Republic of Korea, put forward a concrete proposal for the peaceful settlement of the Korean question, whereas it was not until May 22nd, that is four weeks after the opening of the Conference, that Mr. Pyun Yung Tae, Foreign Minister of South Korea, made a counter-proposal containing nothing new.

The same thing happened with the question of the restoration of peace in Indo-China. Mr. Pham Van Dong, Acting Foreign Minister of the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam, arrived in Geneva on May 4th, and, likewise, on the second day of the discussions on the Indo-Chinese question, that is on May 10th, he made an eight-point proposal for the restoration of peace in Indo-China. On May 14th, Mr. Molotov, Foreign Minister of the Soviet Union, made additional proposals for the conclusion of an armistice under the supervision of a neutral nation's commission. But the other side has not been willing, up till now, to enter into discussion on matters of substance, thus making it impossible to reach agreement.

These facts make it clear that someone is trying to protact and obstruct the Geneva Conference, so as to prevent it from reaching an agreement. Who is responsible for this?

If we coolly examine the content of the proposals put forward by both sides, it is easy to determine who is responsible.

Foreign Minister Nam Il's proposal to prevent the resumption of war in Korea and for the peaceful settlement of the Korean question contains the following points:

—All foreign troops should be withdrawn from Korea in six months;

—There should be free elections, in which all the people of both South and North Korea should take part, in order to set up a united, democratic national Government. An all-Korea Committee should be formed by a joint meeting of representatives of both South and North Korea in order to discuss concrete measures for the preparation and carrying-out of democratic elections. This Committee would take steps to promote the economic and cultural rapprochement of North and South Korea.

These proposals were opposed and rejected by the US Secretary of State, Mr. John Foster Dulles. At the Conference Mr. Dulles put forward an argument which was logically ridiculous, saying that the US troops should not be withdrawn from Korea because the USA is far away from Korea, and once the US troops were withdrawn, it would not be easy for them to come back. Isn't this ridiculous? To put it simply, the intention of the US Government, which Mr. Dulles represents, is to occupy South Korea for an indefinite period. And it has not relinquished its intention to take over the whole of Korea in the name of the United Nations. Mr. Dulles once more brought up the resolution adopted on October 7th, 1950, by the United Nations General Assembly through the manipulation of the United States. He thought it contained a "practical programme" for the unification of Korea. This programme aims at nothing other than the maintenance of the Syngman Rhee regime and the holding of so-called "supervised" undemocratic elections in North Korea only with the intervention of the US occupation forces. On May 22nd, Mr. Pyun Yung Tae made a proposal similar to that of Mr. Dulles and which is nothing more than a reproduction of American intentions in Korea.

I would now like to ask: which of the two sides' proposals are more fair and reasonable, which side's proposals are more practical, more genuinely expressive of the will of the Korean people and in conformity with the interests of the Korean people?

As to the restoration of peace in Indo-China, the proposals of the Acting Foreign Minister of Viet-Nam, Mr. Pham Van Dong, contain the following points:

—The recognition of the independence and sovereignty of the three nations in Indo-China;

—The withdrawal of foreign troops and the holding of free general elections without any interference from outside, in order to establish a unified Government for each of the three countries. When the three countries have their unified Governments some adjustments will be made in recognition of France's economic and cultural interests in Indo-China, on the basis of equality and mutual benefit. The three Governments are prepared to consider the question of making a statement on joining the French Union on the basis of free choice. But M. Bidault, the French Foreign Minister, still regards himself as the ruler of a colony and gives himself the airs of a conqueror. He put forward conditions similar to those laid down by the French Premier, Laniel, in the National Assembly on March 5th, demanding that the people's forces in Indo-China, which he calls rebels, either disarm or be concentrated in given areas under supervision. French public opinion has described these conditions as surrender terms for Indo-China.

Again I would like to ask: which of the two sides are more fair and reasonable, which side's proposals are more practical, more genuinely expressive of the will of the people of Indo-China, and in conformity with interests of the people of Indo-China?

It is obvious that someone is trying to protract, obstruct and even destroy the Geneva Conference.

This someone is the influential ruling circles of the United States.

The basic aim of the United States Government is to foment international tension. During Truman's term of office, the then US Secretary of State, the five-star General Marshall, once openly said that the United States should keep the international situation tense for at least ten years. Although the Democratic Administration has been replaced by a Republican one, US war policy has not changed under the leadership of a soldier President. The US President has not given up all thoughts of war, although world public opinion and serious military losses forced the ending of the Korean war. Why? Because the monopoly capitalists of the USA can make super profits from war. This is the hidden motive behind US world policy and all its actions.

The United States Government is fundamentally opposed to a relaxation of international tension. But, subjected to the pressure of world public opinion, it finds it difficult to offer open opposition and can therefore only sabotage negotiation by adopting a hypocritical attitude towards negotiation, and destroy peace by paying lip-service to peace. The so-called "prevention of the Communist menace" and the "defense of the free world" are nothing but a pretext for the fomenting of international tension. The US ruling clique thought themselves very clever in undertaking the following: brazen interference in the independence and sovereignty of other countries; the brazen establishment of military bases in other countries; the brazen imposition of blockades and embargoes; the monopoly of raw materials for their war machine; wholesale robbery in the name of "aid"; occupation and invasion in the name of the false "mutual defense against Communism". All this, however, amounts to nothing more than "stealing a bell by shutting one's ears" as the Chinese proverb has it.

We have not forgotten that the US Government was not very keen about the conclusion of the Korean armistice, nor about the convocation of the Berlin Conference. They were particularly displeased at the calling of the Geneva Conference. We are confronted by a certain number of facts which cannot be covered up. On the eve of the Geneva Conference the United States ruling circles and their propaganda organs incessantly spread an atmosphere of pessimism and despair, prophesying that the Conference could, of course, produce no results.

Mr. Dulles, particularly, has the habit of having two strings to his bow. If a conference is coming off, he will say, "Well, I'll come. But I'll only stay there for a fortnight. If you want to discuss the restoration of peace in Indo-China, well, I'll come. But what I'm really interested in is the formation of a South-East Asia Military Alliance."

In order to patch up this military alliance, he flew to Great Britain and France on the eve of the Geneva Conference in an attempt to force Britain and France to adopt "united action". He flies to Europe one day, to Asia the next, and then post-haste back to America.

He flew to Geneva, and then only a week later he flew back to the US again. Now why did he fly back? One of the reasons he has told everybody—namely, the same old business of plotting the formation of the South-East Asia Military Alliance.

Dear friends, what is the purpose of the US ruling circles in striving with such feverish anxiety to set up the South-East Asia Military Alliance?

It is only the purpose of squeezing out its old rivals, Britain and France, from Asia, so as to realise its ambition of transforming the Pacific Ocean into an American lake.

Let us take a look at the members of this so-called alliance. They are - Australia, New Zealand plus Thailand, the Philippines and the three puppet regimes of Indo-China. The most ridiculous of all is the attempt to include the Chiang-Kai-shek bandits in this "alliance".

As we all know, Taiwan is Chinese territory. Under the pretext of aiding the Chiang-Kai-shek bandits, the US Government occupied Taiwan and is actively planning to transform it into a base for sabotage and further aggression against the People's Republic of China. This is absolutely intolerable to the Chinese people.

Dear friends, is the whole thing not sufficiently clear? On the one hand, the United States takes part in the discussions on the restoration of peace in Indo-China at the Geneva Conference, while on the other, she shows much more interest in, and can hardly wait for, the organisation of the South-East Asia Military Alliance, in an attempt to extend the war in Indo-China. Who, therefore could say that there is any sincerity in America's attitude to the Geneva Conference? Who could deny that it is the influential ruling circles in the United States who are protracting, obstructing and attempting to sabotage the Geneva Conference?

The ruling circles of France are also pursuing a two-faced policy. These followers of the aggressive circles of the United States are, on the one hand, pretending, under the pressure of French and world public opinion, to carry on peaceful negotations, while, on the other, they are begging the United States Government for military aid. At Geneva, there is some underhand business going on between M. Bidault and Mr. Bedell Smith. Even though the French people have long condemned the war in Indo-China as a "dirty war", those elements in French political circles who want the war in Indo-China to continue, want it to continue even at the cost of mortgaging Indo-China to America.

News has come recently that the French authorities are spreading rumours in Paris to the effect that the Geneva Conference is being sabotaged, and that it is the delegates from the Democratic Republic of Viet-Nam, the People's Republic of China, and the Soviet Union, who are the saboteurs, and who are trying to prevent the Geneva Conference from reaching agreement so as to continue and extend the war. It is really an interesting thing that there are people who, in broad daylight, will swear that black is white! In our opinion, in the case of these Geneva Conference rumours, it is not the French who are speaking, but American dollars.

Although I am not a Frenchman, I respect the glorious traditions of the French people. When I was a young man, I read the works of the great French masters in translation: Descartes, Voltaire, Rousseau, Molière and Victor Hugo. I hold many French scientists, writers, and public figures in high esteem. I love France. I have a firm conviction that the French people have the strength and determination to uphold their glorious tradition.

We Chinese people have always loved peace and opposed war. We Chinese people are working peacefully with all our might, and our aim is to make our country a Socialist country, to enable everyone in it to lead a happy and peaceful life. Our Government is a People's Government. It has faithfully carried out, and it will forever carry out, a peaceful policy. We are deeply conscious that we have a great responsibility for the maintenance of peace in Asia and the world. I would like to say once again, therefore, that our delegation to the Geneva Conference, headed by Foreign Minister Chou-En-lai, is completely representative of the will of the Chinese people. The delegation is resolved, with the greatest sincerity and confidence, and in the spirit of peaceful negotiation, to enable the Conference to reach agreement. We Chinese people are looking forward eagerly to the results of the Geneva Conference.

On May 13th, two days before we left for Berlin to take part in this session of the World Council of Peace, we held a public meeting in Peking in support of the Geneva Conference. Our watchword is: if only the American delegates and the French delegates are willing to sit down and talk with us, we are always ready to carry on negotiations with them with the greatest sincerity and patience, in order to find for Asian questions solutions beneficial to peace.

It is not only the Chinese people who look forward eagerly to the success of the Geneva Conference; the great majority of the peoples of Asia and of the governments of Asian countries are looking forward to it with equal eagerness. May I be allowed to mention here two obvious examples to refresh your memories.

On April 24th, on the eve of the Geneva Conference, when the Indian Prime Minister, Mr. Nehru, made a statement in the House of the People in the Indian Parliament, during which he said: "The conflict in Indo-China is, in its origin, and essential character, a movement of resistance to colonialism." He opposed the extension of the war in Indo-China and took his stand on the restoration of peace in Indo-China on the basis of respect for the independence of the people of Viet-Nam, Khmer and Pathet Lao. I think these words were clear and wise.

Secondly, during the first days of the Geneva Conference, the Prime Ministers of India, Indonesia, Burma, Ceylon and Pakistan met in Colombo from April 28th to 30th. They issued a communique which appeals for the restoration of Peace in Indo-China without foreign intervention and recognising the national rights of the peoples of Indo-China. It maintains that the People's Republic of China should take its rightful place in the United Nations. It also condemns the existence of colonialism as "a violation of fundamental human rights and a threat to the peace of the world".

Together, these are powerful voices from the Asian countries, and voices cannot be blockaded.

Fundamental changes have taken place in the history of Asia. The time is gone forever when the colonialists could manipulate as they liked the destinies of the peoples of Asia and deprive them of their right to a say in the conduct of their own affairs. We welcome the fact that public opinion generally, as well as leading figures in Western Europe and other parts of the world, has recently taken up a more realistic and reasonable position on Asian questions. Nevertheless, there are certain astonishing and regrettable features in the situation: a few obstinate colonialists, particularly the ruling cliques of the United States, are deliberately shutting their eyes to reality.

In my opinion, the problem of Asia is the same as the problem of Europe. The collective security of Europe is the key to the peace of Europe and the development of the peoples of Europe. So it is with Asia. In the long-term interests of peace for the nations of Asia, we have to solve not only the urgent problems of Korea and Indo-China, but to seek collective security for Asia, which should include all the Asian countries. Only this can ensure peace and national independence for Asia, the prerequisite for which is freedom from interference on the part of colonialists. Given this prerequisite, "we Asian states should respect each other's independence and sovereignty instead of interfering in each other's internal affairs, should settle disputes among ourselves by the peaceful method of negotiation instead of resorting to force or threats, and should establish and develop normal economic and cultural relations among ourselves on the basis of equality and mutual benefit instead of permitting discrimination or restrictions".

These are the principles for the establishment of collective security in Asia set out by our Foreign Minister Chou En-lai in his statement at the Geneva Conference.

Though the Asian countries were economically backward in the era of the old colonialism, they each have a long cultural history, an industrious people, rich natural resources and favourable geographical conditions, and they can develop. If, in the future development of the Asian countries, we firmly abide by the principles which I have outlined, and undertake mutual obligations, we can coexist peacefully and maintain peace and security in Asia. This will contribute to the collective security of the world.

We Chinese people cherish our own independence and sovereignty, and we therefore respect those of our neighbours. We cherish our own peaceful construction and we therefore respect that of our neighbours. We cherish our own cultural creations, and we therefore respect those of our neighbours.

Since the foundation of the People's Republic of China, these principles have stood at the very heart of our foreign policy. Acting on these principles, we have established diplomatic relations with many countries, and have concluded trade agreements with business circles in Japan and with the Governments of Indonesia, Burma, Ceylon, Mongolia, Korea and other countries. Recently, moreover, we have signed a new agreement with India which clarifies the relations between China and India with regard to the Chinese territory, Tibet, and which is based on the principle of mutual respect for territorial sovereignty. For two thousand years there has been contact between China and India. We have always coexisted in peace, and have never waged war against each other. We believe that this should be a historic proof of the claim that peaceful co-existence between nations is possible. Further, we have exchanged with India, Burma, Mongolia, Korea and other countries, cultural delegations which have strengthened the friendship and understanding between the nations.

We are carrying out our first Five-Year Plan of peaceful construction. We want to raise the material and cultural standards of our people through socialist industrialisation. All honest and objective persons who have visited our country during the four years since the foundation of our Republic are in a position to testify to the constructive labour of the Chinese people and their will to coexist in peace with the peoples of all nations. As long as three thousand years ago, our ancestors bequeathed to us a very wise maxim, "All men within the boundaries of the seas are brothers". We are willing to abide by this maxim. We will never commit aggression against others, but we will never tolerate aggression against ourselves. History is our witness that whenever we have been invaded by a foreign aggressor, we have fought for the restoration of our freedom, independence and peace, even if it has meant a struggle lasting as long as two or three hundred years.

Dear friends, the discussion of collective security for all the nations of the world is one of the most important points on the agenda of this meeting. I have therefore dealt at length with the situation in Asia. Collective security is indivisible, and collective security in Asia is undoubtedly an integral part of world security. We Chinese people are not only striving for collective security in Asia, we are striving also for collective security in Europe.

We fully support the demand for the prohibition of hydrogen bombs and other weapons of mass destruction. The organisation and strengthening of collective security will help to ensure the carrying out of the prohibition of the use of hydrogen bombs and other weapons of mass destruction. And on the positive side, collective security will facilitate the control and peaceful development of atomic energy.

Dear friends, an earnest study in common of the important questions we are considering should, we believe, produce practical resolutions. We Chinese people will support and carry out with all our power the resolutions in favour of peace that result from our collective wisdom.

Finally, I would like to draw your attention once again to the Geneva Conference, which plays so important a role in the present international situation. The Geneva Conference must, and can, reach agreement on the peaceful settlement of the Korean question and the restoration of peace in Indo-China. But, in the same way as the actual calling of the Geneva Conference was due to the increased pressure of public opinion on those who are afraid of peace and promote wars, so, in order to make the Conference reach agreement, the peace-loving people of all countries must be vigilant to ensure that the sinister designs of US aggressive circles and their followers may be foiled. The peace-loving people of all countries should continue to encourage public opinion to support strongly every proposal made at the Geneva Conference that contributes to the preservation of peace and the maintenance of national independence: only thus will peace be victorious.

Peace must prevail, and the struggle of oppressed peoples for national independence and the defence of their territorial sovereignty must be victorious.

Colonialism is finished in China, its days are numbered in Asia, and it will inevitably come to an end throughout the world. We hope the day is not far off when all the peoples of the world will unite and co-operate in collective security, and will, like brothers, live in peaceful co-existence.

After the London and Paris Agreements . . .

A Warning

from

Professor Frédéric Joliot-Curie

President

of the World Council of Peace

On 30 October 1954, Professor Frédéric Joliot-Curie, President of the World Council of Peace, issued the following warning to public opinion about the London and Paris Agreements.

The coming weeks will be of vital importance for the future of peace.

The enormous dangers to the preservation of peace contained in the London and Paris agreements make vigorous action by world public opinion necessary. The peoples of the countries directly concerned must act without delay because the Governments which drew up and signed the agreements are striving to get them ratified as swiftly as possible. There is a reason for this haste: if public opinion had sufficient time, it could weigh up the dangers contained in these agreements and compare their worth with the possibilities offered by the Soviet proposals.

Was not the French rejection of the European Defence Community obtained by the joint action of all who see in the maintenance of national independence a guarantee of peace, and in the revival of German militarism a threat of war?

The dangers implicit in the London and Paris agreements can be perceived by all, regardless of personal preferences for one social system rather than another.

To anyone who has studied these agreements attentively and understood their real significance, their approval can only mean approval of the policy of armed peace and rigid, hostile blocs. This policy, which mistakes ultimatum for negotiation, can only aggravate international tension and increase the danger of incidents and war.

It would, therefore, seem as if the signatories of these agreements wanted to increase international tension in the most dangerous manner — and this at a time when this tension had greatly decreased. Today, there are no longer any armed conflicts; economic and cultural exchanges are being developed; the prospects for agreement on disarmament have never been so good; and the European Defence Community treaty has been rejected.

These circumstances warranted the hope for a peaceful settlement of the German question through negotiation between the great powers concerned. However, there would be a danger of jeopardising all this if the agreements signed in London and Paris were ratified, since they settle the rearmament of Germany and its incorporation in the Atlantic Pact.

If these agreements were finally ratified they would, in exactly the same way as E.D.C., maintain and aggravate the division of Germany and Europe. They would delay and endanger any real negotiation with the Soviet Union on the German question by creating an accomplished fact openly directed against that country.

The promise of disarmament contained in the recent debates in the United Nations cannot be reconciled with the rearmament of the Federal German Republic, which can only lead to a speed-up in the armaments race. In order to find some justification for the agreements, the Governments which signed them try to prove that the rearmament of the Federal Republic is inevitable and necessary. Neither in law nor in fact can this statement be justified. What is intended — in the name of an inevitability which cannot be justified by shouting it loudly — is the organisation of an armed coalition with the leaders of West Germany who have never concealed their territorial demands and who are being given a renewed assurance that their authority is the only one that is recognised over the whole of Germany.

Another reason given is the need for reconciliation with Germany. If the London and Paris agreements were ratified they would give military means of action to those who formerly promoted and were responsible for the Hitler regime, who have never hidden their dream of a new European crusade and who would not long be restrained — as history has demonstrated — by the mere pledge not to use force contained in the agreements. Just as after the First World War, the efforts of the Western powers have been wholly directed towards restoring the least democratic and most warlike elements to power. Once again, just as in the past, while powerful currents of opposition to the revival of militarism are revealing themselves among the German people, every attempt is being made to isolate and weaken the peace-loving forces in Germany.

It is, on the contrary, by relying on these Germans, who are very numerous and are fighting with courage, that the way to reconciliation and peace could be opened.

I cannot do better than ask you to ponder the following warning that was given me in 1946 by a German scientist from the Federal Republic. He said: "If the Allies continue along the road of collaboration with former Nazis, there will be another Führer in ten years' time."

Certain of the countries which signed the agreements are bound to the Soviet Union by treaties which have not been denounced. The clauses of the London and Paris agreements flagrantly contradict the spirit and the letter of these treaties. By failing to honour their signature these countries would set a dangerous example and would nullify the pledge not to resort to force.

I would urgently ask all of you to study the texts which are going to be submitted for ratification by your Parliaments. Examine them carefully, weigh up their full consequences. Your representatives must not be made to vote before you have acquainted them with your personal opinion.

The decision they are going to have to take is fraught with dire consequences and you will not have done your duty to your family or your country unless you forcefully express your feelings to them.

There are other roads open to the Governments if they want to guarantee their peoples' future and contribute to a lasting improvement in international relations.

The responsibility that this choice places on them must be brought home to the Governments concerned. For at the present time everything is possible:

— the settlement of the problem of the democratic and peaceful reunification of Germany;

— the organisation of collective security for all the countries of Europe regardless of their economic and social system;

— the promotion of general disarmament;

— the deliverance of mankind from the terrible threat of weapons of mass destruction and a great improvement in the standard of living through the use of atomic energy for peaceful purposes.

But, while it is true that rarely have such possibilities been brought together, there is nonetheless a very pressing danger that they may all be destroyed together by adverse actions.

Do not allow the implementation of the policy that will only negotiate from positions of strength.

Negotiation is not made easier by piling up arms, by increasing the size of armies and by stockpiling atom and hydrogen bombs — on the contrary, that means heading for atomic war. We must immediately prevent the starting of a mechanism which would take us away from the genuine paths to peace and risk crushing us all.

SESSION OF THE BUREAU OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

Vienna, September 13—15, 1954

DECLARATION OF THE BUREAU OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

Great events have brought a new hope to the world and rewarded the efforts of all who are working for peace.

An armistice has been signed in Korea and in Indo-China; the French Parliament has rejected the treaties on the European army which would have brought about the rebirth of German militarism.

The proposals and campaigns of the World Council of Peace have made it possible to bring the peoples into action and organise their efforts. To-day millions of people in every country feel justly proud of the share they have had in winning this great victory.

Nevertheless, other dangers remain in the world which still call for the vigilance of the forces of peace. One immediate threat hangs over Europe and may well destroy the results already obtained. The reconstitution of a German army as part of a military coalition, which still remains the objective of certain governments, would perpetuate the division of Germany, sharpen the opposition between the two parts into which Europe has been arbitrarily separated, and stimulate the armaments race.

The Bureau of the World Council of Peace calls on the peoples to oppose the rearming of Germany in any form or under any pretext. It calls on them to press the governments of the U.S.A., the Soviet Union, Great Britain and France to resume negotiations without delay. None of the participants must hamper the negotiations by adverse actions or by imposing preliminary conditions.

The peaceful settlement of the German problem must be acceptable to each of the powers concerned and also to the German people. It must put an end to the division of Germany, prevent that country from being used to threaten any of its neighbours and permit, at the same time, the organisation of European security.

Security cannot be assured in a world divided into opposing blocs, nor by military coalitions. It demands peaceful co-existence of all states, whatever their political system or social structure, co-operation between them, and agreement on general disarmament and the prohibition of weapons of mass destruction.

To concentrate all the forces of peace in order to achieve these great objectives, the Bureau of the World Council of Peace has decided to call a session of the World Council on November 18th, 1954. It will propose the following points for the agenda:

1) Co-operation of all the states of Europe in the organisation of their common security.

2) The situation created in different parts of Asia by foreign intervention and by the system of military blocs and coalitions.

3) The situation created in Latin America by interference in the internal affairs of nations.

4) Action of peace forces to secure disarmament and the prohibition of weapons of mass destruction.

5) Preparation of an Assembly of representatives of the forces of peace in all countries during the first half of 1955.

Professor

FREDERIC JOLIOT-CURIE

calls for the prohibition of the

H-bomb

Professor Frédéric Joliot-Curie, member of the Institute and of the National Academy of Medicine, President of the World Council of Peace, issued a warning to all the peoples of the world at the meeting of the National Council of the French Peace Movement, held in Paris on October 4th, 1953.

"It is after having thought at length and in weighing my words, that I speak of a terrible danger. All of us here have still fresh in our minds the havoc wrought by the last war, the bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, towns and their inhabitants burned by napalm in Korea and Indochina, the experiments of biological warfare in Korea, China and in Malaya.

"Believe me, I can assure you that the atomic and hydrogen bombs which have been perfected and produced for some years, represent a considerably higher power of destruction. I would like to be able to break down the attitude of unbelief or resignation; unbelief which is no doubt due to a lack of real information, resignation which may be due to having become somehow used to horror.

"If a new world war were to break out, France would be strategically the best target for these new devices. The result would be purely and simply death for the great majority of us — and by great majority is meant at least half of our population — and dire poverty for the horribly mutilated survivors, in a country without cities, without factories and without resources.

"With hydrogen bombs, the power of which can be increased to a diabolical degree, it can even be foreseen that their explosion would risk making all life on our globe impossible.

"This is what is meant when we talk of world war today. How can one remain indifferent to such dangers? The normal instinct of self-preservation alone should unite all human beings in an even more urgent demand for the prohibition of these monstrous weapons.

"It is the grave duty of scientists to inform the public about these immense dangers. It is their duty to be in the front ranks of those who are determined to rid the world of them for ever. Scientists know all that science has already done for the good of mankind; they also know what it could do for mankind in the future in a world restored to Peace. They no longer want it to be said: 'Science is leading us to destruction by the atomic and H-bombs'.

"They know that science cannot be blamed... The guilt lies with certain men who make evil use of its results. If scientists stand aloof they will be their accomplices. But this they refuse to do.

"I ask you, on their behalf, to give us back the joy of being able to bring to the world the inestimable blessings which science can bestow, the joy of ultimately being able to work without fear, and with a clear conscience."

THE DREAD THREAT OF THE H-BOMB, HANGING OVER HUMANITY, MAKES IMMEDIATE AND ESSENTIAL THE BANNING OF ALL WEAPONS OF MASS DESTRUCTION

The Bureau of the World Council of Peace

WHAT IS THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE?

1949 · 1954

At the present time there is a body which is the subject of discussion everywhere: the World Council of Peace.

What is the World Council of Peace?

It is an international body representing all the peoples of the world. The confidence and support which it receives from hundreds of millions of men and women in every country make it an effective force.

The World Council has an important job: the defence of Peace. This at one and the same time rouses the dislike of those who favour war and the increasing affection of those who love Peace.

Some—the majority—are wholeheartedly devoted to the Council. Some yield it a respect coloured by reservations. Others doubt the correctness of its purpose and the usefulness of its work. Others again remain hostile towards it. But no one is indifferent to the struggle which is the reason for its existence: the struggle for Peace.

ORIGINS OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

The World Council is the outcome of a World Peace Movement that began five years ago. For from the 20th to the 25th of April, 1949, simultaneously in Paris and Prague, there took place for the first time in history a World Peace Congress attended by delegates from every continent.

The arrangements for this gathering were completed in eight weeks. Such a success, achieved in so brief a space, is explained by the extraordinary enthusiasm evoked in every country by the appeal for the convening of the Congress.

A great hope was kindled in millions of hearts. As soon as the Congress was made known, men and women everywhere wanted to contribute to the great enterprise. Every day, more and more organisations gave their support: eventually they totalled 11,000.

The 2,200 delegates from 72 countries who came to this first Congress together represented one quarter of the population of the Earth.

The Congress called on those who work for Peace in every country to organise themselves into Committees for the Defence of Peace. It elected a World Committee to co-ordinate their efforts. Nineteen months later, from the 16th to 22nd of November, 1950, a second Congress was held in Warsaw.

The work carried out following the preceding Congress met with a universal response in a first campaign, which called for the banning of atomic weapons. This activity was developed further in the course of great popular discussions associated with the preparation of the second World Peace Congress. Thanks to such work, National Peace Movements came into being or grew stronger in many countries; numerous organisations and many well-known individuals declared their support for reaceful aims. Thus new opportunities appeared for still greater collaboration among all the forces working for Peace and the Congress decided to establish a body which could assure them a permanent possibility of meeting and acting for Peace. With this end in view, it founded the World Council of Peace.

COMPOSITION AND STRUCTURE OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

When it was founded, the World Council of Peace consisted of 221 members. Having been authorised by the Warsaw Congress to co-opt representatives of all forces engaged in practical action for Peace, it numbers today 417 members.

The members of the World Council of Peace are not isolated individuals, but representative figures. They are of all countries and races, all political opinions and religious faiths. They belong to the most various organisations. They represent the most diverse currents of thought and opinion.

The members of the World Council belong to different social groups. They include political figures like Signor Pietro Nenni and M. Pierre Cot, Senor José Giral and Madame Sun Yat-sen, General Cardenas and Dr. Kitchlew, veteran of the Indian National Congress, Mr. Ikuo Oyama, Japanese Senator and Senor Baltazar Castro, President of the Chilean National Assembly.

There are outstanding trade union figures such as Louis Saillant and Liu Ning-i, J. B. Figgins and Lombardo Toledano.

There are the leaders of international organisations, like Mme Eugénie Cotton and Mr. D. N. Pritt, Q. C.

There are religious dignitaries like the Metropolitan Nikolai of Moscow and the Dean of Canterbury, like the Buddhist priest Udakendawala Saranankara of Ceylon and Pastor Forbeck, First Chaplain of Oslo Cathedral, Dom Gaggero and Dr. Hromadka, Bishop Janos Peter, His Eminence Borghei of Iran and the Apostolic Protonotary of Brazil, Mgr. Costabile Hippolyto.

There are also great scientists and scholars like Irène and Frédéric Joliot-Curie, Professor Bernal, F.R.S., and Professor Infeld, Professor Nesmeyanov, President of the Academy of Sciences of the USSR and Dr. Kuo Mo-jo, President of the Chinese Academy of Sciences, Major General Sir Sahib Singh Sokhey of India and Dr. W. E. B. du Bois.

Famous writers like Louis Aragon and Jean-Paul Sartre, Jorge Amado and Pablo Neruda, Mulk Raj

Anand and Ilya Ehrenburg, Nazim Hikmet and Vercors, Howard Fast and Anna Seghers.

Great artists in a number of spheres, like Paul Robeson and Pablo Picasso.

This list, which might be considerably extended, makes plain that, in every country, persons recognised as eminent in the political, social and religious fields, and in literature, science and the arts take part in the work of the World Council.

There are likewise to be found in it men and women of all professions and every walk of life: lawyers and businessmen, doctors and industrialists, workers and peasants, each qualified to represent their social groupings, and the organisations to which they belong.

The World Council of Peace, whose President is Professor Frédéric Joliot-Curie, meets once or twice a year in plenary session—and, as often as occasion demands, in extraordinary session. At all its sessions, numerous guests and observers take part in the proceedings with the same rights as members.

The World Council of Peace has a Bureau, at present numbering 48 members, which meets about once every three months. It has, finally, a permanent organ the Secretariat of the World Council of Peace, whose office is now situated in Vienna.

The Council has held gatherings of one kind or another in most of the great European capitals in turn: Paris, Rome, Stockholm, London, Prague, Warsaw, Geneva, Berlin, Helsinki, Vienna, Copenhagen, Oslo and Budapest. It may well have occasion, in the future, to hold its sessions in other capitals and other continents.

AIMS AND PRINCIPLES OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

The World Council of Peace has one single, clear and definite aim: to achieve a stable Peace corresponding to the vital interest of every nation.

It makes no claim to be able to attain this aim by its own efforts, but in conjunction with all those who, like itself, long for the establishment of real Peace.

To this end it has set itself an aim that can be summed up in a very few words: to help to bring together on an ever wider scale the forces working for Peace.

For its part, the World Council of Peace has tried and tested principles which can make possible united action for Peace.

These have been defined by its President as follows:

(1) The different social systems in the world can coexist peacefully.

(2) Differences between the nations must be settled by negotiation and agreements acceptable to all.

(3) Internal differences within a nation are the concern of its citizens, in conformity with the right of all peoples to self-determination.

Why these principles?

Because whoever does not believe coexistence possible believes in war and not in Peace.

Because whoever opposes negotiated settlement of international differences thereby becomes an advocate of resort to force and not of Peace.

Because foreign intervention in the internal affairs of a nation is an interference injurious to the sovereignty of that nation, and hence gives rise to the danger of strife.

The acceptance of these principles constitutes a solid bond between all the members of the World Council of Peace.

The work of the World Council is also founded on these principles.

This method, proved by experience, has as its characteristic features the free exchange of all viewpoints and the constant search, by way of reasonable compromise, for solutions on which there can be unanimous agreement.

These, essentially, are the profound reasons which give the decisions of the World Council so resounding an effect.

The World Council puts forward simple ideas and reasonable proposals that, sooner or later, become revealed as the true expression of an extremely wide range of opinion because they have been gone into deeply and are the result of agreement between contrasting views.

The World Council initiates activity which finds a response and meets with support in all the countries of the world, because it expresses clearly defined aims corresponding to the interests of all peoples.

THE WORK OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

The World Council has solid support in every country in the world. It is based, firstly, on wide national movements for Peace in 71 countries. Further, it is in constant contact with organisations and leading figures in 17 other countries.

In the international field, the World Council maintains contact with many organisations and individuals.

But the World Council is not only an organ of liaison and co-ordination between Movements and Organisations which, like itself, are devoted to the defence of Peace. It is also a promoter of activities and enterprises that reach the most varied sections of public opinion. Here is a summary of the most important:

TWO GREAT SIGNATURE CAMPAIGNS

These were launched successively from Stockholm on March 19th, 1950, and from Berlin on February 26th, 1951, in the form of Appeals addressed to all the peoples of the world which every man and woman was called upon to sign individually.

The first Appeal called for absolute prohibition of atomic weapons and all weapons of mass destruction, with the establishment of strict international control to ensure implementation of the ban. It obtained 500 million signatures.

The second Appeal called on the Five Great Powers—the USA, the USSR, Great Britain, the People's Republic of China and France—to meet to conclude a Pact of Peace. It obtained over 600 million signatures.

These appeals were not launched in vain. Though no complete solution has yet been secured to either of these problems, important results have followed that everyone, signatory or not, can appreciate.

Thanks to the pressure and vigilance of public opinion, the atom bomb could not be used during the Korean war, although the threat to use it was made. Preliminary discussions between the USA and the USSR on the atomic question are taking place now. After a five years' interval the Foreign Ministers of the Four Great Powers have met at the Berlin Conference. They are about to meet again in Geneva, this time with the participation of the People's Republic of China.

A GREAT WORLD-WIDE GATHERING: THE CONGRESS OF PEOPLES FOR PEACE

The World Council convened a Congress of Peoples for Peace which took place in Vienna, December 12th to 19th, 1952.

Delegates from 85 countries came to this Congress. They included not only members of the Peace Movement, but also individuals and representatives of organisations whose activity for Peace had been pursued along different paths though with the same objective. After thorough discussion, the Congress of Peoples declared its support for a meeting and agreement between the Five Great Powers.

First and foremost, the Congress of Peoples demanded a cease-fire in Korea. Having heard the evidence given by an International Scientific Commission which had returned from Korea and China, it condemned the use of bacteriological weapons in the Korean war, already denounced by the World Council.

The wave of feeling aroused by the decisions of the Congress of Peoples contributed powerfully to that new victory of the forces of Peace which raised such hopes: the conclusion eight months later of an armistice in Korea.

REGULAR WORK FOR PEACE

In every field and in a great variety of ways, the World Council of Peace has worked tirelessly for the cause of Peace and friendship among the peoples.

It has submitted proposals to the United Nations and has organised delegations to Parliaments and public approaches to Governments. It has participated in discussions and exchanges of views with various pacifist and religious bodies. It has always declared itself ready to meet the representatives of any and every force desirous of working toward achievement of a real relaxation of tension. It has given its support to great conferences, both international and regional. It has done much to promote better understanding between the peoples and the development of economic and cultural relations.

SIMPLE IDEAS HAVE BECOME A GREAT FORCE

Ever since its formation, the World Council has opposed the rearmament of Germany as an attempt to create a new centre of war in Europe. It has therefore called for the peaceful solution of the German problem. Today a powerful European movement stands in the way of ratification and implementation of the Bonn and Paris agreements which prepare the ground for the revival of German militarism under cover of the so-called 'European Defence Community.'

The World Council has likewise insisted that a solution be found for the problems of the Far East. Today a movement is developing in all countries, most notably in Asia, for a final solution of the Korean problem and an immediate end to the war in Indo-China.

The World Council has always opposed foreign interference which endangers the national sovereignty of peoples. Today a movement of opinion embracing all sections of the population is developing in the countries of Latin America, the Middle East, and South East Asia, against the establishment of foreign bases on their territory and the implementation of pacts threatening their independence.

The World Council has called for restoration of normal economic and cultural relations between all countries of the world. Today, despite continuing obstacles, an irresistible current is developing in favour of exchanges in all fields. Important trade agreements are being concluded; cultural relations are being renewed in the sciences, the arts and sport.

The World Council has called for the simultaneous and controlled reduction of all arms; it has put forward quite precise proposals on this question, in particular at its session of November 1951, in Vienna.

Whole populations now perceive the connection between the unbearable burdens of military expenditure and their increasingly arduous living conditions. Men and women of all social classes now see in the arms race the deep-lying cause of their poverty and hardships.

The Governments of States whose national economies are dominated by crushing war budgets have to take into account this realisation on the part of the peoples and the demands they are putting forward. They are now having to agree to discussion at the United Nations and at official conferences directed toward a general agreement on reduction of armaments.

Finally, the World Council has never ceased to insist that the People's Republic of China must take its rightful place in the United Nations. Today, this demand, like all the other points of policy, is no longer urged by the Peace Movement alone. It is now being publicly supported by great organisations and parties, official spokesmen and Governments.

Such are the problems which brought the World Council of Peace into existence. They were the subject of the "Address to the United Nations," a real Charter of Peace, drawn up by the Second World Peace Congress.

Faithful to its charge, the World Council of Peace has constantly striven to interest the peoples in the peaceful solution of the great issues which divide the world.

The great attention being devoted to these problems today by public opinion in all countries proves how correct and how successful these efforts have been.

THE GREAT CAMPAIGN TODAY FOR THE RELAXATION OF INTERNATIONAL TENSION

This campaign, started in July 1953, to make the spirit of negotiation prevail over any resort to force, continues today with the object of making the negotiations embarked upon result in agreement, and of removing the obstacles that stand in the way of a real lessening of tension.

The need for this is recognised today by a wide variety of groupings which, each after its own fashion work for the relaxation of tension. The Council is seeking every opportunity to assist closer contact and understanding between these different forces.

PEACE IS ALSO YOUR CONCERN

Strong in the growing trust that the peoples place in it, the World Council of Peace is going boldly forward.

On this, the Fifth Anniversary of the foundation of the World Peace Movement, it can look back with pride on the road it has traversed.

But though, so far, the forces of Peace, of which it is the highest expression, have succeeded in preventing the unleashing of a new world war, they have not been able to dispel the threat of war that hangs over mankind.

However, progress has been made, results achieved, which constitute the first signs of a possible lessening of tension. This possibility may become tomorrow's reality if all, whoever they may be, from wherever they may come, who desire such a relief of tension, combine their efforts to bring down the balance on the side of Peace.

This is the task to which the World Council of Peace calls you, that children may sleep in peace, that the happiness of mankind may be assured.

MEETING OF THE BUREAU OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

APPEAL
STATEMENT

VIENNA, MARCH 28th-30th, 1954

APPEAL TO THE PEOPLES OF EUROPE

The Berlin Conference proved that the determination to force through the "European Defence Community" is the principal obstacle to a peaceful solution of European problems.

EDC means a Europe doomed to stay divided into two hostile camps, and an intensification of the arms race.

EDC means the revival once again of German militarism in the heart of Europe.

EDC means the threat of death for every inhabitant of Europe, the threat of destruction for every home.

The people of Europe, who experienced in their own persons the awful sufferings of the two world wars which began in Europe, must realise their common responsibility for the preservation of Peace in that part of the world in which they live.

It is not true that the only road open to the peoples of Europe is that of division and war. Another road is open to them—the organisation of collective security among all the States of Europe without any one country predominating, and with full respect for national independence and the national characteristics of each country, thus facilitating a general reduction of armaments.

In spite of their different political and social systems all the States of Europe have common interests—the preservation of Peace for each one of them and the expansion of their economic and cultural co-operation.

Today. the duty of every man and woman in Europe is clear—to stop EDC, prevent war and build a peaceful Europe.

Vienna, March 30th, 1954

RESOLUTION

After a long period of cold war, public opinion has brought about the resumption of negotiations between the Governments. The peoples want these negotiations to succeed; public opinion can make them succeed!

The Four Power Conference in Berlin was a success for the peoples' will for Peace. It showed that negotiation is possible. The problem of the reduction of armaments has been raised once more. It was possible to reach agreement on the holding of a Conference in Geneva on Far Eastern questions, with participation of the Five Great Powers and other interested States.

Conditions have thus been created for finding acceptable solutions to the differences that divide the world.

From now on, public opinion can clearly see that insistence on the rearmament of Western Germany as first priority is an obstacle and a serious threat to Peace. The alternative is plain: either EDC will be realised, Europe remain cut in two, the two halves of Europe stay ranged against each other and war threaten to break out, or all the European States will come together, none seeking to dominate another, to guarantee their mutual security and safeguard Peace in the whole of Europe.

In this situation, the explosion of the H-bomb at Bikini, the threats of atomic war bandied about by certain statesmen, the intensification of the war in Viet-Nam, the pressure exercised on the countries of Latin America and the Middle East, are designed to intimidate the people. The remilitarisation of Japan, the recent establishment of US bases in Spain, the plans for military pacts with Pakistan injurious to the national sovereignty of the latter and the security of India, are designed to face the peoples with accomplished facts.

Public opinion will not allow the results of the negotiations they have demanded to be compromised by actions of this nature.

It can cause EDC to be rejected in France and Italy, and thus secure resumption of the Berlin conversations until the German problem is settled peacefully. It can insist upon and secure the banning of atomic weapons. It can insist upon and secure respect for national independence and the resumption among all countries of the economic and cultural exchanges necessary to their prosperity. It can influence decisively the course of the Geneva Conference.

For the first time, there is an opportunity for the Big Five, meeting in discussion with other interested States, to reach an agreement on general security in the Far East. Such security can come about as a result of the normalisation of relations among all the countries of Asia, their independence recognised, their security guaranteed. Korea must be reunited peacefully and must freely decide its own destiny after the withdrawal of foreign troops. An immediate cease-fire in Indo-China would make possible Peace negotiations between France and the Democratic Republic of Vietnam.

The Geneva Conference can and must constitute an important stage on the road to relaxation of international tension and disarmament.

In these circumstances, the Bureau of the World Council of Peace considers it necessary to summon an Extraordinary Session of the World Council of Peace at the end of May. This Session will take place in Berlin.

Vienna, March 30th, 1954

STATEMENT

The explosion of the H-bomb at Bikini, its fearful effects on human beings, the evidence that the extent of these effects cannot be controlled and the threats to use it have aroused the indignation of the conscience of mankind.

The demand for the prohibition of atomic weapons called for by the Stockholm Appeal, which was supported by hundreds of millions of men and women, has today become the demand of all the peoples.

It was not to wipe man from the face of the earth, nor to shatter in an instant the fruits of his thousands of years of creative labour that these tremendous forces were discovered by science, but rather to find means to relieve his present miseries and help him to achieve a fuller life.

The abolition of atomic warfare is not only necessary but possible. It can be achieved by an international agreement for the prohibition of all forms of radioactive weapons and poisons. A system of international inspection and control can and must be set up.

The peoples must, without delay, demand of the Governments the conclusion of an agreement banning all weapons of mass destruction.

SESSION
OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

RECOMMENDATIONS

Stockholm, 18th–23rd November 1954

RECOMMENDATIONS ON PROBLEMS OF ORGANISATION OF THE WORLD PEACE MOVEMENT

The World Council of Peace draws attention to the essential contribution which the Movement made to the people's recent victories for Peace.

The ideas and campaigns of the World Peace Movement have had far-reaching effects. They are the chief source of the immense current of opinion which has developed throughout the world to demand the peaceful solution of international disputes. The increasing support of new forces is bringing about a marked growth in the influence and authority of the Movement.

The importance of the results obtained and the number of tasks with which the international situation presents us face the whole Movement with the duty of ceaselessly improving its activities and methods of work.

In many countries national movements have demonstrated their ability to initiate actions bringing in all sections of the population and building the widest possible unity of the Peace forces. In this way they have acquired an authority and influence which, because they correspond to a national desire for Peace, are reflected in the attitude and statements of important political and popular forces and personalities representing wide sections of public opinion in their country.

This general strengthening of the Movement must not distract attention from certain organisational problems which still exist.

— The Movement has not always developed its organisation in proportion to the influence which its ideas and activities have acquired.

— In some countries, the action undertaken on the international level has not been adapted to the particular situation of the country concerned, and this has led to the formulation of abstract objectives and to reduced activity.

— In other cases the Movement, with the idea of broadening the Peace front, is abandoning its own programme of action, or is thinking only in terms of seeking the support of well-known people or organisations, to the detriment of the necessary work among ordinary people.

— Certain National Committees, by their principles of organisation, their methods of work and the formulation of their arguments, tend to ally themselves with political organisations and put out slogans too narrow to gain the attention of all sections of the population, irrespective of social origin or political or philosophical convictions.

The solution of these organisational problems must be sought for in the application of the decisions adopted by the World Council in the course of its meetings and Congresses, and in respect for the principles which the Movement has formulated for itself in the course of five years' experience.

The Peace Movement is one which is able to achieve or assist the widest unity of the forces of Peace. It constantly strives to bring together, without distinction or limitation, nationally and internationally, all those who accept the principle of peaceful coexistence and the settlement of international disputes by negotiation. Through free discussion it arrives at aims and forms of activity acceptable to all.

The Peace Movement does not pretend to have the monopoly of the struggle for Peace. It asks all individuals and organisations representing forces of Peace to cooperate with it for the success of the actions which it advocates. The breadth of its aims and its ability to promote activities which find a response in every country make it a pole of attraction for those who wish to help in the preservation of Peace. The existence and the growth of the Peace Movement are thus essential conditions for the development of the activity and unity of the forces of Peace. But the Peace Movement also declares its readiness to support all actions, from whatever source, which bring together efforts made in the direction of a lessening of international tension.

The Peace Movement is characterised by action. In every country its existence and its strength depend on constantly renewed activities, associating all people of goodwill in the achievement of precise and practical objectives based both on the requirements of the international situation and on national interests.

For the development of its activities, the movement depends on the existence of Peace Committees organised both in places where people live and where they work. These Committees, with their constant appeal to all sections of public opinion, are the guarantee of the widest unity and the greatest effectiveness of the actions undertaken.

The World Council proposes that each National Committee should be guided by the following recommendations:

— On all occasions to make clear the Movement's attitude to national and international events which have a bearing on the relaxation of international tension, either in the name of the National Committee or by means of statements made by its most prominent individuals. By this means it is possible to bring out the independent character of the Movement. In this connection, the systematic condemnation of every action raising an obstacle in the way of relaxation of international tension, such, for example, as a call to open hostilities against a particular country, refusal to negotiate or acts of discrimination detrimental to the development of economic and cultural relations with all countries, should be its constant concern.

— To use the rich experience of joint actions, which have been carried through in cooperation with various well-known people and organisations, in order to strengthen and extend this cooperation, not simply with particular individuals or representatives of organisations, but also with the sections of people they represent. This aim can be achieved by initiating or supporting moves which can be jointly developed on the national and international levels.

— To safeguard the wide and democratic nature of the Movement: creation and reconstruction of Committees representative of ever-widening sections of opinion; joint formulation of objectives and forms of action; responsibility of all Committee members for the working out and implementation of decisions; election of Committees to organise Assemblies or Congresses.

— To seek the best way of developing permanent activity by the regional and local Peace Committees, bearing in mind the links between the different activities: collection of signatures, petitions or referendums leading to a campaign of deputations to all elected persons; local meetings and factory meetings preparing for larger meetings; local and regional rallies leading to a National Conference, days, weeks, and months of action etc... Experience has shown the constant need for each Committee to find the method of work which best corresponds to the opportunities of joint action existing in each country, to seek and set out arguments and facts which give a more practical form to the objectives of the struggle for Peace laid down by the World Council by linking them directly with the interests of the population.

— To consider as a permanent task of each Committee to find methods based on political activities for raising the funds needed for their development, the nature of the Movement making it impossible to lay down a membership fee for those taking part in the struggle for Peace.

— To maintain closer contact with the Secretariat of the World Council and with the other National Movements in order to bring about greater cooperation and better coordination of activities on a world scale. These contacts can be made by means of the delegates to the Council, by means of the Secretariat's information material, by visits and exchanges of delegations, and by exchanges of publications, films and documents. The Secretariat of the Council, as a permanent body, can assist this necessary cooperation.

On this basis, the strengthening of the organisation of the Movement and the solution of organisational problems which may arise, are the conditions for a better development of activities and a useful contribution to the widest mustering of the forces of Peace.

Stockholm, November 23, 1954

RECOMMENDATIONS ON THE CULTURAL ACTIVITIES OF THE WORLD PEACE MOVEMENT

Cultural relations constitute one of the most vital factors in the progress of human civilisation: they enable the nations to exchange of their best and mutually to enrich their national cultures.

The development of these relations needs a favourable atmosphere, an atmosphere of Peace. At the same time these exchanges influence the international situation and make easier better mutual understanding and the establishment of peaceful co-existence between all countries whatever their social system.

Intellectuals are particularly interested in the strengthening of cultural relations, for the exchange of the experience, knowledge and discoveries which they have in their respective fields is a fundamental necessity for their work. They have also a special responsibility to devote their talents to the service of the peoples in their struggle for Peace and security.

Many writers, artists, scientists and religious figures have already raised their voices strongly in recent years against war hysteria, racial hatred and incitement to war and have declared for peaceful co-operation. But the peoples, who see the intellectuals as among their best informed representatives, expect a still greater and more active contribution from them, wanting other circles to come in and strengthen the joint activities for a close cultural co-operation.

The World Peace Movement has the task of inspiring and supporting these efforts by the intellectuals and the ordinary people. It has already played an important part in the activities which have made the recent extension of cultural relations possible. Ever since it was founded the World Peace Movement has put forward clear and practical proposals to combat war propaganda, to defend and foster national cultures and to extend cultural relations.

In the struggle for the lessening of international tension and the end of the cold war, for real negotiations instead of the use of force, as the basis of mutual security, the peoples have considered it essential to destroy the barriers artificially erected between them. In recent years significant successes have been gained in this struggle.

The World Peace Movement welcomes the increased cultural co-operation between peoples living in different social and political systems, which has taken the form of, for example, tours abroad by large theatrical companies, by major orchestras and troupes of dancers; growing exchanges of teams of sportsmen, of films, of books in translation, of exhibitions of works of art and of children's art; the increased representation of the different countries at international scientific and professional conferences; the holding of specialists' meetings in the different fields of culture to study their special problems in connection with the question of Peace.

In many countries, the Peace Movement has helped and encouraged actions for the defence or the development of national culture against attempts to adulterate it by introducing alien brands of culture such as those films, strip cartoons and various publications which seek to justify violence, war and racial hatred. Certain of these actions are developing into a real expression of national opinion and are having positive results. At the same time there has been increased interest in the development of different forms of culture such as popular and folk art.

In spite of all these positive developments, however, there are still great obstacles in the way of true cultural co-operation. Many efforts are being made to limit exchanges to one group of countries or to thwart them, for example by using them to support racial domination or to put across propaganda for hatred and war to the peoples, or to falsify history and permeate textbooks and schools with poisonous ideas.

At the same time in a number of countries the Peace Movement has not understood clearly enough that all these questions form an integral part of the struggle for Peace. There has been a tendency in some countries to regard them as being the concern of specialists and merely to leave such questions to persons and organisations outside the ambit of the Peace Movement.

The whole work of the Peace Movement is a struggle for good relations and mutual understanding between the nations, for the defence and development of civilisation. This struggle can only be successful if the Movement in every country concerns itself with these vital interests of the people.

In the interests of the rapid development of cultural relations the World Council of Peace recommends to the National Peace Movements:

— to promote action on the widest possible scale and among all sections of the people against every bar to increased exchanges, such as refusals to grant visas, to allow international conferences and meetings to be held, to permit the distribution of cultural publications, etc.

— to promote and develop further widespread action against propaganda for violence, war and racial hatred, open or concealed, direct or indirect, carried on by newspapers, books, broadcasts, films, comics and other means of expression.

— to develop the widest possible activity against inhuman and invidious uses of science and the use of scientific research for ends almost wholly destructive.

— to promote and to support every form of cultural exchange which serves the cause of peaceful co-existence and co-operation.

— to support all moves for the defence and the development of national culture and for improved contact and exchange in the fields of popular art, folk-art and sport.

— to support in every way the holding of gatherings and meetings of writers, film workers, musicians, painters, teachers and scientists to discuss their particular problems in relation to the cause of Peace.

— to promote and support actions among all sections of the people, and especially among teachers, to defend the education of children against the effects of war policies, against the introduction into the schools of unhealthy ideas and feelings, ideas rooted in brutality, force and racial hatred and to foster a spirit of understanding and friendship for other peoples.

Experience has shown that an important contribution to the aims given above has been made by two special activities proposed by the World Council of Peace: the celebration of great cultural anniversaries and the International Peace Prizes.

During the past three years the celebration of the great anniversaries proposed by the Council has helped to deepen the peoples' respect for the cultural achievements of other nations and to draw together in defence of their common heritage. These celebrations have taken place on a wide scale and in all circles.

The World Council of Peace stresses the great importance of these celebrations. They make possible very varied activities both among writers, artists, scientists and professional people and among the population in general. The Council recommends to the National Movements to promote the celebration of the great anniversaries in a spirit of international brotherhood, on a greater scale and in the most varied ways, in particular encouraging academic, scientific, professional and popular organisations to take part.

The International Peace Prizes founded by the World Council have enabled the peoples to honour writers, artists and men of science for works of great human value which serve the cause of Peace.

The World Council recommends the National Movements to make the International Peace Prizes known to the people, to organise ceremonies of tribute of the prizewinners and their works, and to explain the importance and the meaning of these Prizes, which constitute a living link between the peoples and those who are the trusted voices of their desire for Peace.

The peoples have expressed more and more clearly their wish to know one another, to exchange all that is most valued in their culture and to create an atmosphere of mutual understanding which will be favourable to peaceful co-operation. The World Council of Peace calls once more on all friends of Peace to exert their efforts to achieve this aim. The possibilities are immense. Let us then work unstintingly to make them reality.

A Great Danger Threatens the Peoples

The NATO Council has decided to use atomic weapons

'The Council considered a report by the Military Committee on the most effective pattern of N.A.T.O. military defensive strength over the next few years, taking into account modern developments in weapons and techniques. It approved this report as a basis for defense planning and preparations by the N.A.T.O. military authorities.'

Civil and Military Leaders Confirm their Intention to Use Atomic Weapons

Field-Marshal Lord Montgomery

'I want to make it absolutely clear that we at S.H.A.P.E. are basing all our operational planning on using atomic and thermonuclear weapons in our defence. It is no longer a question of "They may possibly be used." It is very definitely "they will be used — if we are attacked."'

(From a speech to the Royal United Services Institution, quoted in the Manchester Guardian, October 22, 1954)

General J. D. Stevenson,
Commander of the 49th U.S. Air Division in Great Britain.

'Each aircraft to be seen here (Bentwaters aerodrome near Woodbridge, Ed.) today can carry a greater destructive punch to any one target than all the aircraft which were in these islands in the Second World War loaded with high explosives.

'Two and half years ago the 49th Air Division was deployed to the United Kingdom for the purpose of giving an atomic punch in support of N.A.T.O. forces.'

(The Times, December 11, 1954)

The N.A.T.O. Military Committee

'The annual review presented by N.A.T.O.'s military experts said they would swing into plans next year for the defense of the West with nuclear weapons.'

(New York Times, December 18, 1954)

U.S. Secretary of State, John Foster Dulles, at a press conference, December 21, 1954.

'Tactical weapons such as atomic cannon are fast becoming conventional, Mr. Dulles said, and presumably would be used in the event of war. He said the North Atlantic Council had authorized the military commanders to draw up their plans and preparations on the assumption that nuclear weapons would be used.' (The New York Times, December 22, 1954)

Mr. Henri Spaak, Belgian Foreign Minister

'This decision (to use atomic weapons, Ed.) answers the wishes of the military authorities completely, authorising them to get ready for an atomic war.'

(At a press conference after the session of the N.A.T.O. Council)

U.S. News and World Report
(December 24, 1954) commenting on the N.A.T.O. Council decision:

'Atomic and thermonuclear weapons will be used in a future war. The American armed forces will surrender no freedom of action in the use of these weapons from bases in this country or from aircraft carriers.

'The Allies will be consulted before atomic weapons are used, provided time permits. The Allies, however, will not be given a veto over new weapon use. There is to be no temporising, no shadowland of uncertainty about who can do what in time of emergency.'

According to the London and Paris agreements, the new Wehrmacht would have atomic and nuclear weapons.

'As nuclear weapons become more readily available the day approaches when they will be necessary and normal for all N.A.T.O. forces... The decision to plan on this basis seems, therefore, to bring nearer a decision to distribute such weapons to N.A.T.O. countries which do not at present possess them — for instance to Germany once she has become a N.A.T.O. member...' (The Times, December 18, 1954)

The Consequences of an Atomic War

The explosion of the first atomic bomb over Hiroshima on August 6, 1945, killed more than 200,000 people and its terrifying effects on human life continue.

In Nagasaki, over which another bomb was dropped, recent statistics show that of the 30,150 babies born in the city during the last nine years, 4,282 are abnormal—a proportion of one in seven.

Even simple experiments, such as those carried out by the United States at Bikini on March 1, 1954, caused the death of a Japanese fisherman, Kuboyama, while 23 other fishermen were taken seriously ill. Further results were the radioactive poisoning of fish intended for food and a great deal of other material damage which constituted a real catastrophe for Japan.

The U.S. News and World Report of December 24, 1954, gave the following details:

'Today, nearly 10 months after the H bomb explosion, responsible Japanese doctors report these things:

- All of the fishermen who survived now are sterile.
- The one who died after seven months succumbed to damages by radioactivity, primarily to the liver. Of the badly injured, all have liver ailments now.
- Future delayed-action ailments are excepted to appear, caused by radioactive substances now lodged in the bodies of the survivors.
- Present condition of survivors seems to vary for unaccountable reasons. None has regained his normal health.
- Damage by radioactivity apparently has centered in the generative organs, as well as the liver. Sterility, it now develops, became more and more complete.'

'Palpably Suicidal'

From an article by the Alsop brothers

'One five-megaton Super-SUPER will not only kill the unsheltered human and animal population in a area of 6,000 square miles; it will also immobilize the sheltered survivors for more than two days. Two such bombs will put an area of 12,000 square miles out of action; and 100 Super-SUPERS could destroy most of our major cities and temporarily paralyze a large part of the productive area of the United States. Such are the toys the nations are now playing with, in the game of the cold war.'

(New York Herald Tribune, September 28, 1954)

Capt. B. H. Liddell Hart, military commentator and military editor of the Encyclopedia Britannica

'In the case of this country, (Great Britain, Ed.), where the vital targets are closely grouped, it has been estimated that as few as five thermonuclear bombs might suffice, and that 10 would almost certainly suffice to blot out all its main centres of industry — comprising half the population. Still fewer would suffice to paralyse the vital centres of France, Belgium and Holland. Moreover, paralysis and collapse can be produced by moral effect even where destruction does not take place...

'The supreme fact of the hydrogen bomb era is that war has become palpably suicidal.'

(Excerpts from a letter printed in The Times, January 3, 1955)

Eminent Scientists Warn Public Opinion

Albert Einstein

'We cannot stop warning continuously and repeatedly; we cannot relax our efforts to make the nations of the world and above all their governments realise the unspeakable disaster they are certain to provoke if they do not change their attitude to each other and their way of looking at the future.'

(L'Express, Paris, November 27, 1954)

Frederic Joliot-Curie

'As for hydrogen bombs, whose power can be increased to a diabolical extent, it can even be foreseen that their use would risk making all life on our world impossible.

'When one talks about world war today, that is what is implied. How then is it possible to remain indifferent in the face of such dangers? The simple instinct of self-preservation must make all mankind unite now to demand more than ever the prohibition of these fearful weapons.'

(Speech in Paris, October 4, 1954)

J. Robert Oppenheimer

'You can certainly destroy enough of humanity so that only the greatest act of faith can persuade you that what is left will be human.'

(New York Herald Tribune, January 6, 1955)

Charles Noel Martin

(in a report presented to the French Academy of Sciences)

'Since nuclear bombs were first exploded ten years ago, the earth has been used as a laboratory and everything living, man included, as guinea pigs. The consequences will be spread out over years, even generations.'

(L'Express, Paris, November 27, 1954)

E. H. S. Burhop

'Thermonuclear weapons, used "tactically" on the Elbe, may produce death and injury due to radioactive "fall-out" on Oslo, Amsterdam, Paris and London. Over vast areas of Europe the ground will become so contaminated that life will be insupportable and over a very much wider area the grain and vegetable crops and the fish of the sea will be in danger of radioactive contamination. The "tactical" use of nuclear weapons as planned by the Western powers in the event of war will mean death, immediate or delayed, to countless millions of European civilians.'

(In a specially written article on the effects of the N.A.T.O. Council's decision)

Public Outcry against Preparations for Atomic War

The Dean of Canterbury, Dr. Hewlett Johnson

'Has the Christian idea of God sunk so far behind the pre-Christian idea, that Christians are not prepared to utter protest at the command of the Atlantic Pact Ministers last Friday to the Western Powers' Generals: "Go ahead with your plans for the hydrogen bomb war with all available atomic and nuclear weapons."'

(Sermon in Canterbury Cathedral, December 19, 1954)

22 Million Signatures against the Atomic Bomb in Japan

The Japanese National Council against A and H bombs announced in December 1954 that, to date, 22 million Japanese had signed the petition demanding the banning of atomic weapons. This petition has been presented to the government.

(From the press)

The Coventry-Stalingrad Joint Appeal, sent to U.N.O. in November 1954:

'We consider that it is our moral duty and right to call on the United Nations Organisation to take necessary measures to secure the banning of atom and hydrogen weapons, to prohibit their production and secure their complete removal from the armaments of states...

'We are firmly convinced that the outlawing of atom and hydrogen weapons would contribute greatly to the peace of the world and result in the immediate release of the tension between the countries.'

Walter Reuther, President of the C.I.O., in an interview:

'I believe that world problems cannot be solved by military means. On the contrary, an atomic war could not lead to victory but only to general destruction.'

(Arbeiter-Zeitung, Vienna, December 19, 1954)

Message sent to the United Nations in 1954 by the doctors of Rosario in Argentina

'Can we who, when we adopted the medical profession, took the oath to preserve life and relieve the sufferings of men, go about our business with a clear mind and tranquilly draw up plans for the future when weapons capable of killing many millions of men and women in a few hours are being prepared and stockpiled?'

Neuer Vorwärts, newspaper of the German Social Democratic Party, in its editorial of December 31, 1954

'The new scientific knowledge resulting from the splitting of the atom opens two prospects before the human race: either it succeeds in placing atomic energy at the service of peaceful construction, thus creating the possibility of overcoming in a comparatively short space of time, through new and revolutionary methods of production, the poverty and famine from which many peoples of the earth are still suffering; or else atomic energy will remain in the service of the policy of military strength, in which case a future war will end in the destruction of civilisation...'

Pravda, December 16, 1954

'The whole Soviet people have indignantly condemned the sabre-rattling of the American militarists with their atomic weapons, and demand a ban on them.'

The Peoples' Action Must Stop Atomic War

'Today, when a great number of atomic weapons have been produced and when even more powerful weapons have been perfected and tested — with what tragic results — an attempt is being made to override the censure of public opinion and to lead it, by stages, to accept the possible use of tactical atomic weapons, then strategic atom bombs, and finally thermonuclear bombs. It would appear that henceforth discussion should only bear on how nuclear weapons should be used, whereas the first and only problem is the very principle of the use of these weapons.

'In short, these recent decisions of the Atlantic Council are the final touch to the preparations for unleashing atomic war.

'Once nuclear war began, it would be waged with the full range of existing weapons. Think of the deserts that are Hiroshima and Nagasaki. Think of the unfortunate victims in the Pacific who were hundreds of miles away from the explosion on March 1, 1954. Tell yourself that nowhere will you be safe and that effective civil defence is an illusion. Understand that the nuclear bombing of any target in the world will sow immediate or delayed death even in places very far away.

'The problem that is raised is not that of the level — General Staff, Minister, or meeting of Ministers, with or without veto, — at which atomic war will be decided on. The problem is: will mankind accept the ruins and destruction, the death of hundreds of millions of living beings, wretchedness for the survivors and the probable birth of freaks, and even the possible annihilation of all life on our planet?'

From a statement by the President of the World Council of Peace, Frédéric Joliot-Curie, January 13, 1955

Appeal against the Preparations for Atomic War

Today, certain governments are preparing to let loose atomic war.

They are trying to make the peoples accept it as inevitable.

The use of atomic weapons would result in a war of extermination.

We declare that any government that lets loose atomic war will forfeit the trust of its people and find itself condemned by every people of the world.

Now and in the future, we shall oppose those who organise atomic war.

We demand the destruction of all stocks of atomic weapons wherever they may be and the immediate stopping of their manufacture.

APPEAL

FOR THE CALLING OF A WORLD ASSEMBLY OF REPRESENTATIVES OF ALL FORCES AND TENDENCIES THAT MAKE FOR PEACE

Helsinki, May 22—29

In a world in which there are still great chances of Peace, new dangers appear which may destroy them all.

Only a powerful movement of the peoples can prevent the division of the world into opposing blocs, prevent the rebirth of the armies that have been the source of so much misery and mourning, and free mankind from the crushing cost of arms budgets. Only such a powerful movement can ensure the cooperation of all nations for their welfare, their independence and the security of all.

The World Council of Peace calls to all those whose activities make for Peace, to every man and woman who longs to live free from fear, mistrust, and hate for other peoples. It calls on them to get together before it is too late.

It resolves that a great World Assembly shall be held, including representatives of all the forces and tendencies that make for Peace, to meet in the second half of May 1955.

DEMOCRATIC

GERMAN REPORT

VOL. III NO. 7 APRIL 2nd 1954 Price: 15 Pf., 5 c., 3 d

GERMAN DEMOCRATIC REPUBLIC BECOMES SOVEREIGN STATE

All Soviet supervision of the internal and external affairs of the German Democratic Republic has ceased, it was officially announced in Moscow on March 25th.

Soviet occupation troops will remain temporarily in East Germany to guarantee security as laid down by four power agreement; the functions of the Soviet High Commissioner in Germany will be limited to security questions and liaison with the western allied authorities on all-German questions arising from four power agreements.

The Soviet Government declaration specifically laid down that in future the German Democratic Republic would be at liberty to make its own decisions on both internal and external affairs, including relations with West Germany.

(Full text of Soviet announcement on page 50)

"We Want Friendship with All Nations" — East German Government

Greeting the Soviet declaration, the Government of the German Democratic Republic stated:

"The German Democratic Republic is now a sovereign state, carrying out a policy of democracy, peace and European security in accordance with the Four Power agreements.

"West Germany, on the other hand, has been reduced to a dependent and degrading status as a result of the policy of the three western powers and the Adenauer government. West Germany is bound by the Occupation Statute of the three western powers, and runs the danger of being enslaved for 50 years by the Bonn and Paris war treaties.

"The Government of the German Democratic Republic is convinced that such an unworthy state of affairs in West Germany cannot be of long duration, since it stands in contradiction to the national interests of the German people and the needs of European security...

"The Government of the German Democratic Republic is, as previously, ready at all times to conduct negotiations with the representatives of West Germany aimed at reaching an understanding on all questions in dispute in such a way that peace is secured and an independent, united, democratic and peace-loving Germany is established.

"The Government of the German Democratic Republic declares its readiness to develop and maintain good friendly relations with all nations on the basis of mutual respect and equality of rights."

EAST GERMAN ELECTIONS IN AUTUMN

The East German Government will propose the holding of general elections in East Germany this autumn, Deputy Prime Minister Walter Ulbricht told the 4th Party Congress of the Socialist Unity Party, meeting in Berlin on March 30th.

The next number of GERMAN REPORT, dated April 16th, will bring full reports of the discussions and decisions of this congress.

G.D.R. BECOMES SOVEREIGN STATE

Full Text of Soviet Declaration

On March 25th 1954 the Government of the USSR published the following declaration on relations between the Soviet Union and the German Democratic Republic:

The Government of the Soviet Union pursues undeviatingly the course of settling the German problem in accordance with the interests of consolidating peace and of securing the national reunification of Germany on a democratic basis.

These aims shall be served by practical measures to bring East and West Germany together, to hold free all-German elections, and to conclude a peace treaty with Germany.

Despite the efforts of the Soviet Union, no steps were taken, at the recent Berlin Conference of the foreign ministers of the four powers, to restore the national unity of Germany and to conclude a peace treaty.

In view of this state of affairs, and as a result of negotiations between the Soviet Government and the Government of the German Democratic Republic, the Government of the USSR believes it is necessary to take now, before the unification of Germany and the conclusion of a peace treaty, further steps in the interest of the German people. These steps are:

1. The Soviet Union assumes the same relations with the German Democratic Republic as with other sovereign states.

2. The German Democratic Republic will be at liberty to make its own decisions on internal and external affairs, including the question of relations with West Germany.

2. The Soviet Union will retain in the German Democratic Republic the functions connected with the guaranteeing of security arising from obligations resting upon the USSR under four power agreement.

The Soviet Government has taken note of the declaration made by the Government of the German Democratic Republic that it will fulfil the obligations arising for the German Democratic Republic from the Potsdam Agreement regarding the development of Germany as a democratic and peace-loving state, as well as the obligations connected with the temporary presence of Soviet troops in the territory of the German Democratic Republic.

3. The supervision of the activity of the state organs of the German Democratic Republic, hitherto exercised by the High Commissioner of the USSR in Germany, will cease.

In accordance with this decision, the functions of the High Commissioner of the USSR in Germany will be limited to those questions connected with the guaranteeing of security, as stated above, and with the continuance of the necessary liaison with the representatives of the occupation authorities of the USA, the United Kingdom, and France on questions of all-German character arising from the agreements of the four powers on Germany.

The Government of the USSR believes that the existence of the "Occupation Statute" laid down for West Germany by the USA, the United Kingdom and France, is not only irreconcilable with democratic principles and the national rights of the German people, but also, under the present circumstances one of the main obstacles to the national reunification of Germany, since it makes more difficult a rapprochement between East and West Germany.

McCARTHY IN BAVARIA

The American military authorities in West Germany have begun to insist on the sacking of Communists, left-wing Social Democrats and active trade unionists from factories doing contract work for the US Army.

First big wave of sackings has taken place in the BMW Motor Works in Munich, used as a repair shop for US Army vehicles. In February questionnaires were distributed to the 4600 workers of the factory, demanding detailed information on their families, relations, and political and social affiliations.

Sample questions included:

"Give the full names, addresses and places of employment of your parents, foster-parents, wife, parents-in-law, former wives, brothers, sisters and children."

"Give the names of all political groups, parties, associations, clubs, organisations, trade unions etc., in which you are at present organised, or of which you have ever been a member."

"Give the names of three guarantors; if possible these should be businessmen, but a doctor, lawyer or shopkeeper will also suffice."

First result of this McCarthyite inquisition was that on March 4th, 33 workers, all of them active trade union members, were dismissed without notice, receiving curt notifications stating: "Your presence on factory territory after 5 p. m. today will not be tolerated".

Further dismissals since then have brought the total of McCarthy victims from this factory alone to 42. Only left-wing workers have been sacked: a number of former active nazis working in the plant have all kept their jobs.

East German Trade Unions Call for Joint Talks

The trade union movements of both halves of Germany should hold joint discussions on ways and means of preventing the revival of militarism in West Germany, the Free German Trade Union Federation of the German Democratic Republic proposed on March 19th.

The East German Trade Union Federation proposed to the West German Trade Unions that representatives of both groups should meet to discuss:

1. Joint action to achieve a united Germany and a peace treaty.

2. Joint action against remilitarisation and militarist organisations in West Germany.

3. A joint defence of trade union rights.

4. Measures to democratise the economy in West Germany.

5. Increased interzonal trade as a measure against West German unemployment.

6. Cooperation between the eastern and western unions, exchange of delegations, and allied subjects.

West Germans Fight War Plans

Town Councils Resist

Dortmund: The City Council of Dortmund, British Zone, unanimously protested against the construction of demolition chambers in the bridges of the city. Lord Mayor Keuning, Social Democrat, declared: "Such preparations remind us of the work of Corporal Hitler, who plunged the German people into catastrophe".

Castrop-Rauxel: The Social Democratic and Communist town councillors united to pass a resolution against all war preparations in the locality. The resolution called on all inhabitants to report immediately to the council all military preparations for demolitions, so that counter action could be taken.

Lemgo: "The preparation of demolition chambers in bridges and viaducts is a criminal act, and must cease immediately" a resolution passed unanimously by the rural council of Lemgo stated.

Gevelsberg: The town authorities of Gevelsberg have forbidden engineers from the Essen constructional firm of Strabach to enter the town. The constructional firm had been given a contract by the provincial government of North Rhine Westphalia to prepare demolition chambers at various points in Gevelsberg.

Oerlingshausen: Mayor Kramer of Oerlingshausen announced that if engineers began to construct demolition chambers at any place in the town confines he would sound the fire siren three times. Fire brigade and population would then run the engineers out of town.

Kettwig: The city authorities of Kettwig refused to obey orders from the provincial government to install demolition chambers in the great Ruhr bridge, totally destroyed by the nazis in 1945, which has just been rebuilt. When building workers from another town appeared at the beginning of March and began work on the demolition chambers, municipal police prevented them from going to work.

COLOGNE SOCIALISTS REJECT WEHRMACHT

By a huge majority the Social Democrats of the Cologne District in West Germany have rejected remilitarisation and the formation of a new Wehrmacht.

At the district congress of the Social Democratic Party, held on March 17th, 162 delegates from a total of 187 voted in favour of a manifesto turning down a new West German Wehrmacht. The manifesto stated in part:

"We reject not only participation in the European Defence Community, but rearmament altogether, since under the present political conditions this would only strengthen the political and state power of the possessing classes, and lay the costs of the rearmament on the shoulders of the working masses.

"The struggle for the reunification of Germany must be marked by the unification and strengthening of the whole German working class movement."

Young Socialists Say "No"

Hamburg young Socialists have rejected conscription to a new West German Wehrmacht. On March 14th the district conference of the "Young Falcons", the Social Democratic youth organisation, unanimously rejected the planned conscription law which "was contrary to the desires of a large part of the German people."

Similar resolutions have been passed by the Young Socialists of Wuerttemberg and Baden, in south west Germany.

"MY PLANS TO ARM GERMANY"

By Theodor Blank, Adenauer's 'Shadow' Defence Minister

"...Of course, former German officers are employed in my office. There is no secret about this. In selecting them I have made sure, in particular, that no one is employed who was a nazi or who has been guilty of any crime whatsoever...

"All the officers intended for senior appointments will be chosen by a personnel committee.

This committee will be composed of respected personalities, both civilians and former soldiers..."

"Star", London, March 16th 1954.

It all sounds extremely innocent, until you know that one of the members of the "personnel committee" is Mayor General Freiherr Smilo von Luettwitz. General von Luettwitz commanded a nazi tank division in the invasion of France, and then in 1944 played a leading part in the destruction of Warsaw. After the war, the Polish Government requested his extradition as a war criminal, but the request was turned down by the U. S. military authorities.

PROFILE

FRIEDA HARTMANN — VILLAGE MAYOR

Old Hans Schwendler, the oldest inhabitant of the little village of Muckern, thirty miles south of Leipzig in East Germany, did not approve of it at all when he heard two years ago that a woman had come from the town to act as mayor of the village.

"Just one of these silly new-fangled ideas" he said.

Today he has changed his mind. "We can thank God for our mayor; I can't remember ever having a better one" he says. And almost everyone else in the village has a similar comment.

Mother of Two

The person who has managed to change the minds of such a large proportion of the 368 inhabitants of the little village of Muckern is a pretty dark haired woman of 38, mother of two children, named Frieda Hartmann.

The changes which she has seen in her life are typical of the changes there have been in the life of millions of her compatriots who today are puting all their energies into building a better Germany.

Frau Hartmann is a village girl by birth, daughter of a tailor with a little shop in a village near Altenburg. When she was a girl, she wanted to be a nurse; her father wanted her to learn tailoring. But there was no money for her to learn either occupation, and she took the only job she could get, as maid in a village inn, working all day and most of the night for a few marks.

War Starts

Marriage meant for her an escape from this slavery, but soon the nazis launched their aggressive war, and her husband was sent away to the front. In 1940 he was on occupation duty in Kamiena near Warsaw, Poland, and she went to visit him.

Things that she saw and heard there, and particularly the way in which the German troops treated the Polish population, made her think. Her husband refused to answer her questions, and told her to keep her mouth shut.

In the train which brought her home, she heard a soldier boasting about a lot of things of which she had previously only heard whispers — concentration camps, tortures, mass shootings, and so on.

She had never bothered her head about politics, but now she began to think, and when the war came to an end she was ready to greet the new way of life which peace promised.

She had to work hard to support her two young children — a boy and a girl. First she worked with the peasants in the fields, and later got a job in the paper mill at Lucka. Here she joined the trade union, attended trade union school, and began really to take part in building the new society.

Her husband had not returned to East Germany after the war, but had gone to West Germany, where he believed he could live better; he wrote to her during this period and suggested that she should join him there with the children. She made a quick visit to see what things were like: then she hurried back to East Germany, shocked by the neo-nazism and revival of militarism in the West, and confident that the German Democratic Republic was the place where she wanted her children to grow up.

Better Worker

She moved on from the paper factory to a job in the electrical department of a big nationally owned factory, always learning to be both a better worker and a better member of society. It was quite natural for her one day to apply to become a member of the Socialist Unity Party, for she had long been convinced that Socialism would provide Germany and the world with a happy and peaceful future.

She learned harder than ever, and soon Frieda Hartmann, who only a few short years ago had been maid in a village inn, found herself in charge of the factory library. In addition she had to organise the concerts and film shows in the factory.

The new responsibilities daunted her slightly, until she looked round and saw that the great majority of people in responsible positions in the German Democratic Republic had been ordinary workers or farmers only a few years previously.

Her work in the library, and as cultural secretary of the factory made her well known in the vicinity, and when there was sudden need for a new mayor for the little village of Muckern, Frieda Hartmann was one of the people to whom the local administration turned.

The old mayor had been a failure; the multiple tasks which rest upon the mayor of even the smallest village under a planned economy had been beyond him; would Frau Hartmann try?

She would.

She brought a breath of fresh air into the village. She did not "rule" like some village mayors try to do, but tried to get everybody to cooperate.

The village school was hopelessly inadequate, but it would be years before sufficient funds were available to build a new one. Frieda Hartmann called a village meeting, and got dozens of volunteers who were ready to help convert into a school the mansion of the Junker who formerly ran the village.

New School

In December 1953, the new school was opened, the finest school for many miles around. And the villagers of Muckern feel it is really their school, for they helped to build it, in 25,000 voluntary hours of work.

And what about her children? Her daughter is one of the proud pupils of the new village school, and she will be going on to high school soon. Her son is out at work already, apprentice in the Borna open-cast mines, and in his last letter he said that he had completed a technical course ahead of schedule, and got a commendation for good work.

Frieda Hartmann is away from her village this month, attending another training course, for she is still learning, learning to do even better work in making a democratic Germany.

3500 West Germans Go East

More than 3500 West Germans moved to East Germany in the first two weeks of March, it was officially announced in Berlin. Jobs are immediately found in East Germany for all persons coming from the west, since there is no unemployment here.

Peter Pfeiffer's Pickled Peppers

The "Sieg Heil" Diplomat

Nazi diplomat Peter Pfeiffer has been appointed West German "observer" to the United Nations in New York. GERMAN REPORT dated March 19th 1954 gave some details of his career, including the text of a telegram he sent to Berlin in November 1942, when he was serving as nazi consul in Algiers. The telegram concluded with the words: "Sieg Heil Führer und Deutschland."

Some further details on the career of this eminently democratic diplomat have since come to light. Here they are:

Herr Pfeiffer joined the German diplomatic service in 1926, and had an undistinguished career in various posts until Ribbentrop promoted him to the rank of Consul General in 1941. Pfeiffer promptly joined the nazi party, receiving membership number 8,128,186.

After sending his "Sieg Heil" telegram in November 1941, Pfeiffer was captured by the American troops, and interned until March 1944, when he was returned to Germany in the course of an exchange of diplomatic internees. He promptly went back to work for the nazi foreign office in Berlin, and continued to work there until the end of the war, when he was arrested and interned by the US military authorities as an active nazi.

After his release he was appointed director of the West German Diplomatic Academy at Speyer.

In September 1951 Herr Pfeiffer was attacked in several West German newspapers as one of the many active nazis in the West German Foreign Office. A special parliamentary commission established to investigate the charges recommended on June 18th 1952:

"Pfeiffer should, for the next few years, not be used in diplomatic service abroad".

The report of the parliamentary commission also contained the rather odd statement:

"The Commission notes with pleasure that Pfeiffer made no attempt to claim that he was in contact with the resistance movement (against Hitler) . . ."

"The charges which can be levelled against Pfeiffer are not in any way so severe as the charges which can be levelled against other West German diplomats."

"Spiegel" Newsmagazine, Hamburg, March 24th 1954

"Bonn, Germany, March 21 — Thirty-four per cent of the 874 members of the West German diplomatic corps once belonged to the Nazi party."

"New York Times", March 25th 1954.

"De-pacification" of Street Names

Bonn, the capital of the West German Federal Republic, has a square named "Berta von Suttner Platz" after the well-known German fighter against war.

The square is now being renamed "Berliner Freiheit" (Berlin Freedom) in commemoration of the fascist rowdies who on June 17th 1953 tried to attack the state order in East Germany and launch a new world war.

Slovak Fascists Meet in West Germany

Slovak fascists living in West Germany held a rally in the Regina Palast Hotel in Munich on March 14th to commemorate the 15th anniversary of the formation of the Hitlerite marionnette government in Slovakia in March 1939. The rally was addressed by Professor Ferdinand Durcansky, former foreign minister in the puppet government.

The Munich weekly "Deutsche Woche", reporting this provocative rally, asked: "What would the French or the Norwegian Government do if Laval or Quisling were to hold a rally in Munich to commemorate Hitler's attack on their country?"

"Fuehrer's Decrees still in Force"

— West German Supreme Court

A decree issued by Hitler on May 19th 1943, granting German citizenship to foreigners who joined the SS is still in force, the West German Supreme Court at Karlsruhe has decided. The decision was taken at the end of December 1953, but only published on March 22nd this year.

The supreme court made the ruling in rejecting a Dutch application for the extraditon of a number of Dutch nazi war criminals who broke out of a Dutch prison and sought refuge in Germany.

"West Berlin Police Legal Heir of Gestapo"

— West Berlin Court Decision

The West Berlin police force is the legal continuation of Hitler's Gestapo, the West Berlin Labour Court decided on March 21st 1954.

The decision was handed down in the case of a former Gestapo detective, who returned to Berlin in 1950 from a prisoner of war camp in the Soviet Union. He applied for a post in the West Berlin police, citing the "war prisoners' law" which entitled prisoners to their former employment. The police turned him down on the grounds that they had nothing to do with the Gestapo.

He went to law, and the court decided that he was right, and that the West Berlin police "is the legal successor organisation because it has the same tasks and the same functions".

. . . But Jail for "Slandering" War Criminals

Communist town councillor Rudolf Macht has been sent to prison for four months in Hof, American Zone of West Germany, because he stated in a recent meeting of the town council that the nazi war criminals held in Soviet prisons were in fact war criminals. The court found him guilty on a charge of slander.

You Ask — We Answer:

ALL ABOUT BABIES & HOLIDAYS

"I have just had my second baby. We had no savings to fall back on, so we simply had to borrow the money to pay hospital bills. It will take us months to pay it back... How do women in East Germany manage?"

S. M. Seattle, U.S.A.

Nobody gets into debt in East Germany through having a baby. On the contrary, everything possible is done to help expectant and nursing mothers, so that they need not give up their work or suffer in health. At no stage is any distinction made between married and unmarried mothers.

Free medical attention is given all expectant mothers, either in factory clinics or in the local clinics.

From the fourth to the sixth month of pregnancy additional rations of butter and sugar and over 3/4 pint of cheap milk daily are supplied. From the sixth month until the mother stops feeding her baby herself, the additional rations are 19 ounces each of butter and sugar monthly and 1 3/4 pints milk daily.

In cases of normal pregnancy a working mother gets five weeks' holiday at full pay before and six weeks' holiday at full pay after the birth of her child. In cases of difficult birth or of twins, she gets two weeks longer with full pay.

Overtime or Sunday work is forbidden after the third month of pregnancy and for nursing mothers. To prevent employers from wriggling out of their obligations expectant mothers cannot be given notice during the time from the third month of pregnancy until six weeks after the birth of the baby.

Extra coal and a money allowance for the purchase of baby clothes are provided, and the local health authorities run free courses for expectant mothers in baby care and feeding.

The Department for Mother and Child in the Ministry of Health runs 13 holiday homes, in the mountains and on the sea coast, and in 1953 6,500 expectant mothers went for four-week holiday cures. All expenses were born by the Ministry of Health.

Between 60% and 70% of our mothers have their babies in hospital and the proportion is higher in country districts than in the towns.

All hospital expenses, including doctors' fees, medicines and any expenses caused by complications, are covered by the social insurance. If a mother prefers to have her baby at home, the doctor's and midwife's fees and other medical costs are all covered by the social insurance.

Special care is taken of premature babies and the very considerable expense involved in taking care of them (one fully qualified nurse is in charge of two premature babies) is born by the social insurance.

The social insurance system covers almost everybody in East Germany. The only exception is private business people employing more than five workers, and these can also join voluntarily and then enjoy the same benefits. Thus women who are not working get exactly the same treatment in hospital and are eligible for the same privileges, including holiday cures when the doctor considers it necessary, extra rations and free medical attendance.

Women who wish to have their babies in hospital but have no relatives with whom to leave their older children can send them to children's homes for a month or so.

There were at the end of 1953 33,000 permanent places in infants' and small children's homes (up to three years) where mothers who are for the time being not in a position to set up their own homes can leave their children in good hands. Some of these homes are weekly ones; the mothers take their babies home from Saturday afternoon to Sunday evening or Monday morning. Unmarried mothers get first preference to place their babies in these homes.

"What are the regulations concerning holidays in the German Democratic Republic, and what sort of holiday can an average worker afford to take with his family?"

The basic holiday for all workers and office employees in East Germany is twelve working days a year with full pay. This means, with Sundays, two full weeks. Cripples, the partially disabled and victims of fascism get three days extra.

Workers engaged in heavy work or at unhealthy temperatures or on any unhealthy work get from 18 to 24 working days with full pay.

Managers and technical personnel holding responsible positions also get from 18 to 24 working days with full pay.

Young people from 14 to 16 years get 21 working days and from 16 to 18 years, 18 working days with full pay.

Factory collective agreements concluded between factory management and trade union committee stipulate extra days of leave after long service or for outstanding work or in cases of specially hard or responsible work.

Time taken off for convalescent or preventive cures does not affect the basic holiday.

The Trade Union Holiday Service offers all sorts of possibilities.

There are hundreds of trade union holiday homes in the mountains, on the lakes and on the Baltic coast, where the basic 13-day holiday costs only 30 marks per person inclusive of everything; this is less than half the actual cost; the balance is made up by the trade unions. (30 marks is well below the minimum weekly wage of the lowest-paid unskilled worker.) Specially good workers are often sent away to such holiday homes absolutely free of cost, and every worker gets a reduction of 33 1/3% on his railway fare for his annual holiday. Exchange holidays in the People's Democracies are also available for outstanding workers.

Holiday homes are mostly former private hotels, country residences and castles situated in the most beautiful mountain and seaside resorts.

A great difficulty has been that with holidays with pay for all, the existing holiday accomodation is not sufficient to deal with the masses of people who want to use it. The number of beds available at holiday resorts is being steadily expanded, however, and people are being encouraged to take their holidays at "off-seasons" so as to spread the load more evenly throughout the year.

Protestant Church Congress in East Germany

The All-German Evangelical Church Congress will be held at Leipzig in East Germany from July 7th to 11th, it was officially announced in Berlin on March 20th.

The church authorities expressed full agreement with the stipulation of the Government of the German Democratic Republic that the congress should not offend against the peace policy of the German Democratic Republic.

In particular the church authorities pledged themselves to prevent the congress being used in any way to make propaganda for the policy of the reestablishment of the Wehrmacht at present being pursued by the West German Government.

Did Hitler Exist?

The German Wehrmacht in the Second World War was completely free from nazi ideas, the West German "Frankfurter Allgemeine" stated in a leading article on March 3rd.

"The Wehrmacht knew how to protect the old Prussian-German ideas of honourable conduct of war from the National Socialist state leadership" the leading article said.

The Berlin progressive weekly "Weltbuehne", commenting on this leading article on March 17th, stated that the only logical conclusion of such a line of argument was to declare "Hitler was just a propaganda trick".

Tombstones

During the first week in March fascist rowdies repeatedly overturned gravestones in the old Jewish cemetery in Frankfurt/Main. Police made no efforts to stop the desecration.

What happened so far: On January 7th 1954 the Foreign Affairs Committee of the Board of Deputies of British Jews passed a resolution deprecating the growth of neo-fascism in West Germany. In the same resolution it was stated "in East Germany a similar position obtains, in that several well-known nazis are Ministers in the East German Government". On February 15th I wrote to the Foreign Affairs Committee calling for a withdrawal of the statement, since not a single East German Minister had been a nazi.

On February 23rd, A. G. Brotman, Secretary of the Board of Deputies replied, stating in part: "Our information ... was given on the basis of information from sources which we know to be reliable ... we have to recognise that there are possibilities of error in some of the details ... in the circumstances we feel it would be inadvisable to publish names and other details ..."

I replied on March 13th, pointing out that the reluctance to publish names of the alleged "well-known nazis" could only be regarded as an admission that the Board of Deputies had no confidence in the truth of its own allegation. The relevant portions of Mr. Brotman's letter of February 23rd and my letter of March 13th were published in GERMAN REPORT dated March 19th. Now read the next installment below:

From: A.G. Brotman, Secretary, The Board of Deputies of British Jews, London

To: John Peet, Editor, Democratic German Report, Berlin

March 24th, 1954

Dear Sir,

I am in receipt of your letter of March 13th, and I have also seen the copy of the "Democratic German Report" of March 19th in which you, without the usual courtesy of asking my permission, purport to publish my letter ot you of February 23rd.

I use the word purport, because you have not published the whole of my letter, and I should be glad if you would publish also the part you omitted and for which you have substituted a few dots.

Yours faithfully, A. G. Brotman

From: John Peet, Editor, Democratic German Report, Berlin

To: A. G. Brotman, Secretary, The Board of Deputies of British Jews, London

March 29th 1954

Dear Sir,

If you write letters to the editor of a newspaper, you must expect to see them published. The paragraphs which were omitted from your letter of February 23rd read:

"In this connection may I draw your attention to the publication in the New York Herald Tribune of February 2nd of draft proposals for a Peace Treaty with Germany submitted by Mr Molotov to the 'Big Four' Foreign Ministers Conference at Berlin, on February 1st, and which included the following:

Political Clauses:

Paragraph 6 — All former members of the German Army, including officers and generals, and all ex-nazis with the exception of those who are serving sentences of court for the commission of crimes, shall be granted civil and political rights on an equal footing with all other German citizens, enabling them to participate in the building of a peaceable and democratic Germany."

I did not publish this part of your letter for reasons of space, and because this clause of the Soviet proposal for a peace treaty with Germany was already well known to my readers: it had been printed in GERMAN REPORT on March 14th 1952, when originally proposed, and again on January 22nd 1954 at the commencement of the Berlin Conference.

However, I fail to see how this clause from a draft peace treaty which is not even under discussion at present, let alone signed, affects your monstrous allegation that "several well-known nazis are Ministers in the East German Government".

When the Board of Deputies has made a public retraction of this libellous statement I shall be glad to give you space in GERMAN REPORT for any criticism you may have of individual clauses in the Soviet draft for a peace treaty with Germany.

Yours sincerely, John Peet

BERLIN NOTEBOOK

By John Peet

Last week I had to go to Leipzig on business. Some readers may be interested in details of the journey, since I have discovered, from letters and visitors from abroad, that the weirdest notions exist about even something so simple as taking a railway journey in East Germany.

First of all, I went to the railway station and bought a ticket. A second class ticket for the 130 mile journey costs 25 marks — the same as two good tickets to the theatre.

Punch With Care

Then I went through the barrier, where the ticket collector punched my ticket, as in all the other countries I have ever visited, and got into the train: a well-heated well-kept corridor train such as you may find anywhere from Calais to Cairo.

The loudspeaker on the platform boomed something moderately unintelligible, like station loudspeakers everywhere, and the train puffed off.

During the journey white jacketted attendants passed down the corridor every few minutes selling hot coffee, beer and soda water, cigarettes and so on. The "and so on" naturally includes Bockwurst, the fat pink hot sausages which Germans, particularly Berliners, both East and West, consume in great quantities, but which I personally find inexpressibly dreary.

With Bath?

The train reached Leipzig on time. I got out of the train, gave up my ticket at the barrier, got into one of the waiting taxis, and drove to a hotel. There I asked for a room. "With or without bath?" asked the man at the desk.

In fact the journey was very similar to a trip from London to Birmingham in Britain. Only important difference in fact was that during a short halt on the city boundary of Berlin, police came through the train, politely asked to see our identity cards, and passed on after wishing us a pleasant journey. Only reason for the inspection was to see that everybody was resident either in the German Democratic Republic or in East Berlin. Residents of West Berlin are free to visit East Berlin as much as they like, but must have a special permit to visit the German Democratic Republic.

It must be realised that the German Democratic Republic is a sovereign state, and like other countries reserves the right to inspect the papers of citizens of other states entering its borders. In addition, the existence of a large number of American-financed and nazi-run espionage and sabotage organisations in West Berlin makes it necessary for the People's Police to keep their eyes open.

Making Friends and Influencing People

"Hans Erich Haack, the (West) German Charge d'Affaires in Stockholm, lives in the same apartment house as the Soviet Minister to Sweden. He has received specific instructions from Bonn that he is not to raise his hat or to bow if he should meet his neighbour on the stairs."

"Spiegel" Newsmagazine, Hamburg March 17th 1954

Train journeys in East Germany are still not an untrammelled pleasure, of course. The war took a heavy toll of rolling stock and locomotives, so that the train service is still not as frequent as could be wished, and some trains, particularly at weekends, are very crowded. (I seem to remember this happening in other countries too).

Another minor but annoying point is that most of the steam coal mined in Germany is mined in the Ruhr, and the Ruhr lies in West Germany. Since American interference has throttled East-West German trade, locomotives in East Germany have to be fired with soft coal, or lignite, which we have in abundance. This is less efficient than hard anthracite, and in addition it produces a cloud of fine smuts, which seem to be able to find their way into the compartments even through tightly closed windows. These smuts are a minor but very convincing argument for German unity to anyone who has to make many trips by train.

And for the sake of truth I should add that my experience in going from Leipzig station to a hotel and being offered a choice of rooms is by no means typical of all towns and cities in East Germany. Leipzig suffered relatively little damage in bombing, and has always been very well equipped with hotels, so it is generally easy to get a room there.

In most other towns the situation is much more difficult, since railway stations were a favourite bomb target, and hotels generally cluster round stations. In fact the difficulty encountered by travellers in finding accomodation is one of the subjects very often raised in the very numerous critical letters published in the press here.

Bockwurst Again

To protect myself from any critical attacks by German readers who are enthusiastic bockwurst eaters, I hereby declare that I have not been inspired by vegetarians; I have no desire to ban bockwurst eating; I just do not like them.

Mothers-in-Law

When you next read stories in the big business press about "harried refugees streaming out of East Germany", consider this little news dispatch from the London "Daily Express" of March 16th 1954:

"A million people in the U. S. disappear every year. Chief reasons, according to the Tracers Company, one of the outfits which helps to find many of them: financial troubles, mother-in-law troubles, teen-agers' desires to be free of parents, and the Greta Garbo-like desire to be alone."

The establishment of a democratic Germany has not abolished mothers-in-law, of course, and people in East Germany afflicted with this trouble, or others, have an easy way out: they rush to West Berlin, spin a yarn about "persecution" and become "political refugees".

Incidentally, a growing proportion of the misled people who have fled to the West are now returning to the German Democratic Republic when they find that all that the allegedly golden West has to offer is unemployment and a crowded refugee camp.

"PEACE" BY ARISTOPHANES

"Peace", which was written and presented in the year 42I B.C., is the fifth of the comedies by Aristophanes which have come down to us. Like the others, it has its own history, it reflects the struggles and the ideas of its author as well as the social and political situation at the time when it was written.

The Peloponnesian war (43I-404), the bloodiest and most destructive war that ancient Greece had yet seen, had been raging for more than ten years. Athens, the most important centre of political and intellectual life in the fifth century, suffered the ravages of war more than any other city.

Fleeing from the country districts of Attica, which had been devasted by the Lacedaemonian armies, great crowds of peasants had sought refuge behind the walls of Athens. After starvation and suffering of all kinds, a terrible scourge -the Pest- swept through the town during the second and third years of the war, claiming countless victims among the population.

Everyone felt that the root cause of this misfortune was the war. The great historian, Thucydides, who lived at the time of the Peloponnesian war, emphasises that the greater part of his fellow-citizens, whatever their social and political convictions, considered that the war was the greatest of all their afflictions. (Thucydides, B. 65).

A trend for peace was therefore developing in Athens, as in all the other cities. Daily increasing masses of the population desired and demanded an end to hostilities and the conclusion of peace.

This trend made itself felt even more clearly when, in 42' the two leaders of the war party, the Athenian Cleon and the Spartan Brasidas, fell during the same battle. Negotiations then began and led rapidly to the signing of an armistice and to the conclusion of the "Peace of Nicias" which, unfortunately was destined to last for only a few years.

It was this same desire for peace which inspired Aristophanes. He devoted his whole life to the struggle for peace, and sang of it in a way that moves the ordinary people of all countries and of all times.

"Peace" is an exceptional work, the creation of an admirable poet who was at the same time a great patriot and a tireless fighter.

This close blending of the most consummate poetic form with the social and political struggle is characteristic of the "old" Attic comedy, which drew on the events of the period for its subjects. During the fifth, and at the beginning of the fourth century B.C., a good number of comic authors achieved this blend. Aristophanes was not only the greatest of them, he was also one of the most authentic and noble geniuses of ancient Greece. And this genius put his art in the service of man, in the service of the noblest human cause.

The leading character in "Peace" is a peasant, Trygaios (The grape-gatherer). This choice was only natural. Of all the citizens of Athens, the peasants suffered most from the war and had most reason to fight for peace. Trygaios is angered by the mania for war of his fellow-citizens. However he does not despair. He wants to find Peace and bring her back to Athens and to the whole of Greece. But the goddess of Peace is up in the sky where Polemos, the god of war, has her shut up in a deep cave.

The ingenious peasant finds a way of reaching the sky by riding on the back of a winged snail. On his arrival he discovers that the gods, disgusted at the sight of men killing one other, have gone away. Only Hermes and Polemos have stayed. The latter is holding a gigantic mortar in which to crush one by one all the cities of Greece. He appears on the scene crying :

"Ah, you mortals, you mortals who have endured so much, how your poor jaws are going to suffer."

In spite of this horrible apparition, Trygaios does not give up his plan. He calls on the people to join in the struggle to free "Peace" from the cave. He approaches all sections of the population, the representatives of all the professions, the inhabitants of all the cities of Greece.

"Peoples of all Greece, it is now or never that you must help each other."

With the aid of Hermes, Peace is at last freed and she appears with her two companions : Festivity and Abundance.

At this moment voices are raised in an exquisite hymn : "Greetings, greetings, what joy your coming brings us, O, beloved ! The desire for you has carried me away; a supernatural instinct urged me to return to the fields. For you brought the greatest benefit to us, O beloved, to us who led a rural life."

There is a general burst of joy at the appearance of Peace. Hermes himself shares in the mortals'joy.

"See how the cities babble among themselves, reconciled and laughing joyously."

Trygaios sets out on the way home with Peace's two companions. During this time, the Choir recites the "parabasis" in which the poet addresses the spectators directly. Aristophanes explains at length to what a height he has raised comedy, and what great services he has rendered the city.

"Putting aside these ineptitudes, this vulgarity and low buffoonery, our poet has created a great art and, having built it up, he has flanked it with towers by means of beautiful words, great thoughts and jests such as one does not hear in the streets. It was not obscure individuals that he put into his plays, nor was it women, but with an ardour worthy of Heracles, he tackled the very greatest in the land.

Trygaios arrives on earth with Abundance and Festivity. The former will become his wife, the latter he will offer to the Council, representing the whole city which, during the years of war, was deprived of festivities and joy.

After several scenes in which Aristophanes sings the joys of love, in his own particular manner, Trygaios begins a sacrifice to Peace. In his prayer, he asks the goddess to put an end to war and grant riches and happiness to the city.

"Stop battles and tumults, that we may call you Lysimaché(1). Put an end to the excessively ingenious suspicions which make us shout at one another. Unite us Hellenes once again and for ever by a juice of friendship, and water down our spirits with a little sweetening indulgence. Make our markets full of good things : garlic from Megara, early cucumbers, quinces, pomegranates, little mantles for slaves..."

At that moment a soothsayer arrives, a partisan of war; Trygaios ridicules him and chases him away.

Then dealers in weapons arrive. Here the poet lets himself go. With the utmost fury, with all the freedom of language of the Greek theatre, and particularly of comedy, he attacks and mocks the marchants and their wares : helmets, cuirasses, shields, etc.

The comedy ends with Trygaios' marriage to Abundance. Amid the general gladness, Trygaios offers up a last prayer and asks the gods "to give riches to the Hellenes, to grant us all an equal and bountiful supply of barley, abundance of wine, figs to munch, make our wives prolific, let us recover all the goods we have lost, and abolish the shining iron."

(1) Lysimaché : who puts an end to wars.

Twenty-four centuries have passed since the days when this comedy, which exalts the noblest and most generous ideal: men's struggle to win a life of peace, happiness and creative labour- was presented on the Athens stage.

Centuries have passed, but Aristophanes' call has lost none of its value, for, nowadays, war continues to be the greatest threat hanging over mankind and civilisation.

All progressive mankind owed it to themselves, therefore, to honour the memory of this great ancient poet. Following the example of Aristophanes, whose works express a great spirit of optimism, ordinary people throughout the world are more confident than ever in the successful outcome of their struggle. They know that, in the end, war will be conquered by Peace.

The Importance of Antonin Dvorak's work in the Fight for World Peace.

By Professor Antonin Sychra.

The way in which the work of Antonin Dvorak became part of the World's treasury of music must undoubtedly be considered one of the most extraordinary happenings in the history of music. For the composer belonged to a small nation which in addition, at that time, was swallowed up and stifled by the powerful Austro-Hungarian monarchy. We can even go so far as to say that, in the last decades of the 19th century and at the beginning of the 20th, the musical centres of the greatest States often drew their life and inspiration from the music of Dvorak. Of all the Slav composers only Chopin and Tchaikovsky attained such a world-wide reputation.

Dvorak went nine times to Britain alone on the pressing invitation of the most important musical circles there and his music was one of the main elements of the international musical festivals which took place in that country. The best facilities in existence at that time were provided for the performances of Dvorak's works. For example, on his first visit to Britain, on March 13th 1884, his "Stabat Mater" was performed before a vast audience in the Royal Albert Hall in London by a huge orchestra and a choir of 840 singers.

On June 16th 1891, the University of Cambridge conferred on Dvorak the degree of Doctor of Music (honoris causa). (The eminent Russian zoologist, Metchnikov, was one of the others who received this title at the same time.) The composer made a highly successful tour of Russia in 1890; he was held in high esteem by Balakirev and Rachmaninov and strengthened his friendship with Tchaikovsky. In 1892, he was invited to New York and was appointed Director of the National College of Music, the only College of Music in the United States which had the right to this title, the others being private. He worked there till April 1895. We may add Dvorak's many visits to Vienna, Berlin and elsewhere and the many performances of his music in these cities. The greatest publishing houses in the world issued, and continue to issue, his compositions; the publisher, Simrock, sent the composer one order after another and for many years strove to obtain sole rights to Dvorak's works.

Johannes Brahms was one of his personal friends and a great propagator of his music. During Dvorak's stay in the United States he corrected the proofs of the Slavonic Dances himself, whereas Dvorak transcribed Brahms' Hungarian Dances for several instruments.

The finest performers in the world have played the works of Dvorak - Hans von Bülow, Napravnik, Hans Ritcher, Nikisch, Joachim, Ondricek and Laub - and not only occasionally but as regular items in their repertoire. This success has been maintained right up till today - Oistrakh, Menuhin and Kuhlenkampf perform his Violin Concerto, Pablo Casals his Concerto for Violoncello, and his "New World" Symphony is probably played by all the principal orchestras of the world. His "Biblical Songs" and the "Songs My Mother Taught Me" from "Gipsy Melodies", are part of the repertoire of the greatest soloists, while the piano piece, "Humoresque", has been transcribed for practically all instruments and ensembles; many people know and sing this air without even knowing who composed it.

Even in Korea and China and among negro musicians the works of Dvorak are frequently performed - Paul Robeson , for example, often sings "Songs My Mother Taught Me". And of course Dvorak is appreciated in the Soviet Union above all; his works are constantly being performed as great classics. The Soviet musicologist, Belze, devotes 90 pages to him in his great work on Czech music.

What is it that gives this universal importance to the work of Dvorak, what is its source? The answers to this question differ widely. Some musicians and critics, particularly those of the West, maintain that the work of Dvorak attained this universality because it is essentially cosmopolitan and merely the result of the various influences of the great masters of world music, and, further, that it is abstract music which does not seek to give expression to national ideas or to the spirit of national emancipation. Others declare that the success of Dvorak's compositions is due only to a combination of lucky accidents, that his music became popular in a period which derived particular pleasure from the primitive exoticism of little known national cultures.

These two extreme opinions are absolutely false. This is not difficult to prove, as even a very cursory examination of Dvorak's evolution will show.

The very origin of Antonin Dvorak (September 8th, 1841 - May 1st 1904) is indicative of his strong bonds with the Czech people. He was born into the family of a village innkeeper and butcher. Among his ancestry there were many musicians, as often happens in Bohemian peasant families. Yet Dvorak did not find it easy to devote himself to music; his social circumstances did not permit it. In fact, it was only after he had learned the trade of butcher and had himself saved up money that he was able to go and study in Prague. Even then, he was still far from having won the day; the certificate of the Prague school of organists did not pave the way to the profession of composer. For ten years he oked out a living by playing the viola in a popular orchestra (that of Komzak) which was eventually incorporated in the orchestra of the National Theatre. He also gave private lessons on the side. And for more than ten years Dvorak composed works which were not performed, except for a few small, unimportant dances played by the Komzak orchestra. He finally made his name in 1873 with the performance of the hymn, "The Heirs of the White Mountain". From this moment, he went rapidly from success to success. When, in 1877, Johannes Brahms took him under his wing, his works became part of the world's music too.

The whole artistic work of Dvorak is stamped by those difficult beginnings, but in a positive sense. They strengthened his consciousness of his popular origins and compelled him to develop a strong will. When, for example, his opera, "King and Charcoal-burner", was unfavourably received, Dvorak had it in him to scrap the original work and remake it entirely.

Apart from this, Dvorak thoroughly steeped himself in the traditional popular music when playing in the Komzak orchestra; he also became acquainted with all the great works of world music. Most important of all, as a viola player in the National Theatre - and elsewhere, when giving occasional performances - he came to know the work of Bedrich Smetana, the founder of Czech national music, and learned from him to devote his powers to the service of national emancipation and to erect a monumental art on the traditions of Czech popular music.

Thereafter Dvorak remained faithful to Smetana's democratic ideas and moral attitude to the artist's task; until the end of his days, nothing could force him to depart from them even in the smallest detail. It suffices to recall what Dvorak wrote to the publisher Simrock, when the latter attempted, for commercial reasons, to transliterate his name in German:

"I am sorry that you are so ill-informed. Excuse me, but I only wanted to tell you that the artist, too, has a mother-country in which he must have firm faith and for which his heart must beat strongly."

And when Dvorak, after great successes in Britain, received from a Czech country village a letter written in too humble a tone, he replied:

"I am only a simple Czech musician who does not like exaggerated humility. And although I have much frequented the great musical world, I shall nevertheless remain what I am - a simple Czech musician."

It is natural that the national and democratic outlook which is the mark of Dvorak the man, should also be an inviolable principle of Dvorak the artist. How did Dvorak react when his opera "Dmitri" failed on the German stage and the formalist critic, Hanslick, and the publisher, Simrock, gave him to understand that he should compose his music to German librettos and on cosmopolitan themes? He replied by creating the "Slavonic Rhapsodies", and by seeking even more energetically than before a libretto for a Czech national oratorio (he succeeded later with "Saint Ludmilla" which had its famous premiere in England) and by composing the "Hussite Overture" in which he came even closer to the tradition of Smetana, to the theme of the most revolutionary people's movement in Czech history. Appropos this revolutionary overture we may cite a characteristic anecdote. When the impresario reproached Bülow for performing Dvorak's "Hussite Overture" too often, the latter replied:

"For me, Dvorak is the most important musician along with Brahms. I stand by everything I do."

It was during Dvorak's stay in America that it first became clear that his universal importance resides precisely in his profoundly national and democratic outlook; that when, in his music, Dvorak fights for the idea and aspirations of his own oppressed people, he is fighting for the ideas and aspirations of the people of every country. After living in the heavy choking atmosphere of the Austro-Hungarian Empire in decline, Dvorak found much that was sympathetic in American democracy. But there was also much that he could not stomach and he made no secret of it. Above all, the shameful and humiliating racial discrimination was repugnant to him. I am not exaggerating in the slightest when I say that it was his sympathy for the Negroes and Indians and his opposition to racial discrimination which gave the guiding line to all Dvorak's work in America, so that it took on a truly political character. It was on Dvorak's initiative that the American newspapers printed the following announcement in May 1893:

BEST AVAILABLE COPY

> "The American National College of music intends to enlarge the scope of its mission by giving musical instruction to gifted coloured pupils as well, hoping that later it will be possible for them to be taught by coloured teachers. Dr. Antonin Dvorak, Director of the College, expresses his pleasure at this decision and promises to give the undertaking his sympathy and advice."

The upheaval was no less great when the National College of Music, under Dvorak's direction, held a concert in the Madison Square Hall on January 23rd, 1894, in which all the instrumentalists, except one, were coloured and Dvorak himself conducted. The concert was organised to help the collection of clothes for the poor of New York.

But that is far from being all. When Dvorak was invited to America certain men expressed the hope that Dvorak would show the way to the creation of an American national music. For several years the American press printed innumerable discussions, some of which were based on the statements of Dvorak as taken down by journalists. The discussions centred on the question whether Dvorak was right in thinking that Indian and Negro songs could become the basis of an American national music. This stirred up quite a deal of indignation, especially in Government circles, because the forms of expression of the coloured races were considered primitive and unworthy of American civilisation. Dvorak, on the other hand, found in these songs the profound expression of oppressed and humiliated nations, also their strength and determination; that is why he studied them with ever-growing interest.

There is no doubt that these discussions on the American national music played a large part in the creation of the beautiful symphony "From the New World", the second and third movements of which, as Dvorak himself admitted were inspired among other things by Longfellow's "Song of Hiawatha". This is certainly not American music, not the first American symphony, as was claimed by some. Dvorak himself strongly opposed these statements and stressed the fact that nowhere did he use the exact melody of any of these songs and that he simply wanted to express "the spirit of Indian and Negro melodies" in certain places. "They keep on writing", said Dvorak, "that I picked up the themes of my last symphony in America and that it contains some Indian songs. It is not true. It was composed there but the themes are mine and I already had something of it in mind when I left. It is, and always will be, Czech music". Of that there is no doubt - the symphony, "From the New World", is Czech music. But, on the other hand, it is clear that in his symphony, as in his "String Quartet in F Major", his "Violoncello Concerto" and other works, Dvorak expressed his sincere sympathy for the Negro and Indian peoples and his faith in their future.

We may sum up in this way - Dvorak's work is universal because it is entirely Czech. Dvorak's "New World" symphony is a fine gift to his nation and culture because it shows the way to a true and pure patriotism. It is at the same time a fine gift to all nations because it is steeped in democratic ideas and an ardent sympathy for the people wherever they are conducting their fight for liberation.

In these days it is impossible to overestimate the importance of Dvorak's music in the nations' fight for Peace. Because it strengthens our faith in the power of the liberation struggle it inspires confidence even in small nations; it shows them how great they can become if they fight for great ideas. Dvorak's art can have a real mobilising influence in action for Peace.

BULLETIN OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

INFORMATION BULLETIN PUBLISHED BY THE SECRETARIAT OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

No. 2 (2nd. Year) JANUARY 15 1955

A Dangerous Situation has been Created

When the French Parliament ratified the Paris Agreements by a slender majority, with the support of only 45 per cent of the Members, the decision was directly contrary to the will of the nation. This has been recognised throughout the world, as much by supporters as by opponents of the Agreements. Far from ending the peoples' struggle to prevent the rearming of Germany this vote will inspire new efforts.

Already the struggle is being continued, extended, intensified. It needs to be. For the ratification by the French Lower House is another big step in the direction of atomic war.

The new situation places on the Peace Movement the responsibility of making clear to the peoples the real danger, for breaking down all barriers which hold back any groups or individuals from action.

In the early autumn the supporters of German rearmament found certain arguments which served to confuse the issue for a time. Some said the London Agreements were 'better than E.D.C.', others that they were worse but the 'best that could be got'. In any case 'West German rearmament was inevitable'. The question to decide was 'not whether to rearm Germany but how'. In the meantime 'parallel negotiations' could be carried on.

In answer the Peace Movement showed, and the majority of common people understood, the essence of the Agreements to be a reborn Wehrmacht, which could not be controlled, which could itself grow into the arbiter of Europe. And in the course of the struggle very wide circles have come to see how fateful is the choice which faces Europe.

So during November and December, above all in France, real national movements against the Agreements developed on an entirely new scale. Never before, even in the defeat of E.D.C., have the people so directly, continuously and effectively intervened against a perilous international policy. The two thirds majority in favour of October became the minority of Christmas.

Those who have committed themselves to the 'policy of strength' have been making quite exceptional efforts to bring off their plan to incorporate the German Federal Republic in the military alliance of N.A.T.O. They have clearly regarded it as one essential element in their policy.

The grave new danger is now underlined by the N.A.T.O. Council decision to base its planning on the use of nuclear weapons — the second essential element in the 'policy of strength'. Thus the commanders of a new Wehrmacht are to be equipped with weapons of mass destruction, including the hydrogen bomb — those very commanders who devastated Europe and brought disaster to the German people. It is not surprising that among the German people, threatened with the danger that for a third time they may be made the instruments of a ruthless militarism, and seeing their hopes of reunifying their country being destroyed, deep and passionate opposition is being shown.

Tension in Europe and throughout the world is being increased. Negotiations are being made much more difficult. The policies of the Paris agreements and the N.A.T.O. decisions are as far-reaching as those which led to the second world war and even more dangerous for humanity. But today there is one big difference; and it can be a decisive difference. In recent years a great movement of the peoples to bring about genuine negotiations and preserve peace has been built up.

It has become clear that the peoples have the power to reverse these policies even though certain parliaments have already ratified. As the Address to the Peoples adopted by the World Council of Peace at Stockholm on 23 November 1954 stressed, 'it is not within the power of any government, of any parliament, to settle the fate of a people against its will'.

Undoubtedly the events of the last weeks of 1954 will inspire the peoples in these opening weeks of 1955 to even greater efforts and greater unity in order to stop the rearming of Germany from being put through, to frustrate the efforts of those who base their whole policy on the use of nuclear weapons and to open the way to European security and world peace.

Far-Reaching Effects of the N.A.T.O. Council's Decision to use Atomic Weapons

Grave New Dangers Face the Peoples of the World

At the very time when all-out efforts are being made to put through the rearmament of West Germany and to incorporate the German Federal Republic in the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation, the North Atlantic Council has decided to base all its future military planning on the use of nuclear weapons and to recast its whole military organisation with this aim.

It is necessary to draw the most urgent attention to the far-reaching implications of this decision and to the grave new dangers which arise from it.

In this new development we see the logical conclusion of the whole misconceived 'policy of strength', which seeks to find security through exclusive military blocs and the pursuit of an illusory military preponderance.

The effort to foist this policy on the peoples is being supported by a new outbreak of hate propaganda, of misrepresentations and inventions, designed to divide the peoples and sow mistrust and suspicion.

Every effort is being made to put over the idea that the use of nuclear weapons is inevitable, that it must be accepted.

Every effort is being made to legalise atomic war under the cover of such terms as 'civilian control' and 'tactical use' which are designed to lull public opinion.

These serious consequences are clearly set out in the authoritative extracts from the British and American press printed on page 12 and, in order to help the Peace Movement to sound the alarm to the peoples in this grave new situation, we print on this page an article specially written for the Bulletin by Dr. E.H.S. Burhop. In addition we quote on page 12 a number of short comments on some of the arguments used in favour of the N.A.T.O. decisions.

At their December meeting in Paris the Ministers of the North Atlantic Council took decisions on the use of nuclear weapons that bode ill for the peoples of Europe and, indeed, of the entire world. They agreed that henceforth the military planning of N.A.T.O. should be based on the use of nuclear weapons.

A 'softening-up' process preparatory to this decision has been going on for some time. Carefully prepared 'indiscretions' both by Gruenther and Montgomery have accustomed the people of Western Europe to the idea of such a policy and as a result public reaction to this monstrous conception of military planning was less sharp than it should have been . . .

Of course attempts are being made to disguise the true implications of this decision, to make it seem less distasteful to popular opinion. It is said that although all the military planning of N.A.T.O. is to be based on the use of nuclear weapons, the actual decision to use these weapons remains in civilian hands. But the hollowness of this pretence is not difficult to expose. The only type of war which the N.A.T.O. forces will be trained to wage will be based on the use of atomic and thermonuclear weapons. The decision whether or not to use these weapons may have been in the hands of the political authorities at one time. But since the December meeting in Paris the political authorities have given de facto assent to their use. As things now stand, if war comes they will be in no position to change this decision.

Nor can the peoples of Europe be reassured by the plea that these plans will only be implemented in the event of aggression. With a rearmed Germany in the Western camp there are too many people associated with the Western allies who see their only future in war. The danger is all too real that the activities of these people will lead us into war and the recent N.A.T.O. Council decision ensures that such a war will be a full scale war employing all the most terrible weapons of mass destruction.

Some, including Mr. Dulles himself, have sought to calm the misgivings of the peoples of Western Europe by claiming that the new N.A.T.O. plans involved the tactical, but not the strategical use of nuclear weapons. But such distinctions are artificial and lose their meaning when dealing with weapons of such vast destructive potentialities. Thermonuclear weapons, used 'tactically' on the Elbe, may produce death and injury due to radioactive 'fall-out' on Oslo, Amsterdam, Paris and London. Over vast areas of Europe the ground will become so contaminated that life will be insupportable and over a very much wider area the grain and vegetable crops and the fish of the sea will be in danger of radioactive contamination. The 'tactical' use of nuclear weapons as planned by the Western powers in the event of war will mean death, immediate or delayed, to countless millions of European civilians.

And the aeroplanes setting out with nuclear weapons on strictly 'tactical' missions will start from airfields distributed widely over Western Europe and Great Britain. These airfields will immediately become legitimate targets for attack and, since the N.A.T.O. powers are not squeamish about the weapons they use, how can they expect that these airfields will not be attacked by the same kinds of weapons? The entire population of Western Europe will be placed in great jeopardy once N.A.T.O. initiates the use of these weapons. There is no real way of restricting them to tactical uses against armies in the field.

The decisions of the December meeting of the N.A.T.O. Council will make agreement on disarmament and the abolition of nuclear weapons much harder to achieve. When operational planning, army structure, and even troop deployment are based round the use of nuclear weapons the resistance to their abolition on the part of the military planners in N.A.T.O. is certain to be enormously more powerful. It is tragic that this decision should come just at the time when the possibility of agreement on these issues seemed closer than at any time since the end of the war, following the unanimous vote in the United Nations Assembly calling on the great powers to discuss further the problems of disarmament and the control of atomic weapons on an agreed basis.

And let it not be forgotten that these decisions, taken together with the steps being taken to rearm Western Germany and to bring her into N.A.T.O., will ensure that nuclear weapons will be placed at the disposal of the former Nazi generals, many of whom still thirst for a war of revenge.

But all this need not be. The peoples of Western Europe can even now defeat the genocidal strategy of the N.A.T.O. powers and can force agreement on disarmament and the abolition of nuclear weapons. It is the great task of the Peace Movement to-day to make the people aware of the implications of the Paris decisions and to organise a decisive struggle against their implementation.

Atomic Weapons already available in Europe for N.A.T.O. Forces

In an article in The New York Times of 19 November, 1954 headed 'N.A.T.O. has cast the die for Atomic Defence', Hanson W. Baldwin describes atomic weapons already available in addition to 'thermo-nuclear bombs of million-ton T.N.T. explosive power'. He says:

'Atomic weapons of lesser power ranging down to 12 or 14 Kilotons (thousand tons of T.N.T.) have been ready in and around Europe for quite a long time. U.S. Navy aircraft carriers in the Mediterranean and the Atlantic have small "special weapons" (atomic) magazines and the aircraft . . . to carry them.'

'On land the Forty Ninth U.S. Air Division, based in England and flying F. 84 Republic Thunderjets and B. 45 light bombers, has long been charged with the atomic support of N.A.T.O.'s ground forces.'

He then lists the following as available in Europe:

Five six-gun battalions of 280 mm 'atomic cannon' — range 30 km.

Several battalions of 762 mm free flight artillery rockets — range 30 km.

The 'Corporal' guided missile with supersonic speed — range 160 km.

Two squadrons Air Force guided missiles or pilotless planes — range 800 km.

The Peace Forces are Preparing for the World Assembly

• To Represent Millions

In an appeal to local organisations to start preparing at once for the World Assembly for Peace, published in the British Peace Committee Newsletter, Mr. William Wainwright, Member of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace and Secretary of the British Peace Committee, writes:

'A large and representative contingent from this country, bringing the views and experiences of every section of British life, will be indispensable for the success of this Assembly.

'That is because in the affairs of states this country occupies a key position, from which it has the power to influence the course of events in the direction of stable and lasting peace.

'What can be done to help the world along this path? How should the Governments behave towards each other? Are the principles agreed between Prime Ministers Nehru and Chou En-lai a standard which others can adopt with benefit? What are the chief stumbling blocks to peace, and how can they be overcome?

'These are only some of the points on which nationwide discussion should take place in preparation for the World Assembly. In this way those who are elected to go can take with them the views not of thousands but of millions.'

• Meetings and Conferences at every Level

A German Congress for security and peace will be held in Leipzig next April in preparation for the World Assembly in May.

The Congress will elect the German Peace Council, its President and General Secretary, and also the delegates to the World Assembly.

The election of delegates to this Congress will take place at district peace conferences which will be held throughout Germany during February and March and the delegates to these conferences, in turn, will be elected at public meetings and evening gatherings for an exchange of views.

This form of preparation should result not only in the democratic election of delegates but also in effective mass explanations in preparation for the World Assembly in both parts of Germany.

As part of the same campaign there will be conferences and congresses for various professional groups and various interests. Thus, for example, a conference of Protestant and Catholic churchmen from both parts of Germany has already taken place in Leipzig. The following are planned: conferences for engineers, technicians and other technical staff; a doctors' conference; and conferences for educationalists, public discussion evenings for young people and conferences for trade unionists.

• Statements by Public Figures

I consider that the London-Paris Agreements embody the suicidal policy of armed Peace, of rigid and dangerously poised hostile blocs; it is a policy of crude, swashbuckling braggadoccio, the megalomania of small people in whose hands are weapons of such frightful, devastating powers that the whole of civilization is threatened. In brief, such policies can only mean death and destruction . . .

Why do not we, all lovers of Peace, resolve now that 1955 must be made the Year of Peace? Wherever we live, whatever our vocations, yes, and whatever be our political affiliations, let us raise our voices, let us agitate and organise persistently so that when the World Assembly of Peace meets next May a force of Peace will have been so developed that the inciters to wars will have been silenced, and reason, goodwill and friendship prevail among the peoples of the world.

Mr. S. O. Davies
M. P. for Merthyr Tydfil

We defenders of peace in the Lebanon and in the whole Arab world look forward with great pleasure and hope to the World Assembly of Peace which is going to take place in the near future. We are ready to send a good number of delegates to it.

This World Assembly will certainly have a great effect on world peace and will help the Movement in our part of the world, which only peace can deliver from the plans of the imperialists.

Dr. George Hanna, Writer
(Lebanon)

Each of the previous world peace congresses marked a stage in the extension of the world movement for the defence of peace.

The World Assembly of Representatives of All the Forces of Peace in the first half of 1955 will be a great step forward for the movement. It will sum up the victories that have been won for peace and the activities of the movement during the past two years. It will bring together new forces for peace and will rally the peoples of the world in this new stage of the struggle against the intrigues of those who want to see frightful bloodbaths, above all United States imperialism.

The defenders of peace in Viet Nam welcome and warmly support the World Assembly of Representatives of All the Forces of Peace in 1955.

German Social Democratic Party's Position on Peaceful Settlement of German Question

After a joint conference the leading bodies of the German Social Democratic Party — the Presiding Committee, the Executive Committee and the Party's Control Commission — issued the following appeal addressed to all Socialists throughout the world:

'The German Social Democratic Party unreservedly supports a policy of lessening international contradictions and the peaceful settlement of all questions in dispute. It warns against the deadly temptation to ratify the Paris agreements, thus creating a military situation which would shut the door for a long time to agreement between the four occupying powers on the peaceful restoration of German unity. This military situation would create the danger of a further aggravation of the international contradictions.

'The German Social Democratic Party asks the German Federal Parliament and the Government of the German Democratic Republic to make every effort to prevent the division of Germany from becoming irrevocable. Every possibility of bringing influence to bear for the opening of four power negotiations for the peaceful reunification of Germany must be exploited.

'The German Social Democratic Party addresses all democratic forces in the world and particularly the Parties in the Socialist International. It urgently calls on them to use all their influence to get the Western occupation powers to decide on the resumption of four power negotiations for the reunification of Germany and to start preparing for them immediately through diplomatic channels.'

FRANCE: 'Prevent Ratification in the Council of the Republic!'

The editorial of this issue analyses the situation created by the vote in favour of the London and Paris Agreements in the French National Assembly.

The following article — specially written for the Bulletin of the World Council of Peace by the Press Service of the French Peace Movement — shows the genuinely national movement of opposition which arose and how the French people followed the parliamentary debates with extreme vigilance, giving even more forceful expression to their unyielding opposition to any form of German rearmament than at the time of the struggle against E.D.C. This opposition is already being expressed in other forms now that the vote has been taken.

As soon as the debate opened in the National Assembly the French people's action against German rearmament reached a scale and power that were greater than ever before. If, in the end, the London and Paris Agreements were ratified by a majority of 27, 287 for and 260 against, whereas there are 627 Deputies in the National Assembly, the French people's hostility was expressed in the first vote taken on Friday, December 24, when the first article of the ratification bill was rejected on the first reading by 280 votes to 259.

From Monday, December 20 onwards, thousands of men and women of all political views, who had come from every Department in France, flocked round the doors of the National Assembly. There were more than 1000 deputations on that day alone. In spite of the refusal of the Parliamentary groups to see them—with the exception of the Progressive and Communist Deputies — the deputations literally besieged the public waiting-room whence they sent hundreds and hundreds of requests for interviews to the Deputies in the Chamber. Letters and telegrams by the thousand piled up on the Deputies' desks.

Protest German Arms

With this caption the December 28, 1954 issue of the New York Times published on its front page the above photo of a popular demonstration in Paris against the London and Paris Agreements.

The New York Times does not usually support the peaceful settlement of the German problem, which makes it all the more interesting to see the scope of the protest movement in France against German rearmament recognised in this way.

The sheer strength of this protest forced a number of Deputies to meet their constituents in the days that followed.

On December 24, 21 Socialist Deputies voted in accordance with the will of their constituents. After having declared their intention to vote for the agreements, a number of Radicals and Moderates abstained or voted against, explaining that their eyes had been opened by the pressure and vigilance of their constituents.

From Tuesday 21 to Friday 24 there wasn't a break in the unending queue of deputations. The signatures collected on the Appeal to Elected Representatives issued by the National Council of the French Peace Movement piled up on the Speaker's table in their hundreds of thousands.

The deputations from the factories and building sites, which in most cases had been unanimously elected at meetings of the personnel, were frequently supported in their mission by stoppages of work.

As soon as the debate resumed on Monday 27 the Deputies found themselves once more faced with the unshakable national will. The deputations were even bigger than on the previous days and many of them came from the provinces. Although it finally gave way to foreign pressure, the National Assembly could not ignore the reprobation of the whole country. Only one speaker dared to put up a real defence of the agreements; all the supporters of German rearmament found themselves obliged to speak of a 'vote of submission' or a 'vote to satisfy Atlantic opinion'.

On December 28 Parisians in their tens of thousands crowded into the Vélodrome d'Hiver at the call of the Peace Movement and showed their determination to make a huge effort to bar the road to the Wehrmacht in the few hours that remained before the last vote. Speakers of all points of view expressed their fears and their determination to prevent the implementation of the agreements if they should be ratified.

The meeting was chaired by Pastor Bosc, Mr. Gustave Monod and Mr. Jacques Baugé, President of the Society of Disabled and Blinded Resistance Fighters, a former member of the Free French Forces who lost his sight and his two hands in the war. The speakers were Mr. Bernard Laffaille, professor at the Paris Central School; Mr. Roland Etienne, Vice-President of the Vosges Federation of the M.R.P.; Mrs. Huisman, of the Women's Committee against German Militarism; Mr. Deville, Vice-President of the Meurthe-et-Moselle Federation of the Radical-Socialist Party; Mr. Alain le Léap, General Secretary of the C.G.T.; Mr. Martial Bellugue, member of the Socialist General Council of the Department of Dordogne; Mr. Jacques Chatagner, director of La Quinzaine; Mr. Claude Bourdet, director of France-Observateur; Mr. Raymond Guyot, Deputy for Paris, member of the Political Bureau of the French Communist Party; Mr. Etienne Nouveau, an active worker in ex-servicemen's associations; Mr. Gilbert de Chambrun, Progressive Deputy, Secretary of the World Council of Peace.

Many messages were received including those sent by President Paul-Boncour, Mr. Pierre Lebon, Gaullist Deputy for the Department of Deux-Sevres; Mr. Léo Hamon, Catholic Senator for the Seine Department; Mr. Maurice Lacroix, President of the Young Republic; Professor Bernard Lavergne, of the Law Faculty of Paris University.

A NEW STAGE IN THE STRUGGLE

On January 2 the French Peace Movement issued a statement saluting the great movement of national unity forged in the struggle against the London and Paris agreements. This movement 'showed foreign governments and the French Government the nation's unreserved hostility to German rearmament'.

The statement continues:

'The Council of the Republic must be prevented from ratifying the treaties, thus making it necessary for the National Assembly to re-examine them.

'The movement must grow throughout the country. The efforts of all must be brought to bear; the Deputies who voted for the agreements must be made to know the national protest; signatures, appeals and petitions must pour in. But the people should direct their efforts above all to the Municipal and General Councillors, so that they may express the national will to the Senators whom they elect.

'Whatever bills Parliament may pass, Frenchmen will never accept the revival of German militarism and the prospect of an atomic and thermonuclear war . . .'

GERMANY Must and Will Become a Country of Peace

Approximately 900 people from three districts of the German Democratic Republic recently met in Rostock to hear a report on the Stockholm session of the World Council of Peace. In a statement they declared:

'We shall support the Peace Movement in West Germany with all our strength and shall see to it that the Federal Republic's statesmen are reminded even more insistently than heretofore of their responsibility for the maintenance of peace . . .

'Germans must and will become a country of peace. We shall strive towards this end with all our strength . . .'

At the end of December a large number of Bremen youth organisations demonstrated their opposition to remilitarisation and the projected conscription of 500,000 young men in West Germany by a torchlight procession through the streets of the city.

They included groups of young people from the German Social Democratic Party, young trade unionists, members of the 'Falcons' and of the Protestant youth. They bore many banners calling for struggle against the London and Paris Agreements.

The Presiding Committee of the German Socialist Student's Union (Sozialistischer Deutscher Studentenbund) has condemned the London and Paris Agreements as aggravating the division of Germany and international tension without giving any guarantee for the security of the Federal Republic.

GREAT BRITAIN

As the next national rallying point in the campaign to stop the rearming of Germany the British Peace Committee has issued an appeal for delegations from every part of the country to 'lobby' M.P.s on 25 January, the day Parliament resumes its sittings after the Christmas recess. This is the first time for several years that a national demonstration to Members of Parliament has been organised on this scale. The Peace Movement has called not only on peace organisations but on trade unions, co-operative organisations, churches, women's and youth movements in all localities to support this National Lobby.

An example of what is being done on a regional scale to widen and strengthen the campaign is the call by the Manchester and District Peace Committee for a regional conference to take place in February. This conference is already supported by organisations representing over 80,000 members, including the district committees of the railwaymen and of the Confederation of Engineering and Shipbuilding Unions.

The appeal for this conference, which is to be addressed by Mr. John Burns, president of the Fire Brigades Union, and Councillor Edward Dixon of Coventry, says:

'If the present policies towards Germany continue the division of Europe into two armed camps will be completed and world peace will be at the mercy of the German militarists.'

A similar conference is being held on 16 January in Liverpool addressed by Mr. Gordon Schaffer, Chairman of the British Peace Committee, and by Dr. E.H.S. Burhop.

ITALY

Throughout Italy a great protest campaign against the London and Paris Agreements is being carried on.

The National Partisans' Association has called on all former partisans to actively oppose West German rearmament.

Former partisans and the families of partisans in Bologna sent to the President of the Chamber of Deputies and to the President of the Senate an appeal demanding that international issues be settled by peaceful means, without any discrimination and in an atmosphere of eased tension and friendly co-existence between States.

In Rome, the Borough Peace Committees held many meetings on December 22.

The Italian Chamber of Deputies' vote in favour of the London and Paris Agreements aroused the anger of wide sections of the Italian people who showed that they are resolutely hostile to German rearmament in any form.

In Torre Annunziata in the province of Naples a petition against the rearmament of West Germany and for the establishment of a system of collective security for the whole of Europe is being circulated. Similar petitions have been signed by the workers of five Bologna factories and by municipal and provincial employees. The Town Council of Villamarzano in the province of Rovigo, which is composed of Socialists, Social Democrats, Communists, Christian Democrats and Liberals, has unanimously condemned German rearmament.

In the province of Ravenna the members of the Peace Movement are collecting documents on the crimes committed by the occupation troops during the Second World War. They will be sent to the Senators for the area during the Senate debate on the London and Paris Agreements.

The Will of the Czechoslovak People

A wave of popular protest, including all sections of the people, is arising in Czechoslovakia against the London and Paris Agreements. Its principal feature is a great mass action. In the towns and in the smallest hamlets meetings attended by great numbers of the inhabitants have been held. Millions and millions of Czechoslovak citizens are seeking to establish direct contact with the people of France, West Germany and other Western countries by means of letters and messages calling on them to refuse to allow the implementation of the agreements for German rearmament.

Engineering workers in Kladno approve the text of a letter to their opposite numbers in France and the German Federal Republic.

Workers . . .

The engineering workers of Vitkovice have sent a message to the workers of the 'Vereinigte Stahlwerke A.G.' of Düsseldorf. The workers of the electrical engineering factory in Pilsen sent an appeal to the workers of Essen, Dortmund and Wuppertal; those of the factory of Ruzomberok sent a letter to their opposite numbers in Hamburg; and the citizens of Karlovy Vary also sent a letter to the people of Wiesbaden. The workers of Paris, Marseilles, Nancy, Bayonne, Boulogne and a number of other towns have received messages from Czechoslovak workers.

Here are some extracts from a message sent by the personnel of the Varnsdorf factories in Czechoslovakia to the workers of the Toulouse Arsenal in France:

'To the trade unionists, workers, apprentices and technicians of the arsenal.

'Honest people in Europe have not forgotten the horrors of German fascism. They have not forgotten either Lidice or Oradour. Yet we wish to live in friendship with the German people as with the French people, for this friendship is the guarantee of a lasting peace.

'Dear friends, we call on you to build the active unity of all the workers of your factory and town. It is an invincible force which must be set going to achieve a European conference for collective security, the reunification of a democratic Germany and world peace. Long live world peace!'

University Men . . .

The famous Charles University in Prague, one of the oldest in Europe, has sent a moving appeal to the universities of West Germany. It says:

'The war, which wiped out the best sons and daughters of our people in the concentration camps, struck the German people a terrible blow, destroyed their wealth and their rare historic monuments, dear to all mankind. We are convinced that from now on German scientists and young German intellectuals will be vigilant and will not accept the remilitarisation of Western Germany which would render impossible the reunification of your people in a united, democratic and peaceful state . . .'

Churchmen . . .

The Bishops and other dignitaries of the Catholic Church of Czechoslovakia have sent an appeal to all Catholics in Western Europe and to the Secretariat of the Holy See. It asks that negotiations between East and West be set going and that, conscious of their responsibility to God and History, Catholics should strive to find a solution which would make impossible the restoration of the terrible German militarism.

From Budapest...

At the beginning of the month of December the Hungarian Peace Council launched a great protest campaign against the revival of German militarism.

On December 9 a big meeting, at which more than 3,000 people were present, was held in the Palace of Sport in Budapest. A report on the work of the Stockholm session of the World Council of Peace was given by Professor Erzsebet Andics, winner of the Kossuth Prize, President of the Hungarian Peace Council, and the Very Reverend Janos Peter, Protestant Bishop, both members of the World Council of Peace; and by Professor M. A. Földvari of Debrecen University.

Mr. Oscar Fischer, German Secretary of the World Federation of Democratic Youth, was the next speaker and he opposed German rearmament.

All the speakers, with the approbation of the whole hall, protested at the remilitarisation of West Germany. They also expressed their admiration for Germans who are fighting for a democratic and peaceful Germany, and, in their honour, the demonstration ended with a performance of the Egmont Overture, one of Beethoven's masterpieces.

From the meeting a joint appeal to the people was made by the Patriotic Popular Front and the Hungarian Peace Council.

Furthermore, on December 9 the Lutheran congregation of Vesces held a general meeting to commemorate the destruction of their church and presbytery by the S.S. ten years before. A religious service was held and a telegram was sent to the World Council of Peace. It says:

'We draw attention to the nefarious attempts being made to rearm West Germany and to prepare for another war which would result in much greater suffering than what we have already seen. We protest at these attempts...

'We pray God to bring the peoples to a better understanding of each other... May he support the efforts of men of goodwill the world over so that a lasting peace may be won.'

...to TORONTO

The Canadian Peace Congress has asked the House of Commons' Standing Committee on External Affairs for public hearings on the German army plan.

It is asking the support of all party leaders and of a number of leading parliamentarians, including the Minister for External Affairs, for this request.

On his return from the Stockholm session of the World Council of Peace Dr. James Endicott, President of the Canadian Peace Congress, prepared a statement for the press from which we give some extracts:

'Actually our organisation and our fraternal relationships do not yet reflect the fact of such wide acceptance of our proposals and beliefs. The World Assembly will unify and strengthen the forces for peace. It will demonstrate to the people of the whole world that peace is in their hands and that their hands are strong enough to build that peace into an enduring reality...

'But even as the first preparations for the Assembly get under way there is an item of pressing business which we would leave unsettled at our peril. The first item on the agenda of the Stockholm meeting was the supremely urgent question of German remilitarisation and the security of Europe.

'At this meeting the German delegation (from East and West) came as one delegation and refused to be listed as East or West. They were a German delegation for peace...

'The German people are our friends and the friends of peace. If we Canadians want to be their friends, and we do seek a reconciliation here, we must help them to defeat the rearming of the Nazis.'

Mass Rally

'Before Parliament decides how to handle the German army plan it will hear the voice of Toronto citizens' majority opposition to the plan', announced Mr. Bruce Mickleburgh on behalf of the Toronto Peace Council, the Association of United Ukrainian Canadians and the United Jewish People's Order. To this end a mass rally was held in the Massey Hall at the beginning of this month.

Mr. Mickleburgh stated that a telephone survey of majority opinion already in progress showed a decisive majority of the Toronto public want no part of this plan to revive the German General Staff.

'People in this city see this plan as a major threat to the security of our country', said Mr. Mickleburgh. 'There is no block in this city without its victims of German militarism.'

ARGENTINA

Sends 500 Messages to French National Assembly

In a telegram to the French National Assembly the Argentine Peace Council asked that German rearmament should not be ratified. The French Parliament also received similar messages from the local Peace Committees of a number of towns and districts and from various popular groupings. The approximate total of messages and telegrams sent was 500. Mrs. Maria Rosa Oliver, the writer, made an appeal to the French people on this subject. It was broadcast and widely reported in the press. The Jewish Peace Committee has the support of the Jewish community in the active campaign it is conducting against German rearmament.

Ballots and Referendum in DENMARK

Two months ago a group of soldiers wearing Hitler's uniform stamped across the Town Hall Square in Copenhagen. 'Have they come back again?', asked the amazed passers-by. Leaflets told them that it was a demonstration organised by Danish young people who had put on the Wehrmacht uniform to recall the terrible days of the occupation.

The demonstration gave only a glimpse of the vast movement against the remilitarisation of West Germany that is developing among all sections of the Danish people.

At trade union meetings and at places of work ballots on the question of the remilitarisation of West Germany are being organised, letters are being sent to the Government and Parliament by the entire personnel of certain factories, deputations are going to Parliament, leaflets are being distributed and posters put up at work places.

Strong protests against the remilitarisation of West Germany have been made by workers in the Carlsberg mineral water factory, by engineers' trade union branches in the capital, by almost all the workers of the printing press of the big daily paper, Berlingske Tidende, by 104 workers of the paper, Dagens Nyheder, by a general meeting of the unskilled workers of Kolding and Holbaek, by an engineers' trade union branch in Helsingör, and others.

At a general meeting the labourers of Nöresunbdy adopted a resolution to be sent to Parliament. It suggests in particular that the Danish people should be called upon to give their opinion of German rearmament by means of a referendum.

In a recent public statement which forcefully condemns German rearmament 28 well-known intellectuals also demand a referendum.

The many popular ballots which are being held throughout the country show what the result of such a national referendum would be.

For example, a plebiscite was organised in Copenhagen a few weeks ago. Urns were set up in the streets, especially at places where Danish citizens fell under Nazi bullets during the war. The urns were also taken round from house to house. The ballot was secret and democratically controlled and it resulted in an overwhelming majority against German remilitarisation in any form.

Finnish Workers of all Opinions Unite for Peace

More than 1,200 delegates from national and local trade union bodies, from building sites, from workers' religious organisations and from the various political trends and groupings of the labour movement in Finland took part in a National Workers' Conference which was held in Helsinki in December.

Three reports were presented to the Conference. The first, given by Mr. Aarne Saarinen, President of the National Union of Building Workers, underlined the decisive importance of the struggle against the London and Paris Agreements and German rearmament.

The second report was presented by Mr. Into Kallio, a working-class writer, who dealt with the Social Democratic workers' activity for peace and stressed the need for close collaboration between all sections of the labour movement in order to make the joint struggle for a peaceful world more effective.

Mr. Juhani Moilanen, Vice-President of the National Union of Christian Workers, gave the third report in which he spoke of work for peace from the point of view of Christians.

A very wide-ranging discussion was then entered into by the representatives of the various sections of the labour movement and a resolution condemning German rearmament was unanimously adopted.

'We send our fraternal greetings to the French and German workers who are courageously fighting in the front line of the struggle', says the resolution, which ends with the following appeal:

'We ask the Social Democrats, the Communists, the Popular Democrats, the Christians and other sections of the labour movement, together with working-class newspapers, to increase their efforts and make work for peace in the labour movement even more effective. It is undoubtedly in the common interest of all groupings of workers and of all sections of the labour movement to maintain peace. We must therefore work together for peace.'

Hundreds of meetings had been held and postcards had been sent to the International Committee for the Peaceful Settlement of the German Problem in preparation for the conference which marks an important step forward in improving working-class co-operation in the common struggle against German rearmament and for peace.

The conference also sent a letter to the President of the French National Assembly.

The Peace Movement in the Soviet Union

In response to requests by our readers, who would like information on the development and activity of the Peace Movement in the Soviet Union, we are publishing in this issue the first of a series of articles giving a brief history of the Soviet Peace Movement and a summary of its present work.

I

The Soviet Peace Movement is an integral part of the World Peace Movement and, like the latter, has been in existence for five years.

The First Conference of the Soviet Peace Movement was held in Moscow in August 1949. It was attended by more than 1,200 delegates representing all the peoples and every section of the population of the Soviet Union and by delegations from 14 foreign countries.

This conference elected the Soviet Peace Committee whose Chairman is the poet Nikolai Tikhonov. It is composed of 122 members, a number of whom are widely known throughout the world. These include the writers Alexander Fadeyev and Ilya Ehrenburg, the composer Dimitri Shostakovich, the scientists Alexander Nesmeyanov, Trofim Lysenko and Evgeni Tarlé, the Metropolitan Nikolai of Krutitzky and Kolomna, and the film director Sergei Gerassimov.

The Soviet Peace Committee organised the signature-collecting campaign for the Stockholm Appeal in the Soviet Union and 115,514,703 Soviet citizens signed this historic document.

In accordance with one of the decisions of the Second World Peace Congress the Soviet Peace Committee presented to the Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R. a draft law for the protection of peace which was adopted in March 1951.

Our photograph shows Mr. Nikolai Tikhonov, Chairman of the Committee, introducing the bill in the Supreme Soviet.

The Second Conference of the Soviet Peace Movement was held in October 1950; it elected and mandated the Soviet delegates to the Second World Peace Congress.

In 1951, in accordance with a decision of the World Council of Peace, the Soviet Peace Committee tabled in the Supreme Soviet of the U.S.S.R. the request that a law for the protection of peace be adopted. This law was passed.

A signature-collecting campaign for the World Council of Peace's Appeal for a Peace Pact between the Five Great Powers was organised in the Soviet Union by the Soviet Peace Committee and 117,669,320 Soviet citizens signed the Appeal.

The Third Conference of the Soviet Peace Movement was held in November 1951 and issued an appeal asking all supporters of the World Peace Movement to bring new sections of the peoples into active struggle against the war danger.

The Fourth Conference of the Soviet Peace Movement took place in December 1952, bringing together 1,107 delegates which included 212 workers, 145 collective farmers, 115 scientists, 183 writers and artists. It mandated the Soviet delegates to the Congress of the Peoples for Peace and, in particular, gave them the duty of proclaiming 'the Soviet people's firm determination to defend the cause of peace and their eagerness to collaborate with all who sincerely want to avoid war, consolidate peace between the peoples and extend economic and cultural relations between the nations'.

The Peace Movement in the Soviet Union has played an active part in all the campaigns launched by the World Council of Peace. The Soviet Peace Committee has commemorated the great cultural anniversaries, including those of Victor Hugo, Gogol, Avicenna, Leonardo da Vinci, Copernicus, Dvorak, Chekhov, Fielding, Aristophanes and other illustrious representatives of world culture.

Professor Linus Pauling, Nobel Prize Winner, Condemns the H-Bomb

At a ceremony in honour of the Nobel Prize Winners for 1954, in the Blue Room of Stockholm Town Hall, Professor Linus Pauling, Nobel Prize Winner for Chemistry, made a speech to students in which he said:

'You will have great problems to solve and the greatest of these is that of war or peace. I think that this problem has been solved by the hydrogen bomb: there will never be another world war. The certainty that a world war would mean the destruction of the entire world and perhaps the end of civilisation will doubtless lead to a lasting peace. But it is incumbent on your generation to find the means of averting the catastrophe by improving the technique of international negotiations and creating measures of protection against insensate demagogues who are capable of pushing the nations to madness. It is up to you to accomplish this great work and I am convinced that you are capable of it.'

On the occasion of the 36th anniversary of Iceland's gaining her independence the Students' Council of the University of Iceland issued a statement in which it says:

'Today, the people of Iceland are once again obliged to defend their independence because the stationing of American troops in Iceland is a growing danger to our country.

'We strenuously protest at the stationing of U.S. troops in Iceland and demand that the occupation statute of 1951 be immediately annulled.'

ALL INDIA CONGRESS

for Peace and Asian Solidarity

The All India Congress for Peace and Asian Solidarity, which was held in Madras from December 30 to January 2, approved the World Council of Peace's proposal to call a World Assembly of Representatives of the Forces of Peace in May.

The Congress was attended by a thousand delegates including such eminent Indian public figures as Major General Sokhey, Pandit Sunderlal, Professor Kosambi, Mr. Chakkarai Chettiar, leader of the All India T.U.C., together with members of parliament and others.

Many foreign guests took part in the Congress, notably Professor J. D. Bernal F.R.S. of Great Britain, Vice-President of the World Council of Peace; Mrs. Andrea Andreen of Sweden and Mrs. Jessie Street of Australia, both members of the World Council of Peace; and Mr. Basil da Silva of Ceylon. Dr. Kuo Mo-jo, on behalf of the Chinese People's Committee for the Defence of World Peace, and the Peace Committee of the Democratic Republic of Viet Nam sent messages of greetings.

Greeting the Congress, Mr. Jean Laffitte, General Secretary of the World Council of Peace, declared that it was the duty of all Indian friends of peace to oppose aggressive plans in Asia.

In one resolution the Congress states its agreement with the Five Principles of the joint declaration of Premiers Nehru and Chou En-lai and calls on the peoples of Asia and Africa to extend and consolidate the zone of peace and to struggle for collective security based on these principles. A special resolution condemns the S.E.A.T.O. Pact. In another resolution the Congress unanimously condemns the military alliance concluded between the United States and Chiang Kai-shek. This same resolution demands that the American forces be withdrawn from Formosa and the neighbouring waters.

In Australia, the New South Wales Peace Council has published a pamphlet containing arguments taken from the best sources in support of its campaign against weapons of mass destruction. It contains a map of the Sydney district showing the various zones of destruction that would be caused by an H-bomb dropped on the city. The pamphlet is dedicated to the miners of New South Wales, to the sailors of a number of Australian ships and to the dockers of Port Kembla who helped in its publication by their constant, active support of the New South Wales Peace Council.

SYRIA and LEBANON: 'No strategic highways! We want to keep our lands!'

The United States plan to construct a military highway linking up all the countries of the Middle East is meeting with strong opposition from the peoples of this region.

The project was condemned in the Syrian Parliament 'as being a strategic highway aimed at linking the Arab countries and facilitating the transportation of troops and strategic materials'. The position of Parliament and popular protests have led the Syrian Government to reject the plan officially.

Here, on the other hand, are some extracts from a manifesto issued by the Bureau of the Lebanese Peace Committee:

'This highway would cover great areas of very fertile arable land, deprive the Lebanese people of agricultural products, wipe out the source of revenue of thousands of Lebanese families and swallow up millions of pounds which are desperately needed for construction and production plans. These latter include roads in the agricultural areas, schools, hospitals, irrigation canals and industrial enterprises. In essence — and this can be seen by looking at the plan — this highway is a military project in preparation for war.

'The authors of this plan do not hide their long-range objective. They intend that the road shall reach as far as Turkey in the North and the Persian Gulf in the South. Clearly, therefore, the highway is a new form of the imperialist plans to turn the Lebanon into a military base and to incorporate it, together with the other Arab countries, into United States and British aggressive plans in the Middle East . . .

'The Lebanese Peace Committee calls on Lebanese people of all tendencies and views, all patriots and national organisations and parties, to be vigilant and to realise the dangers and the harmful nature of this plan . . .'

The Broadening of the Peace Movement in Syria and the Struggle against Military Pacts

The following three points were discussed at a recent meeting of the Syrian Peace Committee in Damascus:

1. The political situation in Syria and the other Arab countries and the international situation.
2. The organisation of the Peace Movement in Syria.
3. The election of a Bureau and a Secretary of the Syrian Peace Movement.

Speaking on the first point, Mr. Mustapha Amin said:

'The Syrian Peace Movement now includes people of various tendencies . . . for the simple reason that it clearly expresses the people's desire for peace and the common determination to put a stop to plans and preparations for war.'

Referring to Iran and North Africa, Mr. Amin expressed the Syrian Peace Movement's complete solidarity with the peoples of these countries in their struggle for national independence and peace.

Mr. Amin ended by pointing out that the Syrian Peace Movement 'bears a heavy responsibility, that of working effectively to keep Syria out of military pacts and of helping to unite the Syrian people with the other Arab peoples struggling against these pacts.'

The second point was dealt with by Mr. Yussef Feisal who called on the local and regional committees to broaden the Movement even more.

The meeting was attended by public figures new to the Movement, such as Dr. Nazim Musshi, Professor in the University of Syria, and Mr. Munir Suleiman, writer.

29,000,000 Signatures

The National Council of Signature-collecting Movements against the Atomic and Hydrogen bombs has issued the following communique: '20,069,000 signatures demanding the prohibition of atomic and hydrogen bombs have been collected by the National Council. In the Suginami district of Tokyo, and in Zushi and Ishinomaki, over 70 per cent of the population have signed.'

The 20,069,000 signatures mentioned in this communique are those that have been checked by the National Council. The number actually collected but not yet all checked by the National Council is 29,000,000.

The National Council plans to hold a National Congress for the prohibition of A and H bombs on January 16 and appeals to the people to support it and elect delegates. One of the important items on the agenda of this Congress is the proposal to hold an International Meeting against A and H bombs in Hiroshima on August 6 next, which will be the tenth anniversary of the dropping of the first atomic bomb.

MEXICO: National Assembly of Peace Forces

The Mexican Council for Peace and Security has just issued an appeal to the peace forces in Mexico asking them to take part in a great national assembly for peace and security which will be held in mid-February.

In the introduction to the appeal the Mexican Council underlines the dangers to the people of Mexico involved in foreign interference in the country's economic and cultural life. In conclusion, the Council states:

'Security and peace — the watchwords of the peoples and of the World Council of Peace, — are inextricably bound up with the preservation of national independence and sovereignty.'

A second message has been drawn up to be distributed in the form of an appeal to the Mexican people for their approval. After showing the disastrous consequences of international tension for Mexico and the enormous dangers it would undergo should a third world war break out, the Appeal points out:

'For all these reasons it is not only necessary but urgent to bring together in a National Assembly all those forces which, freely and without undertaking any commitments, have a sincere, honest and courageous desire to build peace; all who believe that peaceful co-existence between men is in their own hands; all who prefer a calm decision to armed conflict and a pact of friendship to invasion; and, lastly, all who hope that the nations will establish between themselves relations based on equality.'

In every locality and State the most eminent and influential signatories of the Appeal will set up Sponsoring Committees for the Assembly.

The Mexican Council for Peace and Security is also making sure that there will be wide public support for the financing of the Assembly and a Finance Committee has been set up to this end. One of the first things it did was to set up 'posadas de la paz' or 'peace stands' which, in addition to bringing in money, did useful publicity work. The committee is also planning to send round films with a bearing on peace.

Cuban People Discuss Programme for a Peaceful Foreign Policy

The Cuban Peace Movement has drawn up a 'Programme for a Peaceful Foreign Policy'. This document defines the basic features of such a policy in 21 points and has been widely distributed and submitted for the approval of the people at many public meetings, gatherings and debates. The discussion of the programme at every level will be rounded off by a National Assembly at which the results of this popular discussion will be brought out.

Here are a few brief extracts from the main points of the programme:

'3. The Republic of Cuba shall declare itself opposed to interference by any country in the internal affairs of another . . .

'6. The Republic will support all moves in favour of negotiation at the United Nations and elsewhere . . .

'9. The Republic of Cuba will stress . . . the urgent need to ban the use of atomic, thermo-nuclear, bacteriological and all other weapons of mass destruction . . .

'10. The Republic of Cuba will not be able to join military pacts which commit the lives of its sons to undertakings contrary to the people's interests and to the national defence . . .

'11. Cuba's representatives in international organisations and especially in the United Nations will support all moves towards disarmament . . .

'12. The Republic of Cuba will follow a policy of intensive and extensive economic exchanges without discrimination of any kind . . .

'18. The Republic of Cuba must favour and develop a policy of intensive cultural exchanges . . .'

Rosario Doctors Publish Booklet on Banning of Weapons of Mass Destruction

The doctors of Rosario have just published a booklet expressing their anxiety at the danger to mankind involved in the testing of atomic weapons and their possible use as an instrument of aggression. Two of the town's doctors present the booklet in two brief explanatory notes. It contains many photographs showing the destruction wreaked on the cities of Hiroshima and Nagasaki and their populations by the atomic bomb, and also details on the destructive effects of these bombs, together with the opinions of representative Argentinians and newspapers supporting the campaign.

The Peace Movement of the province of Buenos Aires has also expressed the urgency of mobilising the people to obtain the banning of nuclear weapons. The appeal asks the people to demand that the Argentine Government intervene in the United Nations for the banning of weapons of mass destruction.

Argentina Protects Oil from Foreign Take-over

Argentina's oil industry is under threat of being taken over by foreign monopolies. Against this, a group of well-known persons, including leaders of the Argentine Peace Movement, have issued an appeal for a campaign of petitions.

The appeal first of all points out that 'Argentina's oil, in the hands of the Argentine people, is indispensable for economic, industrial and technical development and guarantees the national defence'. It stresses that the foreign monopolies want to take over the oil industry to serve their war policy and concludes:

'The signatories express their strong opposition to any oil concessions and . . . demand that all Argentina's oil should remain in the possession of the Argentine people . . . and be used for a policy of national independence, progress and peace.'

There were various demonstrations for the protection of Argentina's oil on December 13, proclaimed 'Oil Day'.

BRAZIL

The Legislative Assembly of the State of Sao Paulo has adopted a proposal to renew relations with the Soviet Union, the People's Republic of China and the People's Democracies made by Mr. Cid Franco, member of parliament.

Mr. Mario Brandao Pimentel, former Brazilian ambassador to the Soviet Union, has stated that he considered this to be an opportune moment for the resumption of relations with the Soviet Union. He noted that the Soviet Union is exporting goods that Brazil urgently needs.

Present Tasks of Chilean Peace Movement

The Chilean Peace Council held a session in Santiago on December 11th and 12th. Mr. Juan Acevedo M. P. presented a report entitled: 'The forthcoming World Assembly of Representatives of the Forces of Peace and Chile's participation in it'. It calls on the Chilean people to send representatives of all their active forces as delegates to the Assembly.

Reports on the tasks of the Movement were presented.

According to the resolutions adopted, the Chilean Peace Council proposes to organise wider and wider activity:

1. Against the decisions of the Rio de Janeiro Conference which hinder the economic development of the country.

2. To condemn the United States-Chile bilateral military pact.

3. To defend the national sovereignty at all points.

4. For free trade with all countries.

On this latter point, the Chilean Peace Council will approach all bodies and the representatives of all sectors of opinion who put forward this solution of the crisis in Chile.

The Chilean Movement demands that the prospecting of strategic minerals, especially radioactive minerals, should be supervised and warns of the danger of H bomb tests in the Antarctic or in Chilean territorial waters, as certain items of information would seem to indicate.

Referring to Latin American affairs in general, the Chilean Movement condemns the policy of military blocs and urges the holding of an economic conference like that which brought together public figures and members of parliament at Santiago de Chile in July 1954.

In conclusion, the Movement declares its support for the world campaign for the banning of weapons of mass destruction and for the negotiated settlement of international differences.

Active Preparations for Commemoration of Cultural Anniversaries in 1955

Wide interest has been shown in the World Council's invitation to commemorate the following six great figures of world culture in 1955:

SCHILLER	— 150th anniversary of his death
MONTESQUIEU	— 200th anniversary of his death
MICKIEWICZ	— 100th anniversary of his death
ANDERSEN	— 150th anniversary of his birth
CERVANTES	— 350th anniversary of the publication of Don Quixote
WHITMAN	— 100th anniversary of the publication of Leaves of Grass

Moreover, the Cultural Commission proposed to collaborate with the All India Peace Council in the celebration of the 1500th anniversary of the magnificent frescoes in the Ajanta caves.

In a number of countries memorial events are in preparation. They are being given a form that will win popular support and the participation of many intellectuals of various backgrounds. In the near future we shall be giving in these pages the plans drawn up by a number of National Peace Committees.

Among the ideas that it is proposed to implement, we may mention one put forward by intellectuals in certain countries and by cultural and popular organisations. It is that messages of greetings and support should be sent to representative organisations of the nations to which the great figures celebrated in 1955 belong. This, and other similar measures, will certainly strengthen friendly relations between the countries and facilitate the establishment of closer and more cordial links.

The Peace Committees of Germany and Poland have decided to invite foreign intellectuals to the events that will take place in their countries, while the German intellectuals are prepared to go to countries where Schiller and Mickiewicz are being commemorated. The Peace Committees of Latin America are preparing to collaborate with the Spanish Peace Committee in the commemoration of Cervantes and Don Quixote so that this anniversary may be celebrated on as wide a scale as possible. They are also planning various events to honour the work of Walt Whitman who will be specially commemorated in the United States where the American Peace Crusade is making active preparations. In Czechoslovakia, a programme has been worked out for the commemoration of Andersen's anniversary. In implementing it the Peace Movement will have the collaboration of the Ministry of Culture, the State Publishing House, the Publishing House for Children's Books, the State Cinematograph Society, the Committee for the Defence of Children, the Children's and Puppet Theatres, both professional and amateur, and so on. The programme includes puppet films and cartoons based on Andersen's tales; a memorial evening with readings from his works and films; an open air evening gala for children in the Julius Fucik Park of Culture and Leisure; many theatrical and puppet presentations; an exhibition of the various editions of Andersen's tales, illustrations done by the best Czech artists and decors for several of the tales, 'The Nightingale and the Emperor', for example. In the towns and districts many events will be organised by the schools, parent-teachers' associations, houses of popular education, amateur groups and various clubs.

The Anniversaries in 1954

JAPAN

In Japan, many meetings in honour of Aristophanes, Fielding, Dvorak and Chekhov were held in 1954.

The 'Geizyutseza' drama group performed Aristophanes' comedy 'Lysistrata' in Tokyo for a month in the Spring, then at the Peace Festival held during the month of August in Kansai district, where they played to an audience of 40,000.

Chekhov's plays were performed many times in almost all the big cities of Japan. In Kobe, for example, cultural groups, trade union organisations and so on jointly organised public meetings at which the anniversary of Chekhov's death was commemorated by lectures on his life and work, readings of some of his short stories and the presentation of a number of his comedies, 'The Bear', 'Corporal Prishibieieff' and others.

A poster announcing the Kobe memorial meetings.

HUNGARY

In collaboration with the Hungarian Writers' Association, the Cultural Commission of the Hungarian Peace Council has organised a Henry Fielding memorial meeting in Budapest. The evening's programme included a lecture by Professor Joszef Sziget on the significance of the great English novelist's work and the reading of extracts from Tom Jones and Jonathan Wild. The meeting was attended by literary figures and members of the British Embassy.

The students and professors of the Advanced School for Foreign Languages also held a memorial meeting in honour of Fielding.

BULGARIA

In Bulgaria, Fielding's anniversary was commemorated by the publication of many articles in the press, by broadcasts, and by lectures in Sofia and the provinces at which extracts from Fielding's novels were read and music by English composers was played.

HOLLAND

In Holland, the anniversary of Chekhov's death was commemorated at a meeting organised by the Amsterdam Actors' Association in the Stadsschouwburg Theatre in that city. They gave a performance of Chekhov's play Three Sisters to a packed house. The guests included the Soviet Ambassador to Holland and a group of Dutch scientists who had just visited the Soviet Union.

For the 50th anniversary of the death of Antonin Dvorak, Dr. Peter van Anrooy, conductor, member of the Dutch Peace Council, gave a week of broadcast talks illustrated with records on the work of Dvorak and Smetana.

POLAND

In Poland, many cultural, social and political organisations and associations have taken part in a great movement to popularise the works of Chekhov and Dvorak. They include the Polish Writers' Association, the Composers' Association, organisations of women and young people, the 'Popular Science' Association, the press and the publishing houses.

In town and village the Houses of Culture and clubs have held many concerts, lectures and exhibitions which have aroused great interest.

The complete works of Chekhov and scores by Dvorak have been published.

In the capital memorial meetings have been held. There was one in honour of Antonin Dvorak at which the Czech composer Vaclav Dobias was present and the Czech violonist A. Plocek gave a recital. Another in honour of Anton Chekhov was attended by Professor Anissimov of the Soviet Union.

Arab Writers Take a Stand in Defence of National Cultures and of Peace

Arab intellectuals have often expressed their intention to meet and decide on the best way of developing their nationa cultures and of opposing all that hinders or sidetracks this development. They also want to express their solidarity with their people's struggle for the maintenance of their sovereignty and for world peace. With a view to organising such a gathering a meeting attended by representatives from Lebanon, Jordan and Iraq was held on the initiative of the Syrian Writer's Association, and it decided to call a Conference of Arab writers. The Conference took place in Damascus last September at the headquarters of the Syrian Fine Arts Society, with very satisfactory results.

A number of the most eminent intellectuals of Syria, Egypt, Lebanon, Iraq, Jordan and Bahrein, of widely differing political and philosophical opinions took part in the Conference, including the poets Wasfi Krunfli, Abu Salma, Nassuh Fakhori, Sheikh Abdullah Alaili, Salah Zeinim Hassib Kayali, Shaker Mustafa, Marun Abbud, Ahmed Aref Zein, Hussein Mrooé, and Mahimed Itani. The Syrian Prime Minister, Mr. Saida Gazzi, sent greetings to the conference, and Mr. Alexei Surkov and Mr. Boris Polevoi sent a message of friendship on behalf of Soviet writers. Messages of greetings were also received from the Argentine Cultural Congress and from other organisations and persons in various countries.

The Conference took the decision to create the Arab Writers' Association, the motto of which is 'free thought and a happy life'. It replaces both the Syrian Writers' Association and the Lebanese League of the Mountain, which have been dissolved. In the near future this Association will have national sections in each of the Arab countries.

The Conference adopted a number of important resolutions: on the struggle against illiteracy; on universal and free primary education; against the restrictions on secondary education; for the entry of poor students into the Arab universities and faculties for higher studies; for the improvement of the living conditions of masters and professors; and for the removal from school books of all that is opposed to patriotic and scientific principles and to friendship between the peoples.

The Conference also resolved to revive the literary and artistic traditions of the Arab countries, to push forward the translation of foreign progressive works into Arabic and of the best Arab books into other languages. It recommended writers to do all they could to strengthen the national resistance of the Arab countries to foreign interference and to the efforts to enlist them in unjust wars; to struggle against the obscurantism spread by certain powers and which creates an anti-national attitude through the medium of books, films and foreign schools; to defend democratic freedoms; to broaden exchanges with progressive culture the world over; and to strive to avert the horrors of an imperialist war from the Arab countries. In order to perform these tasks successfully, the Conference called on all Arab countries to join their efforts to those of all honest men and women throughout the world for the consolidation of world peace.

The Arab Writers' Conference ended with a great literary festival at which poets and writers read extracts from their works.

Arab Writers' Week

Another meeting, lasting a week, was held on the invitation of the Lebanese Writers' Association. It adopted resolutions which have a certain similarity to those of the Damascus Conference. They deal mainly with the struggle for free thought and human dignity and against foreign interference in the internal affairs of the Arab countries.

The Soviet Writers' Congress, held in Moscow from December 15 to 26, with many foreign guests present, was an important cultural event. In the words of one of the resolutions adopted: 'Congress welcomes and supports the proposal to call a World Congress of Writers in 1955, widely representative of men of letters of all countries and bringing them together on a platform of peace and culture.'

FIRST CONTINENTAL EXHIBITION OF ETCHINGS AND DRAWINGS FOR PEACE ABOUT TO OPEN IN AMERICA

The Argentine Committee of Plastic Arts for Peace has just invited American artists to take part in the 'First Continental Exhibition of Etchings and Drawings for Peace' which will be held in Buenos Aires.

The Organising Committee is composed of well-known artists, winners of various national and international prizes, such as D. Urruchua, A. Vigo, L. Falcini, C. Giambiagi, A. Berni, W. Melgarejo Munoz, E. Policastro, J. C. Castagnino, C. Biscione and A. Devoto. The rules lay down that the sole theme is peace or the rejection of war, but there is complete freedom of interpretation. Works making either a real or symbolical allusion to the internal or foreign policy of any government will not be accepted. After the opening in Buenos Aires the exhibition will be presented in the main cities of America. In its appeal to artists the Organising Committee states that the exhibition will be a 'demonstration of solidarity towards the universal movement for peace, especially at this time when warlike forces are seeking to unleash wars of extermination and enslavement and are hindering the free development of culture. This leads to the banning of artistic creation. In this situation art, which is fed by, and has its roots in, the life of the people, truth and peace, cannot refrain from expressing the people's anxiety and from making its message of protest and brotherhood heard. The First Continental Exhibition of Etchings and Drawings for Peace will therefore have a profound significance, for it will help to preserve the sources of cultural riches and to foster the free development of artistic expression. It will promote cultural exchanges between the peoples of America on the one hand, and between them and the rest of the world on the other.'

CHARLES CHAPLIN:

'May 1955 Bring Peace throughout the World!'

'A Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year; and may the ensuing year bring peace and security throughout to the world.' This was the message recently sent by Charlie Chaplin to an old age pensioners' party in the Borough of Lambeth in London. The party was organised out of a gift of £ 2,000 Chaplin made to the Borough Council of Lambeth, where he spent his childhood. The money was part of his International Peace Prize.

The N.A.T.O. Decisions to use Atomic Weapons as Described in the British and American Press

The Times, 18 December 1954:

'General Gruenther is understood to have ... requested formal agreement to military planning on the basis that nuclear weapons would be used. It was apparently agreed that the military planning should be conducted on this basis and that it should make the most efficient use of nuclear and other weapons ...

'As nuclear weapons become more readily available the day approaches when they will be necessary and normal for all N.A.T.O. forces ... The decision to plan on this basis seems, therefore, to bring nearer a decision to distribute such weapons to N.A.T.O. countries which do not at present possess them — for instance to Germany once she has become a N.A.T.O. member ...

'There is now general agreement that military units and formations will have to be on a smaller, more highly trained scale and that they must be highly mobile, so that troops can be transported over positions contaminated in a nuclear war to seize or hold key points in uncontaminated areas.'

The Manchester Guardian, 18 December 1954:

'Thus the council has tacitly agreed that the military commanders can count on being allowed to use their atomic weapons in defence and the whole military organisation is to be recast on that basis ...

'The North Atlantic Council has accepted the thesis ... that we are already "beyond the point of no return" with atomic weapons. It has accepted the view that our forces are bound to use atomic weapons against any major attack but has retained for civilians the power to decide what constitutes a major attack.

'The decision does not of course affect the independence of the United States and Great Britain to decide on the use of their long range bomber forces, which do not come under N.A.T.O. control.'

The Times, 20 December 1954:

'Commenting on this decision, Mr. Spaak said that it met exactly the wishes of the military, by authorising them to prepare for atomic war, but kept in civil hands the responsibility for deciding on the use of the atomic weapons.'

Press Interview of Mr. Foster Dulles reported in The Times, 22 December 1954:

'He explained that current military policies would gradually involve the use of atomic weapons for tactical purposes, in the same way that gunpowder had displaced the crossbow ...

'The issue of whether or not to use weapons of mass destruction arose in any war and, he suggested, did not involve a distinction between the destructive power of atomic weapons and that of old ones.'

The New York Times, 18 December 1954:

'Mr. Anderson (Robert B. Anderson, Deputy Secretary of Defence) declared that military aid by the United States to its allies would be continued at "about current levels" and that both weapons and the training thus supplied would be "reoriented" to meet the needs revealed by studies of "the new concepts of warfare".'

New York Herald Tribune, 18 December 1954:

(Report by Don Cook)

'The United States position is basically: "We will consult if there is time and it seems necessary, but we will not have our hands tied." In any case the military planners have their clear directive, and the rest of the problem can only be decided by time or events.'

Arguments Designed to Confuse the People

'The decision whether to use atomic weapons has been left in the hands of the civilians.'

The aim of this argument is to confuse the issue and to gain acceptance of the idea that the use of atomic weapons is admissable. In fact the military plans are to be based on the use of atomic weapons. The military organisation is to be recast so that eventually the only way it will be capable of fighting will be by using atomic weapons. Thus the carrying out of these decisions will mean that if another war does start it will inevitably be atomic war. Furthermore these decisions, if applied, would make almost impossible any further negotiation on the banning or non-utilisation of atomic weapons. One of the aims of all the fuss that has been made about whether the politicans or the generals should decide has been precisely to distract attention from this principal question — that nuclear weapons must not be used at all, that experiments must be banned and that eventually all nuclear weapons must be forbidden with measures of strict international inspection and control.

'It is only tactical weapons that are involved.'

It sounds so simple. And, in fact, this argument has had a certain success. 'Tactical' weapons sound so innocent and permissible. The aim of the argument is to disarm the opposition and win admittance for the principle of using nuclear weapons. These arms are 'tactical' only in the sense that they are comparatively easy to move about and do not need to be carried in long range strategic bombers as, at present, the hydrogen bomb does. The smallest atomic missile among these weapons has an explosive power of 12 or more 'blockbusters' of the last war, with, in addition, dangerous radiation effects. The rockets and guided missiles can be equipped with warheads of the power and effect of the atomic bomb dropped on Hiroshima.

Once such weapons are used atomic war has begun. The only defence is to stop them being used.

'There is not much point in developing new weapons unless we incorporate them in our armed forces and adapt our armed forces accordingly.' (The Manchester Guardian: Editorial, 20 December, 1954.)

Once again the aim is to avoid the real question. It is assumed that atomic weapons are essential to 'defence' and must be produced. That the existence of these weapons is a threat to civilisation, that experiments with them threaten the continuance of life on this planet, are already having unpredictable effects on animal and vegetable organisms and on the atmosphere — these facts are ignored. The dilemma is very simply solved. Universal agreement not to make these arms, to forbid experiments, to forbid their use, would make it unnecessary to incorporate them in the armed forces.

Appel contre la preparation de la guerre atomique

Aujourd'hui des gouvernements préparent le déclenchement d'une guerre atomique.

Ils veulent en faire admettre la fatalité aux peuples.

L'usage des armes atomiques conduirait à une guerre d'extermination.

Nous déclarons que le gouvernement qui déclencherait la guerre atomique perdrait la confiance de son peuple et se verrait condamner par tous les peuples.

Dès à présent, nous nous opposerons à ceux qui organisent la guerre atomique.

Nous exigeons la destruction dans tous les pays des stocks d'armes atomiques et l'arrêt immédiat de leur fabrication.

STATEMENT BY PROFESSOR JOLIOT-CURIE

President of the World Council of Peace

We still have present in our hearts the emotion we felt when the extent of the damage wreaked by the atom bombs on Hiroshima and Nagasaki became known. That was in August 1945, and every year since then we have learned that the effects of the dropping of these two bombs are still coming to light. The list of victims and their sufferings is not closed.

The problem of the banning of weapons of mass destruction had already been raised in 1945, and at their meeting in Moscow in December of that year the Foreign Ministers Mr. Bevin, Mr. Byrnes and Mr. Molotov demanded that a special committee to study this problem should be created alongside the Security Council of the United Nations.

The committee was created. Negotiations that proved difficult were entered into and pursued. New factors arose one after another: the disappearance of the atomic monopoly, the perfecting and testing of thermonuclear bombs thousands of times more powerful than the Hiroshima bomb.

A further wave of anxiety arose out of the terrible consequences of the explosion in the Pacific on March 1, 1954. Fishermen who were several hundred miles away from the scene of the explosion were all stricken and one of them has died. The repeated warnings of scientists competent in the matter were dramatically confirmed. A new anxiety arose but hope began to revive through the apparition of certain signs of a relaxation of international tension, in relation both to the ending of wars going on and to the successful conclusion of the negotiations in the important Disarmament Commission of the United Nations.

It cannot be denied that in the sum total of factors that succeeded in preventing the use of the atomic weapon in Asia and in bringing about a certain easing of international tension, a role of the first importance was played by the mass consultation that took place in all countries and in all social circles through the launching of the Stockholm Appeal.

Everyone was asked for his opinion; all the questions were raised; all the answers given were thoroughly criticised. And the conscience of the peoples was so strongly revealed that the most responsible and powerful political leaders had to recognise the power of public opinion in the question of the use of atomic weapons.

Disarmament seemed possible; the negotiated settlement of political problems appeared over the horizon; the peoples began to hope for a stable peace and to see the promise of happiness ... It is precisely at this moment that acts are committed which put everything back into the melting-pot; the rearmament of Germany, and the decisions of the N.A.T.O. Council on the use of nuclear weapons. As if the principle of the use of these weapons had been admitted.

Clearly, these acts, which are part and parcel of the policy of 'positions of strength', are diametrically opposed to the success of the negotiations going on in the United Nations Organisation and are a threat to peace.

As to the Atlantic Council's extremely grave decision, which implicitly admits the legalisation of the atomic weapon — if there has not yet been a strong reaction on the part of public opinion, it is because the operation has been skilfully conducted. Public opinion was 'softened up' by carefully prepared statements by military leaders and the decisions themselves were presented in a diplomatic and technical form which makes it difficult to appreciate their full consequences.

Today, when a great number of atomic weapons have been produced and when even more powerful weapons have been perfected and tested — with what tragic results — an attempt is being made to override the censure of public opinion and to lead it, by stages, to accept the possible use of tactical atomic weapons, then strategic atom bombs, and finally thermonuclear bombs. It would appear that henceforth discussion should only bear on how nuclear weapons should be used, whereas the first and only problem is the very principle of the use of these weapons.

In short, these recent decisions of the Atlantic Council are the final touch to the preparations for the unleashing of atomic war, preparations which bear within themselves — and I am weighing my words — the possible annihilation of the human race.

The people will not thus passively allow themselves to be dragged down to collective suicide. For that is what is involved. Once nuclear war began, it would be waged with the full range of existing weapons. Think of the deserts that are Hiroshima and Nagasaki. Think of the unfortunate victims in the Pacific who were hundreds of miles away from the explosion on March 1, 1954. Tell yourself that nowhere will you be safe and that effective civil defence is an illusion. Understand that the nuclear bombing of any target in the world will sow immediate or delayed death even in places very far away.

The problem that is raised is not that of the level — General Staff, Minister, or meeting of Ministers, with or without veto — at which atomic war will be decided on. The problem is: will mankind accept the ruins and destruction, the death of hundreds of millions of living beings, wretchedness for the survivors and the probable birth of freaks, and even the possible annihilation of all life on our planet?

APPEAL AGAINST THE PREPARATIONS FOR ATOMIC WAR

Today, certain governments are preparing to let loose atomic war.

They are trying to make the peoples accept it as inevitable.

The use of atomic weapons would result in a war of extermination.

We declare that any government that lets loose atomic war will forfeit the trust of its people and find itself condemned by every people of the world.

Now and in the future, we shall oppose those who organise atomic war.

We demand the destruction of all stocks of atomic weapons wherever they may be and the immediate stopping of their manufacture.

Vienna, January 19, 1955

On January 19, in the course of the closing session of the extended meeting of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace held in Vienna from January 17 to 19, the following speech was delivered by Professor Frédéric Joliot-Curie, President of the World Council of Peace:

The Bureau of the World Council of Peace has taken the decision to launch a great signature campaign to express the universal opposition to the preparations for an atomic war.

This campaign will begin without delay and develop on the basis of an Appeal which you have asked me to draft.

In drawing up the Appeal I have relied on the help and collaboration of a number of you, and together we have taken inspiration from the ideas expressed by the speakers on this rostrum.

The text had to be written in a style devoid of all subtlety, in the simple and common-sense language of men and women who want to live in peace and have confidence in the future of mankind.

Before I read the text, allow me to cite a statement of opposition to the use of the atom bomb that was expressed at the time when that weapon was perfected.

The terms of a report drawn up by a committee of American scientists will always remain fresh in my memory. This was the James Franck Committee which sent a report to the Defence Secretary in Washington on June 11, 1945, two months before Hiroshima. The report opposes any decision to use the atom bomb in war and says that if the United States were to be the first country to use this new means of blind destruction against mankind it would forfeit the support of world public opinion, unleash an arms race and jeopardise the possibility of obtaining an international agreement on the control of these weapons in the future.

This group of scientists showed great clear-sightedness. In the years that followed scientists from various countries strove to warn public opinion of the dangers involved in these weapons. But, while they helped to enlighten public opinion, they were unable alone to create a great movement of censure and opposition to atomic war. It is one of our movement's great merits that, in Stockholm in 1950, it launched a great campaign for the banning of the atom bomb and strict supervision of this measure.

The Stockholm Appeal had very great repercussions and it cannot be denied that it played a role of the first importance in preventing the use of the atom bomb in Asia.

Governments which want to base their international policy on recourse to atomic weapons know that they must reckon with public opinion.

That is why, in organising and preparing for atomic war, they are striving to cover up their operations by skilful manœuvring. The decisions taken by the Atlantic Council last December are one of these manœuvres, and they constitute an act of the utmost gravity which it was our duty to denounce. These governments are trying to direct public attention to the ways of using atomic weapons and to the question of which bodies would be competent to take a decision on the unleashing of atomic war, as if the principle of the use of atomic weapons had been admitted.

We had to bring this new factor out clearly and to make an immediate call to the peoples to oppose those who are thus preparing for atomic war. We must not wait until such a war of blind extermination has been unleashed to condemn its authors; those who are preparing for it must be opposed now. The basic desire to live and to love one's neighbour demands that we should call for the destruction of stocks of atomic weapons wherever they may be and for the immediate stopping of their manufacture.

It is this desire to live and this love for one's fellow man that will tomorrow animate thousands and thousands of men

The President of the World Council of Peace is the first to sign the Appeal against the preparations for atomic war and women in every country and every city to go from door to door, from house to house, and in the factories and fields, collecting signatures to our Appeal. Thus will be raised the most powerful of all barriers to atomic war.

Professor Joliot-Curie then read the Appeal and it was adopted unanimously.

The extended meeting of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace was held in Vienna on January 17, 18 and 19 1955.

The following two points were on the agenda:

1) The tasks of the Peace Movement with relation to the N.A.T.O. Council decision on the use of atomic weapons.

2) The continued development of the struggle of all the forces for peace against the ratification and implementation of the Paris Agreements for the revival of German militarism.

Professor Frédéric Joliot-Curie was in the chair and the meeting was attended by 80 persons representing 32 countries from every continent.

On January 18 and 19 the sessions were open to the representatives of the press.

In addition to the Appeal against the preparations for atomic war — which is given on another page — the Bureau adopted a Declaration and an Appeal to the peoples of Europe.

DECLARATION OF THE BUREAU OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

At the outset of 1955, two threats to the peace of the world have become definite: the remilitarisation of Germany and the steps taken to prepare and justify atomic war. These threats come just at the moment when new prospects of peace are opening before the peoples. It is now a matter of the acts of responsible governments, and no longer only the declarations of politicians and generals.

These acts deliberately flout the desires of the peoples concerned and world opinion.

The remilitarisation of Germany, and the obstacles placed by S.E.A.T.O. in the way of a peaceful solution of the problems of Asia, underline the exceptional gravity of the measures adopted by the Council of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

These measures are designed to regularise atomic war, which has been condemned by the conscience of mankind and is contrary to international law, and persuade public opinion to accept it as a necessity. They can lead to the automatic unleashing of atomic war in Asia as well as in Europe. From now on, they threaten with this peril every country on every continent.

The remilitarisation of Germany and the regularisation of atomic war are closely linked. They are the fruits of a single policy founded on the division of the world into two blocs, the drive for positions of strength and recourse to war in prosecuting international differences.

The peoples know from experience that this policy can lead only to economic chaos, poverty and war. The World Peace Movement calls upon them to appreciate the magnitude of the new dangers and to avert them by all means in their power.

The concerted action of the peoples can end the policy of blocs. It can oblige the governments to negotiate, to disarm and to use nuclear energy solely for peaceful purposes.

Mankind will not passively allow itself to be led toward the disasters of atomic war.

The problem is not to calculate at what staff or government level atomic war may be decided on, or to draw distinctions between so called tactical and strategic weapons. The task is to reject the destruction, oppression and suffering that it entails, to ensure to all the peoples of the world their independence and the right to develop their own wealth, and take together the path towards security and prosperity.

It is to fulfil this task that the appeal to maintain the struggle against the remilitarisation of Germany and the appeal to organise a great signature campaign to stop the use of atomic weapons have been issued.

It is to this same end that the call has been issued for a great World Assembly that on May 22nd, 1955, in Helsinki shall bring together representatives of all tendencies and organisations for peace.

Vienna, January 19, 1955

APPEAL TO THE PEOPLES OF EUROPE

The peoples of Europe refuse to accept the Wehrmacht.

They oppose the revival — a bare ten years after the end of the war — of the army which brought death and destruction down upon all Europe.

They are revolted by the idea that atomic weapons should be put at the disposal of Hitler's former generals.

The peoples will never accept this crime.

The ratification of the Wehrmacht treaties is far from being achieved.

In London and Paris, when the parliaments voted on the ratification, not even one half the members supported them. The governments, like the parliaments, have been obliged openly to acknowledge the hostility of the peoples concerned. But they are resolved to override the opposition of the peoples of Europe, and in particular the growing opposition of the German people themselves.

The peoples cannot be bound by decisions adopted by parliaments against their will.

Today, the governments that signed the London and Paris agreements can no longer cover up the tragic consequences of the creation of a new Wehrmacht: the remilitarisation of Western Germany would result in the setting up of armed forces in Eastern Germany. It would speed up the arms race. It would make the peaceful reunification of Germany impossible for years to come and would prevent any possibility of the collective organisation of European security.

The World Council of Peace calls on the men and women of every country to put all their strength, all their determination and all their courage into preventing the ratification and implementation of the London and Paris agreements.

It calls on all the men and women who have been waging such a magnificent struggle against the rearmament of Germany, and on all those also who are today becoming aware of the imminent danger which it involves, to join and multiply their efforts to oppose the revival of German militarism and to organise the security of Europe with participation of a peace-loving Germany.

Europe, supported by all the peoples of the world, will not let a new Wehrmacht be thrust upon her.

Preparing the World Assembly

A Regional Peace Council in Britain Starts its Preparations

Recently the Surrey Peace Council sent out to all local peace councils and groups in Surrey a detailed plan for the campaign for the World Assembly. (Surrey is a county with a population of just over a million on the southern edge of London.) The Council called upon all local councils in the region to hold meetings before the end of 1954 to discuss these plans.

The different proposals are divided up into periods of action — some to be put into effect before the end of January, these to be followed by others in later months. Included also are proposals for action after the World Assembly has taken place.

Among the proposals are:

In each locality an approach by the peace council to local organisations, M.Ps.. the Mayor and other public figures.

Each local peace council to prepare a peace policy declaration.

Consistent efforts by personal calls and conversations to ensure that the Assembly is discussed in other organisations — for example, trade union and Labour Party branches.

Planned and consistent efforts to get local peace council speakers invited to all types of local organisation.

Invitation meetings of local peace councils to which guests from many other organisations and groups, and well-known individuals, are invited to discuss the World Assembly.

Each local council to organise at least one widely sponsored public meeting for the selection and endorsement of representatives from the area.

A regular information bulletin to be published by the Surrey Peace Council.

Every activity to be made the occasion of raising funds for the campaign, for sending delegates and to pay for the Assembly.

All these activities to be closely linked with the continuous work of the peace councils against German rearmament, for European unity, against atomic weapons.

Appeal of the All India Peace Congress

The All India Peace Congress held in Madras on December 30 — January 2 adopted a resolution on the preparations for the World Assembly of Representatives of the Forces of Peace which says:

'Fourteen hundred delegates representing different walks of life, assembled at the All India Congress for Peace and Asian Solidarity, heartily welcome the decision adopted by the World Council of Peace at its meeting in Stockholm on November 18—21, 1954 to hold a World Assembly for Peace "including representatives of all the forces and tendencies that make for peace . . ."

'Congress believes that "the mighty movement of all peoples can prevent the division of the world into opposite blocs, prevent the rebirth of the armies that have been the source of so much misery and mourning and free mankind from the crushing cost of arms budgets. Only such a mighty movement can ensure the welfare, security and independence of all nations."

'Congress is confident that all Peace Committees will start preparations for the success of the World Assembly right now by electing delegations, by raising funds for sending delegates to this great Assembly and popularising the Appeal of the World Council of Peace.'

German Federal Republic

The Presiding Committee of the Peace Committee of the German Federal Republic met in Düsseldorf on January 9. The session was attended by guests from all parts of Germany.

The Presiding Committee welcomed the appeal launched by the World Council of Peace for a great World Assembly of Representatives of the Forces of Peace. In preparation for the Assembly meetings and conferences are being organised at many places in the Federal Republic. The West German Peace Movement will be represented by a strong delegation at the German Congress for Security and Peace to be held in Leipzig in mid-April.

Norway

The Rev. Ragnar Forbeck, First Chaplain of Oslo Cathedral, member of the World Council of Peace, said in an interview:

'It gives me particular joy to see so many of my colleagues from both the East and the West playing an active part in the work of the World Council of Peace. But it is desirable that the leaders of the different Churches should — as Pastor Niemöller has done — take a much greater part in work for peace. There is no doubt that the great World Assembly will be of vital importance for the strengthening and broadening of the whole Peace Movement.

'My wish for the New Year is this: that Christians should play a much more active part in work for peace.'

Chile

In the course of the Second National Assembly of the Chilean Peace Movement — that is, the session of the National Peace Council — held in Santiago de Chile on December 11 and 12, 1954, Mr. Juan Acevedo M.P., of the Chilean Labour Party, made a special intervention on the preparations for the World Assembly. He pointed out how important it was for Chile and emphasised the varied forms of activity that must be used in the great campaign for electing the authentic representatives of all sections of the nation, whether they belong to the Peace Movement or not.

The World Federation of Trade Unions:

'The struggle for peace, our essential task'

The texts adopted by the General Council of the World Federation of Trade Unions at its meeting in Warsaw, December 9-14, 1954 underline the great importance of action by workers in the struggle for peace.

The Council issued an appeal against the Paris Agreements which says:

'Workers of Germany,

'We urge you to let nothing divide you. Strengthen your unity and fight like brothers against the revival of militarism in your country, against the Paris Agreements, for the peaceful and democratic unification of your country. Do not allow the Paris Agreements to be ratified.

'Workers of France,

'Today, come out with all your strength against the ratification of the Paris Agreements. Do not allow the menace of German divisions, this time armed with atomic guns, to rise again on your Eastern frontier.

'Workers of Great Britain,

'Let no one deceive you. Do not allow German militarists again to threaten British towns with the fate of Coventry.

'Workers of the whole of Europe,

'Remember your dead, remember your bomb-torn cities, the torture chambers, the crematoria. Do not allow the murderers to be rearmed and to be given atomic weapons.'

We take the following passage from the General Resolution:

'In view of the present international situation, the General Council of the W.F.T.U. considers the struggle for peace in Europe, in Asia and throughout the world to be the essential and urgent task of the workers of all countries.

'The General Council of the W.F.T.U. therefore urges trade union organisations:

— to bring the workers into widespread, united, militant action against the Paris Agreements, against the revival of German militarism, and for negotiation, collective security, disarmament and peace;

— to call on the workers and their trade union organisations to support more actively, and be the foremost champions of, the activity and campaigns of the World Peace Movement;

— to call on them to give the fullest help in ensuring the success of the World Assembly for Peace to be held in 1955.'

In the Name of 140 Million Women . . .

In a statement issued by its Secretariat, the Women's International Democratic Federation 'warmly approves, in the name of 140 million women from 66 countries, all the decisions of the World Council of Peace adopted at its last session in Stockholm.

'The Women's International Democratic Federation greets the initiative of the World Council of Peace in calling a World Assembly of Representatives of the Peace Forces and will contribute by every means to its realisation.'

Poland

An enlarged meeting of the Presiding Committee of the Polish Peace Movement held in Warsaw in December adopted a resolution which says:

'The Polish Peace Committee wishes to emphasise strongly that the ratification of the Paris Agreements is not yet an accomplished fact.

'Indeed, when the real content and the aims of these agreements become clear to the masses of the people in Western Europe, the movement of resistance to ratification and to the remilitarisation of West Germany will become stronger and stronger, especially in France and in West Germany itself. More and more people are coming to understand that, by perpetuating the division of Germany, ratification of the Paris Agreements would make German reunification impossible and any negotiation on the German question useless. More and more people are coming to understand the falsity of the statement that the division of Europe into two blocs can serve the cause of peace and disarmament. More and more people are coming to understand that the real aim of the Paris Agreements, as Churchill admitted in his notorious statement, is to rearm the Hitlerite criminals.

'The Polish people declare their complete solidarity with the peoples of Western Europe who are fighting for the common cause of all nations.

'Reflecting the thoughts and feelings of all Polish patriots, the Polish Peace Committee sends particularly warm greetings to our French friends who made a great contribution to the rejection of E.D.C. and who today are once again uniting, regardless of their political and social views, to defend France's vital interests and the cause of world peace . . .'

France: No Let-up in Action against London and Paris Agreements

There has been no let-up in the French people's action against German rearmament since the National Assembly ratified the London and Paris Agreements by 287 votes to 260 with 74 abstentions. They know that, if ratified by all the European Parliaments, these agreements would perhaps result in war — and not just any war, but an atomic war — and would in any case unleash an armaments race.

But they also know that it is still possible to bring this disastrous policy to nought.

The agreements are now going to be examined by the Council of the Republic. If it were to reject them or even to propose an amendment the National Assembly would have to examine them again. The time thus gained would be in favour of those who are working for peace.

The members of the Council of the Republic are elected in a different way from those of the National Assembly, namely, by an electoral college which is composed of all the Deputies and General Councillors, and by a big proportion of the municipal councillors and senatorial delegates who are nominated by the municipal councils on the basis of lists drawn up by the political parties.

So, after the vote in the National Assembly, the Movement's action has been concentrated on the Senators — that is, the members of the Council of the Republic — and their electors. The nation's representatives are being made to face up to their responsibilities, while the work of informing the people goes on. Already 4,500,000 signatures against German rearmament and for immediate negotiations have been collected, and district meetings and meetings of elected representatives are being held.

The Departmental Peace Councils and the local Peace Committees have warmly congratulated the Deputies who voted against the agreements and condemned those who voted for. The senators are being informed of the people's wishes by letters and reports of the actions undertaken.

The Presiding Committee of the Peace Movement has sent a letter to all the Mayors of France asking them, in their position as first municipal magistrate, to approach the senators and to be the spokesmen of public opinion in their localities.

Many mayors have already made their position clear. One hundred mayors of the Lot Department, the mayors of three cantons in the Department of Corrèze, and 118 mayors of the Department of Lot-et-Garonne, of all parties, have asked the senators 'respectfully but urgently' not to vote for the agreements. In the Ain Department General Councillors (the French equivalent of the County councillors in Great Britain) of various political parties have issued a joint appeal, as have also the secretaries of the Salernes branches of the Socialist and Communist parties in the Department of Var.

Already hundreds of municipal councils have adopted motions on this subject.

In one place Protestants have appealed to a senator belonging to the Popular Republican Party (M.R.P.) and in another teachers approached their Socialist senator.

So the work done in relation to Members of Parliament, which had such an enormous effect, is beginning again, without hesitation and without discouragement, in relation to members of the Senate.

The workers, who played such an important role in the first battle against the agreements (in Paris alone there were 2,000 deputations from the factories and 220 stoppages of work), are going into action once again.

In the Department of Moselle the workers will approach the 1,400 municipal councillors who themselves work in the factories.

In the course of these actions many peace committees are being set up.

Denmark

A group of well-known Social Democrats have issued an appeal for which signatures are now being collected.

The appeal states:

'The West German Social Democratic Party has called on all European Social Democrats to prevent the rearmament of Western Germany and its incorporation in N.A.T.O. before the opening of four power negotiations on the unification of Germany.

'We must support them in this call by demanding the resumption of negotiations before the London and Paris Agreements are finally ratified . . .'

Sweden

A meeting of the Stadsgarden port workers of Stockholm, all members of the Swedish Railway Trade Union Federation, adopted the following resolution:

'We support the demand for a settlement of the German question through Four Power negotiations instead of the ratification of the London and Paris Agreements. Negotiations for the relaxation of international tension and collective security in Europe is the way to lasting peace, and not the formation of blocs and rearmament.'

U.S.A.

According to a news item from Dayton (Ohio) Major K.E. Wallach of the United States Army Reserve has let it be known that he has returned to the French ambassador the Croix de Guerre he won during the Second World War for handing over to the French army French flags captured by Hitler's troops. This is Major Wallach's way of protesting at the French National Assembly's vote in favour of West German rearmament. If France approves the rearmament of West Germany, said Major Wallach, it will be a disaster for Frenchmen.

Argentine

In Argentine, deputations went to the French Embassy to demonstrate their opposition to the ratification of the London and Paris Agreements and many telegrams to the same effect were sent to France. To stimulate this campaign a special committee has been set up. The Jewish Peace Committee has also conducted important activities: many letters, signed by more than, 6,000 people, were sent to France. An important association, the D.A.I.A. (Argentine Federation of Jewish Associations), which has no connection with the Peace Movement, has condemned the revival of German militarism.

Uruguay

Mr. Jose Luis Massera, General Secretary of the Uruguayan Peace Council, has published an article firmly condemning the rearmament of West Germany.

Mr. Massera emphasises that the revival of German militarism gives rise to a growing war danger and calls on all defenders of peace to prepare for the World Assembly of Representatives of the Forces of Peace.

Canada

The Canadian Women's Congress has issued an appeal to all Canadian women to resolutely oppose the setting up of a new Wehrmacht.

EARMAMENT

Belgium

A great number of meetings and demonstrations are being organised in Belgium and their success shows the breadth of the national movement against German rearmament.

Street meetings with the collection of signatures took place in Binche, Couillet and Marcinelle on December 22 and 23. Mrs. Isabelle Blume, Secretary of the World Council of Peace, spoke at the meetings.

On January 10 a meeting organised by the Liaison Committee for all the country's peace organisations was held in the biggest hall in Brussels. There were four speakers: Mr. Ben Parkin, British Labour M.P.; Mr. Jacques Leman of the National Council of the French Peace Movement; Mr. André Blumel, on behalf of the Conference of European Jews against German rearmament; and Professor Jacinto Cardona of Rome University. Those present passed a motion to Parliament condemning the London and Paris Agreements.

A similar meeting was held in Liège on January 11.

The Progressive Women's Union is collecting signatures against the ratification of the agreements.

A resolution of support for the West German trade unions which have condemned remilitarisation was unanimously adopted at a meeting of the trade unions of St. Vith which are affiliated to the Belgian General Confederation of Labour. In Heppen, trade unionists asked their Trade Union Committee to take a stand against West German rearmament and to ask the leadership of the Belgian General Confederation of Labour to do likewise.

Holland

A conference on the German question which took place in Amsterdam on December 19, 1954 was attended by 400 people of various political standpoints.

Mrs. M. D. Minnaert-Coelingh and Mr. H. P. Langendijk made speeches which were followed by a discussion in which more than 40 people took part.

All the participants agreed on the danger to Holland's security involved in the Paris Agreements. The Conference unanimously adopted the text of a telegram urgently demanding the rejection of the Paris Agreements which is to be sent to both Houses of Parliament.

In addition, the Conference issued an appeal to the Dutch people warning them of the danger of the Paris Agreements and calling upon them to oppose these agreements strenuously. The organisation of a national petition opposing the revival of the Wehrmacht was also agreed.

This petition has already been signed by more than 75,000 people.

The Peace Movement in the Soviet Union

II (1)

In all its activities the Soviet Peace Committee works through local Peace Committees at the level of the Republics and regions. These committees are elected by local peace conferences and also have a broadly representative character. Thus, for example, the Moscow Committee, whose Chairman is Academician Ivan Petrovsky, Rector of Moscow University, includes the following among its members: Mr. A. Leontiev, bricklayer; Mr. S. Tulikov, composer; Miss M. Grafova, weaver; and Miss S. Poduzdova, athlete. The Leningrad Committee has Mr. P. Kovalev, an engineer, as its Chairman and includes among its members Academicians Bykov and Nalivkin; Mr. Filipov, building worker; Mr. Soloviov-Sedoi, composer; Mr. Fedossiev, engineering worker; and Mr. Cherkassov, artist.

The representative nature of the local Peace Committees makes it easier to work among all sections of the people. During the signature campaign for a Five Power Peace Pact the Briansk Regional Peace Committee called 3,689 meetings of different kinds, the Tula Regional Committee 4,487 and that of Sverdlovsk 11,820. The Tatar Peace Committee organised 1,608 meetings throughout the Republic to report the decisions of the Budapest session of the World Council of Peace.

To give some idea of the intensive and varied activity of a local Peace Committee in the Soviet Union we may quote the example of the Leningrad Committee.

During 1954 the Leningrad Committee received 50 foreign delegations visiting the city. In particular, the arrival of the 800 participants in the 'Peace Cruise' on the Polish liner, the S.S. Batory, last autumn meant a great deal of work for the Committee. It helped the delegates in their study of the various aspects of life in Leningrad and organised a number of friendly meetings between them and the people of the city.

A film was made on the visit of the 'Peace Cruise' to the Soviet Union and it was shown during the Stockholm session of the World Council of Peace.

The Leningrad Committee also organised a number of evening meetings, exhibitions and other events with a view to strengthening the friendly relations between the peoples. We may cite as examples the German-Soviet and the Sino-Soviet evenings, the Polish-Soviet Friendship Month, and so on.

The members of the Committee give regular lectures in factories, offices, clubs, the Pioneer Palaces and the Parks of Culture and take part in other peace work. In the last five years one of the members, Mr. G. Dubinin, who is a tracer in the Krassny Vyboryets factory, has given 750 reports on various problems of the struggle for peace and 200,000 people have heard him lecture. He carries on a regular personal correspondence with members of the Peace Movement in various countries and often treats the subject of peace in the press and on the radio.

The members of the Committee have several times gone on delegations abroad with other members of the Peace Movement.

The arrival of the Peace Cruise in Leningrad in September 1954. An enthusiastic crowd welcomes the S.S. Batory into port.

After a visit to India, Mr. Nikolai Cherkassov published a book of travel impressions and gave lectures in Leningrad. Mr. Bykov and Mr. Kovalev visited Finland. Mrs. Materikova, a worker in the Rabotchi textile factory, went on a women's delegation to Israel.

The activities of the other local Peace Committees, including those of the most distant regions, are similar to those of the Leningrad Committee. For example, last year the Kazakh Committee organised meetings for the anniversary of the liberation of Rumania, and Soviet-Bulgarian and Sino-Soviet friendship evenings. Mr. D. Khodjiev, Chairman of the Uzbek Committee, took part in the Peace Congress of the Asian and Pacific Regions, while Mrs. Malinina, a collective farm worker and Vice-Chairman of the Kostroma Committee, went to China and to the European People's Democracies.

JAPAN • Statement by Japanese Peace Committee on the N.A.T.O. Decisions

On December 20 the Secretariat of the Japanese Peace Committee published a statement protesting against the N.A.T.O. decisions on the use of atomic weapons. Here are some extracts this from this statement:

'In December the N.A.T.O. Council gave the Supreme Commander of the N.A.T.O. forces the power to supply the N.A.T.O. army with atomic weapons.

'This is a frenzied challenge to mankind and an act which tramples world opinion underfoot.

'As a result of this decision the rearmament of Japan and S.E.A.T.O. are now linked up with the danger of atomic war . . .

'The forces of peace are stronger than the forces of war, yet the latter can commit such vile acts.

'We call on all men and women in our country to unite in the sacred cause of peace in order to save mankind from total destruction.'

Congress for Banning Atomic and Hydrogen Bombs

The Japanese National Congress for the Banning of the Atomic and Hydrogen Bombs, which has just been held in Tokyo, adopted resolutions against the danger of atomic war resulting from the decisions of the N.A.T.O. Council and for the holding of a World Meeting for the banning of the A and H bombs. The number of signatures handed in to the National Council represents about 40 per cent of the population (all who can express their will are asked to sign). The Congress was attended by 300 representatives from all parts of Japan and by eminent figures including Mr. Tetsu Katayama, former Prime Minister, Socialist Party M.P., Mrs. Tomi Kora, member of the House of Councillors, and others.

One of the resolutions says:

'We express our anger at the fact that certain forces in the world do not hesitate to declare their readiness to use atomic weapons. In order to consolidate our movement for the banning of atomic war, leading figures in government and other circles throughout the world will be invited to take part in the World Meeting for the banning of atomic weapons.'

Congress stressed that the Japanese movement must make every effort to get world opinion to oppose atomic war. It was proposed to invite delegations from abroad and to send representatives to other countries, to international conferences in particular.

Congress expressed its satisfaction that an International Commission of Doctors is going to Japan in February to investigate the casualties suffered by the Japanese people as a result of atomic bombing and the testing of thermonuclear weapons.

Message of a Group of Mexican Peasants

A group of peasants of Torreon Coahuila (a part of Mexico where the peasants have received land through the agrarian reform) have issued a Christmas and New Year Message which says in part:

'The news which has recently appeared in the press fills us with alarm, especially that of the agreement to use atomic and thermonuclear weapons which has been reached by Western statesmen . . .

'An atomic war could not be limited to one continent. It would affect the entire world . . .'

The message ends by demanding the banning of weapons of mass destruction.

ARGENTINE

The Argentine Federation of Agricultural Cooperatives, a strong association which includes all the farming cooperatives in Argentine, has just informed the Committee of Doctors against the use of of atomic and hydrogen bombs that it agrees with the aims of their campaign and has decided to support it. Not long before, the annual general meeting of the Argentine Agrarian Federation had expressed the wish that weapons of mass destruction should be banned. That these two organisations should have taken up this position shows the unanimous feeling of Argentine farmers on this question.

The doctors of Buenos Aires have set up committees which approach political, scientific, trade union and other figures, and the leaders of mass organisations, asking for their collaboration in this struggle to protect mankind. They have also sent an open letter to Argentine Catholics recalling the position taken up by the Pope and inviting them to take part in the campaign. This letter has been reproduced as a leaflet.

On learning that a United States ice-breaker was making for Argentine territory in the Antarctic, with the obvious intention of preparing for H-bomb tests, the doctors of San Fernando (the province of Buenos Aires) issued a moving appeal to the people asking them to demonstrate publicly their opposition to this move.

ITALY • 'German rearmament and atomic massacre are not inevitable'

The Italian Peace Committee has issued an appeal to the people which says:

'The growing pressure of warlike circles to get the French and Italian Parliaments to decide on German rearmament through the ratification of the London and Paris Agreements is today seen in all its gravity in the light of the last decisions of the Atlantic Council clearly basing its policy and strategy on the use of atomic and thermonuclear weapons. This pressure and these decisions are aimed at sharply arresting the trend towards a relaxation of international tension.

'The great campaign for the Stockholm Appeal which was successful in preventing the use of atomic weapons in Korea and Indo-China and the inevitable extension of these conflicts; the Italian Chamber of Deputies' vote against atomic and thermonuclear weapons; the victorious result of the campaign against E.D.C.; the first results of the campaign against the London and Paris Agreements ratified by the French National Assembly with less than half the Deputies voting for ratification — all this proves that the action of the peoples can foil the nefarious plans of the supporters of German rearmament and of atomic massacre.

'German rearmament and atomic massacre are not inevitable.

'It is necessary everywhere to strengthen and consolidate the action of all sections of the Peace Movement. Let the Peace Committees meet in every town, village and place of work! Form thousands of new committees to discuss and explain to the public the urgent tasks of the moment, to take decisions and new hard-hitting action against German rearmament and the threat of atomic massacre and to strengthen their collaboration with the new forces which are now joining the struggle for peace.'

The Peoples the

This poster was published by the Shinjyuku section of the National Council against the A and H bombs. Shinjyuku is an important district of Tokio with a population of 250,000 inhabitants. The poster bears this appeal: 'Save the lives and happiness of mankind!', together with the signatures of the Shinjyuku section of the Movement for the Banning of the A and H bombs, of the Doctors', Pharmacists' and Lawyers' Associations, the local section of the General Council of Trade Unions, the Federation of Buddhists, the Council of Women's Organisations, the Federation of Merchants, the Federations of Parent-Teachers' Associations of Middle and Primary Schools, the Chamber of Commerce and the Congress of Intellectuals.

GERMANY • 'We want general disarmament'

Professor Walther Friedrich, President of the German Academy of Sciences and President of the German Peace Council, has made an appeal from which we take the following passages:

'How can general disarmament be achieved through the rearmament of Western Germany without starting an accelerated armaments race on the part of all States? Yet such an armaments race can only lead to unleashing an atomic war in the heart of Europe — an atomic war the consequences of which are all too clear to me as a research physicist who knows the destructive power of atomic weapons.

'In letters from West Germany we of the German Peace Council are reproached for opposing only the rearming of the Federal Republic, while having no objections to the rearmament of the German Democratic Republic. That is not true. We want no rearmament either in the East or in the West, but general disarmament and the banning of all weapons of mass destruction. This is clear from the material published by our Movement. Nor can it be denied that the Government and the People's Chamber have several times made Bonn the offer to conclude an agreement on the police forces in the two German States. This agreement would settle the size of the armed forces, the places where they will be stationed and the kind of arms they will carry.

'This offer was rejected in the same way as the Soviet Government's proposal that the two parts of Germany should be kept outside any alliance of a military character, that guarantees should de given against the revival of aggressive militarism, and that preparations should then be made for the reunification of the two parts of Germany through free elections.'

• Mass Action against Remilitarisation

Associated Press announces that the Social Democratic campaign against the London and Paris agreements has begun in more than a hundred towns of West Germany. It began with a large-scale poster campaign; the posters show the ghostly ruins of houses rising against a blood-red horizon. In the foreground rise, like a warning, the remains of a wall in the shape of a man with one leg amputated. The posters bear the inscription: 'Never again! So negotiate!'

The Social Democratic Party's campaign is to grow from week to week until the second and third readings of the bill ratifying the Paris Agreements. A total of approximately 6,000 demonstrations are planned to take place in every locality of any importance in the Federal Republic.

• Physicists Appeal to All their Colleagues

'We physicists know that the use of the hydrogen bomb during a war would mean the end of civilisation.

'We therefore raise our voice to defend all that man's science and work have created, all that we are attached to and love.

'We call on all physicists to realise their responsibility for the results of their work; we call on them to enlighten all men and women on the consequences of the misuse of science and to unite with all peace-loving people throughout the world to force the banning of the atomic weapon.'

The signatories of the appeal are:

Prof. Seeliger of Griefswald, Prof. Möglich of Berlin, Prof. Rompe of Berlin and Prof. Frühauf of Dresden, all National Prize winners; Prof. Görlich of Jena, Prof. Kunze of Rostock, Prof. Schütz of Jena, Prof. Bewilogua of Berlin, Prof. Holzmüller of Leipzig, Prof. Schmellenmeier of Potsdam and Prof. Büchner of Berlin.

WHAT THE MAYORS OF BOMBED CITIES ARE SAYING . . .

The Mayor of Hiroshima has sent a letter to the mayors of certain other great cities asking them to support the Japanese people in their aspirations for a lasting peace. Mr. Adolf Svoboda, Mayor of Prague, says in his reply:

'The peoples of the whole world have the same interests.'

In his reply, Mr. N. I. Smirnov, Chairman of the Leningrad City Soviet, says:

'We wholeheartedly welcome your appeal and look upon the struggle for the banning of atomic and thermonuclear weapons and for world peace as our most urgent task.'

Early in January Mr. Baernreuther, Social Democratic Mayor of Nuremberg, stated before the City Council:

'Together with the mayors of Hiroshima, Dresden, Stalingrad and Coventry, and all who have known the fury of war, we declare that peace must be preserved. Peace means security for all.'

Mr. George Albrecht, President of the Warsaw City Council, writes in his reply to the Mayor of Hiroshima:

'We believe that representatives of Hiroshima, Warsaw and others of the cities that suffered most destruction during the Second World War should jointly initiate some new action for the banning of weapons of mass destruction.'

GREAT BRITAIN

A petition bearing more than 500,000 signatures was handed in to No. 10 Downing Street on December 31 by a deputation led by the Rev. Dr. Donald Soper, President of the Methodist Church in Great Britain.

The signatories ask the British Government to take the initiative in calling a three power conference (U.S.A., U.S.S.R. and Great Britain) to reach agreement on the banning of the A and H bombs and the controlled reduction of armaments.

In a B.B.C. talk on 'The hydrogen bomb and the peril to mankind' Mr. Bertrand Russell, the British philosopher, said:

'. . .if the issues between East and West are to be decided in any manner that can give any possible satisfaction to anybody, whether Communist or anti-Communist, whether Asian or European or American, whether white or black, then these issues must not be decided by war . . .'

Poland

A group of eminent Polish intellectuals have issued a statement from which we give the following extracts:

'The sanction given to atomic war and preparations for such a war by the last session of the N.A.T.O. Council has aroused profound indignation . . .

'We make this appeal to you, artists, writers and scientists of the Western States: "Stay the hand of those who want war!"'

The signatories of the appeal include:

Professor Jan Dembowski, President of the Polish Academy of Sciences; Professor Leopold Infeld, Professor of Physics at Warsaw University and Mr. Kasimierz Kuratowski, Director of the State Mathematical Institute.

Hungary

A meeting of doctors organised by the Peace Committee of the fifth district of Budapest has adopted the following appeal:

'We who strive every day to protect peoples' lives from danger and to heal cannot allow millions of men and women to perish through the use of weapons of mass destruction to serve the interests of those who want war.'

Switzerland

By 57 votes to 38 the Grand Council of the Republic and Canton of Neuchâtel has approved a motion asking the Swiss Government 'to make all the necessary approaches to foreign governments for the ending of thermonuclear explosions and for the general limitation of armaments'.

Uruguay

The news of the forthcoming A and H bomb tests in the South Atlantic and the Antarctic has caused grave anxiety in Uruguay. The Uruguayan Peace Committee has warned public opinion of the dangers of such tests and is planning to launch a great campaign against weapons of mass destruction.

ALL INDIA CONGRESS FOR PEACE AND ASIAN SOLIDARITY

An interview with Mr. Jean Laffitte, General Secretary of the World Council of Peace

The All India Congress for Peace and Asian Solidarity was held in Madras from December 30 to January 2 last.

The following is the text of an interview with Mr. Jean Laffitte, General Secretary of the World Council of Peace, on his return from this important Congress where he represented the World Council.

For four days you took part in the All India Congress for Peace and Asian Solidarity. What are your impressions of the Congress?

That it was a great Congress, both from the point of view of the number of delegates that attended it and the ideas they expressed. But to describe it in a word, I would say that it was above all a working Congress.

Nearly 1,500 delegates from all the States of India took part in the proceedings. They came from Bengal and Travancore-Cochin, from Hyderabad and Pepsu, from Orissa and Bombay.

A Reception Committee of 200 persons with Shri P.M. Krishmaswaniyer as its Chairmen welcomed the delegates who represented the various sections of Indian society and Indian political and religious opinion in all their diversity.

Dr. Saifuddin Kitchlew chaired the Congress and gave the opening address. Important reports were presented by Sir Sahib Singh Sokhey F.R.S.; Pandit Sunderlal, writer; Shri J.C. Kumarappa, economist; Professor D.D. Kosambi; Mulk Raj Anand, the writer and by Shri Romesh Chandra.

The Congress elected a new All India Peace Council of 350 members. Dr. Kitchlew was re-elected President and 16 Vice-Presidents and a Secretariat of five were also elected.

A number of important resolutions were adopted. What do you think of the decisions reached?

The Congress very forcefully expressed the solidarity of the Asian peoples and gave its support to the five peace principles enunciated in the agreements recently concluded between the Republic of India and the People's Republic of China. It also supported the position of the World Council of Peace on the settlement of major international issues such as the atomic threat and the setting up of military blocs in Europe and Asia, which keep the world divided and maintain international tension. It took important decisions on the organisation of the Movement and on the development of cultural work. Lastly, it welcomed the proposal of the World Council of Peace to call a World Assembly of Representatives of the Forces of Peace and decided that the Indian Peace Movement would make its contribution to the success of the Assembly.

On the evening of January 2 a mass rally of 120,000 people was held in Madras to mark the conclusion of the Congress.

Mr. Jean Laffitte, General Secretary of the World Council of Peace, pointed out that the vast gathering was an unmistakable demonstration of the peace sentiments of the Indian people. The formation of S.E.A.T.O. had brought the threat of war to the very doorstep of Asia, he said, adding that in continuing their efforts for peace the Indian people would ensure the security not only of Asia but of the whole world.

What was your most striking impression of your stay in India?

One cannot fail to be greatly impressed by the whole Indian people's attachment to the cause of peace. In every town and village I visited I met fishermen, workers, peasants, merchants and intellectuals and I was struck by their love for peace and their profound desire to arrest the war dangers that menace the world.

For nearly a week the city of Madras was full of delegates who could be picked out by the large badge which they wore showing Picasso's dove in the centre of a blaze of colour. Every evening the delegates and the many guests were entertained by artistic performances in which some of the best-known and most popular artists in India took part. The last of these was nothing less than a festival of Indian song and dance, music and drama. It was watched by 8,000 people among whom were the group of Chinese artists invited by the Indian Government and who happened to be in Madras at the time.

After the Congress a procession two miles long wound through the streets to the sound of drums and trumpets; it was gay with the white robes of the men, the many-coloured saris of the women, and a forest of the blue banners of the Peace Movement waved above their heads. At its head were an elephant and chariots drawn by flower-bedecked bullocks. Everywhere it was enthusiastically welcomed by the people. The procession ended in a monster open-air meeting on the shore of the Indian Ocean in which 120,000 people took part.

The entire press gave daily reports on the proceedings of the Congress and the different demonstrations held. Members of Congress and of the State Parliaments of different parties, scientists and religious figures, artists and local and regional organisations sent messages of support.

I am happy that I was able to bring to this Congress and to the Indian Peace Movement, in the full flood of its development, a message of solidarity from the Peace Movements in the other parts of the world, together with greetings from the World Council of Peace.

We shall give further details on the proceedings and decisions of this important Congress in a future issue.

U. S. A.: Disarmament and Peaceful Co-existence

Petition in DETROIT

Federated Press reports that ministers of religion in Detroit have launched a petition which is to be submitted to President Eisenhower.

The petition demands the abolition of weapons of mass destruction as a first step towards general disarmament, the use of the resources thus freed for the improvement of living conditions... and a United States contribution to the peaceful co-existence of all states irrespective of their social system.

The committee of churchmen who are organising this campaign intend to collect several million signatures.

The Events in Costa Rica

We pointed out in our issue of October 1, 1954 the important campaign being conducted by the Costa Rican Peace Movement for the lessening of the tension in the relations between the various countries of Central America. Thousands of postcards were at that time sent to the President of the Republic asking that the principle of non-intervention in international relations should be strictly observed. The campaign included the intensive collection of signatures to a text addressed to the United Nations. It said:

'We urgently beg the United Nations to intervene (in the differences between the states of Central America Ed.) and demand that the principle of non-intervention contained in Para. 7 of Art. 2 of the Charter be respected, and to facilitate negotiations for the consolidation of peace in Central America.'

At the Stockholm session of the World Council of Peace, Mrs. Emilia Prieto Lugores, President of the Costa Rican Peace Committee, drew the Council's attention to the threat of conflict hanging over Central America.

Then last November the Cuban Peace Committee published statements warning public opinion of the serious turn that could be taken by the differences between the governments of Costa Rica and Nicaragua and condemning United States interference in the conflict. After affirming the principle of national sovereignty, demanding negotiations in any case of a difference between nations, and protesting against foreign intervention in any form in the internal affairs of a country, the Cuban Peace Committee concluded in these words:

'The countries of Latin America must not drift into conflicts and differences which would be full of danger. Today, more than ever, they must unite in defence of their liberty and sovereignty, their free economic development and progress, and in the struggle for peace.'

The events that have arisen in Central America in this month of January have fully confirmed the correctness of these predictions of the Costa Rican and Cuban Peace Movements.

REGIONAL CONFERENCES IN THE LEBANON

The Lebanese Peace Movement has launched a great preparatory campaign for its Second National Congress. As part of the preparations regional conferences were held in Tripoli and Bekah. The following is a report on these two conferences:

Tripoli, Capital of North Lebanon

The conference was attended by delegates and public figures of differing political viewpoints. It sent messages of support to the people of Algeria and the other peoples of the Magrheb, whose struggle for independence and against acts of violence is a contribution to the struggle against the war plans in North Africa. Messages were also sent to the peoples of Egypt, Iraq, Jordan and Iran in their struggle against plans for war and aggression.

The conference adopted an appeal to the Lebanese people and to public figures and organisations opposed to the war plans, asking them to oppose the projected strategic road (international highway) which the Americans want to construct from Beirut to the Persian Gulf and to demand of the Lebanese Government that it give up any idea of taking part in this aggressive undertaking.

Bekah

The Bekah conference was held on December 19 and it was attended by 70 delegates from 40 towns and villages and by 30 observers. Municipal councillors and public figures of various political viewpoints were also present.

Two reports were then presented on

1) The activity of the Peace Movement in Bekah since 1949, its successes and the possibilities that exist for broadening it.

2) The importance of economic exchanges, on a footing of equality and mutual respect, for the economic life of the Lebanese people.

The Archbishop of Zahbé and Haalbek and Sheikh Abdullah Alaili sent greetings to the conference. Dr. Rashid Matuk, on behalf of the National Committee, spoke on the aims of the Peace Movement and its successes throughout the world.

Resolutions condemning imperialist interference, the projected strategic highway and the military pacts which threaten the security of this part of the world were adopted.

Activities of the Argentine Peace Movement

Surrounded by the growing sympathy of public opinion, the Argentine Peace Movement is intensifying its activity. An important meeting of its National Council was held in November, attended by 50 members, delegates from the provinces and guests.

On December 19th the Second Conference of the Peace Movement in Buenos Aires took place, while a similar conference was held in the province of Cordoba.

National leaders attended both these meetings, in accordance with a vast plan of organisation which stipulates that they should periodically visit the different parts of the country, organising regional meetings and helping to set up new peace committees or to strengthen those that already exist.

The various activities of the Movement are now being directed towards the preparation of the World Assembly of Representatives of the Peace Forces. The coming months will see the holding of many local assemblies for the election of a delegation representing all sections of Argentine opinion.

Of the current campaigns (1) it is necessary to make particular mention of that demanding an Argentine peace policy and an Argentine peace economy, and the campaign for the defence the Argentine oil industry, which is in danger of passing under foreign control. The signatories of the appeal for this latter campaign include the leaders of various political parties, members of the provincial assemblies and of the national Parliament, writers, delegates to the Radical Party Convention, leaders of youth organisations and others, many of whom are far from the Peace Movement.

In addition, a special effort is being made to improve publicity work. In addition to the periodical Por la Paz and the other regular organs of the Movement, the following have been published: the speeches of Mrs. Maria Rosa Oliver and Mr. Garcia Iturraspe at the national conference; a special pamphlet on the consequences of the war policy in Argentina and Latin America; two pamphlets on the dangers of German rearmament and for the banning of A and H bombs; and wall tableaux in support of the campaign for the defence of Argentine oil.

(1) The campaigns against German rearmament and for the banning of weapons of mass destruction are the subject of a more detailed article in this same bulletin.

GUATEMALA:

Statement by President of National Peace Committee

Following last summer's events in Guatemala, Mr. Cruz Franco, barrister, President of the National Peace Committee, was imprisoned for a number of months and then brought before a tribunal which, as a result of the Guatemalan people's growing attachment to peace, has just acquitted him.

Mr. Cruz Franco defended his case himself. We take the following passage from his plea:

'As personifying our country's interest in the maintenance of world peace the National Peace Committee charged me, in June 1952, with the honourable task of being its President. It had taken into account my pacifist antecedents, my devotion to my country and other qualifications which kept me apart from sectarian struggles and partisan activities which have no place in the defence of peace for the happiness of all men and women.

'To love peace, which is a cause common to all mankind, and to banish war, which is a hell for all people, is a lofty mission which merits respect and not punishment.

'But if that is the shameful motive for my detention then I shall live and die in prison — a glorious epilogue to a life devoted to the cause of justice, either in dispensing it as a judge, in serving it as a barrister, or in defending it as a man and a citizen.'

Preparations for Celebrations of Great Figures of World Culture

Is there a country in which the works of Andersen have not been avidly read by several generations of children? The characters in his Tales have been given citizen rights in all parts of the world and by all peoples.

It is for this reason that the appeal of the World Council of Peace for the commemoration of the 150th anniversary of this genius of children's literature has been welcomed everywhere. Children and grown-ups are getting ready to honour the author of the famous Fairy Tales. In his own country, Denmark, the National Peace Committee has examined the programme of events with particular care and a committee has been appointed to study the various suggestions which have so far been made and to put forward others. The proposals under examination include the organisation of trips to Denmark by children of various nationalities to visit the Andersen museum and the places where he lived and worked.

For next April the Danish Government is organising celebrations in which Danish intellectuals will collaborate. These celebrations are to include a festival in Andersen's native town, Odense, the adaptation of some of his tales for the stage and the issue of a series of stamps.

In various countries, too, programmes are being drawn up for the commemoration of the other great figures of world culture proposed by the World Council of Peace: Montesquieu, Schiller, Mickiewicz, Cervantes and Whitman.

In France, writers, philosophers and sociologists will take part in the various events to be held in honour of Montesquieu, the author of L'Esprit des Lois.

In Czechoslovakia, Montesquieu will be commemorated at memorial meetings, lectures, evenings devoted to the reading of his works, and so on, which will be held in Prague, Bratislava and the other main towns. These events are being organised by the Ministry of Culture, the Peace Committee, the Law Faculty of Prague University, the Law Section of the Academy of Sciences, the Czechoslovak Lawyers' Association and the Society for the Diffusion of Political and Scientific Knowledge.

In Germany, the main events in honour of the 150th anniversary of the death of Schiller include a memorial meeting to be held in Jena on May 14 at which the great writer Thomas Mann will speak. The Schiller celebrations are being organised by the Schiller Committee 1955 whose members include famous literary, artistic and scientific figures in Germany. A number of organisations are also collaborating: the 'Schiller Stiftung' (Schiller Fund for the encouragement of young writers); the Marbach-Stuttgart Society of Friends of Schiller, the Democratic Cultural Union of Germany and the Standing Committee of the German Cultural Congress.

SUPPORT FOR PAUL ROBESON

In a letter to the 'Provisional Committee to restore Paul Robeson's passport', Professor Josef Skupa, director of the famous Puppet Theatre in Prague, writes:

'At a time when throughout the world people are opening their arms to embrace each other in peace and when through the medium of cultural exchanges, they are meeting each other in joyous festivals of the arts of all peoples, we cannot understand that in the country of Franklin, Washington and Roosevelt an artist should be refused the right to do honour to his people through his art.

'We appeal to you to take action so that Paul Robeson may once again sing of man's love for man throughout the world.'

MONTESQUIEU

Two hundred years ago, on February 10, 1755, the illustrious sociologist and writer Montesquieu died. He had been almost blind for a number of years, though this did not prevent him from continuing his work, especially L'Esprit des Lois, the fruit of twenty years of labour — for he was an indefatigable worker. 'I should have burned it a thousand times', he said during his last days, 'if I had not thought that it is fine thing to make onseself useful to mankind until one's last breath . . .' Thus does he define the goal of his unremitting labour. Defending L'Esprit des Lois before the critics of the Sorbonne and of the Index Commission, he stated: 'Therein you will find only love of good, love of peace and of the happiness of men.'

Charles de Secondat, Baron of Brède and of Montesquieu, belonged to the group of clear-minded men who made the 18th century the 'philosophers' century' and the 'age of reason'. Each in his degree, they were laying the ground for the great events that were to take place in France at the end of the 18th century and to spread like wildfire through the world. Montesquieu's first works, written between 1718 and 1721, are the Discourse on the Cause of Echoes, On the Functioning of the Renal Glands, On the Cause of the Weight of Bodies, and Observations on Natural History. They give expression to the disquiet of his time when mankind was asserting itself, when the scientific attitude was spreading and when the will to fully understand nature and the universe was making itself felt. Mediaeval metaphysics was beginning to be driven out of its positions. The old absolutism was being shaken by the upthrust of new social forces, which, however, did not all want deep-going changes in the structure of society. Certain sections only wanted to introduce some reforms to limit the chaos and abuses of the feudal system. This was Montesquieu's line. But his canny prudence could not prevent him from helping to weaken the old order of things. In his Persian Letters (1721) he subjects social, political, religious and literary customs to a virulent satire. It is not by chance that his book 'sold like hot cakes'. The same severity of criticism is not to be found in his subsequent great works, Reflections on the Causes of the Greatness and Decadence of the Romans (1734) and L'Esprit des Lois (1750); so well received was the latter work that in two years it went through 22 editions. Modern sociology makes its début in these works. Instead of attributing the laws to divine command, they are drawn from experience, and social relations are seen as depending on the natural conditions in each country. One of his biographers could say: 'Montesquieu has taken politics out of the hands of the church. And better still, he has helped to make politics a science.' Some of his ideas inspired the members of the Constituent Assembly and were implemented in some of the state's later institutions.

In relation to the principal concerns of our time, it is especially appropriate to stress Montesquieu's humanist ideas, his interest in progress, his refusal to consider war as a means of eradicating differences between states: 'It is not the wish of the citizen to see his homeland devouring everyone else's homeland.' 'A prince thinks that he will be greater by the ruin of a neighbouring country. On the contrary. Such is the situation in Europe that France needs Poland and Muscovy to prosper . . .'

A staunch defender of science, he considered that it should not be used for purposes of violence. In our atomic era his penetrating observations echo like a prophecy: 'I fear that someone will ultimately discover some secret which will provide a quicker way of annihilating men and destroying entire peoples and nations.' But Montesquieu gave a very pertinent answer: 'If a fatal invention were to be discovered, it would soon be prohibited by international law and the discovery would be buried by the unanimous consent of the nations.' So must it be.

Second Soviet Writers' Congress

Seven hundred and eighty Soviet delegates from all the Republics and territories of the Soviet Union met in Moscow from December 16 to 23 to discuss the problems of creative literature. The discussion was also followed by 100 foreign writers from 39 countries.

Through the number of reports presented, the importance of the subjects treated and the scope of the discussion, the Congress rapidly became more than a mere national event — became, indeed, a debate of world-wide interest. The constant reference to the great masters of various foreign literatures made it an authentic exchange of cultural values in the light of which the problems of Soviet literature had to be studied.

In the sphere of cultural relations Congress discussed a problem of the highest interest for all writers — that of translation. Is it possible to translate poetry or prose into a foreign language without spoiling the beauty of the original? The Soviet writers gave an affirmative answer to this question, provided that translation becomes, as Mr. Tikhonov said, 'an act of friendship between two writers', that is, between author and translator.

Another very important point was Nikolai Tikhonov's report on the world's progressive literature. The translation of its main works into the various languages of the Soviet Union has consistently enriched cultural exchanges between East and West.

From beginning to end of the Congress, moreover, it was clearly stated that Soviet literature is always at the service of peace, whether it be children's literature, literature for adolescents, film scripts or literature in general.

As we have already pointed out in a previous number, the Second Soviet Writers' Congress gave its full support to the World Congress of Writers which it is proposed to hold this year.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS ON SCIENTIFIC FILMS

250 scientific films from various countries presented

An International Congress on Scientific Films was recently held in Paris. At this Congress the International Association for Scientific Films re-elected its Council whose members are: Mr. Jean Painleve (France), President; Professor Ponzo (Italy) and Professor Sdan (U.S.S.R.), Vice-Presidents; and representatives of the following 12 nations: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, France, Great Britain, Holland, Italy, Poland, the Soviet Union, West Germany and Uruguay.

FURTHER CELEBRATIONS OF THE CULTURAL ANNIVERSARIES OF 1954

In 1954, the anniversaries of Aristophanes, Antonin Dvorak, Henry Fielding and Anton Chekhov were commemorated in many countries and in various ways, as reported in these pages. Even in the last weeks of 1954 there were many such celebrations — a sign of the interest they have created in all circles and in all countries.

In Chile, the anniversary of Aristophanes' birth was commemorated at the University by a lecture given by Mr. Juan de Luigi, literary critic. At this same meeting Mr. Ruben Sotoconil spoke of Henry Fielding and Mr. Domingo Piga dealt with the life and work of Chekhov.

A successful artistic and literary evening was held in Havana, the capital of Cuba, in the middle of December. After a speech by Dr. Elias Entralgo Y Vallina, President of the Cuban Peace Committee, Mr. Marcos Behmaras gave a lecture on the life and work of Fielding, Dr. Juan Blanco on Antonin Dvorak, Dr. Gregorio Ortega on Chekhov and Dr. Gaspar J. Garcia Gallo on Aristophanes.

The second part of the programme included a short recital of Dvorak's music and a performance of one of Chekhov's one-act plays, The Birthday, by the Farseros company.

ARISTOPHANES

The Polish Peace Committee and the Polish PEN Club organised a memorial meeting in Warsaw at which the President of the PEN Club, Mr. Jan Parandowski, gave a talk on the life and work of the great Greek dramatist. The artistic part of the programme included extracts from The Birds and The Peace.

The Academy of Sciences of the Soviet Socialist Republic of Latvia held a memorial meeting on the evening of December 27, 1954 which was attended by intellectuals, teachers, artists and writers. The opening speech was made by Professor Peive, President of the Academy and President of the Latvian Peace Committee. The evening ended with a presentation of extracts from the work of Aristophanes.

An exhibition of various editions of the works of Aristophanes, together with essays and monographs on his work, was opened in Leningrad on December 22. The Soviet editions include a volume entitled The Plays of Aristophanes which contains The Wasps, The Birds, and others of his comedies, and his complete works in several volumes.

In Bucharest, Academician Constantin Balmus gave a talk on the life and work of Aristophanes to a large audience, followed by a performance of an extract from The Peace by a group of students from the I.L. Caragiale Drama Institute. Similar events were held in other Rumanian towns such as Jassy, where a lecture on 'The Problem of Peace in the Plays of Aristophanes' was given at the Faculty of Philology.

DVORAK

The Academy of the People's Republic of Rumania held a special session at which the composer Mihail Andrico gave a talk on the great Czech musician. There was also a memorial evening in Bucharest at which the composer Sabin Dragoi gave a lecture; this was followed by a short concert of Dvorak's compositions by the soloists of the State Philharmonic Society. The life of the composer was illustrated by a large number of photographs arranged in the form of an exhibition in the hall.

Similar exhibitions and concerts, together with the showing of slides, were organised in the principal towns of the country. At Timisoara, for example, there was a public meeting at which the composer Russu Nicolae gave a talk and the symphony 'From the New World' was performed.

FIELDING

In Great Britain, the Birmingham Peace Committee organised a meeting in honour of Fielding on December 13 last.

In Rumania, Fielding's works were published and memorial meetings were held throughout the country. In Bucharest, the writer Mihnea Gheorghiu gave a talk on Fielding which was followed by a reading of an extract from Tom Jones by the popular artist Forly Eterle.

CHEKHOV

The Delhi Cultural Committee of the All India Peace Council staged three one-act plays by Chekhov: The Bear, The Proposal and The Anniversary with the collaboration of local drama associations such as the Little Theatre Group and the Delhi Art Theatre. The public and the press gave these performances a warm welcome.

In Calcutta, the Cultural Sub-Committee of the West Bengal Peace Council held a very successful public meeting in which some of the most distinguished writers of West Bengal participated. A Bengali version of one of Chekhov's short plays, A Tragedian in Spite of Himself, was performed.

With Three Sisters and Martyrs running at the Theatre de l'Oeuvre and the Theatre de Poche respectively, Chekhov continues to be seen on the Parisian stage.

The anniversaries of other great cultural figures have also given rise to important events.

The Indian public gave a warm welcome to the celebration of the anniversary of Swami Haridas, the founder of Indian music. The musician Rahimuddin Dagar, a celebrated exponent of the music of Swami Haridas, gave a recital and Mr. Dilip Chand Vedi lectured on the life and work of the composer.

The centenary of the birth of the Argentine scientist, Florentino Ameghino, was celebrated at a special session of the Academy of the People's Republic of Rumania. Professor Alexandru Codarcea stressed Ameghino's exceptional contribution to palaeontology and anthropology.

International Speakers at Vienna Rally

In Vienna on January 19 was held the first meeting of the world signature campaign for the Vienna Appeal. An hour and a half after the Bureau of the World Council of Peace had adopted this historic appeal to the whole of mankind asking it to oppose the danger of atomic war, eminent members of the World Council of Peace informed the people of Vienna of the launching of the Appeal at the Vargas Dreherpark. This is one the biggest halls in Vienna and it was packed to the doors.

Professor Brandweiner, President of the Austrian Peace Council, introduced the speakers, who came from eight countries.

The first speaker, Mrs. Isabelle Blume, member of the Secretariat of the World Council of Peace, stressed the importance of the signature campaign which was just beginning for the prevention of atomic war. Pandit Sundarlal, Vice-President of the All India Peace Council, brought greetings from the Indian people and made a great impression. Mr. D.N. Pritt Q.C. of Great Britain spoke in German (as did Mrs. Isabelle Blume) on the work of the Peace Movement in the United Kingdom. The audience were deeply interested in the speech of Professor Kaoru Yasui who described the terrible sufferings of the people of Hiroshima and Nagasaki as a result of atomic bombing and the effects of the test explosions of the hydrogen bomb at Bikini. Professor Leopold Infeld, who also spoke in German, gave a physicist's view of the terrible prospects held in store by an atomic war. The audience welcomed with extraordinary enthusiasm the speech of Dr. Kuo Mo-jo, Vice-Chairman of the Standing Committee of the First National People's Congress of the People's Republic of China. (Dr. Kuo Mo-jo translated his own speech into German.) He brought a message of greetings from the great Chinese people who are exerting all their strength on the side of the peace camp. The speech of the Soviet dramatist Alexander Korneichuk was full of confidence in the strength of the peoples who can bring to nought the plans of those who are preparing for atomic war. This imposing demonstration of international solidarity ended with the speech of Mr. Erwin Eckert, member of the Provincial Parliament of Baden-Württemberg in West Germany, which made a great impression on the audience.

What the Press is Saying . . .

Extract from the December 23 issue of the New York Times

'No Distinction Possible between Strategic and Tactical Weapons,' says Mr. Hanson Baldwin.

'Mr. Dulles' somewhat arbitrary distinction between the tactical and strategic use of atomic arms, his policy of relying particularly in Southeast Asia on the deterrent effect of mobile sea and air striking forces, his assertion that the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's decision to base its defence on atomic arms insured the security of Western Europe, have raised far more questions than they answered . . .

'When is a tactical atomic weapon a strategic weapon; how do you differentiate between a weapon used against troops in the field and weapons of "mass devastation"?

'Does not Mr. Dulles know that the hydrogen bomb has been urged as a tactical weapon? Can such a weapon, which may poison an area of 4,000 to 10,000 square miles by radioactive "fall-out", be termed a tactical weapon? Is a "Corporal" guided missile with an atomic warhead and a range of 100 miles a "tactical" weapon? . . .

'In other words, if we commit ourselves to the tactical use of atomic weapons do we not open the door to their unlimited use everywhere?'

Extract from an editorial in the December 14 issue of Politiken (Denmark)

'They are now speaking of "tactical" atomic weapons for direct use against the armed forces of the enemy: little bombs, artillery shells, rockets. "Little" arms, yet which have a terrifying power. They would perhaps succeed in clearing the enemy out of a zone of operations but they would also annihilate thousands of civilians. We must face the possibility that armies will progressively become more and more "atomic", that gradually even rifle bullets will perhaps become small atom bombs. Where then is the limit between what one can and what one cannot permit oneself?

'During the recent military manoeuvres in Germany there was a dummy attack with a tactical atomic bomb on a bridgehead occupied by the enemy. It was estimated that the whole enemy force of 3,000 men had been wiped out — together with 50,000 civilians. So how many survivors would there be in a zone of operations if atomic weapons were used?'

Extract from an article by Mr. M. Duverger in the January 4 number of Le Monde

'On Christmas Eve the Deputies expressed their own and their constituents' deep desire — they rejected the rearming of one half of Germany. On New Year's Eve the Assembly bowed to the brutal determination of our Anglo-Saxon allies and sacrified French public opinion to the maintenance of the Atlantic Pact . . .

'We need hardly mention the frightful paradox of the victors of 1945, at that time absolutely determined to put an end to German militarism once and for all, today imposing on the citizens of West Germany an army they don't want. For all witnesses agree on the strength of the German people's opposition to the rearmament plans . . .

'The switchover of a few votes in Parliament may be enough for taking a legal decision, but it cannot change public opinion and the profound feelings of the nation.'

BULLETIN OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

INFORMATION BULLETIN PUBLISHED BY THE SECRETARIAT OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

No. 4 (2nd. Year) FEBRUARY 15, 1955

The World Campaign against Atomic War

The great campaign against the preparation of atomic war is the answer to a grave danger. For in the recent decisions of the N.A.T.O. Council the representatives of the governments concerned decided to base the whole mil tary organisation of N.A.T.O. on the use of atomic weapons – a decision which brazenly flouts world public opinion.

This is no mere trial balloon put up by individual politicians, no mere threat of some big brass-hat. It is an act of responsible governments. It means that armies are to be re-equipped on an atomic basis; it means a great increase in the number of dangerous experiments for their use. It applies to any conflict which may arise in the future. It is an encouragement to militarists and adventurers to precipitate aggression. It strengthens the possibilities for blackmail and pressure on small countries. It means that any war which might break out in any part of the world would inevitably be transformed into atomic world war. It threatens every country without distinction, just when scientists agree in recognising that atomic war could lead humanity to destruction.

Every military disposition taken or planned up till now becomes yet more threatening after the decisions of the N.A.T.O. Council.

The plans to rearm Germany become an even greater danger to world peace, since they would, in fact, arm the former Hitler generals with thermonuclear weapons.

In other parts of the world, too, the atomic danger becomes much sharper: in Asia because of military blocs like S.E.A.T.O. and of repeated provocations; in the countries of Latin America and in the Middle East, placed under the permanent threat of the use of force.

Such are the new dangers which led the Bureau of the World Council to set going with great urgency a campaign against the preparation of atomic war. This will be a signature campaign. It is based upon simple demands and common sense solutions: the destruction in all countries of stocks of atomic weapons and an immediate halt to their manufacture. These demands must be taken up by the whole human race.

In 1950, the Stockholm Appeal received 500 million signatures. The immense support given to this Appeal has been a decisive element in preventing the use of the atomic weapon in the wars which have now stopped.

Today, though it is true that the danger has become even greater, it is true too that the peoples' opposition has continually increased. This has shown itself on the widest scale in every country, far outside the circles of those who signed at the time of the Stockholm Appeal.

For these reasons, the campaign which has now started should lead to a protest movement incomparably greater than that of five years ago. The important thing is that the campaign should be developed quickly, to enable public opinion to express itself before it is too late. The World Assembly for Peace, which is to take place on the 22nd May at Helsinki, must be in a position to express the irresistible will of the peoples to oppose the preparation and the outbreak of atomic war.

PREPARING THE WORLD ASSEMBLY

Declaration by Mr. Otto Nuschke

Vice-Premier of the German Democratic Republic

I welcome the Appeal of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace demanding the destruction of all stocks of atomic weapons wherever they may be and the immediate stopping of their manufacture. The sentence: 'Now and in the future, we shall oppose those who organise atomic war' exactly expresses the will of all tendencies and organisations for peace and particularly of Christians throughout the world. For indeed the hydrogen bomb is incompatible with the Sermon on the Mount and the Christmas Message.

I also welcome the Bureau's decision to call a great World Assembly of Representatives of All Organisations and Tendencies for Peace in Helsinki on May 22. This World Assembly will have to act as the conscience of the peoples. It should represent all humanist tendencies whatever their philosophical views or religious convictions. We in Germany shall do our utmost to extend the influence of the peace forces and win more and more men and women to join the World Council of Peace in its work. That is the lever of Archimedes that can topple the policy of strength and the plans for a blitzkrieg.

Berlin, January 25, 1955

Plans of Japanese Peace Committee

Meeting in Tokyo on January 14 and 15, the Japanese Peace Committee decided to hold a National Assembly of Representatives of the Peace Forces at the beginning of May, prior to the World Assembly.

Other decisions taken at this meeting were:

— To make known in every corner of Japan the Appeal of the World Council of Peace for the calling of a World Assembly;

— To give special consideration to the question of cooperation with peace forces which do not belong to the World Peace Movement, by closer contacts with the trade unions and with the organisations of the peasants, women, young people, religious circles and intellectuals, and by forming preparatory committees on which these organisations would be represented;

— To organise small meetings and discussions everywhere, especially in factories, shops, schools and homes, and elect delegates to district conferences;

— The problems to be discussed with the people are the banning of the A and H bombs and peace and security in Asia.

Delegates from Hokkaido District proposed a 'Peace Cruise' from Japan to Leningrad. The ship would take representatives to the World Assembly on board and visit different countries on the way. This proposal was unanimously endorsed and the session charged the Standing Committee to draw up concrete plans for it.

A Book by Professor Joliot-Curie, President of the World Council of Peace:

'FIVE YEARS OF STRUGGLE FOR PEACE'

As part of the steps taken to mark the fifth anniversary of the foundation of the World Peace Movement 'Défense de la Paix' Publications has put out, in Paris, under the title Five Years of Struggle for Peace, a volume of Professor Joliot-Curie's speeches, letters and articles during this period.

The book is, in effect, a history of the World Peace Movement, its birth and development, the campaigns it has launched, the struggles it has conducted and the victories it has won. Reflected in it are the many effective actions accomplished by the peoples under its leadership since 1949 and which resulted in ending the Korea and Indo-China wars and in preventing the use of the atomic bomb in these two conflicts, thereby proving that there is no international problem that cannot be settled through negoviation.

But at the same time as he goes back over the ground covered since the Pleyel Congress with Professor Joliot-Curie, the reader finds a clear exposition of the principles and objectives of the Peace Movement, as set out and explained in each one of its President's speeches, together with the Movement's position on the major questions, failure to settle which involves the danger of another world war.

Many people, many organisations and tendencies now uphold the ideas which our Movement announced at the time of its foundation and has defended ever since. One need only mention those of the settlement of differences through negotiation or, on another level, of the dangers of German rearmament. Today, hundreds of millions of men and women are demanding with us the abolition of weapons of mass destruction.

The situation would be quite different if the Peace Movement took its stand on anything other than concrete reality and the serious analysis of this reality. The speeches of its President are an example of this.

At the Warsaw Congress Professor Joliot-Curie said, speaking of the Stockholm Appeal:

'The march towards a stable peace must be done by stages and the objectives to be successively attained must be simple . . . It was therefore the clearest and most urgent problem that had to be raised.'

That is the principle that has guided each of the campaigns launched by our Movement and the book brings out, for the benefit of all its members, this method which makes necessary the long and patient work which they are doing.

For this reason Professor Joliot-Curie's book is indispensable to all who wish to know the truth about our Movement and is a real textbook for every one of its members.

Five Years of Struggle for Peace is also a picture of Frédéric Joliot-Curie, one of the greatest scientists of our century, at the head of the great battle against those who consciously want war, to whom he says: 'You must reckon with us.'

The name of Joliot-Curie is today linked with the discovery of atomic energy; no one is better equipped to judge its glorious possibilities and mortal dangers. That is why his name will always be connected with the struggle for the banning of atomic weapons.

In his very first speech Professor Joliot-Curie sounds the alarm. He throws light on the awful perspective of an atomic massacre, he argues passionately. The man who personally proposed the launching of the Stockholm Appeal speaks to scientists, intellectuals and all men, strongly opposing all the fraudulent uses to which science is put.

The book ends with the warning that Professor Joliot-Curie gave on October 30, 1954: 'Do not allow the ratification of the London and Paris Agreements!' But it is not yet finished. Every struggle the peoples conduct, every new danger and every new victory will provide material for further pages. Already, in this Bulletin, further declarations by the President of the World Council of Peace have appeared.

Five Years of Struggle for Peace has come out at the right time. Important victories have been won; decisive action is still needed against the manœuvres of those who wish to wipe out what has been achieved by the peace movement; the 1955 World Assembly is in preparation. Here we have a book which reviews the forces of the Movement, speaks the truth about what the Movement is and what it wants and provides its members with theoretical arguments.

Fourth Hungarian Peace Congress

The Presiding Committee of the Hungarian Peace Council met on January 3. Mrs. Janos Bugar, Secretary of the Council, spoke on the tasks of the Hungarian women's movement and gave information on the results of the vast protest campaign against West German rearmament.

The Presiding Committee decided to hold the Fourth Hungarian Peace Congress in Budapest on February 26 and 27.

MEETING OF THE BUREAU OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

(Vienna, January 17—19, 1955)

The last number of the Bulletin of the World Council of Peace contained the Appeal against the Preparations for Atomic War, the Statement and the Appeal to the Peoples of Europe adopted by the extended meeting of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace in Vienna on January 17—19.

The following pages contain extracts from the speeches made by members of the Bureau and guests.

There were two points on the agenda of the Bureau meeting:

1) The tasks of the Peace Movement in relation to the decision of the N.A.T.O. Council on the use of nuclear weapons.

2) The continued development of the struggle against the ratification and implementation of the Paris Agreements for the revival of German militarism.

The Rev. RAGNAR FORBECK

(Norway)

A few weeks ago Pastor Martin Niemöller, who is very well-known in Norway, sent me a circular entitled 'The Christian must not come too late'. Apropos of peaceful negotiations he writes: 'Here in West Germany they say that peace is a Soviet slogan.' It does not matter to me whether it is a Soviet slogan or not. I ask: why is it not our slogan? Are we to ask people to take an effective stand for peace, while we ourselves are incapable of speaking clearly and unequivocally? I mean that we must not only demand peace in the name of God and of Jesus Christ, but also ask the Christian Church and all Christians to start doing genuine work for peace. For it is our duty to work for peace...

Last Spring I spent five unforgettable weeks in New China, and through me the leaders of the Chinese Church sent a message to Norwegian Christians. It says:

'As Christians we cannot remain aloof from work for peace, we cannot enjoy our peace with God and be satisfied with ourselves if we neglect to work for peace among men.' I too should like to make a fervent appeal to ministers of religion and to those who belong to no denomination: 'Awake and come and work for peace with us before it is too late'...

Today, it is we, the friends of peace, who are the genuine realists. We have both feet on the ground and, to avoid falling into abstraction, we are today meeting to deal with concrete tasks: the banning of atomic weapons, the struggle against German rearmament alongside the German Social Democrats and the holding of a World Assembly of representatives of the forces of peace in every country in the world. We must do our utmost to save peace.

Mr. WILHELM ELFES

(German Federal Republic)

The idea of the rearmament of West Germany is the cause of increasing anxiety in the countries contiguous to the Federal Republic. The people of the Federal Republic themselves are more and more becoming a prey to this anxiety because they know what fascism and militarism mean; they suffered from them in their own flesh, and they see fascist and militarist elements gradually coming to dominate the policy of the Federal Republic. You, my friends, know that we West Germans, that all Germans have stated in all our conferences and congresses that the German people want peace and that the remilitarisation of West Germany is being accomplished against our will. You believed our assurances and we thank you for it. We are happy today to be able to bring you the confirmation of what has always been, as it were, a mere verbal promise. Look at West Germany now, look at the Federal Republic now! The women and the mothers are our most courageous and resolute collaborators in work for peace and against war. The young people have expressed their position clearly, resolutely and forcefully, as is only natural. They have said: we do not want to go into barracks, we do not want to take part in manœuvres, we do not want to fight another war, we do not want brothers to shoot each other down. We want an honest and secure job, we want to work for our own and our people's prosperity. The Trade Unions have adopted resolutions against remilitarisation and for negotiations which would lead to agreement, and the news that we are now receiving on the debates in the Bavarian trade unions is proof that these resolutions were not taken lightly...

The German Social Democratic Party is today openly opposed to the Paris Agreements because they are an obstacle to the reunification of Germany and to agreement. We all feel great satisfaction at the attitude of the Social Democratic Party and the work it is doing.

D. N. PRITT Q. C.

(Great Britain)

The rearmament of Western Germany, largely under the leadership of the worst elements surviving from the Nazi period, and equipped, moreover, with atomic weapons, would directly and greatly increase the danger of a third world war. It would render virtually impossible the reunification of Germany in one democratic country. It would of necessity involve the rearmament of the German Democratic Republic. All this of itself would maintain and increase the existing tension in Europe and would directly increase the likelihood of the outbreak of the third world war.

This rearmament of Western Germany would at the same time recreate the danger that a remilitarised Germany would once again turn to aggression, after all, Westwards against its creators instead of Eastwards against its intended target...

As to the fight against the proposals to use nuclear weapons, we in Britain, as most other people, know that this fight and the fight against German rearmament constitute integrally and essentially one fight; and we for ourselves in Britain know too that, if it is possible to calculate degrees of horror in the nightmare of atomic horrors which certain elements seek to prepare for the destruction of the world, the use of nuclear weapons does present greater and more direct danger to the peoples of Great Britain than to almost any other people.

Dr. JAMES G. ENDICOTT

(Canada)

I am here to speak for the 100,000 Canadian boys who lie buried in the soil of Western Europe. They died to save Western Europe from German militarism. I happen to be a veteran of the Canadian Corps of the First World War and today I speak for the conscience of the Canadian people. The overwhelming majority of the Canadian people do not want any more war, they are opposed to atomic warfare and they are opposed to any revival of German militarism . . .

There are a number of military dodos wandering loose in the atomic age. They are busy giving press interviews saying that the hydrogen bomb will be used and that atom bombs will make a jolly hot war and kill a lot of people. One of these fellows says he is a Christian and reads his Bible regularly. Well, he did not find that poisonous stuff in his Bible. In my opinion, any man today who advocates atomic warfare is a devil-worshipper. The love of God is unknown to him. Devil worshippers, armed with atom weapons, are far more dangerous than people who do not believe in God.

In 1945 one small, out-of-date bomb exploded over Nagasaki. They call it a baby bomb. That is a good name for it. Look at what that baby atom bomb has done to the babies of Nagasaki . . .
Listen to this: 8 were born without eyes or eye-sockets, 25 born without brains, 47 had undeveloped brains, 965 had abnormalities of various organs, 1,046 had degenerated bone structure, or nervous system or skin defects. In short, one baby in seven greatly harmed or ruined by one small atom bomb. And yet, today, both Dulles and the devil-worshippers are planning to use hundreds of them. Giving them into the hands of ex-Nazis will make certain that they are used. Does anybody doubt what Hitler would have done with an atom bomb?

Therefore, not only must we win the struggle against a new Nazi army but we must redouble our efforts to have our Appeal accepted by all governments, and all atomic weapons must be outlawed and abolished.

Mr. LIU CHANG-SHENG

(China)

The Chinese people have invariably opposed the rearmament of Western Germany, since the Fascist Axis of Germany, Italy and Japan brought disaster to China during the Second World War . . .

In the name of the six hundred million Chinese men and women I want to assure you of our unreserved support for the tireless struggle which the peoples of Europe have carried on against the rearmament of Western Germany and for collective peace in Europe. The support which the Chinese people give to the European peoples' struggle for peace is not only a promise but also a vow. I ask our European friends to believe in the strength of the support which the Chinese people can give, to believe in their desire to join with you and to offer you this strength . . .

Mr. EMILIO SERENI

(Italy)

Why are we once again having to raise the question of a world campaign after the great Stockholm campaign? Are we not merely repeating a campaign we have already carried out? Does it imply that we are admitting the futility of a campaign which had such repercussions in the world a few years ago?

I think that we must face up to a new situation by using new methods and that there is no question of repeating the Stockholm campaign, whatever forms this present campaign may take.

It seems to me that two new facts have been brought out in our discussion.

On the one hand, there are the increased efforts being made on a world scale by certain groups, certain political forces, to impose the rearmament of Western Germany on the people of Europe and of the whole world . . .

On the other, there is a new factor which has arrested the relaxation of international tension which began last year. It is not only the N.A.T.O. decisions indicated in the agenda but also statements on the use of the atomic bomb in the Far East — statements which are no longer being made merely by public figures or by a few brasshats, but by responsible politicians and military leaders . . .

The preparations for atomic war no longer consist merely in the manufacture of atomic and thermonuclear bombs. Concrete decisions have been taken involving the transformation of the whole military forces of certain countries on the basis of atomic strategy and tactics . . .

In my opinion, the gravity of these decisions lies in the fact that the process is irreversible. You cannot simultaneously prepare for atomic war and for another kind of war. At a given moment atomic war would become 'obligatory' if the joint forces of all the peoples did not succeed in stopping this madness.

I think that we must lay great stress on this point and mobilise the forces of the peoples immediately to prevent the world from travelling along this terrible road . . .

Mr. EMMANUEL D'ASTIER DE LA VIGERIE

(France)

Our Bureau would seem to agree now to give all its attention to the two most serious acts. The first is the unilateral decision to arm West Germany and to incorporate it in a coalition; and the second is the steps that the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation took in December on the one hand to prepare, and on the other to decide on, atomic war . . .

It is not possible to separate the two problems because, on the one hand, the rearmament of Germany will enable a new Wehrmacht to be given atomic weapons and, on the other, the new atomic strategy will lead the governments that support it to look on German territory and the German army as essential for the development of this strategy. It is for this particular reason that the French people found in the decisions taken by N.A.T.O. in December a new justification for their firm opposition to German rearmament . . .

The representatives of the French Peace Movement think that it is necessary to undertake without delay a vast campaign against the use and regularisation of atomic weapons. This campaign should neither replace nor be opposed to the campaign against remilitarisation. The campaign against the remilitarisation of Germany is not at an end and we affirm that it would not be without purpose even if ratification were to go through . . .

The French Prime Minister, Mr. Mendès-France, himself stated during the debate that if the agreements in question were only ratified by a small relative majority, that would create as many difficulties in practice as rejection. Today — and this must be repeated for the benefit of our friends from all countries — the parliamentary battle itself is not at an end. The renewal of mass popular activity at the beginning of January showed this and there exists a reasonable hope that the French Senate may put forward an amendment which will oblige the National Assembly to re-examine the agreements and refer the whole question back.

Mr. ILYA EHRENBURG

(Soviet Union)

The supporters of the 'policy of strength' themselves stress the link that exists between the revival of the Wehrmacht and the plans for the use of thermonuclear weapons. According to Louis Laroche, France-Presse correspondent, the leaders in the Pentagon state that they intend to carry out their programme in three or four years, a programme formulated in the following terms: 'The development of thermonuclear weapons and the complete remilitarisation of Germany'. Speaking in the House of Commons, Eden also put atomic weapons and the German divisions, which he called 'an important contribution', on the same level.

We were profoundly moved yesterday listening to the words of our President Joliot-Curie on the preparations for atomic war which threatens mankind with unprecedented horrors. Allow me to dwell on the plans to revive German militarism.

I would like to point out first of all that here we are dealing not with an equation containing unknown factors, but with the revival of the 'brown plague' that everybody knows. We have had enough of lying assurances about the allegedly new, democratic, defensive and even humanitarian nature of the West German army which Messrs. Dulles, Adenauer, Churchill and their recent but faithful friend Mendès-France are trying to set on foot! It is a question of reconstituting the same Wehrmacht which killed Churchill's countrymen and tortured Mendès-France's compatriots in the jails.

We know those whom it is intended to put at the head of the new German army: there is General Crüwell, former inspirer of the 'black Reichswehr', one of those who took part in the invasion of Yugoslavia; SS Divisional Commander General Manteuffel, butcher of old men, women and children in the Soviet Union; General Galland, one of the commanders of the Nazi air forces; Kretschmer, submarine pirate and favourite of the Führer; Heusinger, head of the strategic section of the General Staff of the Third Reich; and other war criminals. Who would dare to say that he doesn't know these gentlemen? The ruins of hundreds of towns — Polish and French towns, British and Soviet towns, know them; the widows of those who were killed and the children of those tortured to death know them; the pits where the victims of the SS lie buried know them . . .

The question of the revival of the Wehrmacht is far from being settled, but already, from Bonn, which once gave Beethoven to mankind, we can hear the cries and curses of the Nazis who are again plucking up courage. Adenauer's closest collaborators are already openly speaking of both the reunification of Germany by force and of the 1939 frontiers. The N.A.T.O. leaders are reckoning on the spirit of revenge turning the Wehrmacht against the East — that is why they are in such a hurry to carry out the Paris Agreements. They want to see the revival of the army which reduced half of Europe to ashes, the army of the Anschluss, the army with marching songs about Strasbourg cathedral and Danish Schleswig, the army of revenge, of hatred and death . . .

We have spoken a great deal about the principle of negotiation which should do away with the policy of strength. We have many times called on the politicians and the diplomats. Now we must call on the peoples. The principle of negotiation must, of course, prevail, but we must say to the ordinary people of all countries: 'If you do not now bring your diplomats and your politicians to the round table, they will drag you later on before the recruiting board, to the trenches and the air raid shelters.' The peoples of Europe will never agree to the revival of the Wehrmacht. No underhand combinations, arranged in the lobbies or buffets of the various parliaments, will give legal force to the Paris agreements. These agreements, on which the fate of Europe depends, were passed in Britain and France on a vote of only a minority of M.P.s. Is there any need to say that the majority of the electors of these countries, like the majority of West Germans, repudiate the revival of the Wehrmacht. All the cunning politicians will not succeed in imposing on the majority the will of the minority when it is a question of life or death.

The supporters of peace are the leaven of the peoples. The outcome of the main struggle for peace depends today on our efforts, our enthusiasm and our sacrifices. The peoples want to live. They will prevent the revival of the Wehrmacht. They will put an end to preparations for atomic war. They will save peace.

Mr. LOUIS SAILLANT

GENERAL SECRETARY OF THE WORLD FEDERATION OF TRADE UNIONS

All workers, whether or not they are members of our trade union organisations, know full well that the legalisation of the use of atomic weapons would make it easier for them to be used. Weapons of mass destruction make no distinctions and workers affiliated to the World Federation of Trade Unions, to the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions and to the International Confederation of Christian Trade Unions would all be their unfortunate victims.

This being so, we propose that the signature campaign for the appeal we shall issue at the end of this meeting should be carried on everywhere, in all trade unions and at all places of work.

The World Federation of Trade Unions is ready to call on its 80 million members and their leaders throughout the world to sponsor groups or committees for collecting signatures in all factories, whatever the categories of workers.

I repeat that we look on this task as a task of honour and that we are fully aware of our responsibilities, not only to our members but to world opinion as a whole.

Dr. JOSEF HROMADKA

(Czechoslovakia)

The main issues of the present era won't be solved on the level of diplomacy or the average routine politics, they will be solved in the hearts, in the minds and in the actions of the people in our villages, towns, and factories, on farms and everywhere, in all ways, in all walks of life . . .

It always takes a long time until we are able to reach the living heart of man, but my experiences have taught me that the situation is not hopeless; if we are sincere, if we know what we want and if we bring relevant arguments for our point of view, we cannot help having a success. Young people, students and genuine Christians among the church members are ready to listen, to react, to understand and to modify their own views even in the countries which belong to what we call the Western orbit of our present world. Is it not very significant that during the discussions at the General Assembly of the World Council of Churches last August at Evanston in the United States, a resolution was unanimously adopted urging all the Governments of the world to work for the abolition of the atom bomband to make some significant step along the lines of disarmament. That is very significant and very, very good . . .

On January 16 at Frankfurt-on Main in the German Federal Republic there was a mass rally and march which lasted for several hours in protest against remilitarisation and for the rejection of the London and Paris Agreements. Five thousand young people took part: trade unionists, Falcons, Socialist youth, the Friends of Nature, members of the German Federation of Socialist Students, the German Youth Community and other organisations.

The situation is grave. The situation may be disturbing and we have to be vigilant, we have to concentrate upon the points of danger and we have to have strong convictions of what we have to do. But we have to have a hopeful and joyful approach to the big issues of our time.

Mrs. ISABELLE BLUME

(Belgium)

SECRETARY OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

I speak here on behalf of all those little countries which for centuries have been ground between France and Germany as between the upper and nether millstones and which have been destined, throughout their history, to be the battlefield of Europe . . .

The most fabulous arsenal in the world is going to be set up on their doorstep and everywhere there will be stocks of atomic weapons which are rather evidence of the dangers we are running than of the power they confer on their possessors.

But all these evils that are piling up through the reconstitution of the Wehrmacht culminate in an even greater evil: the Wehrmacht will be in possession of atomic weapons and could use them tactically and strategically . . .

The N.A.T.O. decision obliges us to think of what would happen to our countries if war were unleashed. Holland, whose territory has been won from the sea in a battle that has gone on for centuries, will disappear under the sea again with the first hydrogen bomb that is dropped on her. The population of Belgium, which is one of the most dense in the world, will be destroyed at one blow, and the blast furnaces of the Grand Duchy are much too visible and tempting targets to be missed by the annihilating thunderbolt . . .

But our peoples have learned that it is possible to struggle against the decisions of governments and parliaments . . .

Let the parliaments be besieged by deputations, let the will of ordinary people be brought to their notice so that the divorce between those who claim to represent the nations and accept the preparations for war on the one hand, and ordinary people not one of whom wants war, on the other, is made more and more strikingly clear.

And when we say not one we are thinking of the German people who, aware of their responsibility, are for the first time in the history of this century refusing to be the chosen instrument for unleashing another war which would mean both their destruction and ours. By struggling for their security, our little countries wish to help in the reunification, democratisation and pacification of Germany. To live in a world at peace is their only chance of survival.

Mr. ALBERTO CAVALCANTI

(Brazil)

The anger felt throughout the world as a result of the N.A.T.O. decision has been very deeply felt in my country. For this reason the Brazilian Peace Movement very strongly supports the proposals made at this meeting of the Bureau for a great signature campaign against atomic and thermonuclear weapons.

The Stockholm Appeal won four and a half million signatures in Brazil; this new campaign will win many more. The choice of the South Pole as a testing ground for the hydrogen bomb after the tragedy in the Pacific is a direct and frightful threat to the countries of Latin America.

We strongly support this signature campaign and ask all scientists, artists and intellectuals through out the world to join with their peoples in preventing another war at any price and in demanding the absolute banning of weapons of mass destruction which are a threat to all the peoples of the world.

Mr. BRUNO BERNINI

PRESIDENT OF THE WORLD FEDERATION OF DEMOCRATIC YOUTH

The World Federation of Democratic Youth will give its full support to the world campaign and will put forth all its strength to make it a success. It has convened its Executive Committee for the month of February and the first point on the agenda is the young people's contribution to the struggle against the danger of an atomic war. Already, a number of delegations are setting out to take the decisions adopted here to many countries and to see to it that in the preparations for this summer's Fifth World Festival the young people express, in their own way, their support for this great campaign.

Mr. ERWIN SCHARF

(Austria)

In 1950 and 1951 more than 800,000 Austrians signed the Stockholm Appeal and, later, many public figures and organisations of various tendencies went on record for the banning of the atomic bomb . . .

The obviously positive effect of the Stockholm Appeal and the fact that it met with such a big response that it has so far succeeded in preventing the use of the atomic weapon convinces us that a further effort of this kind could help to spare the world an unspeakable catastrophe. It would be a great honour for us if such an important campaign were to start from our capital, Vienna.

If West Germany is rearmed and incorporated in N.A.T.O. the former Hitler generals will also have atomic weapons at their disposal.

The fact that the politicians in control in West Germany have still not given up their claims to Austria in itself shows the dangers of such a development for Austria . . .

The launching of a great campaign by this Vienna meeting of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace could make a capital contribution to the security of Europe. Austria can have no future except in a peaceful Europe and is therefore vitally interested in the banning of weapons of mass destruction.

Mr. HSIEH PANG-TING

VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE INTERNATIONAL UNION OF STUDENTS

In accordance with its main watchword, 'Peace, national independence and a democratic education', and with its constitution, the International Union of Students gives its support, together with other peace-loving students in the world, to the call of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace.

At this decisive time when civilisation is under the grave threat of the use of nuclear weapons, we are sure that the students of the whole world will know what attitude to adopt and will take resolute action alongside the peace-loving peoples.

I conclude with these words of the Japanese students:

'Let us never allow another Hiroshima in the world!'

Mr. ANTOINE TABET

(Lebanon)

The peoples of the Near and Middle East are following with great interest and sympathy the struggle that is being conducted by all the peoples of Europe against the revival of German militarism. They are quite aware of the danger this represents not only to the security of Europe but to world peace . . .

We are aware of the gravity of the international situation and of the incalculable dangers to our countries and to mankind as a whole that could result from the use of atomic weapons at any level whatsoever . . .

The hundreds of thousands of people, from the man in the street to the most authoritative public figures, who signed the Stockholm Appeal, are still with us. The number of peace supporters has considerably increased in our countries and throughout the world. They can do better and they will do better.

It is our duty to tell them today, in the most solemn manner, that their future, the future of their children, their country and even of the human race is in their hands.

Mr. ABDUL RAHMAN BOUCHAMA

(Algeria)

Yes, a great campaign must be launched immediately . . .

In this respect, signature campaigns and world-wide days of action have in the past given the greatest stimulus and the best results. A world signature campaign is therefore indicated, but in size and effectiveness it must be different from all previous campaigns . . .

We salute the millions of signatures that have already been collected in Japan. We salute the Asian and Afro-Asian Conferences which are in preparation in the Far East. We salute the French people's great fight against the ratification of the London and Paris Agreements and we hope that it will win victory at the last moment . . .

All this constitutes an immense capital and augurs an unprecedented success.

The biggest problem will be the practical mobilisation of the millions of people throughout the world who would like nothing better than to go into action. Never at any time have we felt a greater need for wide, powerful national peace movements . . .

Speaking of the particular problems of North Africa, Mr. Bouchama continued:

North Africa is the main base of the so-called peripheral strategy. Algeria even has the sad privilege of belonging to the Atlantic Pact. Of course, it was others who signed for her. In our countries there are stocks of atomic weapons and aerodromes from which atomic bombers can take off . . .

Our people have every reason for mobilising and giving a mass reply to the Appeal that will come out of this Bureau meeting.

Mrs. HILDE NEUMANN

INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF DEMOCRATIC LAWYERS

Do there already exist international law conventions concerning the use of atomic weapons? To this question one must unreservedly reply in the affirmative . . .

In 1907 in the Hague Convention relative to war on land, the States agreed that the horrors of war must be kept within certain limits and that the civilian population of the belligerent countries must be spared. After the First World War this principle was confirmed and adapted to the new conditions in the Convention banning the use of toxic and asphyxiating gases signed in Geneva in 1925. This Convention was ratified by 49 States . . .

Like the 1948 Convention on genocide, the Nuremberg Judgement constitutes the broadest basis for classifying any new kind of weapons of mass destruction, any new technique in this domain as a violation of international law, as a crime . . .

No one can cast any doubt on the fact that the use of atomic weapons, even considered from a purely juridical point of view, constitutes the gravest crime. But any form of preparation for using atomic weapons is also a violation of international law.

PROFESSOR LEOPOLD INFELD

(Poland)

VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

The Polish people cannot and will not be passive in the face of a reborn German militarism. Our past experiences are too deeply rooted in our memory for that.

The ratification of the Paris agreements will make the peaceful solution of the German problem impossible . . .

Those who engineered the Paris agreements claim just the opposite and try to convince a few naive people that the ratification of the Paris agreements will make negotiations easier. How can one talk about new negotiations for the peaceful solution of the German problem when at the same time one is rebuilding German might, when one is providing the divisions of the reborn Hitler Wehrmacht with atomic, chemical and other weapons of mass destruction in accordance with the latest decision of N.A.T.O?

The session of the World Council of Peace in 1953 announced that the idea of negotiations is in contradiction with the creation of faits accomplis because, then, all discussions are meaningless. This is doubly true today and therefore it is not true that the ratification of the Paris agreements will make negotiations easier . . .

At the last meeting of N.A.T.O. the use of atomic weapons was regularised. Atomic weapons will be put in the hands of the new Wehrmacht, that is, in the main the same men who killed millions of people in Europe. This N.A.T.O. decision is one more reason why the Polish people, together with other European nations, must strengthen their fight against the remilitarisation of Germany. Today, the fight against the remilitarisation of Germany is linked up with the fight against atomic war.

I would like to end my general remarks with a few concrete proposals concerning the tasks which lie before us. First we must, without frightening people, explain to every man and woman what atomic war would mean for them, tell them that the prevention of such a war depends on them, tell them that such a war will never happen if they are against it . . .

Secondly, we, as members of parliament, must be aware of what an atomic war means. Appeals and mutual visits of Members of Parliament from different countries would help in this matter . . .

Thirdly, we should organise as many international visits and meetings as we can, all dealing with the threat of atomic war.

Fourthly, we must publish good, attractively printed books and pamphlets, written by our best writers.

We must bend all our efforts towards saving mankind from the viciousness of the enemies of peace. This is the most noble and important task that lies before us. And in it we must and shall not fail.

Mr. PAUL DELANOUE

GENERAL SECRETARY OF THE WORLD FEDERATION OF TEACHERS' UNIONS

We believe that a great universal campaign against weapons of mass destruction, against preparations for a third world war, arousing energy, initiative and devotion, will be successful. We shall be able to give great support to such a campaign, not only among the teachers but also among the parents and students, bearing the experiences in the various countries in mind, seeing to it that they all converge on the same objective, and encouraging initiative . . .

All teachers can, for various reasons and using their own arguments, give their help and support or create favourable conditions for a world campaign against weapons of mass destruction . . .

At the present time, for one reason or another, the major teachers' professional organisations are not remaining aloof from the peoples' fight for peace; on the contrary . . .

For us, the struggle against the atomic weapon is not simply agitation. It is an educative activity. It is the affirmation of our confidence in mankind's possibilities. Man has shown that he can understand and master the forces of nature; great scientists like Professor Joliot-Curie have made science advance with seven-league strides. At present we are confronted with something that depends on man and on man alone — avoiding war; and it is our duty as teachers to do our utmost to see to it that the conscience of mankind stops war.

PROFESSOR KAORU YASUI

(Japan)

GENERAL SECRETARY OF THE JAPANESE NATIONAL COUNCIL AGAINST ATOMIC AND HYDROGEN BOMBS

On January 16th, that is, the day after I left Japan, a general conference of the National Council against Atomic and Hydrogen Bombs was held in Tokyo; and, according to telegrams I have received, it passed some important resolutions including one to convoke a world conference against nuclear weapons and another against the N.A.T.O. decisions sanctioning the use of nuclear weapons . . .

Japanese militarism caused measureless harm to the peoples of the world, while the Japanese people themselves had to suffer unspeakable miseries. The tragedies of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, in particular, were beyond description. Through these bitter experiences, the Japanese people, and especially housewives and mothers, began to think, in earnest, that they should never allow another war in the world, in order to protect the lives and happiness of all and especially of the coming generation . . .

The U.S. experiment with a hydrogen bomb at Bikini horrified not only the crew of the Daigo Fukuryu Maru, who were the direct victims, but also to the people of Japan as a whole. This, on top of Hiroshima and Nagasaki! Our indignation finally exploded. And it eventually became crystallised in the signature campaign. Many, who had never had any experience of the peace movement, joined; housewives and mothers played particularly important and courageous roles at the head of this campaign. It was nothing less than a 'gushing torrent of national feeling' . . .

As a consummation of this kind of work, we have a project for a 'world conference on the prohibition of atomic and hydrogen bombs' in Hiroshima on August 6th, on the occasion of the tenth anniversary of the dropping of the atomic bomb on that city. The preparations are now in progress . . .

Further, as a means of bringing the problem of the bombs to the attention of the peoples of the world, we have great hopes for a project of making a film with international cooperation . . .

The international situation, which seemed to get brighter after the success of the Geneva Conference, has again darkened owing to the prospect of the London and Paris Agreements. Moreover, a new danger has been born as a result of the decision taken by N.A.T.O. to permit and regularise atomic war. We Japanese fully realise how important and precarious the present situation is. There is no other way to meet it than by reinforcing the peace forces in every part of the world in order to confront the war forces and to bring their plans to nought.

Last year, the nucleus of the Peace Movement in Japan was the signature campaign against the atomic and hydrogen bombs. And, this year, with the new state of affairs in the world, we must make it develop into a world movement uniting all the peoples of the antagonistic camps. Moreover, other forms of peace activity, including the campaigns against rearmament, will have to be advanced on the strength of the success of the anti-atomic and hydrogen bomb drive.

Mrs. EUGENIE COTTON

(France)

VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE — PRESIDENT OF THE WOMEN'S INTERNATIONAL DEMOCRATIC FEDERATION

From one meeting to another we have seen great progress in women's understanding of political problems. This is of great importance when we think of the role women play in the formation of public opinion.

It goes without saying that women in the countries directly threatened by German rearmament feel the need to unite and oppose it. But it is a remarkable fact that the women of Argentina should also have sent messages to the French Deputies to show their opposition to the ratification of the London and Paris Agreements . . .

Faced with the pressing dangers that threaten mankind, the Women's International Democratic Federation will closely associate itself with the preparation and holding of the World Assembly of Representatives of the Forces of Peace which the Peace Movement has called for next May. To achieve the maximum mobilisation of women in all countries, the Federation has convened for June a World Congress of Mothers to protect their children from war, for disarmament and friendship between the peoples . . .

The signature campaign for the banning of nuclear weapons in Japan. A signature-collecting stall at Meguro Station in Tokyo.

The idea of the Congress of Mothers is arousing the enthusiasm of all our national organisations and of many public figures. It will be an important contribution to the work of the Peace Movement and I hope that it will find support among the organisations taking part in the World Assembly, for we both serve the same cause, the cause of peace.

Mr. KUO MO-JO

(China)

VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

One month ago, at its short two-day session, the N.A.T.O. Council revealed its criminal intention to massacre the peace-loving peoples by using atomic weapons . . .

The Chinese people and all the peoples of Asia consider such an open act of preparation for atomic war as a serious provocation in opposition to the will of mankind . . .

We Chinese people expressed our ardent support for the historic Stockholm Appeal against atomic weapons launched in 1950.

At that time the People's Republic of China had only been in existence for a short while, but the number of signatures collected for the appeal exceeded 220,000,000 . . .

Recently, the chief of the United States General Staff, Admiral Radford, publicly stated that in the event of a new military conflict, atomic weapons will be used not only in Korea but in other regions. It goes without saying that this is a new threat to the Chinese people arising from the problem of Taiwan . . .

Today, however, these threats of an atomic war have taken a step forward. They have already passed the stage of an irresponsible clamour set up by certain individuals and have become open agreements made between responsible government leaders.

How can the will of all mankind tolerate such a serious provocation without protest?

We are convinced that this cannot be, cannot possibly be.

'Even if you are not ill, a thousand accusing fingers can make you die.' This is one of the most popular proverbs in China. It means that the will of mankind — the criticisms, reproaches and accusations coming from the people — represent an incomparable force . . .

We must mobilise world public opinion so that more than 2,000 million men and women throughout the world raise their hands and point accusing fingers at those who are in favour of atomic war . . .

We are firmly confident that we shall abolish the threat of atomic war.

Mr. NAZIM HIKMET
(Turkey)

Will the atomic bomb be dropped or not, that is the question . . .

Turkey has possessed atomic weapons for a long time and recently manœuvres with atomic weapons were held. The N.A.T.O. powers have decided to use atomic weapons on the basis of the result of these manœuvres in Turkey . . .

It depends on the peoples of Iraq, Iran and Turkey whether atomic weapons will be used in the Middle East or not.

Although their peoples are for peace, it is impossible to organise peace committees and to make publicity for peace in these countries.

But in spite of everything our Peace Movement must make its voice heard legally and it must take advantage of every opportunity and possibility . . .

It must try to see what can be done.

Mr. LUIS VIDALES
(Colombia)

The phenomena of the modern world teach us that we cannot consider events as being foreign to us simply because they take place in far-off regions. German rearmament and the N.A.T.O. decision are beyond a doubt to be taken as a single fact, now that the tendency of those who want war is to set up armies organised for atomic war. But German rearmament exactly corresponds to the policy that these same people are following in Latin America. Now, we fully understand that we are not far away from the war centres, that the atomic bomb can be dropped on our peoples as well, and that we shall therefore not be spared the consequences of its use in any part of the world. At the present time a great hope is arising for the peoples of Latin America — I mean the Soviet offer to set up factories in other countries for the peaceful and progressive use of atomic energy. This offer is filling our movements with a new enthusiasm. For these reasons, we give our full support to the proposal put forward by the President of the World Council of Peace and discussed at this meeting of the Bureau.

Mr. GABRIEL D'ARBOUSSIER
(French West Africa)

VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

German rearmament is significant proof that we may once again find ourselves with a rifle in our hands in the Senagalese light infantry, as it used to be and still is called; that we may have recruitment once again and all the other hard conditions that the peoples of Africa had to go through during the war.

I might add that the last war saw the German army in Africa for the first time, and that, too, is an important indication of what German rearmament and the revival of German militarism mean . . .

Mr. d'Arboussier then explained that the peoples of Africa are particularly sensitive to the threat of atomic weapons because the Japanese precedent makes them fear that these weapons will above all be used against coloured people.

There exists in Africa, he said, the idea that there is a sort of innate solidarity between Africa and Asia; from this point of view I think that the Afro-Asian Conference is an excellent thing, but I think that we must go further.

As to the atom-bomb — and it is the duty of all of us in Africa to explain this — it is not merely a threat directed against peoples because they are of a different colour, because they belong to one race rather than another. It is a threat directed against mankind as a whole.

Dr. NESTOR GRANCHELLI CHA
(Argentine)

On behalf of the Argentine Peace Council I wish to declare that we support the proposal to launch a great campaign against atomic weapons immediately, for we are convinced that the recent N.A.T.O. decisions have aggravated the danger of wiping out mankind in a fiendish manner . . .

In signing the Stockholm Appeal, millions of Argentinians showed their determination to prevent civilisation from being wiped out. Recently, the peasants — who constitute 60 per cent of the population of Latin America — have, through their most representative organisations, the Argentine Agrarian Federation and the Argentine Federation of Agricultural Co-operatives, gone on record against the use of atomic weapons. But the most striking action on the national, and even on an international, level has been that taken by thousands of Argentine doctors. They collected the signatures of the most eminent members of the medical profession in our country — university professors, Deans and former Deans of medical faculties, directors of hospitals and so on — and sent a message to the United Nations demanding the banning of weapons of mass destruction. The United Nations replied to this request through its Disarmament Commission, stating that it would be studied together with the other aspects of the problem.

Moreover, the members of the Peace Movement approached the Members of Parliament to get them to voice this popular demand. The parliamentary group of the Radical Civic Union, the party to which I belong, recently studied this question with a view to tabling a draft resolution in the Chamber of Deputies. A similar step had already been taken by the Peronista Deputy, Mr. Bustos Fierro.

We can assure you that, in this new campaign, no section of the Argentine people will remain aloof from this noblest of struggles, the struggle to save life.

Mr. A. FADEYEV
(Soviet Union)

VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

The N.A.T.O. Council has decided to use atomic weapons in the new war that this bloc is striving to launch.

This decision was taken with the participation of government representatives of the countries taking part in this aggressive bloc . . .

Everything happening in the N.A.T.O. countries, since its Council took this adventurous, inhuman decision, makes us, the friends of peace, tell all peace-loving peoples throughout the world frankly the following: 'The activity of the enemies of peace has gone over into a new stage, a more dangerous one. The threat of atomic war is hanging over the peoples and they must fully realise the fact. They can and must defeat the preparations for atomic war and they are strong enough to do so . . .'

Millions and millions of people throughout the world know that while the Soviet Union acts for the peaceful settlement of international problems, this is not because it is weak but because it wishes to develop in peace and protect itself and other countries against monstrous and absurd destruction and human losses. The Soviet Union is in a position to apply its policy of peace successfully precisely because it is strong . . .

The most ardent enemies of peace, among whom there are clear-sighted men, know full well that the Soviet Union is strong. But that is precisely why, from time to time, they circulate myths about the weakness of the Soviet Union in some sphere or other, so as to deceive the peoples and win them over to their adventurous policy . . .

But there are still large numbers of good, honest but inexperienced people who believe these myths because they are deceived, day in, day out.

To these people I must say, first of all: 'Do not believe the myth that the Soviet Union speaks up for the banning of atomic weapons because it is alleged to feel weaker in this sphere than the aggressive United States. Do not believe those who tell you so. They have seen nothing, they have reckoned nothing, they know nothing.'

The Soviet Union opposes the use of atomic and hydrogen weapons primarily because it considers that they are the most criminal and most inhuman of all types of weapons of mass destruction, and because it wishes to spare its people and other peoples the incalculable losses that the use of such weapons could bring about.

The Soviet Union did not possess this weapon when the aggressive circles of the United States began to brandish the atomic bomb in front of us. We were compelled to arm ourselves with these bombs also in order to protect our country, the hope of mankind, against the adventurist activities of men who have lost all semblance of humanity. But always, and at all stages, the Soviet Union has been and remains a supporter of the banning of atomic weapons and is for the establishment of strict international control of this ban, and for the peaceful use of atomic energy. The Soviet Union is also in favour of stopping atomic and hydrogen bomb tests and of the simultaneous destruction by all states of their stockpiles...

I would like to remind you that during the last session of the United Nations General Assembly, the Soviet Union agreed, in order to reach a successful solution to this problem, to accept the Anglo-French draft proposals, as a basis of agreement, as a result of which unanimity was achieved in the United Nations on the problem of the peaceful use of atomic energy also.

The Council of Ministers of the U.S.S.R. has recently published a communique on scientific and technical assistance to a number of countries regarding the peaceful use of atomic energy—to China, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Rumania and the German Democratic Republic. The question of extending the number of countries which could receive such assistance is being studied...

All thinking men, all impartial men, can see that the decision of the N.A.T.O. Council on the preparation of atomic war is contrary to the agreements reached at the U.N. and that this decision and these agreements are incompatible.

The Soviet Union will continue to base itself on these agreements and act to win the banning of atomic and hydrogen weapons...

Though they have been deceived by the propaganda of the enemies of peace, the people of the West must give up the naive idea that the atomic weapon can serve as a guarantee of security in the hands of aggressive politicians and military men. On the contrary, the mad and adventurous policy of these ephemeral governments can at any moment make their own peoples the victims of an atomic war of extermination. The guarantee of security lies in the banning of the atomic weapon and general disarmament.

Mr. SUROSO

(Indonesia)

A few years ago, when the Indonesian Peace Committee started a big campaign against atomic weapons, many people in our country were sceptical, and quite a number thought it was just empty propaganda. But later on, thanks to the continuous work of enlightenment, the people became aware of the dangers of atomic war, and the campaign began to be successful. This could be seen by the spontaneous indignation of our people on the occasion of the explosions at Bikini last March.

This indignation was so great that it became a movement in which people from all walks of life participated...

The Indonesian people nowadays are struggling for the extension of the idea of peaceful co-existence, to widen the peaceful areas, and to safeguard and complete their national independence. These principles are supported by the people and the government alike, and they constitute the main strength of our peace forces.

We are aware that these efforts would not mean anything should an atomic war break out...

My country is situated far from Europe. I know that the decision of the N.A.T.O. Council is a decision by a military alliance in Europe, but it is a great mistake to say that this question is a matter which only concerns Europe. I believe that once atomic weapons are used, there will be no question of where they will be used first... And if this happens, there will no longer be any borders of war or any peace areas...

That is why the struggle against German rearmament and the use of atom weapons must have the full support of the peoples all over the world...

Mr. RENATO BERTOLINI

SECRETARY OF THE INTERNATIONAL FEDERATION OF RESISTANCE FIGHTERS

A world campaign against atomic weapons can only strengthen our struggle against German rearmament. I believe that resistance fighters, those who escaped from the Nazi prisons, and the victims of fascism and Nazism, have sufficient reasons for striving to prevent such terrible weapons from being put into the hands of men who were capable of exterminating millions of men, women and children...

Dr. VOLODIA TEITELBOIM

(Chile)

A month ago the Chilean Peace Council met in Santiago de Chile and decided to give a strong stimulus to the campaign for the banning of the use of atomic weapons. The Council took into consideration the announcement made a few days before that the United States would conduct tests on the H bomb in the Antarctic Ocean in order to experiment with the possibility of melting the vast fields of ice at the South Pole. Chile possesses more than a million square kilometres of territory in the Antarctic. More serious still, the people of Chile remember the terrible fate of the Japanese fishermen. They do not want America to be made a guinea-pig for the hydrogen bomb, any more than they want to be cannon-fodder in a third world war.

It is for this reason that the great campaign launched here will not be something exported from Vienna but rather something bound up with the fears and the deepest desires of the peoples of Latin America who wish to protest their own interests.

CLOSING SPEECH

PANDIT SUNDARLAL

(India)

For the present I think if there is any organisation which represents the peoples of the world, the voice of the peoples of the world, the fortunes of the peoples of the world, it is this organisation.

My dear friends, the responsibility upon our shoulders therefore is great and I hope, I am sure, we all realise that responsibility. We are here not merely to discuss politics. We are here to fulfil a sacred mission, we are to unite the peoples of the world. We are to make their voice heard by the governments of the world, for after all the peoples are greater than the governments. We are to maintain the progress of the world, the prosperity of the world, the peace of the world, the very existence of the world...

India naturally abhors war, war as such, and even more so as a means of solving world problems. Our government's humble efforts to keep out of blocs and to help in the solution of all differences between nation and nation, through peaceful negotiations, are but a natural outcome of our immediate past as well as of our ancient traditions...

Every Indian believes that men who can plan to massacre in cold blood innocent and unarmed men, women and children, invalids in their beds and babes in their mothers' arms, have already forfeited the right to be called civilised or cultured, or even human... I may not dwell upon the possible consequences of the use of such weapons of mass destruction... I once more only assure you that the entire people of India stand, and will throughout stand solidly shoulder to shoulder with you in your noble efforts...

We must do all that we can to get as many signatures as we can for this appeal issued by our worthy President. We have to reach every corner of the globe, we have to reach every country and every individual. We have to wake up the conscience of the world. We must remember that we represent the conscience of the peoples of the world; that we represent the voice of the peoples of the world.

A very heavy responsibility falls upon us and therefore I close with a serious appeal to you, with an earnest appeal to you, that each one of you as he goes away from this hall will do his utmost to see to it that this Movement for Peace succeeds, will do his utmost to see to it that every man and woman who can express his or her opinion signs the Appeal. We have to go from door to door, from house to house, and we hope, let us hope, that these efforts of ours will bear fruit...

The Peace Movement expects every man and woman to do his or her duty.

American Peace Crusade Statement on Formosan Situation

In a statement on the situation in Formosa, the American Peace Crusade expresses the great anxiety felt by the American people as a result of recent developments in United States policy in the Far East.

'The Cairo Conference of 1943 between the United States, Great Britain and China pledged the restoration of Formosa to China after World War II,' states the American Peace Crusade. 'No international conference or body has withdrawn this pledge. It is therefore understandable why the Government of the People's Republic of China regards U.S. actions off the Chinese coast as interference in its internal affairs.

'Whatever differences exist between the United States and China can be solved peacefully . . .'

In conclusion the American Peace Crusade calls for an avalanche of letters, resolutions and wires to the President, Congressmen and Senators urging that 'no hasty action be taken which could end in world annihilation'.

Avert the Prospect of an Atomic War

Academician Dimitri Skobeltsin, who has just been designated to represent the Soviet Union at the United Nations consultative commission which has been charged with the preparation of the international conference on the peaceful use of atomic energy, has published an article in the Moscow review International Life.

The eminent atomic scientist shows how the major international problems relative to the stockpiling of A and H bombs in the United States and the Soviet Union could be solved.

'The solution', writes Academician Skobeltsin, 'lies in setting up and consolidating the system of security, the first foundations of which were laid by the creation of the United Nations Organisation. It is the establishment of a system of relations between the peoples which will ensure the settlement of disputes through negotiations and agreements acceptable to all concerned.

'The problem of the banning of atomic weapons and of the establishment of a system of control over the implementation of this step is, in my opinion, one of the most important problems, if not the most important problem, that the United Nations is called upon to solve . . .

'The best, or more exactly the only solution is the banning of the atomic and hydrogen bombs.

'Throughout the centuries mankind has always rejected wars for the extermination of whole populations. There have always been laws of war based on the inadmissibility of such wars. In present circumstances these principles dictate the imperative necessity of banning the atomic bomb.

'Today the problem is this: either mankind will succeed in barring the way to atomic war—and we believe that this is what will happen—or the world will be hurled into a devastating war. We believe that it is necessary and possible to avert such a prospect.'

National Conference of Japanese Peace Movement against A and H Bombs

The Japanese Peace Movement's National Conference against the A and H bombs, which was held in Tokyo on January 16, registered over 22 million signatures demanding the banning of the A and H bombs. It adopted an 'Appeal to the Peoples of the World' and a 'Resolution condemning the N.A.T.O. decision to arm its troops with atomic weapons'.

Three hundred delegates from all parts of Japan attended the conference, among them the families of victims of the hydrogen bomb tests. The Conference made clear the need for the movement to widen its range and take on an international significance. To this end it was decided:

— to send representatives to international meetings such as the Conference of Asian Countries and the World Assembly of Representatives of All Organisations and Tendencies for Peace, and others;

— to send information and material to other countries;

— to call a World Conference for the banning of the A and H bombs in Hiroshima on August 6, 1955.

The Conference also adopted a resolution urging the Japanese Government to send representatives to the Afro-Asian Conference.

Appeal to the Peoples of the World

'. . .The atomic bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki caused the instantaneous death of 200,000 people in the former city and 90,000 in the latter. But the tragedy did not end with the bombing. Even today, ten years later, we are still seeing survivors dying suddenly from diseases resulting from radioactive contamination . . .

'The effects of the test explosions of the hydrogen bomb at Bikini resulted in the death of Mr. Kuboyama and in serious injuries to the other fishermen on board the Daigo Fukuryu Maru. Furthermore, the radioactive emanations given off by these tests contaminated fish—the Japanese people's main source of protein—rainwater and agricultural products, thereby endangering the lives of the Japanese people . . .

'Therefore the Japanese people make the following appeal to the peoples of the world:

"The use of atomic and hydrogen bombs and the testing of these weapons must be banned unconditionally . . .

"We want atomic energy to be used only for peaceful purposes and for the happiness of mankind.

"We hope that the United Nations will continue the negotiations for general disarmament and the banning of weapons of mass destruction . . .

"We call on the peoples of the world to send their representatives to the World Conference for the Banning of the A and H Bombs which will be held in August." '

Resolution against the N.A.T.O. Decisions

'. . .The N.A.T.O. Council has authorised the Supreme Commander of the N.A.T.O. forces to arm his troops with atomic weapons . . .

'The Japanese people, who have thrice suffered disaster from the atomic and hydrogen bombs, consider this decision to be a challenge to mankind and demand that the N.A.T.O. Council withdraw it.'

In a message of 'Hope and Peace' broadcast by the Swiss National Radio Company at the New Year, Queen Elizabeth of Belgium spoke of the problem of nuclear weapons in these terms:

'The marvellous discoveries of science which are bringing us ever nearer to universal harmony must never become a nightmare to mankind and lead it to destruction and death. The researches and discoveries, indeed the very life of great, inspired men implant in us a loftier conception of man and his destiny. This conception must bring all the peoples together.

'My most ardent hope is to see this progress resulting in a better life, physically, intellectually and morally.'

The Duty of Every Man

In connection with the Vienna Appeal, the Presiding Committee of the Polish Academy of Sciences has published a statement which says:

'It is the duty of every man to demand the destruction of all stocks of atomic weapons wherever they may be and the immediate stopping of their manufacture. The danger of the use of atomic weapons will always exist so long as they have not been destroyed and their destruction banned once and for all.

'Only the common action of all men and women can eliminate this threat to mankind and civilisation. In the name of conscience and reason we enter the battle for the destruction and banning of atomic weapons.'

World Conference of Buddhists Opposes Use of A and H Bombs

The World Conference of Buddhists, held in Burma last December, was attended by Buddhists from 29 countries including Burma, Ceylon, India, Indonesia, Japan, Pakistan, the Philippines, Thailand, France and Germany. The delegated included the Cambodian and Thailand Ministers for Religious Affairs, the Rev. Asakura, a high dignitary of the Otaniwa sect of Buddhism, and 60 other Japanese prelates.

The Conference adopted a resolution based on a proposal made by Japanese Buddhists which 'calls on the governments and peoples of the whole world to take action to ban the manufacture and use of atomic and hydrogen bombs and other weapons of mass destruction'.

Mr. Ba Uu, President of the Republic of Burma, was present at the conference and greeted Buddhists throughout the world. He hoped the efforts to ban war from the earth would bear fruit.

All India Congress for Peace and Asian

A view of the procession through Madras

A mass rally of 120,000 people was held on the shore of the Indian Ocean at Madras on January 2 to mark the conclusion of the All India Congress for Peace and Asian Solidarity which had opened on December 30, 1954.

The Congress was preceded by a session of the All India Peace Council and its Bureau on December 28 and 29.

At these meetings proposals for the agenda were discussed and adopted. The Bureau and the All India Peace Council both sent cables to Mr. Nehru conferring at Jakarta with the Prime Ministers of the other Colombo countries expressing the hope that he and the other Asian Prime Ministers would make every effort to avert the dangers of foreign intervention by securing the application of the five principles enunciated by him and Mr. Chou En-lai.

Opening Session

The Congress opened on December 30 in St. Mary's Town Hall, George Town. Fourteen hundred delegates from all over India and from foreign countries were present at the session. Foreign delegates included Professor J. D. Bernal F.R.S. (Great Britain), Vice-President of the World Council of Peace; Mr. Jean Laffitte (France), General Secretary of the World Council of Peace; Mrs. D. N. Pritt (Great Britain); Dr. Andrea Andreen (Sweden) and Mrs. Jessie Street (Australia).

Dr. Saifuddin Kitchlew, in the course of his Presidential address, referred to the leading part played by India in focussing the attention of the peoples of the world on the vital necessity for peaceful co-existence and stressed the need for popularising the five peace principles enunciated by the Prime Ministers of India and China.

Dr. Kitchlew thanked the people of Madras for the warm welcome given to the representatives of the Peace Movement.

'We are particularly happy to note', he said, 'that among the delegates today are large numbers who represent the workers and peasants—the backbone of our country—showing the vast increase in the consciousness of the ordinary people of our country in regard to the problems of peace and the urgent necessity to act for peace . . .'

Peace Song

After Dr. Kitchlew's speech, Mr. Kumari Nagalakshmi sang a 'peace song' which was warmly applauded by the Congress. Then Mr. Romesh Chandra read the messages sent to the Congress by eminent figures from different countries.

During this first session the foreign guests brought greetings from the movements they represented to the All India Congress for Peace and Asian Solidarity.

Group Discussions

On the second day the Congress divided itself into six groups to discuss the following subjects:

1) Asian solidarity and the five principles of peaceful co-existence;

2) Colonialism, racialism and foreign interference in the internal affairs of nations;

3) Disarmament, the prohibition of weapons of mass destruction and the question of German rearmament;

4) Trade among Asian countries and the development of their economies;

Resolutions

On the Five Principles and the Solidarity of Asian and African Countries

In the coming Afro-Asian Conference, the peoples of our two Continents see a new hope for the further strengthening of their solidarity, their ties of unity and brotherhood.

The Afro-Asian Conference will enable the peoples of the two Continents to examine the serious threats which face the peace of the world, particularly in Asia and Africa.

The Indian people are proud that as a result of a number of steps taken by the Prime Minister and the Government of India which have assisted the cause of peace and the part played by the Indian people in the struggle for peace, India has won the affection and esteem of millions in all lands.

The joint declaration of the Prime Ministers of India and China provides a basis for peace and freedom for the whole world in the now historic Five Peace Principles.

The Asian and African peoples fully support these principles and call for their acceptance and implementation by all countries . . .

On Colonialism and Racialism

This Congress anxiously notes that colonialism is being sought to be perpetuated or restored in new forms in various parts of the world. The S.E.A.T.O. pact confronts the countries of South East Asia, including India, with such a danger. The independence of countries like Guatemala, British Guiana, and Iran has been infringed upon by foreign powers. N.A.T.O. powers are being called in to support the Portuguese in maintaining their rule in parts of India . . .

This Congress urges the necessity of Asian solidarity as a condition for the attainment, preservation and maintenance of freedom of the peoples of Asia.

On Taiwan (Formosa)

This All India Congress for Peace and Asian Solidarity strongly feels that the question of Taiwan (Formosa) is at present pregnant with the greatest danger to world peace . . .

The Congress, therefore, while condemning the recent U.S.A.-Chiang Kai-shek military alliance as a great threat to peace in Asia and in the world, demands that all U.S. armed forces be immediately withdrawn from Taiwan and the adjoining waters, leaving the People's Republic of China free to solve its own domestic problems.

On Disarmament and the Banning of Weapons of Mass Destruction

The new weapons of mass destruction, particularly the hydrogen bomb, now threaten the very existence of humanity. This threat has become all the more grave from the recent declaration of the intention to use these weapons as a normal form of armaments.

Accordingly, this Congress urges on all countries to speed up their negotiations (approved by the United Nations Committee) to assure their abolition and the cessation of all experiments as an interim measure. This should be done in a framework of drastic all-round disarmament removing the danger of war and liberating resources to improve conditions of life.

5) Cultural relations among the Asian countries and the defence of national culture;

6) Organisational problems.

In the afternoon, delegates belonging to various professions — doctors, lawyers, writers, businessmen, trade unionists and others — met in separate groups and discussed the ways and means of promoting peace and solidarity among the nations of Asia in their own spheres.

Resolutions

In the course of the third day the Congress examined and discussed the draft resolutions proposed by the different commissions and resolutions were adopted on the following subjects:

— The five principles and solidarity between the countries of Asia and Africa.

— The World Assembly of Representatives of the Forces of Peace.

— Colonialism and racialism.

— Taiwan (Formosa).

— German rearmament.

— Malaya.

— Goa.

— Disarmament and the banning of weapons of mass destruction.

— Work of the Cultural Commission.

— Organisational principles.

— Trade between the countries of Asia and their economic development.

Closing Session

At the beginning of its closing session the Congress discussed and adopted a resolution urging the need for cultural exchanges among the different countries of Asia.

The Congress also welcomed the decision of the World Council of Peace to hold a World Assembly for Peace, after which the office-bearers of the All India Peace Council were elected.

The conclusion of the Congress was marked, as we have already said, by a great mass rally. A mile-long procession wound its way from St. Mary's Hall to Triplicane Beach. A caparisoned elephant headed the procession followed by Dr. Kitchlew and foreign delegates who were seated in open carts drawn by bullocks.

At the Triplicane Beach a mass meeting was held. The speakers included Dr. Kitchlew, Dr. J. C. Kumarappa, Dr. Mulk Raj Anand and Pandit Sunderlal who all stressed the need for promoting peace and friendship among the nations of Asia.

The Peace Movement in the Soviet Union

III

• Delegations for Peace

The exchange of delegations plays an important part in the work of the Soviet Peace Movement (1). In 1954 alone 22 delegations from 20 countries went to the Soviet Union at the invitation of the Soviet Peace Committee. They included delegations from the Peace Movement in India, China, the Federal German Republic, Hungary, Finland, Sweden, Norway, Viet-Nam, Burma, Ceylon, Korea, Japan, Argentine, Bolivia, Australia, Canada and other countries. These delegations were composed of persons from different walks of life and of different political parties: Dr. Kuo Mo-jo, President of the Academia Sinica; Mr. Josef Wirth, former Chancellor of the German Reich; the Indian singer Mr. Onkar Nath Thakur; Mr. Wilhelm Elfes, President of the Union of Germans for Unity, Peace and Freedom; and writers, workers, housewives and composers, etc.

The delegates visited Moscow, Leningrad, Stalingrad, Kiev, Rostov, Tbilisi, Erivan, Sukhumi, Sochi, and other towns in the Soviet Union. They visited factories, collective and state farms, schools and creches, churches, clinics and universities and had many meetings and discussions with many Soviet citizens — workers and peasants, government ministers and scientists, churchmen and students.

'We have everywhere found proof that the Soviet Government and the whole Soviet people stand for peace and against war. They have no aggressive intentions towards any people.' This was the conviction that Pandit Sunderlal, Vice-President of the All India Peace Council, expressed after his visit to the Soviet Union.

In their turn, the members of the Soviet Peace Movement go on delegations to other countries at the invitation of their respective National Peace Movements. In the Spring of 1954 a delegation led by the writer Mr. A. Sofronov took part in the Finnish National Peace Congress devoted to the Kalevala, a national celebration. Last September, Soviet delegates took part in the 'Peace Week' in the German Democratic Republic. Mr. Ilya Ehrenburg, Vice-President of the Soviet Peace Committee, went to Chile and Argentine at the invitation of the National Peace Committees. Professor Anissimov and Mr. Maxim Tank, the poet, both members of the Soviet Peace Committee, were present at the commemoration of Anton Chekhov in Poland. In the course of the past two years members of the Soviet Committee have gone on delegations to China, Austria, Czechoslovakia, Great Britain and many other countries.

• Conferences, Books and Films

Another important part of the Soviet Peace Movement's activity is the popularisation of the work of the World Council of Peace.

After the Stockholm session of the World Council of Peace meetings of the local peace committees were called in the Soviet Socialist Republics of Latvia and Lithuania and in Leningrad, Kiev, Minsk, Gorki, Murmansk, Tomsk and other towns. Throughout the country the Peace Movement has called many meetings of opposition to West German rearmament and the London and Paris Agreements. In the near future the decisions taken by the recent extended meeting of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace will be studied at meetings to be called by the Soviet Peace Committee.

Literature and the press, radio and cinema are widely used in the Soviet Union to spread the ideas of the Peace Movement. Full reports on the sessions of the World Council of Peace are published regularly. Between 1950 and 1954 more than 130 different collections and pamphlets on the World Peace Movement were published with a total print of 5 millions copies. The Russian edition of the peace review Horizons is published in Moscow and has a big circulation.

In addition, eminent members of the Movement play an active part in this publicity work.

In these last years Mr. Ilya Ehrenburg has published seven volumes of collected articles on the struggle for peace including Men Want to Live, The Will of the Peoples and For Peace. A collection of the Metropolitan Nikolai's speeches in support of peace has been published and also a book, The Struggle for Peace, by Jan Peive, President of the Latvian Peace Committee. The Uzbek actress Sarra Ishanturayeva, member of the Soviet Peace Committee, published in Uzbekistan a book of impressions on the Congress of the Peoples entitled My Foreign Friends. Fifteen thousand meetings copies were printed. Members of the Soviet Committee give many talks on the problems of the struggle for peace. Thus Alexei Maresyev, whose heroism is described in Boris Polevoi's novel The Story of a Real Man, has given more than 1000 talks, while Lyubov Kosmodemianskaya, the mother of the famous Zoya, has given hundreds of lectures.

Soviet film producers have made a number of documentary films on the Peace Movement, such as 'The Youth of the World' (which won an international peace prize), 'The Soviet People Vote for Peace', and 'We Are for Peace'.

We shall not discuss here the wealth of artistic production — literature, drama, films, painting, sculpture and architecture — which also takes its stand under the banner of peace.

We have tried, in this brief sketch of the Peace Movement in the Soviet Union, to satisfy our readers' requests. This series of articles is far from giving a complete picture of the overall activities of the Soviet Peace Movement which has millions and millions of members. We shall strive to supplement them by giving regular information in this Bulletin.

Many Events Planned to Celebrate Cultural Anniversaries

The commemoration of the great cultural anniversaries proposed for 1955 by the World Council of Peace promises to be on an even greater scale than in previous years.

The National Peace Committees of a number of countries are drawing up plans for a series of events — some of them very original — so that the commemoration of Schiller, Cervantes, Andersen, Whitman, Mickiewicz and Montesquieu may have the support of intellectuals and the people in general. The aim is to publicise and explain in various ways the works of these great authors: by conferences, exhibitions, special articles in newspapers and reviews, radio broadcasts and so on. The following are also planned: performances of Schiller's plays; readings of Walt Whitman's poems and the execution of musical compositions inspired by them; public discussions on the significance of a particular book, such as Don Quixote or Montesquieu's Persian Letters; visits by intellectuals to other countries to take part in special events and trips to the historic places where these great figures lived. Czech cinematographers will make cartoons and puppet films based on some of Andersen's tales. Latin American writers will ask cultural bodies in the United States to collaborate in the commemoration of Whitman. The preparations for all these events are going ahead in India and the Soviet Union, in Poland and in Finland, in the United States and in Syria, in Chile and Brazil, in Germany and Great Britain.

This activity of the friends of peace is being taken up indirectly by other circles who will sponsor commemorative events of their own. As decided at its Eighth General Conference, U.N.E.S.C.O. will honour the memory of Mickiewicz by publishing a book on the life and work of the great Polish poet. In the United States, the Library of Congress has recently decided to mark the centenary of the publication of Leaves of Grass. Lastly, the announcement that Vittorio de Sica, the famous Italian film director and actor, will very soon make a film of Don Quixote with himself in the title role has aroused wide-spread interest.

PIANISTS OF 33 COUNTRIES TO COMPETE IN WARSAW

A Cultural Event: Fifth International Chopin Competition

The Fifth International Chopin Piano Competition will be held in Warsaw from February 22 to March 21. It is one of the most important and famous of international music competitions, and talented young pianists from all over the world, eager to win the coveted title of the best performer of Chopin's music, take part in it. The competition is noted for its high quality and helps to strengthen friendly links between musicians and nations.

One hundred and thirty-eight pianists from 33 countries will compete. They come from Albania, Argentine, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Ceylon, Chile, China, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Ecuador, Finland, France, German Federal Republic, German Democratic Republic, Great Britain, Guatemala, Holland, Hungary, Iran, Israel, Italy, Japan, Luxemburg, Mexico, Poland, Rumania, South Africa, the Soviet Union, Switzerland and the United States. Some of these pianists have already won prizes at international competitions in Paris, Geneva, Brussels and Prague. The jury is also international and is composed of world-famous musicians from Poland, the United States, the Soviet Union, Great Britain, China, France, Italy and other countries.

It has been announced that many persons from different countries, composers, pianists, music critics and representatives of the press, radio and cinema, have arrived in Warsaw.

The Fifth International Chopin Piano Competition will be one of the highlights of the Second Polish Music Festival which was inaugurated on January 17, tenth anniversary of the liberation of Warsaw, and will go on till July 2. Great international musical events will take place during the first fortnight of May.

The 1954 Anniversaries

A great public meeting to celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of the death of Anton Chekhov has been held in Sao Paulo (Brazil). The novelist Jose Geraldo Vieira and the dramatist Rugero Jacobi spoke on the personality and work of the great writer. The drama group of an office-workers' club presented the play, The Anniversary, and a monologue by Chekhov.

In Rumania, there were editions of Chekhov's works, broadcasts, lectures illustrated by performances of extracts from his works in the towns and the villages, exhibitions and the showing of a Soviet film, The Anna Cross, adapted from the play of the same name by Chekhov.

Germany

The Cultural Section of the Peace Movement in the German Democratic Republic has discussed the celebration of the anniversaries in detail, and has already published a pamphlet on the six great figures to be celebrated. A selection of their works for schoolchildren will soon appear. A number of works will be published and there will be new editions of others: Pan Tadeusz of Mickiewicz, Tales and Short Stories and Selected Tales by Andersen, Cervantes' Don Quixote and Walt Whitman's Leaves of Grass. The Schiller Committee is carrying on with the preparations for a special programme in honour of the illustrious author of Don Carlos. Works by Schiller and books on him will be published in the course of 1955; they include Correspondence between Schiller and Körner, A Schiller Picture-book and eight volumes of the works of Schiller with an introduction by Alexander Abusch.

Similar events have taken place in the German Democratic Republic. A film for epidiascope on Chekhov was made and distributed to the local Peace Committees. The anniversary of Henry Fielding was also celebrated on a wide scale; for example, the Institute of Pedagogy and of the History of Pedagogy of Geifswald University organised an evening memorial meeting. The press has published many articles on Fielding and much information on Aristophanes has been translated from the modern Greek and collected in one volume.

Soviet Union

Important events are to be held in the Soviet Union; foreign intellectuals will take part in certain of them. It is to be noted that the six figures who are being commemorated this year are widely known in the Soviet Union. Between 1918 und 1954 the works of Schiller went through 89 editions in 15 of the languages of the Soviet Union; the total number of copies printed was a million. Montesquieu's Persian Letters have been published in Russian and Lithuanian. There have been 39 editions of the works of Mickiewicz in 750,000 copies. Andersen is tremendously popular with Soviet children; there have been 189 editions of his works in 32 of the national languages — a total of 7 million copies. The fiftieth edition of Don Quixote appeared recently, with illustrations by the Kukrinskys. Walt Whitman, too, is highly appreciated; a new selection of his works in Russian was published recently and other editions in the various national languages of the Soviet Union are in preparation.

On the occasion of the 125th anniversary of the death of the French scientist Jean-Baptiste Lamarck, the biological section of the Soviet Academy of Sciences and the natural sciences section of V.O.K.S. held a solemn session at which Academician Oparin paid homage to Lamarck's contribution to science.

A Chinese women's delegation led by Mrs. Chang Yun, Vice-President of the All China Federation of Democratic Women, has visited France.

Among others taking part were Mrs. Lei Chieh-chiung, Assistant Dean of the Peking Law College, Mrs. Lou Chih-chia, Professor at Tsinghua University, and Mrs. Tsu Teh-hsin, editor of the magazine Women in New China.

Commenting on their visit, they said:

'All the countless expressions of friendship which have been lavished upon us give us a further reason for taking an optimistic view of the future development of friendly cooperation in trade and cultural exchanges between China and France. The people of both countries love and need peace.

'This friendly cooperation depends, on mutual understanding; and in order to understand each other personal contacts such as we have had are necessary. We hope that our delegation, which has come to France with a message of peace and friendship, will be the forerunner of other visits. We hope too that in the future more and more French people of every section of society will be able to visit our country where they will be warmly welcomed.'

Mr. Dimitri Shostakovich, the Soviet composer and International Peace Prize Winner for 1953 has just been elected a foreign member of the Swedish Royal Academy of Music.

A Rumanian Folklore Ensemble including 121 singers, musicians and dancers, gave a highly successful series of performances at the Théatre de l'Empire in Paris. The National Traditional Ballet of the People's Republic of Hungary later performed in the same theatre.

A delegation from the Arab Academy of Sciences of Damascus went to the Soviet Union at the invitation of the Soviet Academy of Sciences. Its members included the following eminent figures: Mr. Hassani, Vice-President of the Academy; Sheikh Bahdjat Bitar; Dr. Hussein Sabah, former Dean of the University of Syria; Dr. Sami Dahan, and others.

On the delegation's return from the Soviet Union, Sheikh Bahdjat Bitar made an important statement largely devoted to freedom of worship in the Soviet Union and the Soviet people's attachment to peace and their peaceful labour.

An exhibition of Soviet painting was held in Damascus last December, under the auspices of the Syrian Fine Arts Society. It attracted a large number of visitors, students especially, and was commented on by all the Syrian press.

A Symbol of Student Friendship

Students have recently given a fine proof of the results which the friendly collaboration of the young people of the world can give: the opening of the International Union of Students' Sanatorium for Asian students, which was recently inaugurated in the presence of 800 delegates, visitors and guests from different countries. The speech made by the Indian Professor Nihar K. Munsi, President of the Calcutta Students' Health Home and a member of the Senate of Calcutta University, stressed the significance of this happy achievement:

'The opening of the I.U.S. Sanatorium for Asian Students in Peking crowns with success the efforts of students of all countries in the field of mutual cooperation. Never before has such a magnificent project been undertaken by the students themselves for their own benefit. In the tense international situation of today the Sanatorium stands out singularly as a symbol of international peace and friendship among peoples of all countries.'

Among the delegates and guests were representatives of the Japanese, Korean and Vietnamese student organisations, the Soviet Anti-fascist Youth Committee, the Union of Czechoslovak Youth, as well as the President of the Association of Filipino Students' Councils, the General Secretary of the National Union of Israeli Students and the President of Students in Sanatoria in France.

Among the distinguished Chinese guests were the Minister of Higher Education, the Vice-Minister of Public Health, the Vice-President of the Red Cross Society, etc...

In the midst of great applause, the French student delegation presented the Sanatorium with a pneumothorax apparatus and the delegation from the Calcutta Students' Health Home presented a portrait of the world famous Indian writer, Rabindranath Tagore.

Addressing the gathering, Mr. Leonardo Ignacio Jr., President of the Association of Filipino Students' Councils, said:

'This Sanatorium is an outstanding testimonial to the unity and friendship of the youth and students of the world... I am sure that for us this is the beginning of a new era of friendship with all students of the world.'

Many messages of greetings were received from student organisations in Poland, Finland, Denmark, Germany, Mongolia, Australia, etc... The Secretary General of the Indonesian Ministry of Education wrote: 'I congratulate you on the opening of this splendid institution and hope it will prosper as a symbol of mankind.'

The Sanatorium, which is situated near Peking, is absolutely up-to-date in its construction and equipment on the basis of plans worked out by Chinese professors of architecture and medicine in collaboration with their students. The project was completed thanks to the collaboration of the All China Students' Federation and students in other countries. It is available free of charge to Asian students who suffer from tuberculosis. Covering an area of 90,000 square metres with a floor space of 20,000 square meters, the Sanatorium provides 300 beds and will give treatment to students suffering from pulmonary tuberculosis. The first group of patients was admitted to the Sanatorium on the opening day.

● Reciprocal Visits by French and Soviet Students

Young people and students of various countries are strongly feeling the need to meet each other regardless of borders, to know each others' desires and experiences and to establish a close international friendship. This is the conclusion to be drawn from the many meetings that have taken place between young people of different nationalities and different points of view. Certain of these exchanges are particularly fruitful because they are reciprocal.

For example, the student section of the Soviet Youth Anti-fascist Committee invited the French National Union of Students to send a delegation of 30 to the Soviet Union. The delegation was led by Mr. Louis Bernier, Vice-President of the Union, and visited schools, universities and clubs: it also had many meetings with Soviet students.

In turn, 30 young Soviet people have made a stay of three weeks in France at the invitation of a committee whose members represent 32 sports, student and cultural organisations, among them the Youth Section of the General Confederation of Agriculture; the Youth Section of the General Confederation of Labour; Catholic and Protestant youth organisations; the French Union of Republican Youth and various scout organisations.

● International Conference on University Sport in Paris

An international conference of European student sport organisations has taken place in the U.N.E.S.C.O. building in Paris. It was convened by O.S.S.U. (the French National Student Sport Federation) and by U.N.E.F. (the French National Union of Students) together with the International Federation of University Sport and the International Union of Students.

At this conference the representatives of 19 European countries — Albania, Belgium, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Finland, France, the German Democratic Republic, Great Britain, Holland, Hungary, Italy, Luxemburg, Monaco, Poland, Rumania, the Soviet Union, Spain, Switzerland and Yugoslavia, together with the Saar, — met to discuss how to coordinate student sport on an international level. Unanimous agreement was reached on the conditions of entry into the World University Games and on the possibility of organising University Summer Games in 1956 or 1957.

An International Conference of Architectural Students will be held in Paris from April 5 to 13 in the School of Fine Arts. The Sponsoring Committee includes representatives of the Italian and Belgian students and representatives from the International Union of Students and the International Union of Architects. U.N.E.S.C.O. is helping in the preparation of the conference and will take part in it.

GERMANY: Actions against Remilitarisation and Atomic Weapons

In the biggest factory of the German Democratic Republic, the 'Leuna-Werke', 650 delegates from 245 enterprises in the Halle district discussed with representatives from West Germany and foreign countries how to make their factories into bastions for peace.

In a telegram to Mr. Jean Laffitte, General Secretary of the World Council of Peace, the participants write:

'We shall explain the meaning of the signature campaign against the preparations for atomic war in our factories and localities and to our comrades and fellow citizens in such a detailed way that this action will become an effective means of attaining the objectives set out in the Vienna Appeal.'

In the German Democratic Republic more than 52,000 artists, scientists and intellectuals have already signed the Appeal against the London and Paris Agreements issued by Professor Walther Friedrich, President of the German Academy of Sciences, and by the poet Bertold Brecht.

In the German Federal Republic the German Association for Peace held a conference in Duisburg on January 16. We give the following extracts from the statement that was issued at the end of the Conference:

'The decisions of the last session of the N.A.T.O. Council clearly show that any new war would be an atomic war, and that would mean the end of the countries affected by it, including Germany . . .

'The German Association for Peace calls for the exploration of all possible ways of entering into discussion with the people and organisations on the other side of the Elbe and of helping to create the necessary conditions for the reunification of Germany.

'The German Association for Peace calls on the Federal Government, political parties and all members of the Federal Parliament to oppose the ratification of the Paris Agreements. We would point out that, in making his decision, each member of parliament shoulders a heavy responsibility for the future of Germany.'

A section of the vast queue of people waiting to see their M.Ps.

FRANCE: Week of Action against the Paris Agreements

The National Council of the French Peace Movement met on January 30 shortly after the meeting of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace in Vienna. The problems dealt with at Vienna were the theme of the discussion: the rearming of Germany and the threat of atomic war.

This session of the National Council reflected the extension of the influence of the Peace Movement; it was attended by a number of elected representatives, political and trade union figures and others of a wide variety of views.

Mr. Gilbert de Chambrun, in presenting the report, spoke of the two threats that are hanging over the world: the threat of the revival of German militarism and the policy of intimidation based on the atomic strategy.

There were many contributions to the discussion including that of Mr. Laurent Casanova who showed the link between German rearmament and the N.A.T.O. decisions on atomic weapons and stated that the French people will never submit to this. With the aid of British and American documents, Mr. Picard stressed the gravity of the atomic problem, and an engineer who works in the Atomic Energy Headquarters described the attitude of French research workers to this question. Mr. Bernard Lavergne analysed the Paris Agreements.

At the end of the session three texts were unanimously adopted:

— An 'Address to the German People' assuring them of the French people's support in their action against German rearmament, for a united and peaceful Germany and for security and peace in Europe; — An 'Appeal against the Ratification of the London and Paris Agreements calling on all Frenchmen to take part in a week of action, from February 14 to 20, to make known to the Council of the Republic the country's feeling about the London and Paris Agreements, and to bring effective pressure to bear on the municipal and county councillors and the senators;

— An 'Appeal for a National Assembly of Organisations and Tendencies for Peace' which asks all Frenchmen to help in the preparation of a national demonstration against German rearmament and the atomic menace on March 27. This would be part of the preparations for sending a French delegation to the World Assembly of Representatives of Organisations and Tendencies for Peace.

GREAT BRITAIN:

Ten Thousand British Call On Their M.Ps. Demand 'No Arming of Germany' Biggest Political Demonstration for Twenty Years

Responding to the call of the British Peace Committee ten thousand people from every part of Great Britain went to the reopening of Parliament on January 25 to see their M.P.s, to call upon them to oppose the rearming of Germany and to demand the reopening of the debate on the Paris Agreements. It was the biggest political demonstration of its kind in Great Britain since before the war.

In specially chartered buses, by train, by car, deputations elected by trade unions, cooperative organisations, labour parties, peace organisations, women's organisations, came from North Scotland, West Wales, the far South West of England, from the great industrial towns, Manchester, Sheffield, Birmingham, Coventry, from the rural areas of Sussex, Gloucestershire and other counties. A specially striking fact was that most of these deputations were fifty to a hundred per cent bigger than was expected.

Starting at two o'clock in the afternoon before the House opened, the stream of deputations continued right into the evening. At seven o'clock there were six thousand people queuing to get in to their M.P.s, singing and shouting slogans which could be heard in the House during the debate.

In spite of the police, who prevented the majority from going into the lobby, many succeeded in seeing their M.P.s, some of whom came out into Parliament Square to talk to their constituents.

Later in the evening the police tried to disperse the thousands who were waiting to see their M.P.s. Mounted police rode into the queues, using their batons. This only gave all the more spirit to the march which then took place through the centre of London, with over ten thousand taking part.

At the end of the march the Hon. Ivor Montagu, Vice-President of the British Peace Committee, at a big open-air meeting, said:

'Let the M.P.s realise that what has happened today is not the end but the beginning — the signal for a still greater avalanche that will bring into motion millions of people until the Wehrmacht is defeated before it can march again.'

Mr. Montagu put to the meeting the Peace Movement's proposals for the next steps in the campaign:

1. Continual lobbying of all M.P.s in their constituencies.

2. Organisation of 5,000 public meetings in streets, shopping centres and outside factories.

3. A series of local and area conferences bringing together the widest range of organisations.

It was also agreed by acclamation to send messages of support to the Peace Committees of France and of East and West Germany.

BULLETIN OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

INFORMATION BULLETIN PUBLISHED BY THE SECRETARIAT OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

No. 5 (2nd. Year) MARCH 1, 1955

A Pledge for Peace

In a number of countries the campaign against the preparations for atomic war is already in full swing. The response of public opinion to the Appeal of the World Council of Peace shows that the Appeal has come at the right time and that it meets a universally felt need.

Further, these first experiences confirm the correctness of the World Council's decision to conduct the action against the preparation of atomic war in the form of a signature campaign.

'Why a signature campaign?', people may ask.

Because the deliberate and considered act of putting one's signature to a text which is both clear and explicit is the active and concrete expression of one's will. Because the signature means that one has understood. Because it is a political undertaking, a contract which begins with the physical act of writing one's name and is fulfilled in work to get others to sign and to see the common will realised. Because a great number of signatures in opposition to the forces of destruction necessarily leads political forces and organisations of all kinds to take a stand, for they cannot run the risk of becoming isolated from the hundreds of millions of men and women who, by the pledge they have given, are defending their own and their children's lives, and the lives of their fellow men.

Because, in short, the fixed intention of certain governments to hurl the world into atomic war can be blocked by a powerful barrier: the firmly expressed will of all the peoples.

These are a few of the reasons for the specific form of our campaign.

Clearly, to carry it through successfully imposes great tasks on every Peace Committee and a heavy responsibility on every member of the Peace Movement. For this must be no mere mechanical collection of signatures. If each signature is to be a solemn contract pledging the writer to win his neighbour to sign too and make their common will prevail, it will be necessary to explain, to persuade, to convince on a gigantic scale. And if the number of signatures is to compel the retreat of those who do not hesitate to prepare for a war waged with hydrogen bombs, every man and woman must be given the possibility of playing a direct and conscious part in this decisive struggle.

This implies that the Peace Movement must bring into operation every means at its disposal. It will be necessary to seek out each man and woman at home or at their place of work, in office or factory, in the workshops and in the fields. It will also be necessary to compile canvassing lists and to do detailed organisational work. For this the defenders of peace must use the means at their disposal, together with those they acquire in their daily struggle and through the exchange of experiences; the means, too, at the disposal of the big national and international organisations which are working for peace in their own particular fields; and lastly the new means that will arise in the course of the campaign as the latter grows through the feeling of human solidarity aroused by a threat that is common to all countries.

Every defender of peace is animated by the profound conviction that he can be victorious over the forces of negation and destruction. He knows that public opinion has already shown itself strong enough to stay the hand of those who menacingly brandish the atomic bomb and to bring to the negotiating table governments that refused to go of their own accord, and that it can also prove itself strong enough to impose the destruction of atomic weapons and the stopping of their manufacture. That is the meaning of the Appeal and of the campaign launched by the World Council. By understanding it aright, hundreds of millions of men and women in every part of the world can transform it into a material force powerful enough to win victory for aims which are those of reason and commonsense.

A message from Dean Chandler

It is heartening news to learn that Protestant Church leaders throughout Germany have thrown themselves into a campaign against the rearmament of Western Germany. May God bless their endeavours and keep them staunch in their struggle for the reunification of Germany. This fully accords with enlightened Christian public opinion throughout the world. The base endeavours of power-drunken politicians must be defeated if a third World War is to be averted. As Germany has led the world into two wars already, may it this time be an instrument of Divine justice, and peace-loving brotherly affection. May it strengthen the will to peace, by refusing to become part of an aggressive Western bloc.

I appeal to my brethren of the German Evangelical Church to stand together in this crucial hour, and so frustrate the evil intentions of those who delight in war.

International Organisations support the Vienna appeal

The World Federation of Trade Unions

The Secretariat of the World Federation of Trade Unions has published the following statement:

'The World Federation of Trade Unions wholeheartedly supports the decisions taken by the Bureau of the World Council of Peace at its last meeting in Vienna, and the document it adopted condemning those who are pressing for an atomic war.

'In particular the World Federation of Trade Unions gives its full support to the appeal against preparations for an atomic war . . .

'The World Federation of Trade Unions is convinced that the workers of the whole world, whether or not they belong to an organisation affiliated to the W.F.T.U., will throw their full weight behind this campaign against preparations for an atomic war and sign this appeal in their millions.

'It calls on them to organise, in the most varied forms, the collection of signatures in all enterprises and to make every effort in support of this appeal.

'It also urges them, and above all the workers and trade unions of all European countries, to take the lead in the struggle against the Paris agreements which are aimed at making German militarism touch off an atomic war.

'The World Federation of Trade Unions reminds all trade unionists, all workers that every step towards war is always accompanied by measures to lower the living standards of the working people and whittle away their trade union rights and democratic freedoms.

'The fight of the workers for better living and working conditions and their struggle for peace, collective security and the lessening of international tension, and against preparations for a new war and the militarisation of the economy are indivisible.

'In the face of the grave and acute dangers threatening the world and the policy which means for the people poverty and an atomic war which could wipe out entire countries, the W.F.T.U. is convinced that all workers, whatever their nationality, trade union affiliation, political opinion or religious belief, will strengthen their unity and fight with determination. In this way they will make a decisive contribution to the action of the people for peace, freedom and a better life.'

Women's International Democratic Federation

At its meeting in Geneva from February 9 to 13, the Council of the Women's International Democratic Federation adopted the following statement:

'The Council of the Women's International Democratic Federation is aware of the immediate danger created by the dispositions that certain governments have taken to prepare and regularise the unleashing of atomic war anywhere in the world.

'It is the duty of every woman to make every effort to protect her home and children and to ensure the happiness of the rising generation.

'Only a powerful protest movement by the peoples can avert this grave threat and put a stop to the plans of those who want to unleash atomic war.

'For this reason the Women's International Democratic Federation gives its full support to the resolutions adopted by the Bureau of the World Council of Peace on January 19 in the course of its meeting in Vienna, and calls on women to unite and strengthen the peoples' movement of opposition by signing and getting others to sign the powerful Appeal against the preparations for atomic war.'

World Federation of Democratic Youth

The Secretariat of the World Federation of Democratic Youth has published a statement which says in part:

'The World Federation of Democratic Youth declares, on behalf of its 95 million members, that it approves the resolutions of the World Council of Peace on the struggle against the remilitarisation of West Germany and on the organisation of a vast campaign against the preparations for atomic war.'

The Executive Committee of the World Federation of Democratic Youth will meet in Berlin from February 25 to 28 to discuss the tasks of youth organisations in the struggle against the danger of an atomic war.

International Federation of Resistance Fighters

The Bureau of the International Federation of Resistance Fighters held a session in Warsaw from January 23 to 25 in which representatives from many European countries took part, including Austria, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, France, the German Democratic Republic, Poland and the Soviet Union.

In its resolution, the Bureau 'welcomes the decision of the World Council of Peace to launch a signature campaign demanding the banning and destruction of atomic weapons. The Bureau considers that it is urgently necessary to invite member organisations to give all possible support to this campaign, while continuing with the utmost vigour their opposition to the London and Paris Agreements for the remilitarisation of West Germany. To this end they should make a pressing appeal to the resistance fighters and deportees of their country.'

At the end of the session the Bureau members present signed the World Council's Appeal against the preparations for atomic war.

A Statement by the International Organisation of Journalists

The Secretariat of the International Organisation of Journalists has published an appeal asking all journalists to struggle against the danger of the use of atomic and hydrogen bombs. The appeal states in part:

'At this time, journalists bear a heavy responsibility both to the peoples of the world and to their own consciences. Every journalist who does not want war owes it to himself to tell public opinion about the growing danger, sincerely and truthfully.

'The International Organisation of Journalists calls on all representatives of the press to speak out at this decisive hour in our history against the unleashing of a new war, and against the use of atomic and hydrogen weapons. This is vital for the sake of all mankind.'

World Signature Campaign against the Preparations for Atomic War is Launched

China

A joint extended meeting of the Standing Committee of the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference and the Presiding Committee of the Chinese People's Committee for World Peace was held in Peking on February 12.

The meeting unanimously decided to open the signature-collecting campaign for the Vienna Appeal. A special committee was elected to organise the collection of signatures; it has 65 members headed by Dr. Kuo Mo-jo. The participants in the meeting were the first to sign the Vienna Appeal.

Italy

Poster issued by the Rome Provincial Peace Committee.

The Italian Peace Movement launched the signature campaign for the Vienna Appeal at a special assembly in Rome on February 3.

Eminent public figures took part in the meeting. They included the Italian members of the World Council of Peace, the members of the National Peace Committee and authoritative representatives of the great parties and organisations which support the Peace Movement, such as: Mr. Di Vittorio, General Secretary of the Italian Confederation of Labour, President of the World Federation of Trade Unions; Mr. Santi, secretary of the Italian Confederation of Labour; Mrs. Rossi, Mrs. Leonilde Jotti and Mrs. Rosetta Longo, respectively President and Secretaries of the Union of Italian Women; Mr. Roveda, General Secretary of the Engineers' Trade Union Federation; Mr. Boldrini, President of the National Association of Italian Partisans; the President of the Association of Victims of Fascism, Internees and Deportees, and others.

There were also a number of M.P.s and senators present, including the vice-president of the Senate, Mr. Mole; university professors including Professor Cortini of Rome University and Professor Pancini of Genoa University, both physicists; famous doctors like Professor Morellini; representatives of regional and provincial councils such as Mr. Varvaro of the Sicilian Assembly and Mr. Pennisi, a monarchist of the Rome provincial council; also artists, writers, journalists and soldiers such as General Carboni . . .

Twenty-four hours after this assembly, the peace committee of the village of Alquanegra sul Chiese in the province of Mantua, which has only a few thousand inhabitants, sent in the first 500 signatures.

On February 6, more signatures, which had been collected in peace notebooks, were handed to Mr. Targetti, Vice-Chairman of the Italian Lower House on the occasion of a meeting organised in Leghorn by the Peace Committee.

At the same time the campaign against the London and Paris Agreements is extending its scope. Thousands of deputations are going to see the senators and political figures, and thousands of people are taking part in all the activities of the Peace Movement directed against German rearmament: petitions, marches, the commemoration of episodes in the war of liberation, and so on.

India

In the February 2 number of its bulletin, the All India Peace Council published a plan of work for the launching of the campaign against atomic weapons proposed by its Secretariat. The plan includes the following points:

1) To publicise the All India Peace Council Appeal supporting the decisions of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace. The text of this appeal calling for the campaign will be translated into the various Indian languages, published in the local press and used as a handbill for the campaign.

2) All committees should translate the signature appeal at once into their local languages and print or cyclostyle signature forms, without waiting for their Provincial Committees to prepare copies.

3) At all the meetings already planned for the Quit Taiwan Day the resolutions should highlight the threats being used by U.S. spokesmen to unleash an atomic war against China.

During the preparations for the meetings and during the meetings themselves, signatures to the appeal should be collected in as large numbers as possible.

4) All mass organisations must be approached at all levels to issue statements, circulars and directives calling for mass collection of signatures.

5) Immediately during and after the Quit Taiwan campaign, important personalities — M.P.s, members of Legislative Assemblies, members of Municipal Committees and District Boards, leaders and office-bearers of mass organisations, leading figures in the educational, legal, cultural, medical and other fields — should be approached and their signatures obtained.

All Peace Committees should send the names of these first signatories to the All India Peace Council by February 20, in order to enable the preparation of a consolidated list for use all over the country.

6) As a culmination of this preparatory work and in order to start the intensive collection of signatures, the Secretariat of the All India Peace Council has decided to call for the observance of Sunday, March 6 as STOP PREPARATIONS FOR ATOMIC WAR DAY.

On this day, the Appeal must be popularised widely through meetings, demonstrations, etc.

Switzerland

The Peace Committee of the Canton of Vaud decided at a special meeting to open the signature campaign for the Vienna Appeal immediately. In a statement the Committee says:

'Signing the Appeal of the World Council of Peace against the preparations for atomic war means helping to safeguard the very existence of our country, our people and our children, without supporting any particular organisation or movement . . .'

The Committee meeting was very successful. It was attended by representatives of many organisations, particularly the trade unions, and by a number of individuals in the capacity of observers. The Peace Committees of Montreux, Monge, Nyon, Vevey and Yverdon sent delegates. The campaign has also been launched in the cantons of Geneva and Lausanne.

Further, the workers of the Similer factory at Carouge endorsed the Vienna Appeal at a general meeting.

It should also be noted that the parliaments of the cantons of Vaud, Geneva and Neuchatel have unanimously passed resolutions demanding the banning of atomic weapons.

On this point, the Swiss Federal Council stated on February 4 that it is 'aware of the danger to the peoples involved in the prospect of repeated atomic explosions. It is also convinced that a general limitation of armaments would serve the cause of peace'.

Austria

At an extended meeting on January 29 at which many public figures, representatives of political parties and trade union leaders from all over Austria were present, the Austrian Peace Council opened the signature campaign for the Vienna Appeal.

For the campaign the Austrian Council has issued signature forms of three different kinds. One of these is for individual signature; another is in the form of little card with the text of the Vienna Appeal and the words 'You have signed the Vienna Appeal' on one side and a photograph of a young mother playing with her child with the caption 'May it always be so' on the other. The card is given to every person who signs the Appeal. In addition, a poster in different sizes is already on the hoardings all over Austria, and a pamphlet answering twenty of the arguments most frequently met with by collectors has been published. A special, richly illustrated number of the Österreichische Friedenszeitung, organ of the Austrian Peace Council, has been published for the launching of the signature campaign. The number printed was very much higher than usual.

A poster published by the Austrian Peace Council

It should be pointed out that the collection of signatures began spontaneously all over Austria immediately after the publication of the Appeal of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace. Without waiting for signature forms to be printed, active peace workers cut out the Appeal as printed in the newspapers, stuck it on a sheet of paper and asked their neighbours and workmates to sign. Every day the Austrian Peace Council is receiving signature forms of this type bearing many signatures. Mrs. Gisela Draskovic, a Viennese old age pensioner, collected 41 signatures in this way and Mrs. Augustinovic, also of Vienna, collected 128 in two days. Mrs. Gramsamer of Salzburg collected 25 signatures in a tiny village in one hour and a half. Many of those who signed asked for signature forms.

The card given to everyone who signs the Appeal.

In many factories, too, the campaign started as soon as the Appeal was published. During the first day 350 signatures were collected in the Leobersdorf engineering factory, 150 in the Traiskirchen wax-cloth factory and 350 in the Floridsdorf locomotive works. In the Siemens-Schuckert factory 600 out of 900 workers have already signed.

The Austrian Peace Council has announced that by February 19th 101,187 signatures had been collected in Austria.

Hungary

On the day following the extended meeting of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace, the Hungarian Peace Council issued an appeal to all defenders of peace in Hungary. It says:

'The Appeal of the World Council of Peace asks all sincere people throughout the world to oppose those who are preparing for an atomic war . . .

'Go from house to house, collect signatures all over the country!'

The workers, peasants, intellectuals and young people have begun to collect signatures enthusiastically. A few examples will show how successfully the campaign has begun. In the Hoves combine 10,000 signatures were collected in two days, in the Matra-Videk factory 1,200 workers and office staff signed the Appeal and 50,000 signatures were collected by several hundred people in the Borsod combine in the first two days of the campaign.

Along with the new world campaign the Hungarian people are continuing their struggle against German rearmament. Thus 40,000 signatures against the remilitarisation of Germany were collected at Borsod and 4,000 peace meetings were held in Baranya district during the month of January.

The National Peace Committees of Rumania and Albania held special sessions at which the Appeal of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace was warmly approved. The signature-collecting campaign began immediately in these two countries.

At a plenary session of the Czechoslovak Peace Committee it was decided to launch the campaign on February 28 at a series of district conferences.

Indonesia

The Indonesian Peace Committee has published a statement emphasising that atomic war would have disastrous consequences for the whole of mankind.

'We call on the whole Indonesian people', the statement says, 'to sign the Appeal against the preparations for atomic war issued by the Bureau of the World Council of Peace.'

Mexico

The launching of the signature campaign in Mexico was marked by a meeting of the National Peace Council on January 26. The collection of signatures began immediately.

The Appeal has been communicated to the press and to many public figures and organisations with a request for their support.

Finland

The Finnish Peace Committee has met in Helsinki, approved the decisions of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace and opened the signature campaign in Finland. Those who took part in the meeting were the first to sign.

Mongolia

At a meeting of the Mongolian Peace Committee Mr. Chirendyb, its Chairman, gave a report on the international situation and the peoples' struggle for peace. It was decided to begin the collection of signatures to the Vienna Appeal immediately and the members of the Committee were the first to sign.

Poland

A joint session of the Presiding Committee of the Committee of the National Front and the National Peace Committee was held in Warsaw on January 31. It was attended by important public figures, workers, peasants, intellectuals and Catholic dignitaries.

The participants made a unanimous call to the Polish people to sign the Vienna Appeal against the preparations for atomic war.

As the signature campaign gets under way throughout the country many organisations are giving their support to the aims enunciated in the Appeal. For example, the Association of physicists and physics institutes of Warsaw University recently held a General Assembly at which they adopted a resolution supporting the Vienna Appeal and asking all physicists throughout the world to go on record in favour of banning the manufacture of atomic weapons and destroying existing stocks.

The plenary session of the Biochemists' Committee of the Polish Academy of Sciences has also passed a resolution approving the decisions of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace.

It should be noted that the Czechoslovak and Bulgarian academies of sciences have also gone on record to this effect.

Korea

Mr. Han Sul Ya, President of the Korean Peace Committee, has stated that 'the determination of millions of men and women who desire peace and progress finds further confirmation in the recent decisions of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace.

'Those who want war', he said, 'wish to hurl the whole world into an atomic war. But we know from past experience that the combined efforts of millions of men and women can foil the intrigues of the enemies of peace, just as the United States' plans to use the atomic bomb in Korea were checked. There is no doubt that the peace forces, which have grown enormously in strength in these last years, will bring the new plans for aggression to naught.''

Japan

A special session of the Japanese Peace Committee was held in Tokyo on January 14 and 15. About two hundred delegates and guests from all the prefectures of Japan attended this meeting.

The agenda was as follows:

1) Report on the international situation and the tasks of the Japanese Peace Movement.

2) The present state of the Japanese Peace Movement.

3) Important campaigns: the Conference of Asian Countries, the World Assembly for Peace and the World Conference for the Banning of the A and H bombs.

In his report on the point on the agenda, Mr. Hirano, General Secretary of the Japanese Peace Committee, said:

'Since the cease-fires in Korea and Indo-China the forces for peace have made great progress against which the protagonists of the "policy of strength" are making desperate attacks. These include the formation of S.E.A.T.O., the forthcoming Bangkok conference, the London and Paris Agreements and above all the N.A.T.O. decision to use atomic weapons.'

He then summed up the tasks of the Japanese Peace Movement as follows:

a) To enlarge the movement against the A and H bombs.

b) To develop the movement for the restoration of normal relations with China and the Soviet Union.

c) To oppose the plan for the revision of the Constitution as it would legalise rearmament, conscription and the expansion of the armed forces and of the programme of military bases.

d) To win public opinion for the idea of collective security in Asia, based on the Five Principles.

The session approved the resolutions and resommendations of the Stockholm session of the World Council of Peace and adopted the following texts:

— Demands to the Japanese Government and political parties;

— An Appeal to the Japanese People;

— and resolutions on the N.A.T.O. decisions, on the London and Paris Agreements, on the peaceful settlement of the Korean question, on the United States-Chiang Kai-shek mutual aid pact, etc.

In the course of the discussion on the atomic and hydrogen bombs the Hiroshima delegates stated: 'We cannot achieve the banning of atomic weapons without co-ordinated international action. Hiroshima will make every effort to prepare for the World Conference for the Prohibition of the A and H bombs.'

The session stressed the need to continue the campaign against atomic and hydrogen bombs and to collect the signatures of every man and woman in Japan. It pointed out that the most important thing is to enlarge the movement into a campaign on a world scale.

'It was in the hope of broadening and strengthening our campaign on a world scale that I came to the January meeting of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace, and I shall be particularly pleased if the experience of Japan can be of some help in the World Council's international campaign against the preparations for atomic war . . .

'The launching of a world signature campaign fully accords with the hopes of the Japanese people and with my own wishes. I know what will be the joy of my compatriots on learning that the Bureau of the World Council of Peace has launched this campaign.'

Extracts from an interview with Mr. Kaoru Yasui, General Secretary of the Japanese Council against the A and H Bombs

A meeting of Japanese fishing industry directors was held in Tokyo on January 10. The participants adopted a resolution demanding that atomic and hydrogen bomb tests should be stopped and demanded that Japan should receive full compensation for the damage caused by those that had already taken place.

At a formal meeting in Vienna on February 14, the Secretariat staff of the World Council of Peace signed the Vienna Appeal.

Sweden

The Fredsbulletin, a Swedish Peace Committee publication, gives the plan for the organisation of the signature campaign in Sweden. The campaign will open on March 1 and the Swedish Peace Committee will give leaflets, posters and postcards bearing the text of the Vienna Appeal to any organisation or person who wishes to collect signatures. The local peace committees are called upon to draw up plans for their respective districts, and to set up initiating committees to organise the campaign in other districts where no local Committee exists.

These initiating committees should be set up on the widest possible basis and should represent all sections of the people. The young people and the women will play an active part in the collection of signatures in the localities. As part of the campaign there will be public meetings on the themes of the atomic danger and German rearmament. Encouragement will be given to the launching of local appeals and statements by public figures announcing their support for the Vienna Appeal.

The Swedish Peace Committee will publish a regular bulletin during the campaign.

Fredsbulletin points out in conclusion that conditions are much better at the present time for obtaining an excellent result than they were at the time of the Stockholm Appeal. The public outcry last year against the H bomb tests in the Pacific (statement by Mr. Gustav Möller, former government minister; statement by Mr. Einar Norrman, Vice-Chairman of the Swedish Confederation of Trade Unions; the questions asked in Parliament, statements by the leaderships of the Social Democratic and Popular parties and by various youth and other organisations) clearly showed that the great majority of the Swedish people want the banning of atomic weapons. The strength with which public opinion will express itself now depends on the individual contribution of each friend of peace.

French Delegation to Visit Soviet Atomic Factory

The President of the French Economic Council announced at a press conference that a French delegation will go to the Soviet Union in March. It will be composed of members of the Economic Council's Industrial Production Committee.

The delegation will visit a Soviet atomic factory. Mr. Roche made it clear that the Soviet authorities had declared themselves favourable to such a visit.

At the Vienna meeting of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace, Mr. Ilya Ehrenburg stated:

'We know those whom it is intended to put at the head of the new German army: There is General Crüwell, former inspirer of the "black Reichswehr", one of those who took part in the invasion of Yugoslavia . . .'

After the European Conference in Paris (December 11—12, 1954)

Warsaw Meeting for Negotiation on the German Question

The following communique was published in Warsaw on February 6:

On February 6 the delegation from the European Conference for the peaceful solution of the German problem, which was held in Paris last December, met in Warsaw the delegations from Eastern Europe who had been refused entry visas into France.

This second meeting was attended by 51 delegates, a majority of whom are Members of Parliament, representing the following countries: Albania, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Greece, Holland, Hungary, Italy, Poland, Rumania, Soviet Union, Switzerland.

They first of all unanimously and formally opposed any rearmament which could give rise to the revival of German militarism. The delegates from the Eastern powers categorically stated that as a result of the human and material losses suffered by their countries none of their fellow-countrymen could accept such a possibility.

Furthermore, the participants became convinced, particularly after listening to the Soviet delegates, that the spirit of negotiation and mutual understanding would infallibly be ruined by the ratification of the London and Paris Agreements. On the other hand, they were unanimous in noting that at the present time an agreement between the powers could be concluded on the following points:

1) The simultaneous evacuation of all occupation troops from Germany. If this were to be done the Soviet Union would withdraw its troops to its own territory and would at the same time withdraw the Soviet military contingents stationed in Poland to protect the communication lines of the Soviet occupation troops in Germany.

Such reciprocal measures would help to relax tension in Europe.

2) The unification of Germany through free, supervised elections to be carried through on the basis of an electoral law guaranteeing all democratic freedoms as envisaged in the proposal made by Sir Anthony Eden in Berlin.

3) Observance of the pledges made at Potsdam. Germany would hold aloof from all military coalitions and the integrity of her frontiers would be guaranteed by the other European powers and the United States.

Only the settlement of the German problem, by bringing security to Europe, will enable the Austrian State Treaty to be signed.

The German delegates from both East and West described the extent of the movement for unification and against rearmament in their country. It is the imperative duty of all the powers to encourage this movement.

In this way the prerequisites for general disarmament — desired by the people the world over — will be fulfilled.

U.S.A.: North California Peace Council Issues Leaflet

The North California Peace Council has put out a leaflet stressing the dangers of the London and Paris Agreements which are being submitted for ratification by the United States Senate. If they are ratified, says the leaflet, 'the German army will march again — equipped with atomic weapons'.

'Just as the peoples' desire for peace resulted in stopping war in Korea and Indo-China', it goes on, 'we, the people, can stop German rearmament'.

In conclusion, the North California Peace Council calls on the people to let the senators know of their opposition to German rearmament and to support 'Senator Ralph Flanders' call for a reunited, neutral unarmed Germany with its neutrality "guaranteed by both the Soviet Government and the Western powers" '. (Senator Flanders' position was given in issue No. 20 of this Bulletin published on October 15, 1954.)

15,000 Canadian Electrical Workers

The trade union co-ordinating committee of the Canadian General Electric Co., one of the biggest concerns in the Canadian electrical industry and employing 15,000 workers, has unanimously condemned German rearmament.

Dr. James Endicott, Chairman of the Canadian Peace Congress, has urged the Canadian Government to hold a national referendum on rearming West Germany.

At a meeting of Congress delegates he stated that a referendum would show how few Canadians, 100,000 of whom lost their lives in the two wars, want to see West Germany rearmed.

Meetings and Rallies in Israel

On January 25 in Tel Aviv the Peace Movement held a big protest meeting against the Paris Agreements for the creation of a new Wehrmacht, this time equipped with atomic weapons, and against the Turkey-Iraq pact which is a grave threat to peace in the Middle East.

At the beginning of February the Peace Movement held ten mass rallies in different parts of the country to protest against German rearmament and the Turkey-Iraq pact.

A National Conference was called on February 18 in Tel Aviv to study the results of the peace referendum in Israel and to examine the plan of work for the future.

IN THE NORDIC COUNTRIES

• Sweden

At a trade union meeting of the unskilled workers of Stockholm a resolution was adopted which says:

'We note with satisfaction that the German working class is opposing the policy of reviving the Wehrmacht whose crimes during the Second World War are still present in everyone's memory... We consider that all friends of peace have the important task of supporting the workers of Germany in their opposition to the resurgence of the forces of aggression in that country.'

• Norway

After the ratification of the London and Paris Agreements by the Norwegian Parliament protests began to flow in from all sides. The Bjorkasen miners' lodge sent a protest to Parliament together with a declaration of support for the German trade unions and for the forces that are opposing German rearmament in all countries.

The Trondheim railwaymens' trade union branch sent a protest and demanded a national referendum. The Larvik branch of the Federation of Chemical Workers, the Bergen branches of the Gasworkers and Bricklayers, the Oslo Plumbers' branch, the Mo Engineers' branch, the Baerum Building Workers, the Grorud Women's Association, the workers constructing the Nordland railway line and the Oslo Bricklayers' Federation have all made public protests. The Woodworkers' Union stressed that it is the responsibility of Norwegian workers 'to see that this does not happen'.

• Denmark

The wave of protest against German rearmament continues to rise and even members of the different parties that are favourable to the remilitarisation of West Germany demand that a national referendum be held on this question.

In a number of localities and streets there have been ballots on the referendum. In Istegade Street in Aalborg, 108 people voted against rearmament and for the referendum, while only five voted for rearmament. A similar ballot in a street in Valby gave the following result: 306 for a referendum and 26 against.

The protests against German rearmament and the demands for a national referendum continue to flow in; we may mention those of the workers of Slosturp, Kolding and Naestved, the trade union leaders of Villingebaeck, university students and students of the Polytechnic and scientific institutes.

The newspaper Information writes that in the last period there has been an increase of more than 100,000 in the number of protests sent to Parliament.

Thirty well-known Social Democrats have asked the Social Democratic Parliamentary party to re-examine the appeal of the West German Social Democratic party.

The German Manifesto

A Manifesto was adopted in Frankfurt on January 29 after a meeting in St. Paul's Church where Germany's first Parliament met in 1848.

Here are some extracts from the Manifesto:

'The setting up of German armed forces in the Federal Republic and in the Soviet zone would kill all chances of reunification for an indefinite period and would increase East-West tension... The terrible fate which would bring brothers and sisters of one family face to face in two different armies with guns in their hands would become a reality.

'At this time, faced with the danger of such a situation, every voice that is free to speak out must give a warning that cannot be ignored. Those who do not see that the ratification of the Paris agreements would involve a great danger, that of closing the door to four power negotiations on the reunification of Germany in freedom, would bear an unparalleled responsibility.

'Agreement between the Four Great Powers on the need to conclude an agreement on reunification must come before the formation of military blocs. It is both possible and necessary to find the conditions, acceptable both to Germany and her neighbours, which will ensure the peaceful co-existence of the nations of Europe through the reunification of Germany. The German people has a right to reunification.'

This Manifesto was signed by — the entire Presiding Committee of the German Social Democratic Party including the President and the Vice-President.

— a large number of Social Democratic members of the Federal Parliament and the provincial parliaments.

— many trade union leaders, including the Chairman and the Vice-Chairman of the D.G.B. (Confederation of West German Trade Unions), Walter Freitag and George Reuter, along with almost all the provincial chairmen of the D.G.B. and the chairmen of various industrial unions.

The collection of signatures to the Manifesto has been started.

The President of the Federal Parliament in Bonn, Mr. Gerstenmaier, member of Chancellor Adenauer's Christian Democrat Union, stated to the students of the Evangelical Academy at Bad Boll that the Paris agreements are in no way as favourable as some M.P.s of his party think. Gerstenmaier added that if a speaker was to declare from the rostrum of the Federal Parliament that the young people are enthusiastic at the idea of setting up an army, he would refute the statement, even if he had to give up his position as President to do so.

Mr. Sieveking, Mayor of Hamburg and also a member of the Christian Democrat Union, stated that the Federal Republic must open talks with the Soviet Union and the German Democratic Republic.

Mr. Helmut Kater, Secretary of the Confederation of West German Trade Unions, representing the young people on the Presiding Committee of the Engineers' Trade Union, told 1,500 young people at Dortmund that young trade unionists are opposed to any form of rearmament.

NOT A MAN! NOT A PENNY!

A leaflet in the form of a soldiers' paybook is being circulated in Germany.

The left-hand inside page gives an imaginary identity and makes allusions to conscription which threatens the young people, while the right-hand inside page contains a statement including these sentences:

'I will not give the slightest help to German rearmament.

'I, and my colleagues and friends, fully support the resolutions of the Federal Youth Conference and of the third Congress of the Confederation of West German Trade Unions, which are directed against remilitarisation, and I will strive to make them effective. I owe this to my parents and to the dead of the last war.

'I will always abide by the motto:
Don't lift a finger,
Not a man and not a penny
For the plans to rearm Germany!'

The back page is in the form of a postcard which is intended for posting to

France's Role in General Negotiations

At the time of the governmental crisis in France, the Bureau of the National Council of the French Peace Movement issued the following statement:

'The recent Soviet notes on German reunification, free elections under international surveillance and the evacuation of the occupied territories have opened new prospects of agreement between the great powers which opposed each other at the Berlin Conference. If all the interested parties make a sincere effort, such an agreement could soon be achieved...

'It is the duty of France to take this decisive step towards general negotiation.

'The government France needs is a government capable of taking this step in the interests of our country's security and of peace.'

The week of action against German rearmament, February 14—20, was marked by many and varied demonstrations, particularly by deputations to the senators who have yet to take a decision on the ratification of the London and Paris Agreements.

The previous fortnight had seen intensive preparatory work at all levels.

The Peace Movement recommended that representations should be made to the town and county councillors who, in the main, compose the electoral colleges which elect the senators. Following on these deputations, many of them went on record against the London and Paris Agreements.

In the Rhone Department, for example, an appeal to the senators by town and county councillors has already been signed by 10 county councillors, 50 mayors and 232 deputy mayors. In the Gard Department 33 municipal councils and 65 mayors have made known their opposition to the agreements. In the Cambrai region 210 elected representatives, including 44 Socialists and 41 members of the M.R.P., have made a stand. So have 373 elected representatives in the Haute-Vienne Department, including the Socialist mayor of Oradour-sur-Glane.

At the same time the people were informed of the content and consequences of the agreements, and of the position of the senators, at many meetings in the factories and localities and at district and departmental rallies of which we may mention those held at Vimy, Marguion (Nord), Toulouse and Saint-Nazaire. Memorial ceremonies were held at the war memorials and at the plaques in honour of those shot by the Nazis and of the martyrs of the Resistance.

Appeals for unity were issued and special mention should be made of the great number of such appeals made by workers of all political standpoints and trade union affiliations in the factories.

The French Delegation at the Warsaw Meeting

We give on another page the final communique of the Warsaw meeting between a delegation of the European Conference for the Peaceful Solution of the German Problem and the delegates who were refused visas to enter France.

At this meeting France was represented by Mr. Paul Bastid, member of the Institute; Mr. Pierre Lebon, the late Georges Loustanau-Lacau, Mr. Michel Maurice-Bokanowski, Mr. Pierre Villon, M.P.s of the Social Republican, Peasant, Gaullist and Communist parties respectively; Mr. Jacques Debû-Bridel, Gaullist Senator for the Seine Department; Mr. Michel Brugier and Mr. Etienne Nouveau, barristers; Mr. Elie Rouby, Chairman of the Corrèze County Council; and Mrs. Maurice-Bokanowski.

On their return, the French representatives expressed their satisfaction. Here, for example, is what Mr. Jacques Debû-Bridel wrote in Le Monde:

'To understand properly the importance of the final statement of our last meeting, it is essential to bear in mind the status of the delegates from the Eastern countries.

'The delegations were received at the Polish Diet by its President; the first meeting was presided over by Mr. George Michalowski, former ambassador and today Secretary of State for Education. The Chairman and Vice-Chairman of the Polish Foreign Affairs Commission, Mr. O. Dluski and Mr. Kulczynski, led the Polish delegation; Mr. Johannes Dieckmann, Chairman of the People's Chamber, the East German delegation, etc. It was before a gathering of this importance that Mr. Alexander Korneichuk, member of the Supreme Soviet, read his reply to the questions we had asked him. They are summed up in the communique; to be quite frank, they go further than I had hoped.'

Preparing the World Assemb

France

National Demonstration on April 3

The French Peace Movement is preparing to hold, on April 3, a national demonstration which will bring together all the peaceful forces in the country. The French people's activity in their struggle against German rearmament, as reported in the press, is proof that the French Movement is preparing for the national demonstration through action.

The themes of the demonstration are, of course, those imposed by the present international situation: opposition to German rearmament and to the atomic threat, and the demand for negotiation, independence and peace.

Between 1,500 and 1,800 delegates will bring with them the French people's unshakeable determination to see peaceful solutions prevail over attempted solutions by force.

The demonstration will be the occasion for the solemn inauguration of the great campaign against the preparations for atomic war launched by the Bureau of the World Council of Peace.

To prepare for the demonstration and also for sending a French delegation to the World Assembly in Helsinki, the French Peace Movement has put out cards which will not only help in the collection of the necessary funds but will also be so many mandates given by millions of French people to the delegates to these gatherings.

In order to achieve the best possible preparation for all this activity, the Departmental secretaries of the Peace Movement have designated February 27 as a day to be devoted to organisational problems.

Appeal of the French Peace Movement for a National Assembly of Peace Forces

The appeal for the national demonstration of April 3, adopted by the National Council of the French Peace Movement at its meeting on January 29 and 30, says:

'The year 1954 gave the people reasons for hope, but there is now a danger that all that has been achieved will be jeopardised.

'The London and Paris Treaties would give German militarism the means of crushing the peace forces in Germany, of threatening her neighbours and unleashing war.

'Tension is growing in the Far East and threatening to rekindle the ashes of war.

'The N.A.T.O. decisions seek to regularise the use of atomic weapons and they give governments and general staffs the power to use them regardless of the rights of parliaments and the demands of mankind.

'Only the peoples' will to peace can raise an effective barrier against these resurgent dangers.

The peoples demanded and obtained the armistices in Korea and Indo-China and the rejection of E.D.C.; they have the power to prevent the remilitarisation of Germany and to halt the atomic threat.

'This double danger must be averted. The French people will summon all their strength and will take their place in the front line of the common struggle.

'The National Peace Council calls on all forces for peace in the country to unite their efforts and send their representatives to the great assembly against German rearmament and the atomic danger, for the independence and security of France and for negotiation, disarmament and peace.

'This national demonstration will help to send a French delegation to the World Assembly for Peace which will open in Helsinki on May 22.'

Union of South Africa

On March 4 the South African Peace Council will hold a session specially devoted to the preparations for the World Assembly. It will study reports on the political tasks of the Movement and on organisational questions in relation to the preparation of the Assembly.

Spanish Peace Commis

The Spanish Peace Commission's present plan of work is based on the preparations for the World Assembly which are being linked up with the concrete objectives of the Spanish Peace Movement, mainly the struggle against the military pact signed between Washington and Madrid.

The Commission proposes to develop a wide campaign to publicise the decisions of the Stockholm session of the World Council of Peace, and particularly the decision to hold the World Assembly. It is preparing broadly representative meetings which will promote the participation of the peace forces of Spain in the Assembly and these will culminate in a great assembly representative of the whole Spanish Peace Movement at which the delegates to the World Assembly will be elected.

Furthermore, the Spanish Peace Commission's statement was widely distributed during a special day of protest and struggle against the Washington-Madrid military pact and the Commission received many letters from individuals and groups of various political standpoints and walks of life showing the growing trend of opposition to the military pact. These letters came from a number of Spanish cities.

Of the documents demonstrating the wide support for the Assembly among the most diverse circles we may mention the following: a notebook from Barcelona containing the signatures of more than 200 industrialists, merchants, intellectuals, students and workers; resolutions signed by the workers of two factories in Catalonia, letters signed by whole families, and statements by young students, women, intellectuals, workers and peasants.

National Assembly in Brazil

Opinion alarmed by H bomb tests at South Pole

The Brazilian Peace Movement has called a national assembly of representatives of the forces of peace, the main object of which is to prepare for Brazil's participation in the World Assembly in Helsinki. The following agenda has been proposed:

1) The world situation and the threat of a new war: the armaments race and weapons of mass destruction.

2) The situation in Latin Amreica and the threat of a new world war.

At the same time the Brazilian Peace Movement has drawn public attention to the danger of the H bomb tests which the United States is proposing to hold at the South Pole. The announcement of these plans and the warning issued by the Peace Movement are arousing a great deal of interest. An official spokesman, Major Rangel, member of the National Council for Scientific Research, has said that if the United States really intends to carry out tests on the hydrogen bomb at the South Pole precautionary measures will be necessary.

In its January 20th number, the big Sao Paulo daily Ultima Hora published a report on the Stockholm session of the World Council of Peace signed by the Brazilian writer Alfonso Schmidt who took part in the session.

Of the activities carried on by Spaniards in their countries of exile in connection with the day of protest and struggle against the Madrid-Washington military pact, those of the Spanish defenders of peace resident in France merit particular mention. Twenty important demonstrations were held in the main cities and more than a hundred meetings in other localities. Among the thousands of people who took part were many who had never before been present at a demonstration of the Peace Movement.

In preparation for the day of action, 25,000 signatures against the military pact were collected among Spanish people resident in France.

Important public demonstrations were held in other countries, particularly in London, Montevideo and Mexico City.

In a joint resolution adopted by the Presidiums of the Polish Committee for the Defence of Peace and the Polish Committee of the National Front, it is stated:

'The forces of peace are more powerful than the forces of war. The peoples will come to the great Assembly in Helsinki in May 1955 of the representatives of the forces of peace of all the countries of the world, having won new successes in carrying out the decisions of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace.

The Assembly will mark out the way to be followed in the victorious struggle of all the peoples for peace, security, independence and well-being.'

Chinese People Support Resolutions of World Council of Peace

In order to popularise widely and effectively the important results of the Stockholm session and show how to put its decisions into practice, the Chinese People's Committee for World Peace organised a great discussion meeting on the return of the Chinese delegation from Stockholm. Dr. Kuo Mo-jo, Chairman of the Committee, presided and the meeting was attended by more than 900 people.

A general report on the Stockholm session was given by Mr. Wu Yao-tsung, a member of the Chinese delegation.

Then Mr. Jose Cueto M. P., member of the Chilean Labour Party, and Mr. Togo Kameda from Japan, addressed the meeting.

The meeting adopted unanimously and with great enthusiasm a resolution of support for the decisions of the Stockholm session.

Here are some extracts from this important resolution:

'The participants in this meeting express their unanimous and enthusiastic support for the resolutions adopted by the World Council of Peace at its Stockholm session.

'The Address to the Peoples issued by the Stockholm session stresses that the ratification of the London and Paris Agreements would inevitably lead to the resurgence of militarism in West Germany and would incorporate it in the N.A.T.O. aggressive military bloc, thereby giving rise to a new crisis for peace in Europe and throughout the world.

'That is why the peoples of all countries were called upon resolutely to oppose the London and Paris Agreements and to demand the immediate calling of a Four Power Conference to settle the German question and safeguard European security.

'We unanimously support the resolution on the situation created in various parts of Asia by foreign pressure and by the system of military blocs and coalitions adopted by the Stockholm session of the World Council of Peace.

'Together with all the other peoples of Asia, we shall continue our struggle to foil the new aggressive plot the circles that want war, to strengthen and extend the zone of peace in Asia and establish collective peace and security in Asia on the basis of the five principles of peaceful co-existence.

'We fully support the resolutions of the Stockholm session in favour of disarmament and the banning of weapons of mass destruction and condemning foreign interference in the internal affairs of nations. We warmly welcome the appeal for a World Assembly for Peace in May 1955.'

Soviet Public Opinion Welcomes the Bureau's Appeal

Mr. Mikhail Kotov, Secretary of the Soviet Peace Committee, has made the following statement to the press:

'The Appeal to the Peoples of the World and the other documents of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace mark an important stage in the powerful movement of the peoples against the danger of a new war. The struggle for peace, for the right of the peoples to live in peace, is growing in strength on every continent.

'Along with all friends of peace in every part of the world, the Soviet people demand the banning of atomic weapons and the use of atomic energy exclusively for peaceful purposes. And the Soviet people express their demands in their actions. The Soviet government has decided to make its scientific and technical experience in the use of atomic energy for peaceful purposes available to other countries. Thus the necessary help will be given to China, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Rumania and the German Democratic Republic. The Soviet government has declared itself ready to divulge the experience it has gained in the construction and working of the first atomic power station at the forthcoming international conference. Is this not a clear proof of the Soviet Union's great concern for peace and the progress of mankind?

'Ordinary people from every corner of our enormous country are sending their views on the decisions of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace to the Soviet Peace Committee. In their letters and telegrams the Soviet people greet these decisions and pillory those who want to unleash an atomic war and re-establish the German army.'

Mr. Kotov said that the Soviet Peace Committee would hold a general discussion on the decisions of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace in the near future. 'The Soviet people', he said, 'will be glad to sign the appeal for the banning of atomic weapons and in this way they will demonstrate their devotion to the cause of peace, their determination to work for the happiness of mankind, for progress and peaceful co-existence between all the peoples.'

Many Meetings . . .

After the decisions of the World Council of Peace designed to ban atomic and hydrogen weapons, big meetings have been organised by the local peace committees in the republics, territories and regions. Recently such meetings have been held at Ordjonikidze, Sverdlovsk, Stalingrad, Penza, Stavropol, Makhatchkala, Ivanovo, Kaluga, Kaliningrad, Ulianovsk and elsewhere.

In a big meeting held at Grozny, Professor Sukharev, Chairman of the Regional Committee for the Defence of Peace, stated: 'The will of the peoples can and must bring about the banning and the destruction of atomic weapons.'

Mr. Volchukhin, foreman bricklayer, stated on behalf of all the town's building workers that they fully supported the decisions of the World Council of Peace.

'The Soviet people do not want war', he said. 'The facts bear witness to this. Look at our Grozny. We are going ahead with great construction jobs and we do not want these houses, factories and power stations to be destroyed by an atomic bomb'.

'The sole desire of our people', said a collective farm chairman, 'is to live in peace with all the peoples of the world, who, like the entire Soviet people, approve of the decisions of the World Council of Peace against the attempts to use atomic energy for military purposes'.

At scientific meetings and sessions, Academicians and professors have stigmatised the use of mankind's great discoveries for war as crime and called on the scientists of every country to declare themselves in favour of the banning of weapons of mass destruction.

At a meeting in Kaliningrad, Mrs. Aksenova, mother of several children, stated:

'The world is big and beautiful. There is room enough for all peoples, big and small. But can the mothers sleep peacefully when they know that the stocks of A and H bombs are being increased? I am certain that millions of people in every corner of the world will arise to defend peace and protect their children.'

At an extended meeting of the Presidium of the Soviet Peace Committee it was decided to hold a plenary session of the Soviet Committee attended by representatives of the local Peace Committees. This session will discuss the measures to be taken to organise the collection of signatures to the Vienna Appeal.

70 to 80 per cent of People of Iceland demand: 'End foreign occupation'

The Icelandic Committee against the American occupation has published a general picture of the first results of the signature campaign for the abrogation of the treaty giving the United States the right to maintain military bases in Iceland. Although some signature forms have not yet been returned, the committee has estimated that about seventy to eighty per cent of the population has signed.

Many well-known figures in public life have supported the campaign.

Asian Lawyers' Conference in Calcutta

The Asian Lawyers' Conference, held under the auspices of the All-India Association of Democratic Lawyers, ended on January 30, after six days of debates. The lawyers discussed vitally important problems such as the legal aspect of the sovereignty of the peoples and the outlawing of all means of mass extermination.

The conference was attended by delegates and observers from Australia, Burma, China, Celyon, Egypt, Indonesia, Japan, the People's Democratic Republic of Korea, Pakistan, the U.S.S.R., Thailand, the Democratic Republic of Viet Nam and other countries.

In his opening speech, Dr. Radhabinod Pal, member of the conference presiding committee and member of the International Law Commission of the United Nations Organisation, stressed the awakening of the peoples of Asia and pointed out the important role of Asia in the world political situation.

Mr. D. N. Pritt Q. C., Great Britain, President of the International Association of Democratic Lawyers, pointed out the serious menace to world peace of the rearming of Western Germany and the formation of the Manila pact bloc.

Mr. Kaoru Yasui, member of the Japanese delegation and professor of international law at Hosei and Kanagawa Universities, reported on the banning of all atomic, hydrogen and other weapons of mass destruction. He pointed out that the American experiments in the Bikini area are a manifest violation of international law as this territory is not American. By appropriating an area of the high seas in this manner the United States are guilty of a flagrant violation of the freedom of the high seas.

By the provisions of international law the United States are obliged to pay compensation for all the damage caused by these tests, he said, and went on to call for the banning of all weapons of mass destruction.

After Mr. Yasui's report, a Japanese delegate read a message from Mrs. Suzu Kuboyama, the widow of Aikichi Kuboyama, the first victim of the American hydrogen bomb test at Bikini, in which she asked the lawyers to work unrelentingly for the abolition of atomic and hydrogen bombs.

At the January 29 session, the leader of the Chinese delegation, Chang Chih-jang, showed that the question of Taiwan (Formosa), historically part of China, is an internal matter. Referring to the forthcoming Afro-Asian Conference, Chang Chih-jang stated that the decision of the Prime Ministers of the Colombo countries to call this conference was in harmony with the earnest desire of the people of all Asian countries.

The resolutions adopted at the closing session dealt mainly with the five principles of peaceful co-existence; national sovereignty; and the banning of all atomic, hydrogen and other weapons of mass destruction.

NORTH AFRICA

Mr. Abdul Rahman Bouchama, President of the Algerian Peace Movement, sums up the work for peace in North Africa in the following interview given to the Bulletin of the World Council of Peace.

'The incidents and dangers threatening peace in North Africa have grown in number, especially since the French National Assembly voted in favour of the London and Paris Agreements.

'Plans are mooted for the construction of factories to make atomic bombers and for the creation of an atomic industry in the Sahara. It should be noted that there already exist in Morocco an atomic weapons dump and runways for atomic bombers.

'So the peoples of North Africa welcome all moves for peace and the banning of atomic and thermonuclear weapons.

'They gave a particularly favourable reception to the calling of the forthcoming Afro-Asian Conference which will not only be a valuable contribution to peace in the Far East and in the world as a whole, but will also encourage the peoples of North Africa in their profound desire for independence.

'Obviously, in this situation there is a need for a broader and more powerful Peace Movement, so in both Algeria and Tunisia measures are being taken as part of the campaign against the preparations for atomic war to widen and strengthen the existing Movement and to elect a very representative delegation to the World Assembly for Peace.'

Important Japanese Organisations

Support the Conference of Asian Countries

In Japan, the preparations for the Conference of Asian Countries, which will be held in New Delhi, April 6—10, are going forward in close relationship to the preparations for the World Assembly for Peace. Important organisations of many kinds and tendencies are supporting the conference, including the following: the General Council of Trade Unions (SOHYO); the All Japan Association of Buddhists; the National Council of Young People's Associations, which are semi-official organisations formerly under the aegis of the central and local governments and to be found in all parts of Japan, particularly in all the villages; the All Japan Federation of Women's Organisations; the Congress of Japanese Intellectuals; the Christian Women's Temperance Society; the National Council against the A and H Bombs; the National Council for Restoring Relations with the Soviet Union and China; the Japanese Peace Committee; and the Association of Members of Parliament for the Promotion of Trade with China.

Meeting in Tokyo on January 17, the Japanese Preparatory Committee for the Conference of Asian Countries decided that Japan will suggest adding the following items to the agenda proposed by the Indian Preparatory Committee:

1) The restoration of diplomatic relations between Asian countries.

2) Co-operation between religious people in the countries of Asia.

3) The promotion of scientific and technological exchanges between the countries of Asia.

On January 18, Mr. Nagano, lawyer and member of the Presiding Committee of the Japanese Preparatory Committee, and Mr. M. Ikeda, General Secretary of the Committee and deputy General Secretary of the Democratic Party, the party in power, visited Mr. Shigemitsu, the Foreign Minister, and asked that the Japanese Government afford facilities for the delegation to attend the Conference of Asian Countries and that it send representatives to the forthcoming Afro-Asian Conference.

Peoples of Asia Support Afro-Asian Conference

On the initiative of the Indonesian Government, the governments of the Colombo countries decided at Bogor to call a conference of Asian and African countries at Jakarta on April 5. Twenty-five countries from the two continents have already been invited, including the People's Republic of China.

Burma

The calling of the Afro-Asian Conference will be beneficial to the Peace Movement in Asia and the world, declared the Burmese Peace Committee in a statement on January 17.

The Committee appealed to the sponsoring nations to invite more Asian and African countries to take part in the conference.

Pakistan

Commenting on the Afro-Asian Conference, Maulana Bhasani, President of the East Bengal Awami People's League and delegate of the Pakistan Peace Movement to the recent session of the World Council of Peace in Stockholm, told newsmen in Calcutta:

'We'll support any efforts which go to safeguard peace in Asia.'

Indonesia

In a statement to the press, Professor Prijono, winner of the Stalin International Prize for the Consolidation of Peace, said that he was optimistic about the future of the Afro-Asian Conference. He added that the five principles for peaceful co-existence should be a basic question to be discussed at the conference and that, unlike N.A.T.O. or S.E.A.T.O., these principles were not based on armed force but on moral strength and real ideals of peace.

India: Regional Conference in Bangalore

Four hundred delegates and guests attended a conference for peace and Asian solidarity held in Bangalore with Mr. J. Kumarappa, member of the World Council of Peace, in the chair.

The Conference adopted a resolution condemning the United States—Chiang Kai-shek pact as interference in the internal affairs of the People's Republic of China. In another resolution, the Conference welcomed the calling of the Afro-Asian Conference and expressed the hope that this meeting will establish solidarity between the countries of Asia and Africa.

The Conference stated that the five principles enunciated by the Prime Ministers of India, China and Burma are a powerful force for peace.

All India Peace Council Sends Message to Mr. Nehru

'The Indian people are angered by the statements of certain American representatives saying that atomic and thermonuclear weapons may be used against China. The United States Government must be informed that the Indian people resolutely condemn the plans for unleashing an atomic war . . .'

This is the text of a telegram which the All India Peace Council sent to Mr. Nehru while he was in London.

The All India Peace Council assures Mr. Nehru that the Indian Peace Movement will support any moves he may make for the withdrawal of American troops from the Chinese territory of Taiwan (Formosa) and from Chinese territorial waters.

Formosa and Viet Nam

At its special session in January the Japanese Peace Committee adopted a resolution on the Mutual Security Treaty between the United States and Formosa which states in part:

'We regard the U.S.—Formosa Mutual Security Treaty and S.E.A.T.O. as a serious menace to the safety and independence of the Asian countries and we are therefore opposed to these treaties.

'We maintain that a fundamental condition for easing world tension is the reinstatement of China in its proper position in the United Nations, at the same time giving all non-member countries the opportunity of joining that body.'

Another resolution on the situation in Viet Nam denounces the foreign pressure being exerted to reinforce the military strength of South Viet Nam and states: 'We demand strict observance of the cease-fire agreement and non-interference in the internal affairs of the countries concerned.'

The Kuweit Democratic League has issued an appeal protesting at the arrival of an American fleet in the port of Kuweit. The appeal is also directed against the new influx of British troops and asks the people to actively oppose foreign military occupation.

Lebanese Peace Congress

Calls on the People to Oppose the Atomic Danger and the Setting Up of Military Blocs

The Second Congress of the Lebanese Peace Movement opened on January 22 in the International Club in Beirut. It was attended by 350 delegates and guests from every part of the country and had been carefully prepared by five regional conferences held during the last few months.

The opening speech was delivered by Sheikh A.A. Zein who called on all men of goodwill in the world 'to support the humanitarian activities of the Peace Movement'.

Dr. George Hanna, member of the World Council of Peace, then gave a political report. He enumerated the tasks of the Peace Movement, spoke of their lofty nature and stressed the need for the people of the Lebanon to actively oppose the Turkey-Pakistan-Iraq military pact.

'This pact', he said, 'creates grave danger for the peoples of the Middle East especially after the N.A.T.O. Council decisions on the use of atomic weapons, for Turkey is a member of N.A.T.O.'

Mr. Salem Dablis then gave a detailed report on economic problems. He showed the importance of economic exchanges based on respect for national sovereignty for the maintenance of peace in the world.

The next speaker was Mr. Antoine Tabet who dealt with the World Peace Movement and stressed that the main present task was the intensification of the struggle for the banning of atomic and hydrogen weapons and other weapons of mass destruction.

The Congress unanimously adopted three resolutions: on military alliances; on the campaign for the banning of weapons of mass destruction; and on organisational problems.

The Congress enthusiastically welcomed the decision of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace to launch a signature-collecting campaign and the delegates were the first to sign the Appeal in the Lebanon. (See photo.)

The delegates to the Congress sign the Appeal against the preparations for atomic war

RESOLUTIONS

On the Campaign for the Banning of Weapons of Mass Destruction

'This Second Congress of the Lebanese Peace Movement disapproves and condemns any attempt to use these criminal and devastating weapons and calls on the Lebanese people to fulfil their duty to their country and to mankind by taking part in the world campaign which says that any government that lets loose atomic war will forfeit the trust of its people and find itself condemned by every people of the world. It invites the people to oppose the preparations for atomic war and to demand the destruction of atomic weapons wherever they may be and the stopping of their manufacture.'

On Military Alliances

'Great efforts are openly being made to incorporate the Lebanon and the other Arab countries in war alliances and military blocs.

'These efforts are being accompanied by strong foreign pressure on the Arab countries with a view to dividing them and bringing back the occupation troops.

'To date, the Lebanese people in all walks of life and in all national organisations have rejected the imperialist projects for military alliances in whatever form and under whatever name. The Peace Movement has taken part in the resistance to these projects.

'This Second National Congress of the Lebanese Peace Movement declares that the Peace Movement is ready to support any move by any person, organisation, Member of Parliament or official figure, if it is aimed at preserving our country from the danger of military alliances and from devastation by atom and hydrogen bombs, and is ready to help in the defence of peace and in furthering the relaxation of international tension.'

RECOMMENDATIONS

on Organisational Questions

'This Second National Congress of the Lebanese Peace Movement expresses its satisfaction that the Peace Movement has actively participated in the Lebanese people's resistance to war plans and has co-operated in action for the defence of peace and to promote the easing of international tension together with the peoples of the entire world.

'This National Congress considers it necessary to stress that the Peace Movement is a democratic mass movement independent of the various parties and sections of society represented in it, and that it continually strives to bring together all who accept the principle of peaceful co-existence between countries with different social systems and the negotiated settlement of international differences, and those who reject the plans of imperialism and war.

14,000 Miles across Australia for Peace

Four hundred and sixty peace meetings in 12 months — 260 of them in the past six months — 14,000 miles covered in a motor-drawn caravan — these figures tell something of the activity for peace by 63 year old, white haired, vigorous former Labour Senator, William Morrow, member of the World Council of Peace.

Mr. Morrow was a guest at the June, 1953 meeting of the World Council of Peace in Budapest and on his return to Australia he plunged into a campaign of meetings organised by the Peace Councils of Victoria and New South Wales.

Then in May 1954, along with Mrs. Morrow, he started out with his car and caravan for the north, driving often over bad roads as he made the 1,000 mile journey along the coast to Cairns in Northern Queensland.

In the many centres strung out along the way he stopped to contact known peace supporters, worked out a date for a meeting on the return trip and delivered publicity material.

In the Cairns district, he stayed for over a month, doing up to four and five meetings a day. He would go to a ship before breakfast, speak to the crew, have breakfast with them, spend the morning making future arrangements, speak at a mill or other workplace in the lunch hour, to a group of women in the afternoon, and to a street or house meeting at night. He addressed the Trades Hall Council, spoke three times at the waterside workers' 'pick-up' centre in the early morning, and drove out to many meetings in the surrounding district.

Everywhere he was well received.

In Yungaburra. for example, the local farmers' organisation postponed the start of its scheduled meeting in a hall, so as to hear Mr. Morrow finish his speech to an attentive audience in the street outside. He also spoke in the streets and halls of other Northern towns, Mareena, Atherton, Malanda, and elsewhere.

Then he started out to return to the south. At all the coastal centres such as Gordonvale, Innisfail and Ingham, there were meetings with waterside workers, railwaymen and the workers of sugar mills, sawmills and meatworks, as well as a film show and meeting in a public hall. A thousand waterside workers came to hear him at Townsville and a thousand meatworkers at Alligator Creek. He spoke to the miners in Collinsville and Scottsville before going on to Mackay to hold the biggest street meeting seen in the town for years.

After Mackay, Rockhampton was the scene of another great success.

After failing to win the co-operation of the Trades Hall officials, Mr. Morrow invited two delegates from every individual trade union to a special private screening of the two films he was using — 'The Atom and You' and 'Hwai River Must Be Harnessed'. The enthusiastic delegates then became his best publicity workers for the big meeting and film show and 500 people came, while the local press printed an extensive interview with him.

At Lake's Creek he was given a great reception by 2,000 workers at one of Australia's biggest meatworks.

From there he continued southwards to speak to ever more fresh audiences: gold and copper miners at Mt. Morgan, farmers at Biloela, labourers at a camp in the bush, religious leaders at Gympie and the townsfolk of Bundaberg and Maryborough.

Finally, at the end of October, he was back at Brisbane where for several weeks he spoke at meetings in and around the city.

Altogether tens of thousands of people had heard him speak of the World Peace Movement's struggle against atomic war, of the need for friendly contact and trade with China and other Asian countries, of the danger of rearming Japan and of linking Australia with military blocs against Asian countries.

Argentine: National Conference

Draws Up Plan for Campaign against Atomic Weapons

The National Committee of the Argentine Peace Movement has held a meeting attended by leaders of the Movement in Buenos Aires and in the different parts of the country. The meeting was specially called to discuss the campaign against the preparations for atomic war and to ensure the best possible organisation of the various activities that will be launched.

Among those who have recently supported the campaign for the banning of atomic weapons are Mr. Alfredo Ferrer and Mr. Alende, both members of parliament. Mr. Alende is president of the Radical group in parliament.

Great Support for Campaign to Defend Argentina's Oil

The campaign to prevent Argentina's oil from falling into the hands of foreign monopolies and being made to serve warlike ends and to ensure that it is used for the country's economic development is being carried on with success.

Many well-known persons have supported the campaign, including the following: Mr. Jose V. Liceaga, Radical M. P.; Father Amendola de Tebaldi, a Catholic priest; Mr. Carlos Fernandez Ordonez, former Democratic member of the Cordoba provincial parliament; Mr. Carlos Becerra, member of the Cordoba provincial parliament; Mr. Ferrer Zanchi, Radical M. P.; Mr. Virgilio Yanzon, president of the Mining Association of San Juan; Mr. Alfonso Plan, president of the Legal Committee of the Radical Civic Union, a political party; Mr. Romeo Bonazzola, former M.P.; Mr. Juan Jose Diaz Arana, leader of the Progressive Democratic Party; Mr. Ismael Marcon, Mr. Norberto Valdes, Mr. Armando Genovese and Mr. Telmo Alvarez, all members of the National Convention of the Radical Civic Union; Mr. Antonio Tonelli, a university leader; Professor Miguel Derito, former counsellor at the Faculty of Medicine; Mr. Emilio Garcia Iturraspe, President of the Argentine Peace Council; Mr. Alberto Torres, leader of the Chemical Workers' Union; Mr. Rodolfo Lopez, member of the Buenos Aires provincial parliament; Mr. Nicolas Besio Moreno, former Dean of the Engineers' Training Institute; Mr. Robert F. Giusti, writer; Mr. Demetrio Urruchua, painter; Mr. Avelino Sellares, former Progressive Democratic Party M. P.; Mr. Gregorio Berman, psychiatrist; Mr. Juan M. Calvo, former M. P., director of the daily El Eco de Tandil.

URUGUAY

In a statement published at the time of the events in Costa Rica in January, the Uruguayan Peace Council recalls that these events have their source in foreign interference in the internal affairs of the countries of Latin America.

The Uruguayan Peace Councils calls on the people to take action and demands of the Government that, in these circumstances, it make no move towards military intervention; that, on the contrary, it make representations, particularly to the United Nations, for the restoration of peace. The Council also repeats its demand that the Uruguay-United States military treaty be rendered null and void.

The Work of the Cuban Peace Movement

The Cuban Peace Committee devoted a special meeting to the question of German rearmament. At the end of the meeting a statement was issued from which we take the following extracts:

'German rearmament is a brutal contradiction of the people's desire . . .

'We cannot look upon German rearmament as being a question far away and foreign to us. All peoples will suffer the disastrous consequences of a third world war should it break out . . .'

In conclusion, the National Committee calls on the people to unite and join all other peoples in their opposition to German rearmament.

Danger of Bahamas Islands Tests

The Committee also dealt with the danger involved in the war tests to be carried out in the neighbourhood of the Bahamas Islands.

In announcing their intention to hold these tests, the United States authorities explained that 'measures will be taken to safeguard the interests and security of the inhabitants of the territories concerned, as well as civil navigation and air traffic.' This fact alone, the Committee points out, is proof that the tests are 'a danger to the inhabitants of the Caribbean and to navigation in this area. The danger is certain as far as a part of Cuba's northern coast is concerned'.

For this reason, the Committee, which last year campaigned energetically against the bacteriological weapons tests carried out in the area of the Bahamas Islands, calls on the people to oppose these new tests.

Foreign Intervention against American Nations

The situation in Central America was also a subject of wide discussion. After recalling the incidents stirred up between Costa Rica and Nicaragua, the Cuban Peace Committee again denounced intervention against the sovereignty and peace of the nations of America. In conclusion, it called on the peoples of America 'to unite against their common enemies to defend their interests, their freedoms, their sovereignty and their free economic development, and to reject any attempt to provoke differences or conflicts from which only their enemies stood to benefit'.

Discussion of the 'Programme for a Peaceful Foreign Policy'

At the present time local and regional rallies are being held throughout the country to discuss the 'Programme for a Peaceful Foreign Policy' which has already been presented in the Bulletin of the World Council of Peace.

One of these was the Municipal Convention for National Progress and Peace held in Havana. Its agenda was a follows:

1) Report of the Havana Peace Council.

2) Discussion on the 'Programme for a Peaceful Foreign Policy'.

3) Discussion of a plan of work to develop activity for peace.

4) Election of delegates to the National Convention.

Mexico: Agenda of National Assembly for Peace and Security

March 18 is the date fixed for the great National Assembly for Peace and Security called by the Mexican Council for Peace and Security and which has already been mentioned in this Bulletin. It will go on for three days.

In a statement, the Mexican Council for Peace and Security puts forward a four-point agenda for discussion:

1) The problems that the war preparations raise for Mexico.

This point is subdivided into a series of subjects which are likely to lead to a wide exchange of views. For example:

— Foreign interference in Mexico's affairs and its effects on democratic freedoms and industrial and commercial development;

— The possibility of a United States—Mexico military pact;

— The defence of the national culture and the struggle against war propaganda;

— The causes of the growing poverty of the Mexican people; and so on.

2) The problems that Mexico has in common with the rest of Latin America.

This point contains the following subjects:

— The stirring up of artificial rivalries between the countries of Latin America;

— Mexico, a supplier of raw materials, food products and men for war;

— Mexico, a favourable field for foreign investment.

3) The precarious position of peace in the world.

This point includes the questions of German rearmament and the London and Paris Agreements, aggressive blocs, the N.A.T.O. decisions on the use of atomic weapons, and so on.

4) The organisation of the forces for peace in Mexico.

The Mexican Council's statement has the following to say on the character of the Assembly:

'We invite all Mexicans to take part, either individually or collectively, in the National Assembly for Peace and Security . . . and to make reports and speeches, or, if they prefer, to follow the discussion as observers. It should be clearly understood that the participants must not feel themselves bound by any pledge or obligation to subscribe to the conclusions that the Assembly will draw . . ."

The Brazilian film director Alberto Cavalcanti has made the following appeal to Brazilian film workers:

The cinema is the most popular and the most powerful of all arts, and the one that is best suited to enhance national culture and promote friendship among the peoples: That is why it is being attacked today by those who want the most atrocious of all wars — atomic war — a war the peoples do not want.

In Brazil as elsewhere these circles are attempting to substitute films of violence, hate and despair, films of preparation for war, in place of our national cinema depicting the life of our country, its customs and traditions, its sufferings, joys and struggles.

I appeal to all Brazilian film workers who love their country and their art, and I urge them to realise the gravity of the danger and join the great world movement of action against the threat of atomic war. By defending peace they are defending our national culture, our national cinema.

Cultural Anniversaries for 1955

Andersen

In Denmark, preparations are continuing for the commemoration of the author of Wild Swans and so many other enchanting tales. Particular attention is being given to the proposal that children from a number of countries should visit Denmark to honour Andersen and mix with Danish children. Moreover, the Danish Women's Federation has issued interesting postcards bearing illustrations made by Andersen himself with coloured paper cuttings; they are being widely distributed.

In Hungary, the Peace Council will sponsor a great children's festival with the reading of tales by Andersen, puppet plays and the playing of Scandinavian music on its programme. The organising committee is composed of representatives of the Ministry of Culture and the Ministry of Education, the Children's Publishing House, the Puppet Theatre and other bodies.

Cervantes

In various Latin American countries preparations are going ahead for the events that will commemorate the great creator of Don Quixote.

In the Soviet Union a number of steps have already been taken. In January the Lenin Library in Moscow presented an exhibition on the life and work of Cervantes where there were more than a hundred editions of Don Quixote in the many languages of the Soviet Union and other countries on show. It also contained illustrations for the book signed by great Soviet and foreign artists. Similar exhibitions are being presented in the libraries of Leningrad, Kiev, Baku and other cities. The Society for the Diffusion of Scientific and Political Knowledge is preparing lectures in various parts of the country.

Professor Stein, the philologist, has given a talk on 'The Great Spanish Novelist Cervantes'. It is planned to hold other lectures and talks on Don Quixote and Spanish literature in clubs, schools, institutes and universities.

Montesquieu

The 200th anniversary of the death of the author of L'Esprit des Lois will be officially commemorated by U.N.E.S.C.O. in accordance with the decision of its Eighth General Conference in Montevideo. The proposal came from the Hungarian delegation.

On February 10, the anniversary day, the Montesquieu Academy of Bordeaux, the great sociologist's native town, held a memorial ceremony in Brede Castle. Preparations are being made to hold other events in France in the month of May. The Nagel publishing house in Paris announces the publication of the third and last volume of Montesquieu's collected works; it contains many hitherto unpublished texts, posthumous works and correspondence and is the official bicentenary edition.

In the Soviet Union a Montesquieu exhibition has already been inaugurated in Leningrad.

In Hungary, the Academy of Sciences is preparing a philosophical lecture and the national U.N.E.S.C.O. committee a sociological one. The Society for the popularisation of the natural and social sciences will organise in Budapest and other university towns a series of Montesquieu memorial evenings. The Persian Letters have been re-edited in a new translation.

Walt Whitman

In a number of countries it is proposed to include on the the programmes of ceremonies in honour of the author of Leaves of Grass the performance of some of the many pieces of music inspired by his poems. On this point we would recall that there exists a compilation of 294 of these compositions which was made by Mr. Henry S. Saunders in Canada. Such concerts would also include the famous cantata, Dona Nobis Pacem, composed in 1936 by the illustrious British composer Vaughan Williams on the theme of one of Whitman's poems, together with the Sea Symphony by the same composer.

Americans Speak Out for Cultural Exchanges

We give below two items of information from the United States, both relative to the demand for the development of cultural exchanges in that country.

Note by American Scientists

The Federation of American Scientists has informed many foreign scientific associations that it is studying the effects of the present visa policy on science. Their letter is addressed to:

1) People who wished to go to the United States for professional reasons but could not because they were refused visas or received them too late.

2) Persons who have received invitations to go to the United States in their professional capacity (e.g. to attend conferences or as a visiting lecturer) but have hesitated to ask for a visa because of the present regulations.

3) Visitors who, having arrived in the United States, had visa trouble.

4) Scientific conferences or congresses which could not be held in the United States because of the present visa policy.

The Federation of American Scientists would like to receive information on cases of this type which have occurred in the last two years and asks that the sender should indicate whether the information is to be regarded as confidential or not. All communications should be sent to the following address: The Federation of American Scientists, Committee on Visa Problems, P.O. Box 1191, Stanford, California, U.S.A.

University of California Considers Invitation to Soviet Students

At the University of California, Los Angeles, the U.C.L.A. Bruin reports that the Student Council is considering an invitation that would bring college newspaper editors from the Soviet Union to the U.S. during this year. Seven American college editors visited the Soviet Union early last year, but the Soviet students invited last summer were refused visas. Their American colleagues are making every effort to make the visit possible this time.

A statement by Martin Mc Reynolds, editor of the paper, notes: 'Anything we can do to relieve tension and establish a better relationship between the two nations is valuable.' And Joseph Adler, campus representative of the United States National Student Association, says that 'a free exchange of ideas between Russian and American students can bring about better understanding.'

In India, the All India Peace Council's Cultural Sub-Committee has decided to hold a great festival of dancing, drama and music to commemorate the 1,500th anniversary of the Ajanta frescoes. First of all there will be regional festivals which will culminate in the great all-India festival at the end of 1955 in which artists from all over India will take part.

It is also planned to present an exhibition of reproductions of the Ajanta paintings. In addition, the Indian Government Film Unit has made a film on 'India's Cave Temples' which is mainly devoted to the Ajanta frescoes.

Wide Cultural Movement in Japan:
'The Songs of Japan'
The whole country is singing
'We shall never allow the dropping of another atomic bomb'

We have pleasure in publishing an extract from an interesting article by Mr. Tokusaburo Dan, writer, member of the World Council of Peace. The cultural initiative in Japan described in this article will be a valuable example and an encouragement for friends of peace the world over.

The great movement called "The Songs of Japan", which is only six years old, underwent a magnificent development in 1954. From the factories, the villages and the schools arise songs extolling happiness, peace and independence. The voices of all these ordinary people sang in unison on the occasion of the third national concert of "The Songs of Japan" organisation which was held on November 27, 28 and 29, 1954. It was attended by more than 5,000 people of all professions and from all parts of Japan and there were more than 25,000 spectators. The first two evenings were held in a big hall which can hold 5,000 people and the last in a sports stadium with a seating capacity of 25,000. Before the concert started all the seats had been taken; even the corridors were blocked with people. A total of more than 35,000 people heard and saw the concerts.

Mrs. Akiko Seki, the founder of the powerful movement, 'Songs of Japan', the motto of which is 'Songs are forces for peace'.

'The first evening was devoted to choirs from eight regions of Japan; each was composed of from three to four hundred singers, both men and women. The second evening was given over to songs and dances of the Japanese countryside. On the last evening workers' and students' choirs took the stage.

'During the first two evenings the veterans of the "Central Choir", conducted by Mrs. Akiko Seki, sang the suite "Songs of Japan 1954" the principal theme of which is the song: "We shall never allow the dropping of another atomic bomb". On the last evening they sang the suite "Songs of Asia" with the collaboration of Chinese and Koreans residing in Japan. The theme of the suite is friendship and solidarity between the peoples of Asia. The audience listened to these songs with immense enthusiasm.

'At the end of the programme both singers and audience stood up and sang the favourite songs, "We shall never allow the dropping of another atomic bomb", "The mountains and rivers of the homeland", "For national independence", "Tokio-Peking", and others. After this moving piece of mass singing all went home with the joy of life and hope for the future in their hearts.'

Mr. Dan then goes on to say that this huge success is the result of six years of tireless work and devotion by Mrs. Seki and her pupils in the most difficult circumstances. In the beginning there were only 15 of them. After a year the number had risen to 300 and little musical groups had started round each one of them. During the time of the Korean war, when the Peace Movement was severely repressed, the choir's meetings were hindered by the authorities, but their promoters managed to overcome all obstacles by placing increasing reliance on the workers and the people. And so, through the gifts of ordinary people all over Japan, it was possible to construct a building for the 'Central Choir'.

The progress made was reflected in the great concert given before an audience of 3,000 at the end of 1952. For the first time a good number of representatives from the different regions sang in addition to the members of the 'Central Choir'. From that time on 'The Songs of Japan' developed on a great scale for, on going back home, the regional representatives did an enormous amount of work in organising powerful local movements round themselves. In the course of 1953 the results achieved were even more encouraging. A great number of singers, both men and women, went to Uchinada and Myogi to encourage the fishermen and peasants who were putting up a bitter struggle against the plans for military bases in the area. Through these demonstrations of solidarity 'The Songs of Japan' was able to become deeply rooted among the workers in the conditions favourable to the easing of international tension that followed on the armistice in Korea. Thus, regional concerts were organised in the main provinces of Japan. A great number of workers and peasants took part and helped to make the great national concert of 1953 a success.

The poster announcing the third national concert of 'The Songs of Japan'.

In 1954 "Songs of Japan" grew even more rapidly thanks mainly to the collaboration of the National Council of Trade Unions (S.O.H.Y.O.) which has a membership of 4,000,000. On the eve of May Day it launched the slogan: "We must have peace songs in every factory!" Workers' choirs were set up everywhere and regardless of political affiliation everyone came to sing arm in arm.

The horror of the hydrogen bomb, and the tests which brought new sufferings to the Japanese people, were also factors which brought more and more people into "The Songs of Japan". A song of anger and grief, "We shall never allow the dropping of another atomic bomb", rapidly spread throughout the country. In factory and on farm this song is heard rising up at any time, an expression of the people's hatred of war and their desire for peace.

We give below an English translation.

Our native town has turned to ashes;
On the burnt soil, where lay the bones of our beloved,
White flowers are now in bloom.
O! we shall not allow another atomic bomb!
We shall not allow it, a third time!
No! not on our town!

The sea is rough around our native place;
With dreary rain, there are no more days of joy,
And, on the boats, not a sign of man.
O! we will not allow another atomic bomb!
We shall not allow it, a third time!
No! not on our sea!

The sky is heavy over our native town;
Black clouds cover the Earth day after day,
And in the sunshine we rejoice no more.
O! we shall not allow another atomic bomb!
We shall not allow it, a third time!
No! not in our sky!

All the wealth and joy,
The fruits of our brethren's toil unceasing,
Have all now crumbled to naught.
O! we shall not allow another atomic bomb!
We shall not allow it, a third time!
No! not on our Earth!

GREAT BRITAIN:

National Deputations Day

National Deputations Day in Britain, which brought more than 10,000 people to the House of Commons on January 25 to demand "No Arms for Germany", was the biggest demonstration of its kind for many years. How was it organised?

The appeal for a mass lobbying of Members of Parliament was made by the British Peace Committee in the middle of December. This appeal was addressed not only to peace committees but also to all trade union, co-operative, political, religious and other organisations.

Several Weeks' Preparation

The campaign leading up to the day itself was very carefully prepared and detailed proposals were sent out by the British Peace Committee to local peace committees.

In the five weeks that followed, every conceivable means was used to ensure the widest publicity and the largest possible delegations. The British Peace Committee sent 8,000 letters to other organisations inviting them to take part. All over the country there were poster parades; distribution of leaflets (150,000 issued by the British Peace Committee itself as well as many produced locally); conferences in certain areas, sometimes called by the peace committees, sometimes by district committees of trade unions. Special materials were prepared by other organisations — regional peace committees, youth, workers in different industries. The London busmen issued their own leaflet in the form of an appeal to 'meet us outside the House of Commons', signed by 40 busmen and women. The British-Soviet Friendship Society produced a postcard which on one side urged people to lobby their M.P.s; on the other was a space to write the result of the interview, the postcard to be handed in after the lobbying.

Plan of Campaign

There was a special meeting of the General Council of the British Peace Committee on January 8—9 to which representatives of local peace committees and other organisations were invited. This meeting planned the campaign for the final two weeks and issued a statement which was widely distributed and was reproduced in a special issue of the B.P.C. Newsletter just before the National day. This statement said:

'Grave decisions are being taken today which, if not reversed, may drag this country faster than many realise towards World War III ... At this critical moment in the life of our country and of the world, we call on people of all organisations and in every walk of life, to insist on the settlement of disputes by negotiation, before it is too late ... By resolutions, deputations, demonstrations, insist that your M.P. and all authorities work to stop the rearmament of Germany. Demand that the government should resume Four-Power Talks at once to reach agreement on a peaceful settlement for Germany. Act now to save Britain and the world from the catastrophe of atomic war.'

Letters to M.P.s

As the weeks went by, the local peace committees succeeded in getting trade union branches, co-operative organisations, churches and others to elect official delegates. In Scotland, in Yorkshire, in Wales, coaches were booked and money for rail fares was raised. Many people wrote to their M.P.s to say that they were coming and this resulted in a number of M.P.s booking committee rooms in the House of Commons to receive their constituents. One M.P. arranged for a small room, and had to change to a bigger one when he found that 101 people had arrived to see him.

Two weeks beforehand, the British Peace Committee sent a letter to all peace committees giving details of the arrangements for the day itself. An advice centre was open during the afternoon and evening, complete with refreshments and with a creche for children. Posters were available with such slogans as 'German Rearmament threatens Britain', 'Tell your M.P. — No German Army', 'Start Four Power Talks'.

Subsequent Activities

Such was the campaign which led to the magnificent demonstration on January 25 which can have left the Members of Parliament in no doubt as to the opposition of the mass of the British people to the rearmament of Germany.

The National Deputations Day has been followed by further actions proposed by the Peace Committee:

1) All organisations and individuals who oppose German rearmament were asked to make February 8 Telegram and Telephone Day, on which all would either telegraph or telephone to their M.P. demanding opposition to the Paris agreements.

2) Deputations in ever increasing numbers to M.P.s in their constituencies.

3) Organisation of 5,000 public meetings.

4) Local and regional conferences on the widest basis throughout the country.

In addition, March 5 and 6 are to be national days of poster parades in every city and town in Great Britain. Carrying posters addressed directly to their M.P.s, these parades will visit the houses of the M.P.s to call on them to oppose German rearmament and to act against atomic war preparations.

Shadows over Austria

A Documentary Film made by the Austrian Peace Council

These stills of the film "Shadows over Austria" show:
— an ex-soldiers' meeting at Gmunden;
— a young peoples' demonstration against ex-soldiers' rallies in Vienna.
— a women's demonstration in Bad Ischl.

The Austrian Peace Council has recently made a short documentary film which shows in all clearness how Austria is already threatened by German rearmament.

The film opens with shots of the beautiful Austrian countryside. We then see the people of Austria, the adults at work, the children playing. We see them wearing their national costumes and performing their national dances, taking part in sport and tasting new wine. The wounds of war appear to be healed.

But behind this peaceful picture a new war is being prepared. The film shows war literature in the libraries, military installations on Austrian soil and above all the re-emergence of militarist activities. Military ceremonies at the war memorials and rallies of ex-soldiers are held including not only Austrians sporting their war decorations awarded by Hitler, but also undesirable individuals from West Germany, such as recently freed war criminals.

The film constrasts scenes of the 1930's with topical scenes, and thus throws into vivid relief the analogy between the situation which led up to the Anschluss and the situation today. But today there is a difference in that the Austrian people remember only too well the horrors of the war, which the film also conjures up with a few shots, and they are everywhere starting to resist the preparations for a new war. We are heartened to see the work of the Austrian defenders of peace, meeting together at large and small gatherings, discussing in the streets and on the doorsteps, talking with their neighbours, continually explaining the situation and initiating activities. Big demonstrations including people of all sections of the population show how much they are once again keenly concerned with the well-being of their country. The film ends with an appeal to encourage and actively support these efforts to prevent catastrophe.

National Interests in the Campaign against Atomic War

When one studies, from a national point of view, the problems raised by the N.A.T.O. decision on the adoption of atomic weapons as the basis of its military organisation, one conclusion stands out very clearly. It is that this new stage of the policy of strength, the most scandalous yet, aggravates the dangers which every country has to face. This is so because the N.A.T.O. decision sets the international situation in a new light, politically, economically and from the military point of view.

This decision menaces the whole world with the immediate threat of the destruction of life and wealth on an incalculable scale. But, more than that, it is a mortgage on the sovereignty of every country, for it is an instrument of pressure and blackmail which can force them to grant bases, to sign pacts, to join blocs and to accept foreign control over their strategic raw materials. These things are opposed to their real national interests and help to increase international tension, which is every day becoming more dangerous. How much would a nation which does not possess atomic weapons retain of her sovereignty if the world knuckled under to the attempts being made to blackmail it?

These are only a few of the imperative reasons why the world campaign against the preparations for atomic war is correct and urgent. They oblige the National Peace Committees to explain clearly to public opinion how and to what extent the N.A.T.O. decision affects the national interests.

This is already being done in a number of countries. Let us take the example of Italy. In that country the campaign against the preparations for atomic war is based on specifically Italian interests. It is one of the most densely populated countries in Europe; there is the duty of defending constitutional freedom which is being jeopardised by the military treaties, and of preserving for mankind a particularly precious cultural heritage. These are reasons why the whole Italian people should act together against those who would prepare for atomic war.

This harmony that exists between national interests and the interests of all mankind as a result of the threat that is hanging over every country enables every National Peace Movement to bring public opinion into active opposition to atomic war on the basis of the problems peculiar to each nation and deeply felt by every man and woman, not only for their effects on the individual, but as vital national interests. Thus, for example, the nations contiguous to the German Federal Republic, which are conducting a courageous campaign against the rearming of that country, are redoubling their efforts now that there is a threat that atomic weapons will be put into the hands of former Nazi generals. In the same way, the peoples of the Near and Middle East have been actively opposing the military pacts which bind their countries to the United States, but they now find themselves confronted with greater responsibilities and dangers. For this reason they are welcoming the world campaign as an even more active and vigorous form of self-defence. The colonial countries which possess the raw materials necessary for the manufacture of atomic weapons, or on whose territory bases for atomic bombers and atomic weapons dumps have been set up, find themselves, against their will, at the very heart of any future thermonuclear war.

Already experience is showing that in those countries where the National Committees have been able to link the struggle against atomic war with the national interests, as in Japan, Italy, Argentina and many other countries, public opinion reacts immediately because it has been made to realise fully the dangers that are directly threatening it and the responsibility that each must assume if they are to be averted.

Messages to the World Council of Peace

The Secretariat of the World Council of Peace is receiving many messages hailing the opening of the great world campaign against the preparations for atomic war from peace committees, organisations, sport clubs, trade union branches, shop stewards' committees and others.

Here are a few extracts:

'On the occasion of their victories in Basle, the Budapest women's fencing team sends its best wishes for success to the World Council of Peace.'

'We portworkers of Genoa learned with enthusiasm of the resolution adopted by the World Council of Peace. Strong in the knowledge of the results obtained in the campaign for the Stockholm Appeal, the people of the port district pledge that they will do their utmost to get even better results and bring new sections of the people into the struggle against war.'

The workers in the unified agricultural co-operatives of the North Prague district of Czechoslovakia:

'We do not want our fertile fields to be turned into a battlefield; we do not want to exchange our tractors for tanks.'

A wood construction factory in Potsdam (German Democratic Republic):

'We firmly demand the destruction of all stocks of atomic weapons wherever they may be and the immediate stopping of their manufacture.'

The Peace Council of Lower Austria:

'The province of Lower Austria suffered immense losses and damage during the last war. Confronted with the permanent danger of an atomic war, the people will be ready to support the Vienna Appeal.'

From Neusiedl-on-Zaya (Lower Austria):

'This joint conference of shop stewards' convenors, treasurers of the engineering, mining and chemical trade unions and representatives of the workers in the private oil companies, greets the decision of the World Council of Peace.'

There were also messages from the Peace Committee of the engineering factory of Sampierdarena and the Peace Committees of Genesestri and Riva sotto il Garda in Italy; the workers, foremen and technicians of the Torgau earthenware factory in the German Democratic Republic; and from the participants in a joint meeting of the Bulgarian Peace Committee and the National Council of the Fatherland Front in Bulgaria.

Letter from 1000 French Teachers' Training College Students

The letter given below was written by a group of students in a French Teachers' Training College and sent to the French Prime Minister and members of parliament. It was signed by a thousand training college students, sixty engineering students and four college priests.

'Alarmed by the speed-up in the armaments race and the plans to use French atomic research for military purposes, we ask you most earnestly to prevent France from directing her nuclear research to the manufacture of atomic weapons, but rather to aim at putting France at the head of the nations in the peaceful use of atomic energy and in general disarmament.

'We are ready to give our fullest support to a policy of economic and social progress, and are thus all the more opposed to France's entry into the armaments race in any way whatsoever.'

Declaration by the French Movement 'Pax Christi'

The following resolution was adopted at the last meeting of the National Council of the 'Pax Christi' movement:

'We members of the National Executive Council of Pax Christi and regional delegates, meeting in Paris on December 18 and 19, 1954,

'convinced, on the basis of our Christian principles and of well-founded observations by French atomic scientists, that France which, up till now, has concerned itself with the peaceful industrial use of atomic energy, could not start the manufacture of A and H bombs without grievously repudiating its mission in the world,

'express the hope that this orientation towards the peaceful use of atomic energy will be firmly maintained.

'In voicing this hope and making it public, we are sure that we are acting in conformity with the often expressed wishes of the Pope relative to the new methods of war, particularly the use of A.B.C. weapons by any power whatsoever.'

The World Campaign against the Preparations for Atomic War

The First Signatures in Dolisia

(Central Congo)

On February 9, in Dolisia in the Central Congo, a number of friends of peace met in the house of one of them to set up a Peace Committee. Those present were of different views and walks of life and the discussion dealt with two questions: German rearmament and the threat of atomic war. It was decided to open the signature campaign for the Vienna Appeal immediately. The gathering also approved the World Council's decision to call a World Assembly for Peace.

Mr. Kikhunga-Ngot, a territorial councillor for the Central Congo, one of the secretaries of the new committee, writes that the setting up of the Peace Committee is the starting-point for many others in this area.

At the end of the meeting, the participants signed the Vienna Appeal and Mr. Kikhunga-Ngot sent a typed list of these first signatures to the World Council. They include a village chief, an official of the French Confederation of Christian Workers, African doctors, tradesmen, civil servants and workers. Some of those who gave their support to the Appeal put their thumbprint on the sheet, for this is the only way in which many people in the Central Congo can express in black and white their pledge to defend peace.

As we go to press, in addition to the countries mentioned on pages 3, 4, 5 and 6, the campaign was being carried on in Bulgaria, Chile, Finland, Holland, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Lebanon Mexico, Mongolia and Poland.

BRAZIL

How the Campaign is Being Organised

The signature campaign was officially opened on March 1st at big public meetings in Rio de Janeiro, Sao Paulo, the State capitals and major towns of Brazil.

The National Council of the Peace Movement had decided to start the collection of signatures on that date so as to devote the whole of February to the preparation and thorough organisation of the campaign. It was at a meeting of the National Council on February 5 and 6 that the various stages of this preparation were decided on.

In order to warn public opinion of the dangers involved in the preparations for atomic war a series of lectures was arranged; they were given by Mr. Jacques Danon, an atomic physicist, and a former collaborator of Professor Joliot-Curie; Mr. Romulo Argentier, scientist; Mr. Evandro Lins e Silva, lawyer, and others. A press campaign was carried on simultaneously.

A national sponsoring committee, composed of eminent figures in the political, cultural, religious and economic spheres, was set up to make the opening of the signature campaign more effective. To make the contacts necessary for the formation of this committee a small sub-committee of the Brazilian Peace Movement was formed with the following members: Mr. Abel Chermont; Mr. Josue de Castro, President of the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organisation; Monsignor Hipolito Costabile, Papal Protonotary; Bishop Cesar Dacorso, head of the Methodist Church; Mr. Frota Moreira M.P. and Mr. Abguar Bastos M.P.; and Mr. Jorge Amado, member of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace.

Similar sponsoring committees were set up on a local level.

At the same time there was a veritable mobilisation of the Peace Movement.

The National Council also decided to call a National Assembly for Peace on April 1st, 2nd and 3rd in preparation for the World Assembly. The signature campaign will then have been going on for a month and it will be possible to give a first report on how it is proceeding.

They Signed while Crossing the Alps

Returning from Vienna to Japan by air after the extended January meeting of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace, Mr. Kaoru Yasui, General Secretary of the Japanese National Council against A and H bombs, collected a number of signatures for the Vienna Appeal as the plane in which he was travelling crossed the Alps on the way to Zurich.

He was reading a newspaper when he found the text of the Appeal on one of its pages. Immediately, Mr. Yasui, a citizen of the country which has already experienced atomic death and devastation, Japan, showed the Appeal to his fellow passengers, asking them to sign on the newspaper. They did so without exception.

Thousands of Signatures in Italy

There were mass rallies and demonstrations throughout Italy on Sunday, February 13, the day on which the signature campaign for the Vienna Appeal was opened.

By the following day 24,000 signatures had been collected in the province of Ragusa, 21,000 in the province of Catania and 3,000 at Gela. At Legnano, 550 of the 600 employees at a textile factory signed the Appeal, while at Sesto San Giovanni 5,000 signatures were collected in a few hours.

The owner of a textile factory in Novara signed the Appeal along with the workers; half the population signed.

The Italian Peace Movement is becoming stronger and wider in the course of the campaign. A Milan priest, Father Faustino Denti, who attended the meeting of the provincial Peace Council, said:

'I look upon it as my duty to be with you. I see that here alonside me are men and women who do not want war and are prepared to fight against it.'

At Montepulciano there was a mass demonstration in which more than 600 peasants and agricultural labourers took part. The resolution adopted demands 'that the Italian Senate reject the London and Paris Agreements, which would lead to the revival of German militarism and the launching of atomic war'. There have been many demonstrations in Liguria, Lombardy, Le Marche and Calabria.

There is a continual flow of workers' deputations from every part of the country to the Senate, demanding that the Senators reject the London and Paris Agreements.

The municipal councils of Civita Vecchia, San Geminiano Calcinaia, Cerleone, Pietra Santa and Campofranco have adopted resolutions demanding the destruction of all stocks of atomic weapons and a ban on their manufacture.

The Ferrara and Forli county councils, and the municipal councils of Segrate, Genzano, Rombiolo, Fiorenzuola d'Arda, and San Severo have adopted the Vienna Appeal.

THE CAMPAIGN OPENS

Viet Nam

A meeting of the Viet Nam Peace Committee was held in Hanoi on February 4. It was attended by several hundred delegates from North and South Viet Nam, representing the different sections of the population: intellectual circles, artists, industrialists and merchants.

The decisions of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace were warmly welcomed and the session decided to open the signature campaign for the Vienna Appeal.

A programme of activity for 1955 has been drawn up for the consolidation of peace in Indo-China. The session also adopted a plan of work for the preparations for the World Assembly for Peace.

Argentine

The Argentine Peace Council has decided to begin the collection of signatures to the Appeal against the preparations for atomic war immediately throughout the whole country. This campaign will follow up the many actions for the banning of atomic weapons which have been organised in Argentine these last months, not only by the Peace Movement but by wide sections of opinion.

The Council emphasises that this campaign must obtain better results than any previous campaign and that there must, in particular, be a big increase in the number of signatures collected. Signature-collecting forms bearing the text of the Vienna Appeal were immediately printed.

In Buenos Aires, January 28 — that is, before the National Peace Council's decision — was observed as 'Action Day for the Banning of Atomic Weapons'. The main thoroughfares of the capital and particularly busy spots were literally flooded with leaflets put out by the Buenos Aires Peace Council: for example, Florida and Corrientes streets, Once, Constitucion and Flores squares, and the districts of Belgrano and Boca.

At the termini of the bus routes to the suburbs leaflets were distributed and banners displayed. In Liniers, one of the working-class districts, and in Primera Junta Square, leaflets were rained down on people waiting for buses. Leaflets were also distributed during the rush hours on the platforms of the underground and main line railway stations.

Syria

At an extended meeting in Damascus, the Syrian Peace Committee approved the decision of the World Council of Peace to launch a world signature campaign against the preparations for atomic war. The campaign was opened immediately and the Committee called on all friends of peace to carry it through on a vast scale in the towns and villages and amoung all sections of the people, so as to show the whole world that the Syrian people demand the banning of weapons of mass destruction with the greatest firmness.

The Argentine Peace Council also issued a political statement on the situation in the Far East, demanding an end to the provocation of China over Formosa. The statement asks the Argentine people to demonstrate their support for the Chinese people.

Telegrams demanding the rejection of the London and Paris Agreements were sent to the Council of the Republic in France.

Lastly, the Council decided to hold demonstrations in opposition to the arrival of a United States military mission in Argentine.

Uruguay

On February 14, the Uruguayan Peace Council declared open the campaign for the collection of signatures to the Vienna Appeal, and a national peace conference to discuss the tasks of the Peace Movement in the present international situation was called for the month of April. The Uruguayan delegates to the World Assembly for Peace will be elected at this conference.

Mr. Ricardo Sanguinetti, president of the General Union of Workers, stated: 'I, and every worker, consider that the use of atomic bombs would be a crime against mankind . . . We workers hate war, which nobody wants, we must join our voices to the Appeal of the World Council of Peace and support the signature campaign launched by the National Peace Council.'

Mr. Rosario Pietraroia, secretary of the Engineers' Union, stated that his trade union would go into action to ensure success for the aims of the National Peace Council.

The Uruguayan Peace Council also sent a telegram to the Council of the Republic in France asking it to reject the Paris Agreements. At the same time it called on the people to demonstrate their opposition to the revival of German militarism. Twice a week, open air metings with loudspeaker vans are held in the various districts of Montevideo. The speakers denounce the Paris Agreements and the Uruguay-United States pact and explain the need to send a very representative Uruguayan delegation to the World Assembly for Peace in Helsinki.

600,000 Signatures in Albania

By February 24, more than 600,000 signatures had been collected in Albania.

In several parts of the country the whole adult population approved the Vienna Appeal.

Rumania

At the call of the Rumanian Peace Committee a great many members of local Peace Committees have started a signature-collecting campaign for the Vienna Appeal.

The first check showed that by February 13, 418,000 signatures had been collected in Bucharest, 133,000 in the Cluj area, 86,000 in the towns and villages of the Jassy district and more than 280,000 in the Craiova area.

Before the Austrian Peace Council had signature forms printed and distributed, the Peace Committee of the Rehberg shoe factory, near Krems, started collecting signatures on flags bearing the text of the Vienna Appeal — the 630 workers and office staff of the factory signed. The flags were then tied together in the form of a sheaf and were handed, together with a peace flag, to the Austrian Peace Council at a little ceremony.

A Shadow that Gives Food for Thought

'About 500 yards from the centre of the explosion is a bank; its steps have been enclosed with a simple fence. If you look inside this fence you will see the dark shadow of a man. A man had obviously been sitting on the steps of the premises meditating, resting his hand on his cheek, his elbow on his knee. The blast of the explosion had come in this direction, throwing the shadow of this man on to the steps: of course he had died on the spot from the intense radioactivity. The dark shadow is still sitting there meditating . . .'

Extracts from the preface to Children of the Atom Bomb by Dr. Arata Osada, Professor at Hiroshima University.

A Quarter of the World's Population in the Campaign against Atomic Weapons

'The Chinese People wholeheartedly support the resolutions of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace and will make them a reality through active and concrete work.'

By February 26, more than 21 million Chinese had signed the Appeal. In Peking, Tientsin and Shanghai the whole adult population had signed; in Anshan, the centre of Chinese heavy industry, 600,000 signatures had been collected; in Fushun the figure was 150,000 and in Inner Mongolia more than 100,000.

The campaign was officially launched throughout China on February 14, although the collection had actually begun on the 13th in such big cities as Shanghai and Wuhan. There was a meeting in the former city on the morning of the 13th, at which 2,301 people representing all sections of the population studied the decisions of the Standing Committee of the Chinese Peace Movement and inaugurated the campaign by signing the Vienna Appeal. At the first check on February 21, 5,108,698 signatures had been collected.

The campaign went off to a flying start in Wuhan when the workers of the cotton mill lined up to sign at the numerous booths and tables specially set up for the campaign. In the queue were mothers with babies in their arms and a 73-year-old grandmother whose son and daughter both work at the mill. Out of ten children born to her, eight died before the liberation, some in war, others because of poverty.

'I have known enough sorrow,' she said, 'nothing must stop our present joyful progress.'

People signing in Tibet. The Dalai Lama, the Panchem Lama and a number of members of the Tibetan Government signed the Appeal and gave their support to the world campaign against the preparations for atomic war.

Among the National Minorities

The campaign was opened in the multinational province of Yunnan on February 14 at a meeting attended by representatives of 28 national minorities.

Students from 48 different nationalities studying in the Central Institute for National Minorities signed the appeal to ban the use of atomic weapons at a gathering in Peking.

Dressed in their colourful national costumes, the 2,000 students, including Hans, Uighurs, Tibetans, Koreans, Mongolians, Miaos and Kaoshans, packed the hall to pledge their support for the world-wide campaign against weapons of mass destruction.

Mr. Abduupul Imin, an Uighur student, told the gathering:

'We all wish to build our country into a beautiful land. We want to live a peaceful and ever fuller live. We hate war because it will bring only bloodshed and suffering.'

Survivor of Atomic Bombing Urges Ban on A Bomb

Scarcely two days after the campaign was launched, 526,000 signatures had been collected in Peking.

University staff and students queued up in thousands to sign. In one such queue stood physics lecturer Mr. Yu Ming-cheh, who survived the dropping of the first atomic bomb on Hiroshima.

He spoke of his terrible memories:

'I was studying at the University of Arts and Sciences in Hiroshima in 1945. I had been caught in the war and was not able to get back to China.'

He was working in a dark room of the university's laboratory, which was in a ferro-concrete building, on the morning of that fateful day when the atom bomb went off.

'I ran out into the street after the violent gust created by the bomb blast had knocked me down. The city was an inferno. All round were dead or dying, their clothes burnt to ash, their skin charred by the 2,000 degrees of heat generated by the bomb. Fires raged for five days and nights. The once beautiful city became rubble.'

Workers in the iron and steel, engineering and textile industries, miners and 1,300 railwaymen organised meetings to rally new forces for the campaign. The campaign was also launched at many construction sites. Signing his name, Mr. Li Shih-fu, a civil engineer, said:

'We are building a great theatre in the capital, the pride of the people of Peking. We shall put up many more magnificent buildings. We'll never allow the aggressors to destroy mankind's happy life.'

By February 21, only a week after the launching of the campaign in Peking, 2,750,000 people, including, 1,100,000 women, had signed the Appeal.

Mrs. Tang Ven-tseng, mother of 13 children, said as she signed:

'It is the natural duty of mothers to protect their children and to bring them up in peace.'

On February 14:

— A mass rally was held in the port of Foochow. 1,300 representatives from all parts of Fukien signed their names on the spot. The campaign, headed by a former Kuomintang admiral, quickly developed throughout the city following the rally.

— The Second Trade Union Congress in Canton passed a resolution supporting the Appeal on behalf of the 250,000 workers of the city. The 400 delegates attending the Congress signed the Appeal. Six days later, on February 20, 800,000 people had signed in the city.

— In Chengteh, the capital of Jehol province, more than half the population signed in a single day. The total number of signatures reached 62,580.

— Lamas of eight big temples in Huhehot, capital of the Inner Mongolia Autonomous Region, also joined the signature campaign on February 14.

Eminent Public Figures in the Campaign

In addition to mass activity, eminent public figures of different walks of life are stating their support for the campaign. Mr. Chen Shu-tung, Vice-Chairman of the Chinese People's Committee for World Peace wrote in the People's Daily of February 15:

'The Chinese people will struggle resolutely alongside all other peace-loving peoples against atomic war and the use of atomic weapons . . .

'The Chinese people wholeheartedly support the resolutions of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace and will make them a reality through active and concrete work.'

Mr. Kao Shi-chi, a bacteriologist and a victim of paralysis, attended a meeting of one thousand scientific workers in Peking to make his contribution to the campaign against weapons of mass destruction. He lost his health 30 years ago while working in the United States on ways of conquering the germs of fatal diseases. A 72-year-old botanist, Mr. Chien Chung-shu, was also there to register his support for the Appeal. Chi Pai-shih, the 95-year-old painter, said at a meeting of literary and art circles, on February 17:

'All old people throughout the world love peace and serenity, their homes, their children and grandchildren. Therefore they oppose the evil atomic bomb. That is why I have signed the Appeal against the preparations for atomic war.'

At one of the 600 meetings to collect signatures held in Peking, a 105-year-old woman, who had insisted on being taken there, said: 'I too am against the bomb.'

THE CAMPAIGN OPENS

Canada

At a ceremony in the Banquet Room in the historic Walker House, members of the National Council of the Canadian Peace Congress signed the World Appeal against the preparations for atomic war. The ceremony symbolised the launching in Canada of an intensive effort in all sections of the country to solicit signatures to the Appeal.

Dr. Endicott, who attended the meeting of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace in Vienna, was the first Canadian to sign the Appeal. At a meeting of the National Council of the Peace Congress, held on February 5 and 6, Dr. Endicott pointed out that the Appeal 'can be signed with a clear conscience by supporters of every political party and religious faith in Canada and any other country'.

After a very full discussion, Mrs. Eva Sanderson of Toronto, member of the World Council of Peace, was the second Canadian to sign the Appeal and it was then signed by 24 more peace spokesmen of various views and faiths from Montreal, Ottawa and Toronto.

The meeting decided that the opening of the mass soliciting of signatures from the public would be marked by a national distribution of several hundred thousand copies of the text of the Appeal on Saturday, March 5. Many personalities and organisations will be invited to endorse it.

The bulk of the signatures will be collected by several thousand volunteer canvassers who will knock on doors in all parts of Canada. The petition will also be circulated in factories and on farms and the public is being invited to finance this vast campaign through donations.

The National Council adopted a statement which says that 'the policy founded on the division of the world into blocs, of seeking solutions through force or threat of force, has now reached the point — where full-scale preparations are being made for the catastrophe of atomic war, which we are being asked to accept as inevitable, with the use of atomic weapons to be regarded as legitimate and normal;

— where the attempt is being made to remilitarise Germany against its will, despite the clear opposition of majority opinion in Canada and every other country that would be a victim . . .

'Under these circumstances

1) Each person of goodwill may most effectively act against the nuclear destruction of our cities by signing the World Appeal against the preparations for atomic war, issued in Vienna on January 19, 1955. This Appeal is being circulated in all countries in order to allow mankind to speak with one voice.

2) All views and tendencies in Canada should be represented by qualified spokesmen at the World Assembly for Peace in Helsinki commencing May 22. In this way Canada will share in shaping a mightier effort of the peoples to banish war.'

Switzerland

The National Conference of the Swiss Peace Movement was held in Lausanne on February 13. Sixty delegates from the factories, villages and localities of the districts of Basle, Zurich, La Chaux de Fonds, Locle, Yverdon, Locarno, Berne, Geneva and Lausanne were present, as also was Mrs. Isabelle Blume, secretary of the World Council of Peace.

After listening to the report, which was given by Professor A. Bonnard, the delegates took part in a lively discussion on how to rally the democratic forces of the country on a large scale and took steps to launch the signature campaign throughout the country. The Conference pledged that twice as many signatures would be gathered as for the Stockholm Appeal.

Czechoslovakia

The Czechoslovak Peace Committee met in Prague on February 10, together with representatives of the branches of the National Front and cultural and public figures.

Academician Jan Mukarovsky, member of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace, gave a report on the meeting of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace in Vienna, January 17-19. The Secretary of the Committee then presented a report on the organisation of the signature campaign against atomic war.

A thorough discussion followed, at the end of which Mrs. Fucikova presented an appeal of the Czechoslovak Peace Committee for the signature campaign for the Vienna Appeal.

The appeal says in part:

'The hordes who destroyed Lidice, and who tried to destroy and set on fire our city of Prague during the very last days of the war, are now to be given atomic weapons . . .

'The Czechoslovak Peace Committee fully approves the Appeal against the preparations for atomic war issued by the Bureau of the World Council of Peace. It announces the opening of a national signature campaign for this Appeal — which will go on from February 28 to March 27, 1955 — and asks all the citizens of the Republic to sign it in the interests of maintaining peace.'

The Central Committee of the National Front and the Central Trade Union Council join in this appeal.

In accordance with the decisions of the Czechoslovak Peace Committee, the national signature campaign will prepare the ground for the National Peace Congress which is to be held in Prague in April. It will also help in the preparation of the World Assembly for Peace.

• So that All Japanese Shall Sign

The Standing Committee of the Japanese Peace Committee met on February 12, heard a report from Mr. Kaoru Yasui, who took part in the meeting of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace, and decided to take the following measures:

1. To make the Vienna Appeal known and to explain to the people the pressing danger of atomic war.

2. To approach organisations and personalities to get their support for the Vienna Appeal.

3. To collect for the appeal against the preparation for atomic war the signatures of those who have not yet signed the national petition against atomic and hydrogen bombs, so that there will not be a single Japanese who has not given his signature.

4. To hold meetings of all active peace workers at the beginning of March, that is, after the general election on February 27, in order to strengthen the movement against atomic war and for the World Assembly.

• Why Spaniards Should Take Part in the Campaign

In a resolution, the Spanish Peace Commission has approved the Vienna Appeal and called for support for the signature campaign against the preparations for atomic war. The resolution contains interesting details on the reasons why Spaniards should take part in this campaign.

'The Spanish people are directly interested in the success of this important campaign, for the danger of an atomic war is a very real threat to Spain.

'The use of our country as a base for atomic aggression has been put on the agenda . . .'

The bases which have been constructed in Spain 'are destined for the launching of atomic projectiles against other countries; this would inevitably result in terrible reprisals . . .

'Every signature to the World Council's Appeal against atomic war is an act which has positive results, for it is but one of millions and millions of signatures, which together form an irresistible force . . .

'Moreover, for Spaniards, every signature is a demonstration against the pact (the Washington-Madrid bilateral pact Ed.) which permits the organisation of atomic war on our territory.'

The Spanish Peace Commission had signature forms printed and the collection of signatures was immediately begun.

Denmark

Statement on N.A.T.O. Decision

The Executive Committee of the Danish National Peace Association handed to the press and to M.P.s a statement on the N.A.T.O. Council decision. The statement points out that the decision, which was taken with Denmark's agreement, has evil consequences for the peoples of Europe — consequences which have been hidden from the people of Denmark.

It also notes that the N.A.T.O. decision is opposed to the efforts to bring about a reduction of armaments and for international control. It concludes by calling on the people and politicians to study attentively the grave danger of a new Wehrmacht with atomic weapons at its disposal.

Great meetings are to be held in Copenhagen at the time of the debate in Parliament on the Paris Agreements.

American Mothers do not Want their Sons to Die on Foreign Soil

Foreign intervention in the territorial waters of the People's Republic of China and in the Chinese island of Taiwan, has met with a strong reaction from the people of the United States.

Republican Congressman Eugene Siler of Kentucky, who voted against the Government's proposal for intervention in China's internal affairs, said he did so because he had promised the mothers of his district he would not 'vote to engage their boys in war on foreign soil'.

In Washington, fifty pickets representing the Catholic Workers, the Peacemakers, the War Resisters' League and the Philadelphia section of the Fellowship of Reconciliation, marched in front of the White House carrying placards saying 'Stop the drift toward war'.

According to the San Francisco People's World of February 2, the workers of the General Motors, Chrysler and other automobile factories in the United States have voiced their opposition to American intervention in Taiwan and other Chinese islands.

In response to a call of the Los Angeles Labour Youth League, American workers and their trade unions are writing to President Eisenhower demanding 'No more Koreas!'

In Chicago, house meetings have been held from which hundreds of telegrams were sent to Congressmen and to the Executive Committee meeting of an important trade union local.

In Los Angeles, the Southern California Peace Crusade called on all organisations and individuals to attend an Emergency Action Conference on January 29.

In Kalispell, Montana, a number of peace workers' letters to Senators Mansfeld and Murray received a telegram reply: 'Appreciate having your views regarding Eisenhower Formosa proposal.'

In New York, thousands of people were urged through chain telephone calls to send letters to the President and to Congressmen. There were also deputations to Congressmen and postcards were sent to the President and to the Senators. A leaflet, calling on the people to take action in view of the danger created by intervention in China's territorial waters, was widely distributed.

Similar actions have taken place in Palo Alto, California and in Philadelphia, Detroit and New Jersey.

The American Peace Crusade issued a statement calling for:

1. Deputations and individual visits to Congressmen.

2. The continued sending of postcards and letters.

3. The distribution of the Crusade's leaflets.

4. The sending of letters to the local papers.

5. The placing of advertisements in the local papers.

GREAT BRITAIN: People Oppose Decision to make H Bomb

On February 18, the British Government announced its intention to manufacture hydrogen bombs — only two days after it had published a White Paper outlining its proposals for the peaceful use of atomic energy in Britain.

The immediate reaction of the British people to the news was one of horror and determination to stop the manufacture of these bombs. Many public figures at once announced their opposition to the Government's decision and demanded the banning of all atomic weapons.

For example the Rev. Dr. Donald Soper, president of the Methodist Conference for 1954: 'I am more than disturbed that our country is contemplating manufacture of the H bomb. All peace-loving nations should seize the first proposal for banning nuclear weapons.'

The Lord Mayor of Coventry, Aldermann J. Fennell, stated: 'I stand for the abolition of these weapons by international agreement.'

The Ayrshire County Council in Scotland has protested against the decision to manufacture H bombs. More than 100 Labour Members of Parliament have tabled a motion in the House of Commons calling for Four Power talks on the H bomb and on German rearmament, and are pressing for a debate. This is a direct reflection of the activity which has been organised throughout the country on the initiative of the peace movement.

The campaign against atomic weapons and the decisions of N.A.T.O. is being closely linked with the campaign against German rearmament. Following up the magnificent demonstration on January 25 when thousands of people from all over Britain lobbied their M.P.s on the question of German rearmament, an all-London conference was organised by the London Peace Federation on February 20 to discuss German rearmament and the peaceful alternative, the banning of weapons of mass destruction and preparations for the World Assembly for Peace.

Direct pressure has been put on Labour M.P.s to stand out against the rearming of Germany, by letters, telegrams, deputations and petitions. In three Sheffield factories 175 people signed a petition, in Leeds 400, in Exeter 800, in West Hartlepool 1,600 and in Glasgow 1,370. In West Ham, 400 people signed a giant postcard which was taken to Churchill by their Labour M.P., Mr. Arthur Lewis, and a similar postcard is being signed in Hampstead, London.

The Midlands Regional Committee of the Labour Party (one of the biggest area Labour Party organisations in the country) has called on all its branches to oppose German rearmament, and the Midlands district committee of the National Union of Furniture Trade Operatives has asked its branches to send resolutions on the question to the Labour Party, the Trade Union Congress and the executive committee of the trade union.

The Sheffield district committee of the Amalgamated Engineering Union has called for support for the M.P.s who oppose the rearming of Germany, and the Edinburgh district committee of the Union of Post Office Workers has condemned the support of its executive committee for German rearmament, and demanded a plebiscite of the union's members on the subject.

At the end of January the British Peace Committee called for local and regional conferences to be organised in all parts of the country. An all-Scotland conference against German rearmament has been called by the Scottish District of the Fire Brigades Union and the Union for Democratic Control, and similar conferences are being held by two trades councils and two trade union branches in Scotland. A highly successful 'No Arms for Germany' conference was held in Edmonton, North London, called by the Brimsdown Power Station shop stewards' committee and attended by Labour Party councillors and delegates from trade unions and other organisations. The deputy mayor of Edmonton was in the chair and the conference was addressed by a Labour M.P.

February 9 was observed as 'Telegram and Telephone Day'. On that day, hundreds of telegrams poured in to Members of Parliament and the telephone lines to the House of Commons were so jammed with callers wanting to speak to their M.P.s to demand that they oppose German rearmament that for the whole day normal telephone communication with the House became impossible.

At the same time as the British people are conducting the joint fight against atomic war and German rearmament, they are also actively opposing any attempts to start a war in the Far East. Many trade union branches and other organisations have passed resolutions demanding that Britain should not be dragged into war over Formosa, and the General Secretary of the National Association of Stevedores and Dockers has announced that 'in the event of hostilities involving China breaking out, his members would not load ships going to that area.'

GREAT BRITAIN:

The preparations for the World Assembly for P basis in Britain. An invitation to take part has country in a letter which says:

'A meeting of this character, we belive, is ver of all... Preparations for atomic war are being Wehrmacht in West Germany. The policy of di situations which could become detonators of a w world scale, by a powerful movement of the peopl governments back to the conference table, and e other's welfare and security.'

The arrangements for the Assembly, including been announced, and various materials have bee including a leaflet giving details both of the Asse on Germany and the threat of atomic war, wh notebooks in which messages to the Assembly ma collecting tins, and attractively produced books towards the costs of the local campaign.

UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA

The Secretariat of the South African Peace Council has issued a call to peace committees to hold hundreds of small meetings and to get branches of trade unions and political organisations to have discussions on the World Assembly to be held in Helsinki on May 22.

The Council has also approached various prominent persons and important organisations such as the African National Congress, the Labour and Liberal parties and the National Council of Women.

The Spanish Delegation's Mandate

The last number of the Bulletin contained an article on the Spanish Peace Commission's plan of work in preparation for the World Assembly.

We give in this issue an extract from an appeal in which the Commission explains how and in what spirit the Spanish delegation to the World Assembly will be mandated. The Appeal is addressed to the men and women of Spain and to those who are living in exile. The Commission first analyses the international situation and shows the danger of a conflict for Spain. If then goes on:

'The contribution to be made by the Spanish delegation at the World Assembly in Helsinki, where they will explain our country's situation and the way to solve it, must correspond to the national character of the problem. The Spanish representatives will be the delegates of the forces for peace in Spain, both those in the Peace Movement and those who share its aims without being members of it. The important thing is that they should make our people's voice heard — our people who are suffering from the consequences of the war preparations and want to save themselves from destruction.

'If these representatives are to express the real desires of the men and women of Spain, their mandate must obviously come from the heart of the Spanish nation. The call for the World Assembly must reach every man and woman in Spain, on every morsel of land, at every factory bench, at every office desk, at every laboratory table and in every university lecture room.

'The united voice of the Spanish people must be heard at family meetings, at small gatherings in blocks of flats and at street and locality meetings in the towns and villages, as circumstances permit. Thus will the voice of Spain, through the medium of the resolutions adopted at these meetings, find powerful expression at the World Assembly for Peace.'

'The Peace Movement has extended its roots during these last two years. We have great hopes that forces which have not yet worked effectively with us will be present and that we shall there be able to find a common road to follow in the struggle for peace.

'In my opinion, the campaign against weapons of mass destruction is the best preparation for the World Assembly.'

Conference in Burma

The All Burma Peace Committee has called an extended conference of the Burmese Peace Movement for March 18, 19 and 20 in Rangoon. One of the points on the agenda is the preparation of the World Assembly for Peace.

It is estimated that there will be 500 delegates at the conference, including 40 from the All Burma Peace Committee, 60 from the District Peace Committees, 100 from the township Peace Committees, 200 from the village Peace Committees and 100 guests.

Three reports will be presented:

1) The objectives, principles and forms of organisation of the Peace Movement in Burma.

2) The development of the Peace Movement throughout the world and the work of the World Council of Peace.

3) The present situation in Asia and South-East Asia and the tasks of the Peace Movement in Burma.

These reports were printed at the beginning of February and distributed to all peace committees and mass organisations for discussion before the conference.

The All Burma Committee is also publishing a Peace Gazette in preparation for this National Conference.

The Japanese People Will Elect their Representatives on May 7—9

The Japanese Peace Committee has published the following appeal for the National Assembly for Peace which will be held on May 7—9:

'A World Assembly for Peace will be held on May 22—29 in Helsinki, called by the World Council of Peace.

'We hope that many delegates from Japan will participate in this Assembly where peace-loving people from all over the world will gather together.

'Today, world peace is in danger and the risk of an atomic war exists both in Europe and in Asia, as a result of the remilitarisation of West Germany, the decision of the N.A.T.O. Council to prepare for atomic war, the formation of S.E.A.T.O. and the military measures taken by the U.S.A. to "defend" Formosa. In such a situation, the World Assembly is of great importance . . .

'Men and women of Japan! Let us participate in the World Assembly, to ban the A and H bombs and to win the world for peaceful co-existence.

'Everywhere and in every organisation, meet together and discuss how we can defend peace and what problems we should discuss with the other peoples of the world. From these meetings aim to send representatives.

'A Japanese National Assembly for Peace will be held on May 7—9.'

TUNISIA

In order to lay the foundations for a big Tunisian delegation to the World Assembly for Peace, the Tunisian Peace Committee has organised a series of meetings in factories and localities throughout the country. These meetings elect delegates to a National Assembly which, in turn, will elect the delegates to the World Assembly.

Recently, the Committee held an information meeting on the World Assembly which was attended by more than 50 people. A number of newspapers have published the resolutions of the Stockholm session of the World Council and of the extended meeting of the Bureau in Vienna, particularly the Appeal against the preparations for atomic war. A plenary meeting of the Tunisian Peace Committee was called to launch the signature campaign officially.

'Never has the highest body of the universal movement for peace borne such a high responsibility as it does at the present time. This is the most critical moment for the fate of mankind. The rearming of the German Nazis and the N.A.T.O. decision to use atomic weapons from the beginning of a war — and these two facts constitute one single problem — represent the greatest threat that mankind has ever had to face. So today more than ever, the peoples of the world without exception are waiting for a lead from the highest body of the greatest crusade that history has ever known in order to stay the hand of these who want war. I am fully convinced that the Assembly will be the decisive step, made necessary by the decisive nature of the danger, which will bring into action the great and all-powerful force for peace that exists in the conscience of mankind, thus bringing to naught the most evil intentions that history has ever witnessed.'

International Day on March 10

In the countries of Europe March 10 was observed as 'a day of international action against the Paris Agreements and the revival of German militarism and of active solidarity with the workers of the whole of Germany and among the workers of all Europe'.

In its appeal to the workers of Europe, the World Federation of Trade Unions asked 'the men and women workers of Europe' to mark March 10 by meetings, petitions, mass demonstrations and 'to ensure the success of this International Day which will be an effective contribution to the strengthening of the World Peace Movement by ensuring the success of the campaign against those who are preparing atomic war, for collective security, disarmament and peace'.

Action Week in France

In France, the action week from February 14 to 20 gave a new stimulus to the French people's struggle against the Paris agreements.

Here we can only give a brief outline of the many and varied forms of action which were carried through in the course of this week.

Deputations

Hundreds of deputations went to the senators to express their constituents' desire for peace. A few examples:

In Warrennes, in the north of France, a deputation took 2,000 signatures to one of the senators. The workers of the Marchal factory in the Seine Department stopped work for an hour and sent a petition to the senators for the Department. Ninety-five per cent of the workers of the central repair depot of the Paris buses and underground trains showed, in a ballot, their determination that German militarism should not be revived.

Many senators have stated that they would refuse to ratify the Paris treaties, and the countless declarations of opposition by members of the electoral colleges of the Council of the Republic were determining factors in this decision. The following is an incomplete list of the departmental and local elected representatives who have stated their opposition to German rearmament to date: 221 county councillors, 2,745 mayors and 13,070 municipal councillors of all political parties. In certain departments, this movement of local elected representatives is very powerful; for example, in Dordogne, 154 mayors have stated their opposition to the Paris agreements. One can therefore understand why senators are responding favourably.

Demonstrations

There have been ceremonies in front of the war memorials and the plaques in commemoration of the victims of war and fascism. At Vitry, in the Seine Department, for example, 116 local personalities issued a call, as a result of which many people marched to the war memorial with the Ex-servicemen at their head. Big rallies and meetings were also held. In Paris, the students' peace committees organised a meeting and at a big rally in the Renault factory (37,000 workers) in Boulogne-Billancourt, m litant workers belonging to all the trade union centres gave a report-back of a trip to West Germany to meet German trade unionists.

Peace caravans were also organised. In the Gironde Department, for example, 33 cars bearing the names of local peace committees lined up and drove to the residences of the senators.

Atomic War

Meanwhile, the recent N.A.T.O. decisions to give the Atlantic army nuclear weapons and the alarmist campaign of certain newspaper are giving rise to a growing number of actions against the preparations for atomic war. During and since the action week, many meetings, conferences, and assemblies have been held for the banning and destruction of atomic weapons.

An example of initiative in the Bouches du Rhone Department should be mentioned. A series of 50 meetings is being organised at which the film 'Children of Hiroshima' will be shown, together with a talk on the preparations for atomic war.

Scientific workers and doctors have taken steps to bring research workers, scientists and members of the medical profession into action against atomic weapons and for the peaceful use of atomic energy.

New Opportunities

The many demonstrations during and after the action week enabled many contacts to be made and have thus created new opportunities. For example, in a number of factories in tne north and east of France, appeals demanding that an international worker's conference against German rearmament should be held, are being signed by workers belonging to all the trade union centres.

At the same time, the National Assembly of Organisations and Tendencies for Peace, to be held on April 2 and 3, is being actively prepared at a large number of meetings and through the mass sale of a card by the artist Jean Effel, specially published for this purpose.

Petitions to the Senate in Belgium

Belgian opposition to the rearming of Germany continues to show itself in the most varied forms. The miners of Boussoit sent a letter of support to the General Secretary of the German Federation of Trade Unions. It says:

'We are writing to you on behalf of miners' families in three districts of Boussoit, 85, 90 and 100 per cent of whom respectively signed our petitions. Now we know that our German comrades are at our side . . . we are sure that we shall win the day . . .'

The Young Socialist Guard of Forest near Brussels held a meeting at which they reaffirmed their 'absolute hostility to German rearmament in any shape or form'.

The 'Stop War' organisation, directed by Baron Allard, put out a leaflet addressed to scientists and industrialists.

The National Committee of the Belgian Union for the Defence of Peace, meeting in Brussels on February 13, 1955, asked all Belgians to demonstrate 'their solidarity with the German people in their bitter struggle' and 'to prevent the ratification of the Paris agreements by the Senate'.

The resolution states that the Belgian Union will join with all organisations and tendencies for peace in ensuring the success of the campaign against the preparations for atomic war.

In a message to the German people, the Belgian Union for the Defence of Peace states:

'The vote in favour of the Paris agreements in the Belgian Lower House does not reflect the will of the majority of the Belgian people . . .

'We cannot allow this vote to be exploited in order to weaken our resistance . . .'

The campaign of petitions to the senators goes on.

A conference was organised in Brussels with the participation of Mr. Edward Dixon, Labour member of Coventry City Council.

Our photo shows a poster of the Belgian Union for the Defence of Peace which says "Rearm them? Give them the H bomb? NO!"

The Luxemburg Peace Movement held its national conference on January 30. Resolutions against German rearmament were adopted.

Another resolution demands a policy of disarmament from the Luxemburg Government. 'As an immediate measure', says the resolution, 'the people of Luxemburg demand a considerable decrease in the length of military service . . . a reduction in the stocks of weapons and the use of the money thus liberated for social and cultural purposes.'

Sweden

A leaflet put out by the National Peace Committee against the rearmament of Western Germany bears the title 'Is this to happen again?' and a photo of Hitler in the company of his generals.

The leaflet shows that Sweden must give active support to proposals for Four Power negotiations to ensure European security.

Cameroons

In a resolution, the Cameroons Peace Committee stresses that 'if the Paris Agreements were put into operation, it would mean a new armaments race and a definite danger of another war . . . Africa and the Cameroons would not be spared . . .

'Therefore the people of the Cameroons ask the French Parliament not to finally ratify these agreements.'

Canada

The United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of Canada has expressed its solidarity with the German workers' struggle against the remilitarisation of Germany and has called on the Canadian Government to stop supporting rearmament and contribute instead to the peaceful reunification of Germany.

The German People against the Paris Agreements

In the course of the world campaign for a Five Power Peace Pact the Peace Movement in the German Federal Republic organised a referendum in which 9,000,000 Germans demanded the conclusion of a peace treaty and the withdrawal of the occupation troops. The wave of opposition to the Paris Agreements which is traversing Germany at the present time clearly shows that the German people's determination to prevent another war, an atomic war, has greatly increased since then.

Among the young people, in particular, the opposition to recruitment has grown and has found expression in the resolutions of the young trade unionists' congress which firmly rejected remilitarisation.

Similar decisions have been taken by many local and national trade union organisations in the various branches of industry, such as the Bavarian Trade Union Congress and the Third Congress of the Confederation of Trade Unions. When the German Social Democratic Party and the German Communist Party simultaneously decided to conduct a great public campaign against the ratification of the Paris Agreements and for the resumption of four power negotiations, it became clear that the whole German working class was taking its stand on the side of peace.

The demonstration in St. Paul's Church in Frankfurt-on-Main and the signing of the German Manifesto showed that this is not only a working class movement, for representatives of important sections of opinion in the church and intellectual, economic and public spheres took part.

Lastly, the debate on the ratification of the Paris Agreements in the Bundestag showed that, in spite of the vote in favour, the people's opposition is being reflected in the Government coalition and even in the Government itself.

It is impossible to enumerate here the demonstrations and rallies that have taken place and the statements that have been made. In almost every town and in many rural localities there have been big demonstrations attended by a large part of the population. It is particularly interesting to note that a wide range of activities were carried on simultaneously by the trade unions, working class parties, the Peace Movement, youth and women's organisations and public figures.

We shall merely mention a few of these many activities:

- A conference of 500 ministers of the Protestant Church in Hesse sent a letter of protest against the ratification of the Paris Agreements to the members of the Federal Parliament.
- The Bremen provincial parliament rejected the Paris Agreements.
- Erich Ollenhauer, the President of the Social Democratic Party, spoke against the Paris Agreements in Berlin and in various other cities. He addressed 20,000 people in the Westphalia Hall in Dortmund, the biggest hall in the Federal Republic.
- Thousands in many cities have taken part in the collection of signatures to the German Manifesto. In many cases between 70 and 80 per cent of the people have signed; in Hamburg-Nettelnburg the figure was 84.4 per cent.
- In Hanover, Mr. Albertz, Mr. Kubel, Mr. Voigt und Mr. Borowski, all ministers in the government of Lower Saxony, distributed leaflets opposing the Paris Agreements at factory gates.
- The Duisburg port Peace Committee held discussion meetings on board 73 ships and in 10 cafes in the port.
- Mr. Westphal, President of the Social Democratic youth association, the 'Falcons', stated that the struggle against the agreements will go on even though they have been ratified.
- In Herne, Westphalia, young Protestants and trade unionists, the Peace Committee, the Falcons and the War Resisters jointly organised a march with posters and banners to protest against the rearming of the Federal Republic.
- In the course of their propaganda tour in favour of the Paris Agreements, Chancellor Adenauer and Herr Blank were almost prevented from speaking at Frankfurt, Osnabruck and Friburg-in-Brisgau, so hostile were the crowds.
- The president of the Federal Youth Association, to which almost all youth organisations in the Federal Republic are affiliated, stated that the association was ready to have talks with a delegation from the Free German Youth in the German Democratic Republic.
- By February 15, 5,500,000 signatures against the Paris Agreements has been collcted in the German Democratic Republic and more than 760,000 letters hald been sent to the members of the West German parliament.
- In the course of the plenary session of the German Peace Council in Dresden on February 13, tenth anniversary of the destruction of the city by American bombers, the famous poet and fighter for peace, Bertolt Brecht, handed over 176,203 signatures of intellectuals approving a statement against the Paris Agreements, which he had issued in December 1954.
- A joint appeal against rearmament has been issued by 87 former high officers and generals of the German army.
- Professor Hans Iwand, the eminent Protestant theologian of Bonn University, spoke at a great demonstration against the Paris Agreements.

Netherlands

Here is the text of the Appeal to which 160,000 signatures against the Paris Agreements have already been collected in Holland:

'We condemn the Paris Agreements, for they offer no real guarantee against the revival of an aggressive German army.

'We consider that in the interests of European security these agreements must be rejected and East-West negotiations must be resumed for the peaceful settlement of the German question.'

Every day deputations go to the parliament at The Hague to ask the M.P.s not to ratify the agreements.

The 'Church and Peace' movement has sent a letter to the members of both houses of parliament asking them to reject the agreements, and the 'Third Way' movement has adopted and published an appeal demanding that Germany be disarmed and that a conference take place between the Four Great Powers.

On February 13 in Amsterdam, more than 10,000 people took part in a demonstration against the threat of atomic war and for the peaceful settlement of the German question (see photo). Thousands of people cheered the demonstrators.

All the speakers called for an active struggle against the N.A.T.O. Council decision on the preparations for atomic war.

In his closing speech, Mr. Luirink, member of the Bureau of the Dutch Peace Council, called on the participants to redouble their efforts in the collections of signatures against the London and Paris Agreements and to prepare for the World Assembly for Peace in Helsinki.

The demonstration of February 13 in Amsterdam

Rumania

Great actions against German rearmament are being carried through in Rumania.

In the capital, the towns and the countryside many institutions, factories, schools and cultural clubs are organising lectures and meetings with a total attendance of many thousands.

Women and young people are playing an active part in the campaign against the Paris Agreements. For example, hundreds of women workers and peasants attended an important meeting in the Galati and Bujour districts which were devastated in the Second World War.

At a meeting of intellectuals in Bucharest, a thorough discussion was followed by the adoption of a message to the artists and writers of the countries which have signed the agreements.

The Regional Peace Committee organised a meeting in the town of Tirgu-Mures in the course of which the conductor of the town's State Philharmonic Orchestra stated:

'We have a great love for the creations of the German people, the works of Beethoven and Bach, and it is for this reason that we protest at the revival of the Wehrmacht, which destroyed Germany's age-old culture.'

Ministers of religion of different denominations have protested at the new war threats in press statements and inter-church conferences.

Initiative Committee for National Peace Movement set up in Gold Coast

An initiative committee to set up a national peace movement has just been created in the Gold Coast (West Africa). It includes representatives of youth organisations of Takoradi and Essikadu, the students' association of Sekoudi-Takoradi, the Togo Youth Movement, trade unionists, ministers of religion and intellectuals. Mr. Christian, general secretary of the Gold Coast Oil Workers' trade unions, was elected chairman. In a first document, the Initiative Committee called on the people to protest against the threats of atomic war and to form a national Peace Front.

The committee sent more than 5,000 letters to public figures of all sections of the population. The Prime Minister, members of the government and more than 200 local leaders were invited to join the national peace movement which is now being formed.

Many favourable replies have already been received, from which we take the following extracts:

Mr. N. A. Welbeck, Minister of Works: 'I wish to thank you for the way in which you intend to help establish peace and, further, to urge you on to success . . . We are entitled to hope that this conception of bringing peace will spread to all parts of the country . . .'

Nana Kwamina Anaisie IV, Omanhene of Dutch Seondi: 'I am very much interested and support you wholeheartedly . . .'

Councillor E. A. Addo, Accra Municipal Council: 'I support the movement wholeheartedly . . .'

The Rev. W. E. Angmortey, principal, Volta College: 'I support this movement and shall be ready to serve whenever you require my services . . .'

Councillor E. A. Anteh, Accra municipal council: 'I shall not hesitate to enrol as a member of this movement, since it aims at world peace . . .'

Bishop Ezra Douglas Martinson, of the Anglican Church, Goald Coast: I quite agree with your object . . .'

Dr. Y. D. Agyeman-Dickson, principal of the Ashanti-Akim state college: 'This is an opportune time for the progressive elements of our country to join forces with millions of peace-loving peoples of other lands to bring pressure to bear on the major powers about the use of hydrogen bombs. This is the century of action. I therefore beg you and your brethren to work even faster than you had intended to . . .'

Soviet Union Prepares for Conference of Asian Countries

Large scale preparations for the Conference of Asian Countries for the Relaxation of International Tension are being carried out in the Soviet Union and many Asian countries.

The Soviet preparatory committee was set up in Moscow. It includes eminent Soviet public figures: Mr. Tikhonov, writer, who is chairman of the committee; Mr. Alexander Korneichuk, writer; Mr. D. Khodjaev, president of the trade union council of the republic of Uzbekistan; Mrs. N. Bazanova, professor in the Kazakhstan University; Mr. Tursun-Zade, writer, Tadjikistan; Mr. B. Jamgyrchinov, rector of the University of the Republic of Kirghizia; Mr. Veli Mukhatov, chairman of the Union of Composers of Turkmenistan; Mr. Nesterov, president of the Soviet Chamber of Commerce; Ishan Babakhan Ibn Abdul Medjidkhan, mufti, chairman of the Moslem Religious Administration for Central Asie and Kazakhstan; Mr. E. Zhukov, corresponding member of the Academy of Sciences of the Soviet Union; Mr. A. Sofronov, editor of the review Ogonyok.

Mr. Sofronov was designated as the Soviet Preparatory Committee's representative on the Secretariat for convening the Conference.

Letters from Soviet Citizens:

'We Are All for Peace'

Every morning the postman delivers a pile of letters to the Soviet Peace Committee — letters from people of all ages, all professions and all opinions, but all alike in their desire for peace. These letters come from Moscow and the Far East, from Baku and from Murmansk, from the steppes of Kazakhstan and the vineyards of Georgia.

Here are a few extracts:

Mr. Bessonov, an ex-serviceman and now an engineer, writes: 'It is now nine and a half years since the news of the unconditional capitulation of Germany came over the radio. On that day, we believed that we had seen the end of the horrors of war.

'I speak to the ordinary people of France, Great Britain, Belgium, Holland, Italy and America. Together we bore the burden of the Second World War; let us together prevent the creation of a new Wehrmacht.'

Letters to Mrs. Tidzuko Tomidzava.

Many letters come from mothers. Mrs. A. Rogovik of Kiev, who has a large family, writes:

'I want my children, like all other children in the world, to live in peace, to study and to grow up not for the horrors of war, but to live in peace and happiness.'

Many letters, too, pay tribute to the World Peace Movement.

'We Soviet people', says a letter from Mr. Ivanov of Vyshni Volochek, 'love our foreign brothers who are valiantly defending the great cause of peace.'

'Ordinary Soviet people', Mr. Perlia of Stalinabad points out in his letter, 'follow the activity of the World Council of Peace and give it their full approval.'

All these letters express the profound conviction that ordinary people can prevent war. 'The peoples are an enormous force', writes Mr. Ivanov of the Ukraine. 'There are hundreds of millions of us ordinary people in the world, and we all stand for peace.'

On December 27, 1954, the Moscow journal Literaturnaya Gazeta published a letter sent to the Soviet Peace Committee by a Japanese primary school teacher, Mrs. Tidzuko Tomidzava.

This letter, which reflects the thoughts and feelings of the whole Japanese people, met with a big response from the Soviet people.

From every part of the Soviet Union, letters flowed in addressed to Mrs. Tidzuko Tomidzava.

Two Soviet teachers, Alexander and Margarita Kuzovkin, of Kamensk-Uralski, in the district of Sverdlovsk, write:

'Dear colleague and friend, you are very far away, but you are at the same time very near to us. We approve your appeal to all honest people in the world and support your demand for the banning of the atomic and hydrogen bombs.

'We know that all Soviet people think the same. More than once already they have spoken up against war and against weapons of mass destruction. But the enemy must constantly be reminded of the strength and unity of the peace-loving peoples.

'We wish you every success in your struggle.'

Mrs. Nadezhda Akilova, a worker in the cotton factory of Orekhovo-Zuevo, writes:

'Tell the women of your country that we Soviet mothers stretch out a hand of friendship to Japanese mothers who are struggling for their children's happiness and the happiness of all progressive mankind.'

The following passage is from a letter from Mrs. O. Semeyonova of Rostov-on-Don:

'The peoples of the world will say a categorical "No" to war. The whole world will take part in the campaign for the banning of weapons of mass destruction.'

Finally, Mr. Sorokin of Ape, in Latvia, says:

'August 6, 1945, the date on which atomic energy was used for mass murder for the first time, will remain engraved in the memory of all ordinary people for ever. They will remember it so that this barbarous act may never be repeated . . .

'We are sure that the people will win, that they will not allow an atomic massacre. It is you, it is me, it is your people and my people and millions of people throughout the world, who will obtain this. We believe that the day will come when your pupils will meet mine. They will come together, all of them, in a very beautiful city, the city of Peace. They will remember with gratitude our courageous struggle for the happiness of mankind and for the triumph of peace.'

India: 'Quit Taiwan' Day

The Indian people gave an exceptional welcome to the appeal of the All India Congress for Peace and Asian Solidarity to make February 6, 1955 a national protest day against foreign intervention in the Chinese island of Taiwan. On this 'Quit Taiwan' Day, demonstrations and meetings were held throughout the country.

Madras

The Madras Peace Committee called an important meeting which was held in the Memorial Hall with Dr. V.K. Joh, an eminent Madras barrister, in the chair.

The speakers included Mr. T.M. Krishnaswamy Iyer, president of the Madras Advocates' Association; Dr. P. Varadarajulu Naidu, member of the Legislative Assembly and member of the Congress Party; and a number of others.

The following extracts are taken from the resolution adopted at the meeting:

'This meeting of the citizens of Madras views with grave concern the recent developments in the Far East, particularly the situation that has developed in regard to Taiwan and other related positions . . .

'In order to ease the situation in the Far East, eliminate the threat of war against China and safeguard peace in Asia and the world, this meeting demands that the U.S. Government must immediately withdraw all its armed forces from Taiwan, the Penghu islands and Taiwan Straits, leaving the People's Republic of China free to solve its own internal problems . . .'

Delhi

Similar demonstrations took place in Delhi, where Pandit Sunderlal demanded an end to foreign intervention on the territory of the People's Republic of China. A poster parade was then held in the streets of the capital. Demonstrations were also held in Agra; in Meerut, where a meeting unanimously demanded that the United States Government 'withdraw its armed forces from Taiwan, leaving the Chinese authorities to settle their own internal affairs'; in Bhopal, Ahmedabad, Gwalior, Banaraa, Rewari, etc. Everywhere, the Peace Movement was the organiser and inspirer of 'Quit Taiwan' Day.

As part of the activities being carried out in India in response to the appeal of the All India Congress, we may mention an important statement by the All India Trade Union Congress which says:

'The presence of foreign forces on Taiwan is a menace to the People's Republic of China and a threat to the peace of all South-East Asia.'

The statement calls on the Indian people to unite, on the basis of the Five Principles, to maintain security and peace in Asia and the world.

National Opposition to Proposed 'Via Cuba' Canal

An energetic campaign involving the whole nation is growing in opposition to the plan to construct the 'Via Cuba' Canal, which was decided on by a decree last year. According to this decree, the strip of land bordering on the canal would be, for ninety-nine years, the property of a company which would exercise full authority over it. A body of police would be set up to protect the canal and would be responsible only to the company, and the workers in the canal zone would be subjected to military rule.

The most authoritative voices have spoken out against this project, including Mr. Jorge Mañach, former senator and government minister, who has written a number of articles in the review Bohemia; Mr. José Pardo Llada, former M.P. and director of one of the most important radio publications in the country; the Federation of University Students; the Free Latin American Association; Dr. Andres Valdespino, a Catholic leader; the leaderships of the Port Workers' Union and the Sugar Workers' Union; and the Executive Committees of the People's Party and the Socialist Revolutionary Party. Public meetings held in Havana and Oriente universities, with eminent public figures present, condemned the project.

The National Peace Committee is playing an active part in this national opposition. We take the following passage from one of the statements it has issued and which was widely distributed in the form of a leaflet:

'The carrying through of the "Via Cuba" canal project would create in our country a situation similar to that from which the people of Panama are suffering. A "canal zone" would be created and would be a source of discrimination, of attacks on our national sovereignty and of corruption . . .

'At bottom, the "Via Cuba" canal is to be built for strategic ends. The decree which decided its construction admits as much in two places . . .

'With the construction of the canal, our country would automatically be dragged into any armed conflict decided upon by the state to which the company belonged.'

Syrian Public Figures Oppose Nuclear Weapons and Military Pacts

A number of Syrian political figures have just made some interesting statements from which we take the following extracts:

Mr. Ali Buzu, M.P., former Government minister and one of the leaders of the People's Party, of which the President of the Republic is a member, stated:

'Syria has no interest in war, the more so as any future war would be an atomic war . . .' Mr. Buzu added that the Syrian Government should do its utmost to prevent war and the use of weapons of mass destruction. He criticised military alliances as being serious blows at the sovereignty and security of nations and stressed that the Syrian people would oppose any military pact.

Mr. Salah Bitar, M.P., one of the leaders of the Arab Socialist Party, emphasised the danger of military pacts:

'We must ask our Government to denounce the Turkey-Iraq alliance and to oppose any other military pact.'

Referring to the N.A.T.O. decision, Mr. Abdel Karim Zhur, M.P., one of the leaders of the Arab Socialist Renaissance Party, stressed:

'We are opposed to the use of conventional weapons, and are therefore even more opposed to weapons of mass destruction. We are against any act which endangers civilisation and the security of the peoples. Industry and science must help mankind to build a happy life.'

Mr. Hussein Moreiwed and Mr. Abdelatif Yunes, both independent M.P.s, made similar statements.

Uruguay: Expand Foreign Trade says public opinion

There is a growing tendency in a number of sectors of the Uruguayan economy in favour of opening up trade with countries with which Uruguay has hitherto had no normal trading relations.

An important meeting was held recently in the Stella de Italia Theatre on the initiative of the Woolworkers' Federation. The Executive Committee of the Federal League for Rural Action, industrialists and bankers, organisations from Montevideo and from the interior of the country, the leather workers' union and the trade union branch of the S.U.M.M.A. concern, were represented at the meeting. The President of the Chamber of Commerce sent a message of support to the organisers.

In a press statement, Mr. Petit de la Villeon, representative of the Materprin import business, stated: 'Quite obviously, it is not only an advantage for Uruguay to trade with the Soviet Union and the countries of Eastern Europe; it is also, today, an imperative necessity . . .' This being so, he added, Uruguay should have a diplomatic representative in Moscow.

Then Dr. Olaso, president and director of the national refrigerating company, stated that he supports trade without discrimination and that the organisation of which he is president is prepared to sell meat to any country.

The 1955 Anniversaries

Andersen in Japan

The cultural anniversaries proposed by the World Council of Peace will be commemorated at great demonstrations in Japan. The events in memory of Hans Christian Andersen which are to take place in the near future will be particularly important. On the initiative of Mr. Tokutaro Kitamura, former Minister of Finance, a committee has been set up. It is composed of university professors, writers, teachers and representatives of the Peace Movement and various libraries and other organisations. This committee has already received many important declarations of support and is preparing for an Andersen festival and a number of other events.

The Six Anniversaries in China

In the People's Republic of China, the commemoration of the anniversaries will be on a grand scale. From May to July there will be events in honour of Montesquieu, Andersen, Mickiewicz and Schiller. Then, drom July to October, the anniversaries of the first publication of Don Quixote and Leaves of Grass by Walt Whitman will be celebrated. In November comes the celebration of the fifteen hundredth anniversary of the famous frescoes of the Ajanta caves in India. French, Danish, Polish, German, Spanish, Indian and American intellectuals will be invited to these ceremonies. Moreover, the review I Wen (World Literature) publishes in its February number a selection from the Persian Letters of Montesquieu, together with studies on the famous French sociologist.

Brazil

The Brazilian Peace Council has decided to approach the Brazilian Writers' Association to draw up a joint programme for the celebration of the anniversaries recommended by the World Council. It has further decided to commemorate the hundredth anniversary of the Brazilian writer, Artur Azevedo.

Soviet Union

In the Soviet Union, the Leningrad Artistic Film Studio is preparing a film on Don Quixote and another studio is working on cartoons based on tales by Andersen: The Queen of the Snows, The Emperor's New Coat, The Wild Swans, etc. A number of Republic, regional and district peace committees in the Soviet Union have drawn up plans for the celebration of the anniversaries. These include a series of conferences, exhibitions and the publication of books and pamphlets.

Schiller in Hungary

In Hungary, there will be two events in honour of Schiller. The first of these will be organised by the Academy of Sciences and the Eotvos Lorand University, and the second by the Peace Council and the Writers' Association. The latter will include the reading of extracts from Schiller's works, some of them translated into Hungarian for the first time. There will also be a performance of musical compositions of Schiller's time, and a German cultural figure will be invited to take part.

The National Theatre will present Intrique and Love, then Don Carlos by the great German playwright. The second of these plays will be presented at the Opera. The People's Army Theatre is planning to put Wilhelm Tell on its repertoire. In those parts of the country where the people speak German, the plays will be given in the original language. Lastly, there will be a two-volume edition of a selection of Schiller's prose, poetry and plays.

Albania

In Albania, the anniversary of Aristophanes in 1954 was commemorated by the translation and publication of plays by the great Greek dramatist, Lysistrata in particular. Memorial meetings were held in a vumber of towns. At Tirana, the writer Mr. Kole Jakova, gave a lecture on the life and work of Aristophanes to a big audience.

Mickiewicz Year in Poland

The hundredth anniversary of the great Polish poet Adam Mickiewicz will be celebrated on a great scale in his own country. The programme of activity was drawn up by the Mickiewicz Year Celebrations Committee at a meeting in Warsaw on February 21; the committee is composed of eminent students of Mickiewicz and his period, scientists, writers, artists and others. It stressed the need to intensify research on his works and to make the poet and his time as widely known as possible. The research work that will be done this year will deal with the work of Mickiewicz and romantic art and ideas in general. The results will be made public at a special session of the Polish Academy of Sciences which will be attended by scientists from all over Europe. The congresses of Polish students of language and literature and the annual congresses of scientific associations will be devoted to Mickiewicz and the main problems of his time.

This centenary year will see the publication of 250 works by Polish and foreign writers of the romatic period. An important special centenary edition of Mickiewicz will appear in the autumn.

Polish theatres will put on many plays by Polish and foreign dramatists of the romantic period, particularly Slowacki, Schiller and Hugo. The Polish National Theatre in Warsaw will put on The Forefathers (Dziade) by Mickiewicz.

Exhibitions, memorial meetings and assemblies, artistic events and lectures will be held throughout the country.

November 26, the day of the poet's death, will be the culminating point of Mickiewicz Year. On that day, in addition to the premiere of The Forefathers and the plenary session of the Polish Writer's Union, the Mickiewicz monument, which was destroyed during the war and has been rebuilt on its old site, will be inaugurated in the Market Square in Krakow. On the same day, the first stone of a new monument to the great poet will be laid in Freedom Square in Poznan. The plan of this monument will be chosen from the entries in a great competition which will open shortly. A Mickiewicz Museum, which is now being founded in Warsaw, will in the future be the main centre for research on the poet.

The Mickiewicz Year Celebrations Committee, whose chairman is Mr. Alexander Zawadski, President of the Council of State, has designated a Standing Committee to carry through the execution of this programme. Its members are: Mr. Wlodimierz Sokorski, Minister for Culture and Art (Chairman); Professor Stefan Zolkiewski; Professor Kazimierz Wika; Mr. Mieczyslaw Jastrun, President of the Committee for Education; Mrs. Zifia Dembinska, Vice-Minister for Education and President of the Committee for Literature and Art; Mr. Jan Wilcek, Vice-Minister for Culture and Art, and others.

Exhibitions and Messages of Friendship

In Jakarta, the Chinese Arts and Crafts Exhibition was attended by over 80,000 visitors in the course of its three week run. These included President Soekarno and Vice-President Mohammed Hata. The exhibition was then taken on a three week tour of the main towns of Indonesia.

A similar exhibition, including over 1,400 articles of porcelain, pottery, metalware, sculpture, lacquerware and embroidery, was warmly welcomed in India, where it was on show in Delhi, Calcutta, Madras and Bombay.

In Michigan, in the United States, an exhibition of the arts and crafts of the people of China and the other countries of South-East Asia, has been held.

In Amsterdam, the sculptor, Mr. J. Havermans and the musician, Mr. Haakon Stotijn inaugurated an exhibition entitled 'The Theatre in the Republic of Rumania'. Its beginnings and development are shown in a series of photos and engravings.

The great Italian painter, Renato Guttuso, has exhibited his paintings and engravings in Sofia, the capital of Bulgaria, with great success.

26th Congress of Soviet Surgeons

The 26th Congress of Soviet Surgeons, which was held in Moscow at the end of January, gave striking evidence of the conquests of modern medical science, particularly in the treatment of infections of the thorax.

The Congress was attended by 2,123 delegates and by nearly 500 foreign guests, including doctors and surgeons from 19 countries: Argentine, Belgium, China, France, the German Democratic Republic, Great Britain, Hungary, India, Italy and others.

The atmosphere was very cordial and relations were established to ensure the continued progress of science and international co-operation.

The Soviet surgeons and their guests together examined the major problems of modern surgery, made a synthesis of the experience gained, approved the new methods of operating for certain cases and outlined the methods to be followed for the continuous perfecting of surgery. For the first time a great deal of light was thrown on the problem of heart surgery.

Professor Dejardin of Belgium, General Secretary of the International Surgical Society, congratulated his Soviet colleagues on their remarkable achievements on behalf of the surgeons of 56 countries. Professor Valdoni of Italy described the reports made by the Soviet specialists as being 'very full and interesting'.

Soviet doctors are not limiting themselves to curative medecine, but are paying more and more attention to ways of preventing illness.

The work of the 26th Congress of Soviet Surgeons made a big contribution to the development of medical science and to the protection of health.

In his closing speech, Mr. N. Bakulev, President of the Soviet Academy of Medical Sciences, stated:

'Friendly co-operation is growing and there are more contacts between Soviet medical specialists and scientists from other countries. This is useful and rich in results. The foreign progressive scientists who are our guests and friends have spoken words of encouragement and friendship and have, together with us, spoken out for life and against death and the dark forces who want to hurl the peoples into the abyss of another war.'

The 42nd session of the Indian Science Congress was recently held in Baroda, Bombay State. It was attended by more than 4,000 delegates from all parts of India, by representatives of the scientists of China, Great Britain, the U.S.S.R., the United States, Japan, Switzerland and other countries and by delegates from international organisations.

Young People Prepare for Fifth Festival of Youth and Students

The preparations for the Fifth World Festival of Youth and students are eliciting great enthusiasm.

The Festival programme will be very rich and varied and will include fetes, theatrical performances, concerts, balls, a carnival, visits and excursions, not to speak of sports competitions, friendly meetings between delegations and between young people who follow the same profession. Moreover, the participants will be able to attend the Second Friendly International Sports Meeting which will be held in Warsaw at the same time. The Fifth Festival will be greater than any previous one and will be a contribution of the whole of the world's young people to the struggle for peace and friendship.

In every country, the young people are getting ready.

● In Great Britain, 45 youth organisations of many kinds — cultural, sports, student and trade union organisations and young people from the colonial countries — were represented at a meeting of the British Youth Festival Committee. The Reverend Kenyon Wright stated that perhaps there were young people who thought that the rearmament of West Germany was necessary, but he hoped they would come to Warsaw and see what young Germans, Poles and Czechs thought about it. There was no doubt that wherever young people met they understood each other.

● There were also 45 organisations represented at the meeting called by the Danish National Committee. These included the university section of the 'No More War' organisation; student, sports and folklore societies; such persons as the secretary of the Jutland Small Farmers' Association; and journalists and others. In Denmark, the preparations will take the form of cultural evenings, sports competitions and a national cultural programme based on the works of Andersen.

● The Latin American Youth Festival was held in Sao Paulo from February 6 to 13. The Sponsoring Committee was composed of eminent figures in the spheres of culture, science and politics from all over Latin America.

● In Canada, there will be a Youth Festival with a cultural and sports programme during the month of July.

● In Czechoslovakia, the great Prague Youth Festival will be held with the motto: 'Forward to the Fifth World Youth Festival!'

● The Egyptian Amateur Athletic Federation has decided to send a full team to the Second Friendly International Sports Meeting.

● Active preparations for the Fifth World Youth Festival are going on in the German Federal Republic, India, Japan and Italy.

Composer Claudio Santoro says:

'The World Assembly will give artists new opportunities'

The Brazilian composer and conductor Claudio Santoro has just completed a tour of Europe which took him to Czechoslovakia and Poland. He is the author of the 'Song of Love and Peace' which won him an International Peace Prize in 1953 and has won many national and international prizes. On his way through Vienna he was kind enough to give the following statement for the Bulletin:

'For this tour I included Brazilian music on my concert repertoire: Villa Lobos, Camargo, Garnieri and others, and brought with me a collection of Brazilian musical instruments, together with documents and material on popular Brazilian art. I believe that such exchanges are an excellent way of cultivating friendship and understanding between the peoples.

'That is one of the reasons why I attach the greatest importance to the World Assembly for Peace which the World Council of Peace is calling in Helsinki this year. I am sure that this Assembly will make a major contribution both to the struggle for peace and to the development of cultural exchanges.

'But exchanges can only grow freely if art and national culture are defended. As far as Latin America is concerned, this preoccupation was voiced at the Continental Cultural Congress held in Santiago de Chile and the Congress of Brazilian Intellectuals. On this point, I should like to mention the example of the musicians of Sao Paulo who have just founded an association for the defence of Brazilian music.

'From this point of view, too, many artists are interested in the World Assembly which will give them new opportunities for popularising and defending their national culture. They know that there can be no development in cultural activities and exchanges unless there is peace between the peoples.'

Questions and Answers

We give below a few explanations which can used in replies to objections made to the Vienna Appeal; this feature will be continued in future numbers of the Bulletin. It would be useful if all our friends, committees and organisations taking part in the collection of signatures would inform us of the arguments met with and the replies given to them.

The Appeal launched by the World Council opens with a very serious statement: 'Today, certain governments are preparing to let loose atomic war.'

1 What led the World Council of Peace to make this statement?

In formulating the first sentence of the Appeal to the peoples in this way, the Bureau was above all referring to the decisions of the N.A.T.O. Council at its last session in Paris on December 17 and 18, 1954.

These decisions, signed by the ministers of the member countries of N.A.T.O. — that is, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Great Britain, Greece, Holland, Ireland, Italy, Luxemburg, Norway, Portugal, and Turkey — approve the report presented by the N.A.T.O. Military Committee and decide to adopt atomic weapons and proceed with the strategical, tactical and logistic reorganisation of the N.A.T.O. army made necessary by the use of atomic weapons.

2 Is the N.A.T.O. decision really so serious as to demand immediate action by the peoples?

It is extremely serious, because the intention is to regularise atomic weapons and to make the people accept their use as inevitable, and because this decision is being immediately translated into concrete preparations for atomic war.

Once the N.A.T.O. army has been adapted to meet the needs created by the adoption of these weapons, any war would be an atomic war.

The full gravity of this decision is seen when we consider that

a) It was taken at a time when the international situation revealed signs, feeble perhaps, but unmistakable, of a relaxation of tension. The most important of these signs, which had given the peoples renewed hope, were: the Berlin Conference, the ending of the war in Indo-China, the unanimous agreement on a common basis for the discussion of the grave problems of disarmament, the banning of atomic weapons and the peaceful use of atomic energy.

b) It was taken at the same time as frantic efforts were being made to force on the peoples of Europe the rearming of West Germany whose army would be equipped with atomic weapons; and just as a dangerous situation was on the point of being created in the Formosa Straits in the Far East, through the intervention of foreign naval and air forces in the internal affairs of China.

The gravity of the N.A.T.O. decision has been confirmed by the events that have followed: the British Government's decision to proceed with the manufacture of thermonuclear weapons, and France's determination to take part in the atomic arms race, to mention only two.

3 But in denouncing the fact that certain governments are preparing to unleash an atomic war, is not in the World Council of Peace taking up a partisan position vis-a-vis these governments?

The World Council of Peace is not opposing these governments, but rather the decisions taken by responsible ministers of these governments at the N.A.T.O. Council meeting.

These decisions, as has just been shown, represent an extremely serious danger to the peace of the world, to the lives of millions of men and women and even to future generations. It is the World Council's duty to denounce them and to call on the peoples to take action to prevent them from being implemented.

It has this right and duty because its role is to act to defend peace, to support any act aimed at strengthening the cause of peace and openly to oppose and denounce any act which represents a war danger; and this independently of any considerations as to which government or official figure is responsible for these acts.

TWO NEW PAMPHLETS

Mankind Must Choose

by Dr. E. H. S. Burhop

With the title 'Mankind Must Choose', the eminent physicist, Dr. E.H.S. Burhop, has just written a pamphlet on 'What the atomic war plans mean to you'. Starting off with a telling exposure of the dangerous decisions of the N.A.T.O. Council last December, Dr. Burhop exposes the dishonesty of some of the main arguments put forward by those who defend the use of atomic weapons. He shows how close the powers have come to a possible basis of agreement for disarmament, and how the possibilites of agreement is wrecked by the N.A.T.O. decisions; he shows clearly what the peoples have to expect if these weapons are used in war, and he shows how they have it in their power to change these decisions and to ensure that atomic war is not allowed to start.

Dr. Burhop is a scientist of great knowledge and experience. In this pamphlet he has put that knowledge and experience at the service of ordinary people, writing in the simplest terms, placing important political and scientific truths at the disposal of every ordinary person.

The central idea of the pamphlet is contained in the following passage:

'With his growing mastery of the unimagined forces contained in the tiny world of the atom, man faces a choice: the development of unlimited, perhaps undreamed of resources for the health, happiness and security of every human being, or a race to mass destruction.'

The pamphlet will help many men to see this choice clearly and to enter into the struggle. It is issued by the Secretariat of the World Council of Peace and is now available.

An Immediate Threat to Europe

by Mrs. Isabelle Blume-Gregoire

Secretary of the World Council of Peace

'An Immediate Threat to Europe' is a pamphlet by Mrs. Isabelle Blume-Gregoire, Secretary of the World Council of Peace, which explains, in a lively style, the dangers that would result for Europe and the world from the ratification of the London and Paris Agreements.

Mrs. Blume analyses the agreements and shows that they set the seal on the division of Germany by recognising the Bonn Government as the only one competent to speak for the whole of Germany and that they divide Europe into two military blocs.

The Paris Agreements hide the truth and deceive the peoples.

They speak of sovereignty, but, as Mrs. Blume points out, this sovereignty does not exist, either for the German people or the other peoples of Europe. In fact, 'the armies and whole economy of these countries . . . are placed under a supranational organisation which is itself under American command'.

Like E.D.C., the Paris Agreements envisage the setting up of 12 German divisions and claim that this new Wehrmacht will be purely defensive. But, Mrs. Blume-Gregoire points out, 'even before they (the agreements) are ratified, the N.A.T.O. General Staff has decided to transform the European army, including the German army, into an army whose strategy will be based on atomic weapons'.

The agreements speak of the control over armaments exercised by the Council of the West European Union, but Mrs. Blume gives concrete examples showing that this control is an illusion. Already after the First World War, she says, every trick was used to rebuild a powerfully organised German army equipped with modern weapons.

Industry and high finance gave effective help in reviving German military might.

The Paris Agreements favour 'the armaments manufacturers to the detriment of light industry . . . Never have their rights been written so clearly into a treaty'.

And, Mrs. Blume adds, 'when the armaments manufacturers win the day, the possibilities of war are not far away, and it is time that the peoples rose up against them'.

Mrs. Blume concludes by calling on the peace-loving peoples to take action. 'Let them remember the appeal made by the World Council of Peace at Stockholm on November 23, 1954:

'It is not within the power of any government, of any Parliament, to settle the fate of a people against their will.

'The people will not let the irreparable happen.'

Preparing the World Assembly for Peace

SUPPLEMENT TO THE BULLETIN OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

No. 1 April 1, 1955

REPRESENTATIVES OF ALL ORGANISATIONS AND TENDENCIES FOR PEACE TO MEET IN HELSINKI, MAY 22–29

APPEAL FOR THE CALLING OF A WORLD ASSEMBLY FOR PEACE

In a world in which there are still great chances of Peace, new dangers appear which may destroy them all.

Only a powerful movement of the peoples can prevent the division of the world into opposing blocs, prevent the rebirth of the armies that have been the source of so much misery and mourning, and free mankind from the crushing cost of arms budgets. Only such a powerful movement can ensure the co-operation of all nations for their welfare, their independence and the security of all.

The World Council of Peace calls to all those whose activities make for Peace, to every man and woman who longs to live free from fear, mistrust, and hate for other peoples. It calls on them to get together before it is too late.

It resolves that a great World Assembly shall be held, including representatives of all the forces and tendencies that make for Peace, to meet in the second half of May 1955.

Stockholm, November 23, 1954

FOR A WORLD ASSEMBLY FOR PEACE

The open threat of an atomic war from now on hangs over every country, every home, every man, woman and child.

Instead of atomic energy being made to serve mankind, terrible weapons are being piled up. Instead of disarmament, fresh military blocs are being put together. Instead of negotiation and agreement, there are threats and hate-propaganda.

But threats and force are the road to war, not to peace.

The rearmament of Germany, the Taiwan (Formosa) situation, interference with the independence of peoples, are multiplying discord and anxiety. If mankind should go further along this path, there will be no safety anywhere.

Mankind will not allow this to go on. Its conscience is revolted by the idea of atomic slaughter.

The abolition of nuclear weapons, general disarmament, the security of all, respect for the sovereignty and rights of every nation, these must be pursued by the peoples with the energy needed where life itself is at stake.

It is in this spirit and with these aims that the World Council of Peace invites supporters of peace from every country to come together in Helsinki on May 22, 1955 in a World Assembly, there to discuss freely questions of the action urgent to preserve peace.

Vienna, March 13, 1955

How the World Assembl

Millions of Men and Women will be Represented at Helsinki

In every country, the preparations for the World Assembly are giving rise to various activities with the aim of associating the greatest possible number of men and women with the Assembly.

In particular, many National Assemblies are taking place. They are called by the National Peace Committees, with the participation of well-known people and representatives of organisations and groupings which do not belong to the Peace Movement. They follow similar assemblies on a regional and provincial level, themselves preceded by local assemblies.

Another form of action consists in sending the World Council's proposals directly to all organisations and personalities working for peace, who are kept regularly informed of all points relating to the preparation and aims of the World Assembly. They are invited to take part in it or to send representatives. This method is being used in countries like Australia, Sweden, Canada and Great Britain, where 30,000 national and local organisations have been invited to join in the preparations for the World Assembly.

There is also the method of joint organisation by the Peace Movement and other groupings of the preparatory work for the Helsinki Assembly. To do this, preparatory committees are set up, as in Costa Rica and the Union of South Africa.

In every country, the preparations for the Assembly are being carried out in close relation to the development of the campaign against atomic war and all the national actions which bring in the most organisations and tendencies for peace.

All these preparatory activities give rise to exchanges of views and further contacts. They have the aim of ensuring that all organisations and tendencies for peace are really represented at Helsinki.

Proposals for the Agenda

On the basis of the suggestions that had come from various countries and the exchanges of views that had been held, the Bureau of the World Council of Peace proposed the following agenda for the World Assembly:

1) Atomic weapons and disarmament.
2) Military blocs. General security. Co-operation between the nations.
3) The independence of the nations and the maintenance of peace.

It is, of course, the World Assembly itself which will establish the final agenda.

61 COUNTRIES HAVE ALREADY ANNOUNCED THIER PARTICIPATION

Certain of these countries have already decided on the number of delegates they will send: Iceland and Jordan will send 11 delegates each, Lebanon 20, Syria 25, Belgium 30, Poland 35, Canada 50, Japan 60, Great Britain, India and Sweden 100 each. Five countries of Latin America will send a total of more than 110 delegates, France announces 150 and Finland 200.

In addition to the delegates from the different countries there will be representatives of organisations and personalities who will come to Helsinki as guests or observers. We may therefore anticipate a total of more than 2,000 participants in the World Assembly for Peace.

What the Peoples Are Doing to Finance the World Assembly

All the expenses of the World Assembly must be met by the participants. Each delegation will have to pay its own travelling expenses, its board and lodging and a contribution to the general expenses based on the size of the delegation.

At the present time, therefore, a great effort is being made to collect money in every country. This is being done in different ways: subscription lists are being put out in connection with the current campaign against the preparations for atomic war; collections are being taken at preparatory meetings in the workplaces and localities; publications, badges and so on are being sold at regional and provincial demonstrations and assemblies; fêtes and bazars are being organised to raise money; supporters' cards are being sold, etc.

This last method is being used in countries like Belgium where coupons representing different distances have been put out, so that every subscriber, in proportion to his means, pays for part of a delegate's journey.

In France, a folding card is being sold containing the World Council's Appeal against the preparations for atomic war and the aims of the Peace Movement. By buying it people give their support to the World Assembly.

In every case the result is that millions of people give both financial support and their approval to the Helsinki Assembly.

PUBLIC FIGURES STATE...

'The Bureau meeting of the World Council of Peace held in January in Vienna decided to launch a world signature campaign against the preparation of atomic war. This campaign is now developing in many countries of the world. The World Assembly in Helsinki will be held in the middle of this mobilisation of world public opinion against an atomic war.

'Men and women of Japan! We Japanese people, who were the first to rise up against the A and H bombs, should actively participate in the World Assembly to demand the prohibition of the manufacture and stockpiling of atomic weapons and experiments with them and to achieve the aim of peaceful co-existence.'

Extract from an appeal signed by Japanese public figures including the following:

Mr. Tetsu Katayama, former Prime Minister, member of the Right Wing Socialist Party;

Mr. Jiichiro Matsumoto, Senator, former Vice-president of the Senate, member of the Left Wing Socialist Party;

'I consider that the decision of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace to call a World Assembly for Peace in May is of great human and social interest.

'Never was it more indispensable than now that the conscience of the peoples should accuse those who want to let loose atomic war. Only the firm determination of the peoples will put an end to the war threat.

'In Chile at the present time, the righteous anger and protest of all patriots are aroused by the intention to carry out atomic tests on our territory in the Antarctic. Thousands and thousands of men and women clearly understand what this can mean for us. It is not only a threat to our independence and sovereignty; our very lives and happiness are in danger.

'I am sure that the Appeal of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace will meet with warm support in all circles, whatever their outlook or religious beliefs. Every day that passes sees the struggle for peace gaining more adherents.

'The Helsinki Assembly must reaffirm our faith that the peoples will defeat war.''

Mr. Salvador Allende,
Vice-President of the Chilean Senate

I consider that the London-Paris Agreements embody the suicidal policy of armed Peace, of rigid and dangerously poised hostile blocs . . . Such policies can only mean death and destruction . . .

'Why do not we, all lovers of Peace, resolve now that 1955 must be made the Year of Peace? Wherever we live, whatever our vocations, yes, and whatever be our political affiliations, let us raise our voices, let us agitate and organise persistently so that when the World Assembly of Peace meets next May a force of Peace will have been so developed that the inciters to wars will have been silenced, and reason, goodwill and friendship prevail among the peoples of the world.'

Mr. S. O. Davies
M. P. for Merthyr Tydfil

I welcome the Bureau's decision to call a great World Assembly of Representatives of All Organisations and Tendencies for Peace in Helsinki on May 22. This World Assembly will have to act as the conscience of the peoples. It should represent all humanist tendencies whatever their philosophical views or religious convictions. We in Germany shall do our utmost to extend the influence of the peace forces and win more and more men and women to join the World Council of Peace in its work. That is the lever of Archimedes that can topple the policy of strength and the plans for a blitzkrieg.

Mr. Otto Nuschke
Vice-Premier of the German Democratic Republic

'The World Assembly of Representatives of the Forces of Peace in 1955, the aim of which is to make unity prevail over division and peace over war, is in conformity with the interests of Vietnamese Catholics and of the people of Viet Nam. I shall not fail to publicise this Assembly in Catholic circles in our country.'

Father Ho Thanh Bien
Catholic priest from South Viet Nam

'"To be or not to be?" That question is more than ever appropriate today when we are all of us threatened with destruction by atomic weapons. It seems that the political leaders can find no solution. There are, however, mighty forces amongst mankind that will prevent war, but until now they have not been able to join together to demonstrate their demands.

'It is for this reason that the World Assembly for Peace in Helsinki on May 22, 1955 will be an event of the greatest importance, since representatives from all the peoples of the world are invited to take part.

'The mighty voice of world public opinion must say to the statesmen: 'We want peace!', 'We demand negotiations!', 'We demand the banning of all atomic weapons now!'

'The will of God is that the world shall be a good home for the human family — that mankind shall live in peace, righteousness and brotherhood.

'I hope that the World Assembly for Peace in Helsinki will serve this aim, and that a vast number of representatives from churches and peace organisations will meet there.'

Rev. Ragnar Forbeck (Norway)
First Chaplain of Oslo Cathedral

'The importance of the proposed World Peace Congress in May next is very great for all those countries of Europe, Asia, Africa and the world which do not want to annihilate others or be annihilated in a world conflict in which weapons of mass destruction may be used . . .

'All nations that want to live and let live, that want to stop the exploitation of man by man or of nation by nation, must therefore meet and make up their minds not to play the imperialist game. They should further insist upon an absolute ban on all weapons of mass destruction. This is the programme that lies before the proposed May Congress and I do make a fervent appeal that nations that want to preserve their freedom and also the freedom of others should regard it as a sacred duty to join it.

HELSINKI GETS READY TO RECEIVE THE DELEGATES

The city of Helsinki, which was founded at the mouth of the Wanda in 1550 by King Gustav Vasa, for long remained a little town most of whose houses were made of wood as in almost all other Nordic towns. The great fire of 1808 resulted in the beginning of a vast amount of reconstruction which changed the face of the town. Our photo shows the market square in Helsinki.

The Exhibition Hall in Helsinki where the World Assembly will be held.

We Finnish people are happy that the World Assembly for Peace is being held in our country and we will joyfully receive the best representatives of the forces of peace of all countries. We hope that we shall acquit ourselves successfully of the honourable task of acting as host to this most important international meeting, in co-operation with all those who want peace in our country.

Our capital, Helsinki, with its 450,000 inhabitants, is assuredly not a huge city, but it is both modern and beautiful. It is called the white city of the North and this will not be the first time that it has acted as host to an international meeting. It was the scene of the Olympic Games in 1952 and many other international meetings have been held there.

Finland is a bridge between East and West; with both we have extensive economic and cultural relations. This co-operation between our people and all its neighbours is a tangible proof of the possibility of peaceful co-existence between countries with different political and social systems. From this point of view also Finland is peculiarly suited to receive a World Assembly in a spirit of peace, understanding and co-operation between the peoples of the world.

We are happy that at the end of May, the time when the Spring comes to Helsinki with its first light nights, chasing the frost and darkness, we shall also be welcoming the messengers of the forces of peace in all countries — forces that bring springtime and light to the whole of mankind.

Vice-President of the World Federation of United Nations Associations

Preparing the World Assembly for Peace

SUPPLEMENT TO THE BULLETIN OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

No. 2 April 15, 1955

FRANCE

National Assembly for Peace

The National Assembly for Peace, organised by the National Council of the French Peace Movement, was an important event in French preparations for the World Assembly for Peace.

The unity achieved at the Assembly provided indisputable proof that the consolidation of the forces of peace, already very wide in France, will progress yet further in the struggle for peace.

The very nature of the discussion showed this. Dozens of speeches were made in the plenary sessions or in the commissions by scientists, professors, writers, artists, workers, elected representatives of all opinions, leaders of all kinds of political organisations, religious figures and mothers. This diversity was equally reflected in the composition of each delegation and the composition of the platform.

Professor Leon Wagner, of the Sorbonne, who gave the opening report, stated:

'For us the word 'Peace' does not mean that precarious political stability which someone imposes on his partners through solutions of strength...' He went on to point out:

'The forces of peace which exist among all the peoples have become aware of their strength. Today they are on their way to breaking down all the obstacles which divide them and thus thwart their potentialities.

'By coming together here today we are expressing in France and for France that understanding between the forces of peace which will be expressed on an international level at Helsinki. The forces of peace may have different views on a whole number of subjects, and they will, correctly, reserve the right to hold their opinions. But on the aim which we have just defined, on the necessity to use all means for reaching it, on the urgent need to overcome all the obstacles which

Secretary of Finnish Social Democratic Youth a delegate to World Assembly

The United Organisation of Work for Peace has decided to take part in the World Assembly in Helsinki. It will be represented by its Secretary, Mr. Pentti Sulonen, who is also Secretary of the National Centre of the Social Democratic Youth.

Furthermore, the United Organisation of Work for Peace has recommended its member organisations to send delegates to the Assembly as well. Among these organisations are: the Social Democratic Party, the Finnish T.U.C., the National Centre of the Co-operative Movement and the Social-Democratic Women's Organisation.

One card equals 140 yards of the 6,000 mile journey from Tokyo to Helsinki

It is 6,000 miles from Tokyo to Helsinki... and the travelling expenses of the Japanese delegation will be heavy.

To raise the necessary money, two cards have been published and put on sale.

One of them bears a picture of a dove and the other a reproduction of 'Fujiyama', a painting by the famous Japanese artist Hokusai (1760—1849).

They are sold under the slogan 'one card to every 140 yards', since the price of each card represents the fare for 140 yards of the 6,000 mile journey. Thus the sale of 80,000 cards will cover the fare for one delegate.

MEXICO

National Assembly for Peace and Security

General view of the delegates at the Mexican Assembly for Peace and Security.

The National Assembly for Peace and Security which was recently held in Mexico demonstrated the Mexican people's interest in the World Assembly for Peace.

More than 600 people took part in the Assembly which was held on March 29, 30 and 31 at the call of 121 individuals and 31 organisations.

Among those who took part in the Mexican Assembly were:

General Heriberto Jara Corona, former government minister; Mr. Vicente Lombardo Toledano, president of the Confederation of Latin American workers; the famous film star Rosaura Revueltas; Mr. Manuel Ruiz, representing the con-are put in our way, they are unanimous in their determination . . .'

After a thorough examination of current problems in the struggle for peace in France and an analysis of the Vienna Appeal, Professor Wagner concluded by stating the three aims of the action to be carried on: negotiation, security and disarmament.

The Closing Statement

After Professor Wagner's report, a very full discussion was held which concluded with the adoption of several documents including the following appeal to take part in the World Assembly:

'The revival of German militarism means that France is in danger of losing her security and her position as a great power.

'France is also in danger of becoming a target for atomic weapons.

'Men and women of France, you must unite and demand now that the French Government keeps its promise to negotiate.

'Negotiate for the peaceful solution of the German problem before the Wehrmacht is revived. Negotiate in Asia so that the peace in Indo-China shall not be a mere truce and so that France can establish bonds of friendship and co-operation with the people of Viet-Nam. Negotiate for a close and fraternal association with the peoples of the French overseas possessions before new war centres spring up.

'Negotiate for the destruction of all atomic bombs and for disarmament, before the armaments race results in the catastrophe of a third world war . . .

'The National Assembly for Peace, meeting at Drancy on April 2—3, makes a solemn appeal to French public opinion to take part in the World Assembly for Peace which will open in Helsinki on May 22, by sending a delegation fully representative of all political and social circles.

'Men and women of France, you are united in your solidarity. Only your united action can regain the independence of France.

'Men and women of France, you are united in your solidarity with all the peoples of the world: with them, since you are all faced with a common danger, you will seek the salvation of all in peace and negotiation.'

Among the many notable individuals present at the French National Assembly were: the writer Vercors, who chaired the opening session; Mr. Jean Marie Domenach, director of the review 'Esprit'; Mr. Jacques Chatagner, active Christian, and director of the newspaper 'La Quinzaine'; Mr. Deville, Vice-President of the Meurthe-et-Moselle Radical Federation; Mr. Martial Bellugue, socialist county councillor; Mr. Sutty, former county councillor, and several other well-known socialists. Mr. Dupleix, sercretary of the French Committee of the European Workers' Conference, took part, as did Roger Philipon, Gaullist Deputy Mayor of Perigueux; Mr. Roger Pigaut, the actor, who represented the 'Plays for Peace' committee; Jacques Nantet of the Young Republic; and the members of the Presiding Committee of the Peace Movement.

Professor Joliot-Curie made an important speech on the signature campaign and the problems of the use of atomic weapons, and the General Secretary of the World Council of Peace, Mr. Jean Laffitte, greeted the Assembly on behalf of the World Council.

Hundreds of Public Rallies

A wide variety of methods were used to choose delegates for the National Assembly. In particular, the French Peace Movement organised hundreds of public rallies at which delegates were chosen. These gatherings ranged from meetings of the tenants of a particular block of flats or street to meetings of the people of an entire neighbourhood or meetings at work-places. It was at such meetings that the people considered the questions to be discussed and took the necessary organisational steps.

A large number of these meetings are being held to popularise the World Assembly in Helsinki, stimulate the signature campaign and carry on the struggle against the London and Paris Agreements.

gregation of the Jesuit church at Oaxaca; Mr. Enrique Cabrera, Mr. Mario Salazar Mallen and Mr. Guillermo Montano, all three representing scientific circles; and the painter Miguel Covarrubias.

The World Council of Peace was represented by Mrs. Isabelle Blume, Secretary of the Council. Mr. Jose Giral, former Prime Minister of the Spanish Republic also took part in the Assembly, and a message of greetings and support was received from General Lazaro Cardenas, former President of the Mexican Republic.

The agenda included four points dealing with the particular problems of the Mexican people:

1. The threat to the national culture.
2. Foreign interference in the countries of Latin America.
3. The atomic danger.
4. Organisational problems of the Peace Movement.

General Jara's opening speech, the reports presented on each of the points on the agenda and the discussion brought out how necessary the maintenance and strengthening of world peace are to Mexico if its own interests are to be protected.

The resolution adopted after the discussion on the second point on the agenda states on this subject:

'With the intensification of warlike preparations there is an increasing threat of a world war which would involve Latin America . . .'

After noting the repercussions of these war preparations on the political, economic and social situation in Mexico in particular and the Latin American countries in general, the resolution concludes with a programme for the defence of the national independence and economy and the rights and culture of the peoples of Latin America.

The Voice of Young Catholics

Mr. Manuel Ruiz, representing the congregation of the Jesuit Church at Oaxaca made a powerful contribution to the discussion:

'The young Roman Catholics whom I represent offer you their co-operation and wish to be considered as defenders of peace who, in Mexico and throughout the world, work to stay the hand of those who are the enemies of all mankind. They condemn any government, without distinction, which would dare to use nuclear weapons and demand the destruction of stocks and the cessation of their manufacture in the interests of the peace and security of the peoples.

Posters

On the walls of every city in the world are posters announcing the holding of the World Assembly and inviting the people to send their representatives. On the left is a Japanese poster, printed in 50,000 copies, which says: 'Send delegates to the World Assembly for Peace! Sign the Vienna Appeal against atomic war!'

The poster on the right is to be seen in the towns and villages of Austria.

80 Japanese Personalities

At the present time local committees in a number of Japan's major towns, including Tokyo, Asahikawa and Muroram, are preparing to send delegates to the World Assembly. A National Committee of more than 80 personalities was set up on April 1st.

The Miner's Union (membership 280,000) is conducting a signature campaign in support of the Assembly and in order to send representatives to it.

A meeting has been held in the town of Musashino-Shi under the auspices of the Council against the A and H bombs to send the mayor of the town to Helsinki as a delegate.

Mass Campaign in Uruguay

The Assembly of the Uruguayan Peace Council, held in Montevideo in March, adopted a resolution on the Uruguayan people's participation in the World Assembly.

After giving its enthusiastic support to the World Assembly, the meeting recommended to the Executive Committee that a representative delegation be sent to Helsinki and invited all organisations for peace to send delegates as well.

The Assembly decided to organise a mass campaign to collect the money necessary to cover the expenses of the delegates and to hold a National Peace Conference immediately after the delegates' return from Helsinki.

Organisational steps, particularly the setting up of a number of commissions, were taken to ensure that these various tasks are carried through.

Australia: Victoria Chooses its Delegates

The State of Victoria has already chosen its delegates: Rev. Neil Glover, Vicar of St. Mathias' Church, Richmond, who is very popular in his parish, and Mr. Sam Goldbloom, a business-man who served for four years in the R.A.A.F. during the war.

The preparations for the World Assembly are being carried on successfully throughout Australia and approaches are being made to all organisations and tendencies for peace in order to ensure that Australia is widely represented at Helsinki.

The Reverend Alfred Dickie recently stated: 'I would be very happy to see all sorts of bodies nominating and sponsoring visitors and delegates to this Assembly.

'The Assembly comes at a vital time in the history of world affairs and ... could affect very materially the course of history.'

Leaders of the Australian Peace Council are visiting every Australian State to carry forward the preparations for the World Assembly.

The Saar

The Saar Peace Committee has put on sale 10,000 postcards bearing the text of the Vienna Appeal. The money raised in this way will help defray the expenses of the Saar delegation to the World Assembly which will be elected at the Saar Peace Conference.

Germany: From District Conferences to the National Congress

The struggle against the London and Paris Agreements, the danger of the remilitarisation of West Germany and the preparations for atomic war are giving rise to intensive activity in preparation for the World Assembly for Peace.

There have been district conferences throughout the German Democratic Republic in preparation for the German Congress for Security and Peace, which will be held in Dresden on April 24.

Among the speakers at these conferences were such public figures as Mr. Otto Buchwitz, President of the German Red Cross; Pastor Kleinschmidt; Professor Tacke; Mr. Max Friedemann, Deputy Minister of Heavy Industry; and Mr. Heinz Willman, General Secretary of the German Peace Council.

All sections of the people helped in financing the conferences. For example, Mr. Dietrich Muller, a Rostock student, collected 300 marks for the German Peace Fund and has promised to collect 400 more. Also in Rostock, the personnel of the 'Neptun' dockyard gave 1,000 marks to the Peace Fund.

When the district peace conferences are over the German Congress for Security and Peace will be held in preparation for the World Assembly in Helsinki. Public figures have announced that they will take part, including Mr. Otto Nuschke, Deputy Prime Minister; Mr. Johannes Becher, Minister of Culture; Mrs. Anna Seghers, the writer Arnold Zweig; Professor Steiniger, chairman of the German United Nations Association; and Professor Herz, the theologian from Leipzig. In all there will be 1,300 delegates from the German Democratic Republic at the Congress, plus a strong delegation from the German Federal Republic and foreign visitors. The Congress will re-elect the German Peace Council and designate the delegates to the World Assembly.

'We Expect Big Results from the Assembly' says Finnish Workers Conference

In the name of the Sponsoring Committee of the Conference of Finnish Workers for Peace, Mr. Matti Lahdenmäk, the Chairman, and Mr. Into Kälnio, the Secretary, have sent us the following statement:

'The participants and the organisers of the Conference of Finnish Workers for Peace expect big results from the World Assembly for Peace which will be held in Helsinki at the end of May.

'At this great gathering, thousands of representatives of different nations, different walks of life, different social circles and different beliefs will meet in our capital. This very fact will be a concrete proof of the present strength of the idea of peace. But, above all, this Assembly will show the way for the forces of peace to make new efforts to eliminate first of all the terrible danger of atomic war which threatens mankind.

'It is our hope and our conviction that there will be a great increase of activity in the struggle for peace as a result of this Assembly and we hope and believe that this will be as true of Finland as of the other countries of the world.'

It will be remembered that the Finnish Workers' Conference for Peace took place in Helsinki on December 5, last year, on the initiative of the workers of a big factory in Tampere. This Conference, as the Bulletin of the World Council of Peace reported at the time, attracted great interest throughout the country. 1,200 workers of the most diverse political views took part in response to the Appeal of a widely representative sponsoring committee.

In 1812, when Helsinki became the capital of Finland, the built-up area covered no more than a hundred acres and the population numbered no more than 4,000.

A century later the city had grown to seven square miles with a population of 160,000. At the last census the population totalled nearly 400,000.

In Helsinki today there are a great many modern structures in different styles. The photo above shows the chief railway terminus and surrounding buildings.

This Badge . . .

. . . the Finnish Emblem of Friendship, will go all round the world.

The Finnish National Peace Committee has taken a number of steps to stimulate the campaign.

Gold and silver badges will be awarded to the best signature-collectors representing, in the form of a dove, the traditional Finnish emblem of friendship.

The badges will bear the wording 'Helsinki 1955'. Each recipient will be able to send the badge with his greetings to the country of his choice where it will be given to one of the delegates to the World Assembly.

The Peace Committees and collectors are making a great drive for signatures and are organising meetings to make known and popularise the Assembly and its aims. The National Peace Committee is convinced that every delegate coming to the Assembly will have received a badge, the symbol of the Finnish people's work for peace.

PUBLIC FIGURES EXPRESS THEIR SUPPORT

Mr. Deryck Siven, Vice-President of the Finnish Pacifist Union and a member of the Executive Committee of the Fellowship of Reconciliation in Finland:

'Worried by the imminent danger of war and the increase in armaments, the people, irrespective of nationality, religious faith and political views, are supporting in growing numbers the demands of the World Council of Peace for the banning of modern weapons of mass destruction, which threaten alike capitalists and communists, Christians, pagans, black, brown and white men. It is the duty of all of us to state our position in face of the great world problems, the settlement of which is the decisive condition for the preservation of civilisation and the human race itself. Christians, those who follow the Prince of Peace, believing that Love alone can conquer Evil, have a particular responsibility. If the Christians of the world take their doctrine seriously, they must feel themselves called upon to take an active part in the international work for peace and they must give an enthusiastic welcome to the World Assembly for Peace which will be held in Helsinki in May.

'May the Assembly lead growing numbers of Finnish men and women to see the necessity of working for peace and may it be successful in giving clear and powerful expression to the nations' will to peace, so that responsible states will be obliged to reject the policy of strength which sooner or later leads to war and strive to achieve an international state of justice, the millenium foretold by the founders of religions and for which the noblest souls have worked.'

Professor Goran von Bonsdorff of Helsinki University:

'The World Assembly for Peace is to be held in Helsinki, in a country which has known great suffering in war. The Finnish people are therefore anxious to do all they can now to safeguard peace. It is in our vital interest to contribute to the lessening of East-West tension and to strengthen understanding and mutual respect between States with different political and social systems. If the World Assembly for Peace gives positive results in this sense, I can assure you that Finland will give it its full support and deep gratitude.'

Reverend Armas Tolsa, Director of the Settlement Institute of Kalliola, Helsinki:

'To avert the danger of atomic war, we must call on all men of good sense irrespective of race, nationality, social position and creed, for we are all threatened. The statesmen who decide war and peace have an enormous responsibility and we have to make them understand that they have no right to use their power for the destruction of life.

'Thus the World Assembly for Peace to be held in Helsinki in May has two important tasks. It must call upon and rally the peoples to the cause of peace, regardless of frontiers. There are still far too many sceptical and prejudiced people. We have to make people understand that work for peace is not party politics and that the demand for the banning of atomic weapons is not turned only in one direction: it concerns all peoples alike. The other task is to make the voice of millions of peace-loving people heard by the leading statesmen in such a way that they cannot neglect it.'

BULLETIN OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

INFORMATION BULLETIN PUBLISHED BY THE SECRETARIAT OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

No. 8 (2nd. Year) APRIL 15, 1955

All peace forces for Helsinki

Reports from every part of the world show how warmly the decision to convoke a World Assembly for Peace at Helsinki, May 22-29, has been welcomed and how wide is the basis for its preparation.

Without doubt the campaign against the preparation of atomic war has played and is playing the principal part in this. During the collection of signatures, and in the course of thousands of discussions in trade union organisations, political parties, religious circles, social organisations, which are leading to a growing flood of declarations, appeals, delegations to M.Ps., and similar actions, it has become clear that there is a new feeling among the peoples. It is not only that ever wider circles welcome the campaign because they feel a new need to act before it is too late. They are feeling also more and more strongly the need for more effective ways of acting together, the need to break down the barrier between those who work for peace from different points of view.

For this reason national peace movements have been linking their preparations for the World Assembly closely with the campaigns in progress. That is to say they are not only popularising the Assembly in the course of the campaigns; they are also finding ways to link the signature collections and all the other forms of activity with the election of delegates, with discussions of proposals for the agenda, with messages of support for the Assembly and so on.

Moreover since the Appeal for the World Assembly was first launched new possibilities have become clear. The decision to organise atomic war and the rapid steps which have been taken to put this decision into effect — in particular the special emphasis which is now being placed on the hydrogen bomb as the all-powerful 'deterrent' for aggression — has started a deep process of rethinking and has begun to break down the hesitations of many people who up to now have not thought it right to get 'mixed up in politics'. This applies particularly to many of the world's most eminent scientists and doctors, among them, for example, a number of important atomic scientists in the U.S.A., who are warning peoples and governments of the terrible consequences of present policies.

While many members of all churches and religious bodies have long played their part in the struggle for peace, today there are significant new developments. In important circles of the Christian Churches, both Catholic and Protestant, for example, grave disquiet is now showing itself and searching discussion on the moral implications of the decision to use the Hydrogen bomb are going on. Eminent international lawyers, too, are challenging the legality of the use and production of such weapons.

These developments are of great significance in the world struggle against atomic war. It is particularly important that all these trends should find their full expression at Helsinki. The discussions at the World Assembly will help to resolve many of the doubts and difficulties being felt in these wide circles. At the same time it will be possible by joint study to reach a common understanding on positive lines of action for the future.

In many countries account is already being taken of this in preparing for the Assembly. In a number of countries, for example, big national assemblies, prepared by regional and local gatherings, are being held. In others national participation is being jointly prepared by the peace movement and by the representatives of other organisations.

A big factor in helping to ensure that the Assembly is truly representative of all these forces can be the draft agenda issued by the Bureau of the World Council of Peace: atomic weapons and disarmament; military blocs, general security, collaboration between the nations; independence of nations and the maintenance of peace. This agenda presents in three broad groups the main problems facing thinking people today, without prejudging the solutions. In detailed discussions of the many subdivisions of these problems all, on the basis of their own point of view and of their special interests, will be able to make a valuable and constructive contribution.

Already it is possible to say that the World Assembly will be exceptionally important and representative. Between now and May 22 it is the job of the Peace Movement to ensure the participation from every country of every force which is engaged, in such richness and variety, in the struggle for Peace.

From All Sides New Voices Speak Out...

• A Group of Teachers and Doctors in Buenos Aires

An important group of Buenos Aires doctors have declared their support for the banning of thermonuclear weapons and other weapons of mass destruction.

They include the following:

Dr. Gregorio Araoz Alfaro, Former President of the Academy of Medicine, founder and former director of the Institute of Semiology; Dr. Alejandro Ceballos, former professor at the Surgical Clinic and former adviser to the Medical Science Faculty; Dr. Nicolas Romano, academician and former professor at the Medical Clinic; Dr. Osvaldo Loudet, President of the Society of Criminology and Legal Medicine; Dr. Alfredo Ferrer Zanchi, M.P.; Dr. Manuel Oribe, President of the Psychiatric, Neurological and Neuropsychiatric Society; Dr. Moses Polak, Head of the Anti-Cancer Centre of Avellaneda; Dr. Juan Carlos Christensen, head of the neuro-surgical department at the French hospital; Dr. Oscar Alende, M.P.; Dr. Pedro Diaz Colodrero, Head of the Phrenopathology Institute; Dr. Lidio Mosca, member of the International Radiology Society; and Dr. Hector Villar, Head of the Psychiatric Department of the French Hospital.

These eminent medical figures have approved the statement sent to UNO by the Rosario doctors. (See previous numbers of the Bulletin.)

This statement says in part:

'We are living at an exceptional time. As doctors, trained in the spirit of humanism, we are obliged to recognise our moral responsibility.

'Expressing the agony of mind which is felt by all the peoples and aware of the great peril facing mankind, we have decided to send this message to UNO to ask them to ban absolutely every kind of atomic, hydrogen and radioactive weapon and all other weapons of mass destruction, and we invite all individuals and organisations to do likewise.'

• The Christian Democrat Mayor of Florence Calls a Conference of Mayors of Capital Cities

Mr. La Pira, the Christian Democrat Mayor of Florence and former Italian government minister, has recently decided to call a conference of the Mayors of all the European capitals in the near future in order to discuss the problems of disarmament and peace. This news was made public at a meeting of the Municipal Council. The representatives of the Council's different political groups immediately gave it their support and the announcement aroused very considerable interest.

• French Socialist Party Opposes the Manufacture of A and H bombs

In a communique, the Parliamentary group and the Executive Committee of the French Socialist Party (S.F.I.O.) state that they 'will oppose any efforts to impose the manufacture of atomic or thermonuclear bombs in France. They ask the French government, without waiting for the necessary agreements on disarmament, to take the diplomatic steps for reaching an international agreement for the immediate banning of all thermonuclear explosions.'

• Ministers of the Australian Methodist Church

As we have already announced, 119 of the ministers present at the Conference of Methodist Churches which was held in Melbourne at the beginning of March signed the Appeal against the preparations for atomic war. Resolutions were moreover adopted by the Conference calling for a lessening of international tension:

'We express our satisfaction at the end of the fighting in Indo-China but realise that the danger of conflict in Asia is still acute... We earnestly request our government to explore every possible means of peaceful co-existence... We believe that S.E.A.T.O. is likely to increase rather than decrease tension in Asia...'

Considering the difficulties which several Australian defenders of peace have had in obtaining passports, the Conference, in another resolution, drew the attention of the Federal Government to 'Article I, Section 2, of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, viz., "Everyone has the right to leave any country, including his own, and to return to his country". We urge upon the government the honouring of this clause.'

The Conference also went on record against the publication in the press of advertisements calling for war and propagating racial prejudice detrimental to the consolidation of world peace.

The President of the Swedish Trade Unions

Mr. Axel Strand, President of the Swedish T.U.C. and Social Democratic Vice-Chairman of Parliament, has stated that he endorses the demand to destroy all stocks of atomic weapons and stop their manufacture.

'From a human point of view, it would be a good thing to achieve this. When one knows the horrible consequences which can result from the use of these weapons, one can reach no other conclusion.'

The Swedish T.U.C. includes almost all Sweden's workers.

Cardinal Gelier, Archbishop of Lyons

Addressing a meeting at Lyons, Cardinal Gerlier, Archbishop of Lyons, evoked the threat represented by the atomic bomb and concluded: 'Let all men, let all Christians, agree to oppose such a thing and work to create that unity of public opinion throughout the world which alone can bring about the unity of all the leaders of the peoples against war and against the use of a means of destruction which would dishonour mankind.'

General Jose Rafael Gabaldon

well-known Venezulan Roman Catholic and President of the National Committee for Peace and Democracy.

In an article published by a Venezuelan newspaper, General Jose Rafael Gabaldon issued a warning against the serious dangers implied in the statements of the American Secretary of State, Mr. John Foster Dulles, concerning the use of the hydrogen bomb against China. This would provoke an unparalleled tragedy over Formosa, he said, and went on to point out the responsibility of the peoples of Latin America:

'As an ardent defender of Latin America, it is my opinion that we should not sign solidarity pacts with the United States and that we must proclaim our America a "peace zone" so as to free ourselves from those who would drag us into shady wars, such as that in Korea, and to escape from their interference and domination. What happened in Guatamala is the most recent example of this interference. What can we have in common with those who wish us no good and in fact do us all the harm they can?...

'I do not want us to be enemies of the United States; what I want is that we should not support them in undertakings which risk involving the world in total war...'

YOUNG PEOPLE IN THE CAMPAIGN AGAINST ATOMIC WAR

Throughout the world young people are playing their part in the campaign against atomic war, linking this work to the preparations for the Fifth World Festival of Youth and Students for Peace and Friendship which will be held in Warsaw, July 31—August 15.

In order to stimulate the signature campaign for the Vienna Appeal, the young people of Vienna have challenged the young people of Stockholm; likewise the whole of Austria is competing with the whole of Sweden.

Two young Japanese plan to tour Europe to help the campaign; one is from Hiroshima and the other from Nagasaki.

Young Austrians have already collected 15,800 signatures in factories, training centres, schools, etc. In a village of 251 inhabitants, two youngsters collected 248 signatures.

In Japan young people are using films, poems and songs to help the campaign.

The activities in connection with World Youth Week (March 21—28) gave a new stimulus to the struggle for peace.

In all their activities, the young people are using the most varied methods: collecting signatures in the streets, at stadiums, etc.; organising excursions, processions of cyclists, etc.

With the First Days of April the Signature Campaign Begins in Two Major Countries

General view of the hall during the session of the Latvian Peace Committee in Riga.

SOVIET UNION

The collection of signatures to the Vienna Appeal against the preparations for atomic war began throughout the Soviet Union on April 1st. The campaign is being organised in the following way:

Committees for the collection of signatures have been set up in every town and district of the country. On the morning of the 1st peace workers began to collect signatures door-to-door, and meetings of various kinds are being or will be held in the factories and the collective and state farms.

Signatures will be collected in trains, in the far away villages, in the towns which have recently sprung up on the newly ploughed lands, in the sanatoria, in the rest homes and hospitals, in the schools and universities, in the Soviet embassies abroad — in fact everywhere where there are Soviet people.

All Soviet citizens over the age of sixteen can sign the Appeal.

Meetings at which the participants signed the Appeal have been held in Moscow, Leningrad, Kiev, Minsk, Vladivostock, and in Siberia, Central Asia and elsewhere.

The launching of the campaign was preceded by a great deal of publicity and organisational work, and in order to prepare it carefully extended meetings of regional and local peace committees were held in many parts of the country at the end of March.

The Ukrainian Peace Committee met in Kiev and its President, Mr. Semenenko, vice-president of the Ukrainian Academy of Sciences, gave a report on the campaign. A delegation was elected to represent the Ukraine at the Fifth Soviet Peace Conference.

A plenary session of the Stalingrad Regional Committee was held in that city. The participants unanimously adopted a resolution calling on the people of the region to make a still greater effort on behalf of peace.

A delegation to the Fifth Soviet Peace Conference was elected.

An extended session of the Latvian Peace Committee heard a report by Professor Peive, President of the Latvian Academy of Sciences. A unanimously adopted resolution expressed the Committee's conviction that every Latvian worker will sign the Vienna Appeal.

Solemn sessions of the Peace Committees were also held in the Republics of Byelorussia, Kirghizia, Tadjikistan and Lithuania.

FRANCE

'The National Assembly for Peace solemnly invites all Frenchmen to sign the Appeal against the preparations for atomic war issued by the World Council of Peace, and to get others to sign it.

'Let the greatest signature campaign that our country has ever known begin today throughout France.

'By giving a striking demonstration of France's will for peace, we shall save our country from war, help it to regain its independence and help to make negotiation and disarmament possible.'

These are the concluding words of an important appeal to the French people made by the National Assembly for Peace in Drancy on April 3rd.

So the campaign for the Vienna Appeal will begin immediately.

The decisions of the Assembly are contained in three texts which express the French people's determination to pursue their action against German rearmament until victory while beginning the collection of signatures against the preparations for atomic war.

The Assembly also adopted another document on organisational questions and elected a new National Peace Council whose 520 members widely represent the various tendencies and organisations working for peace.

Progress in Uniting those who Work for Peace

In order to realise the progress that has been made in uniting all who work for peace in France one need only look at the list of speakers in the public sessions or the commissions during these two days.

Here are a few names by way of example. The writer Vercors presided the opening session and paid warm homage to the memory of Yves Farge and Professor Leon Wagner of the Sorbonne presented the introductory report. Then there were Mr. Philippon, deputy mayor of Perigueux; Mr. Bellugue, Socialist mayor of a locality in the Drome Department; Mr. Deville, vice-president of the Meurthe-et-Moselle district committee of the Radical Socialist Party; Mr. Laurent Casanova, member of the Presiding Committee of the French Peace Movement; Mr. Sutty, former Socialist county councillor for the Rhone Department; Mr. Jacques Chatagner, an active Catholic, formerly director of the review La Quinzaine; Mr. Roger Pigault, the film actor, representing the Actor's Committee for Peace; Mrs. Marcelle Auclair representing the National Committee of Writers; Mr. Joussa of the Jewish Action Committee against German rearmament; Mrs. Georges Huisman, who spoke on behalf of the World Congres of Mothers; Mr. Cerf-Ferriere, former chairman of the Resistance group in the Consultative Assembly (provisional parliament in France immediately after the liberation Ed.); and Mr. Dupleix, member of the Secretariat of the Preparatory Committee for the European Workers' Conference in Leipzig.

Messages from All over the World

Delegates from Great Britain, the German Federal Republic, Italy, Algeria and Switzerland brought greetings to the Assembly and Professor Nobuo Kusano of Japan, a specialist in atomic disease, also spoke.

Messages were received from Canada, Poland, the Soviet Union and other countries.

Speech by Professor Joliot-Curie

On the Sunday afternoon, Professor Joliot-Curie, President of the World Council of Peace, spoke on the great campaign for the banning of atomic weapons.

Mr. Emmanuel d'Astier de la Vigerie, one of the presidents of the Movement, closed the Assembly by presenting the final Appeal which gives the reasons why a big French delegation should go to the World Assembly in Helsinki.

Finland:

The Campaign Goes on while the World Assembly is Being Prepared

Next month Helsinki will be the rendezvous of the representatives of all forces for peace in the world . . . The Finnish Peace Movement considers that this honour confers great obligations on its members and they propose to present an imposing list of activities at the World Assembly which will take place in their capital.

Considerable Results already Achieved

Before the collection of signatures started, the aims of the campaign were popularised in posters and leaflets with the result that it received a favourable welcome.

Many collectors have already collected hundreds of signatures and in a number of factories the personnel have signed 100 per cent. The young people in particular have won excellent results by linking their efforts with the preparations for the World Festival of Youth and Students which will be held in Warsaw.

The women's organisations have already achieved appreciable results. An example was set to all Finnish women by the Executive Committee of the Finnish section of the Women's International Democratic Federation, with the President, General Secretary and several members of parliament at their head. They were seen discussing and getting signatures in the street, in restaurants, bus and railway stations on International Women's Day.

Building Workers

The Vienna Appeal has been endorsed at three hundred meetings of building workers and Mr. Aarne Saarinen, president of the Building Workers' Union, has stated in a declaration the reasons for his union's support of the Appeal:

'Finnish workers,' said Mr. Saarinen, 'have the same reasons as the workers of other countries for demanding the banning of atomic weapons.

'It is really terrible to think that at the very moment when the International Labour Office announces that approximately two thirds of mankind are undernourished and that there are at least 180 million too few houses in the world, the N.A.T.O. Secretariat proclaims that the 13 member countries of this organisations spent more than 65 thousand million dollars on war preparations in 1953. With that we could construct seven-and-a-half million very comfortable flats of 50 square metres floor area.

'This situation cannot and must not continue any longer. We must change this whole policy. And that is only possible with the help of the mass of the people who will throw their strength into the active struggle for the peaceful use of atomic energy and for the reduction of armaments.'

Organisational Steps

The Annual Conference of the Movement, which was held on February 27, dealt mainly with the organisational problems involved in the campaign. It recommended various steps to extend the signature collection to the furthest corners of the country.

The work of collecting signatures is accompanied by various forms of publicity, and the World Assembly is being popularised through meetings at which the activities of the Movement as a whole are being advanced.

Bulgaria:

Many Organisations Take Part in the Collection of Signatures

The Bulgarian Peace Committee and the National Council of the Fatherland Front solemnly inaugurated the campaign at a great Assembly in Sofia on February 21.

The assembly was opened by a speech from Professor Nadjakov, Academician, president of the National Peace Committee. The speakers included representatives of the Central Council of Trade Unions, the Orthodox Church, the Union of Youth, the Bulgarian Women's Committee, the Bulgarian Writers' Union, the Academy of Sciences and many other organisations. They all gave warm support to the Appeal of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace.

At the end of the meeting the participants enthusiastically signed the Appeal.

In the following days the mass organisations asked their members to support the Appeal.

At a special meeting, the Professors and students of the Sofia Law Faculty adopted an appeal to all professors, students and legal workers to support the Appeal.

Eminent personalities of the Orthodox Church made statements in the press calling on all members of the Church to join in the campaign, while the Grand Mufti and the Chief Rabbi also endorsed the decisions of the World Council and sent a message to their respective followers.

The campaign is in full swing in all the towns and in a great number of villages, and also in the factories of national importance and the great state enterprises and establishments.

Meetings and conferences are held after which special committees collect signatures in the factories and localities.

Italy:

Unity Forged by Friends of Peace

A leaflet published by the Peace Committee of Forli in Central Italy

From one end of Italy to the other collectors are going from house to house and from bench to bench in the factories, getting their neighbours and workmates to sign the Vienna Appeal.

Their strenuous and methodical work, aided by the many publicity measures described in the last issue of the Bulletin, is bearing fruit. The people of Italy are enthusiastically expressing their determination to see atomic weapons banned by signing the Appeal.

In many cases a wide unity of forces for peace is being achieved on the basis of agreement on the aims of the Vienna Appeal. For example, at Nonantola in Emilia a manifesto against atomic war and German rearmament has been signed by the leaders of all the local organisations, including the secretaries of the local branches of the Christian Democratic and Social Democratic parties. At Savignano in the same province the secretary of the local branch of the Christian Democratic Party is taking part in the collecting of signatures. Priests have signed the Appeal at Villanova, San Pancrazio, Ruttinara, San Damaso and Gambola.

This breadth of support is being realised in various ways. At Pieve de Sinalunga in the province of Siena all the workers of the Nello Quinti factory have signed including the owner, while at Rigaiolo, Poggialli and Crocifisso the whole population has endorsed and signed the Vienna Appeal.

Growing numbers of municipal and provincial councils are giving active support to this campaign.

At a meeting of the town council of Viareggio, a little town on the Tyrrhenian Sea, 16 Christian Democratic councillors, eight of the Left wing minority and two Republicans presented a joint motion against the atomic weapon. It was unanimously adopted and distributed to the people, who were asked to take part in the campaign for the destruction and banning of atomic weapons.

In the province of Turin the Grugliasso town council took a similar step. It first of all passed a resolution demanding the outlawing of atomic and thermonuclear weapons and an agreement between the great powers. A letter was then sent to all the inhabitants in which the council recalls that the Nazis massacred 66 people in the region and states:

'We are in full agreement with the Appeal issued by the Bureau of the World Council of Peace, the most representative body of the forces for peace. We hope that the wrath of the people against those who want to hurl the world into the most terrible catastrophe will be reflected in millions and millions of signatures.'

These are only a few of the hundreds of examples offered by a campaign in which the great majority of the Italian people are endorsing the Appeal launched in Vienna.

Turkey-Iraq Pact Confronts Peoples of Middle East with Atomic Danger

From Teheran to Cairo there are mounting waves of protest against the ratification or implementation of the Turkey-Iraq military pact which threatens the security of the peoples of the Near and Middle East and constitutes a danger to world peace.

As a result of popular opposition, some governments have been led to state official opposition to this pact, following which foreign pressure on them has increased considerably. Diplomatic notes have been sent with the idea of intimidating them; and at the same time the Turkish press has started to make territorial demands at Syria's expense, particularly the Mossoul oil-fields, and against other Arab countries.

The atmosphere of tension, resulting from the intervention of certain governments with the aim of involving the countries of this region in military coalitions, disturbs the peoples still more when one of the initiators of such a pact in the Near and Middle East, Turkey, is already committed to N.A.T.O. and its army has long been equipped with atomic weapons.

In struggling against the Turkey-Iraq Pact, the peoples of the Near and Middle East are thus acting not only against war but also against war in its most monstrous form — atomic war. This is expressed in the warm welcome these peoples are giving to the campaign against the preparations for atomic war, launched by the World Council of Peace.

Common Action Against A Common Danger

At a time when the Syrian people see themselves especially threatened by the Turkey-Iraq Pact, a great rally at Damascus brought together political figures from several Middle Eastern countries to study the means of dealing with this pact, to consolidate the bonds of solidarity between the peoples of this region and to safeguard peace.

Responding to the Appeal for a Middle East Conference, members of parliament, leaders of political parties and mass organisations, religious leaders and journalists, lawyers, doctors and others met in the Syrian capital on April 1. This Appeal, which was distributed to individuals and newspapers in Syria, the Lebanon, Egypt and Jordan, states in particular:

'The gravity of the international situation faces the countries of this region with common dangers and difficulties, the most dangerous aspect of which are the efforts to impose pacts and charters on them.'

'In this situation, we believe that it is necessary for the statesmen, scientists and men of culture of all these countries to meet to discuss the common interests of their peoples, exchange views on this subject and strengthen the links between them.'

Among the signatories of this Appeal are the following:

Syria: Dr. Maaruf Dawalibi, M.P., former chairman of the House and former Prime Minister; Dr. Mustafa Libai, Leader of the Moslem Brotherhood and Dean of the Faculty of Religious Sciences; Ali Buzu, M.P., former minister.

Lebanon: Mr. Kamal Jumblat, President of the Progressive Socialist Party; Mr. Harsan Buhssuli, Vice-President of the National Association (a political party); Mr. Adnan Hakim, President of the Moslem Scouts (a political organisation); Mr. Antoine Tabet, member of the World Council of Peace.

Jordan: Mr. Abdel Kader Saleh, M.P., Mr. Mohmud Rashed Nazem, M.P.; Mr. Amar Katib, barrister, former minister, member of the Executive Committee of the National Democratic Party and others.

In the Syrian University and Parliament

Forty members of Parliament, including Mr. Rushdi Kikhia, President of the People's Party, former Chairman of the Lower House and Chairman of the Constituent Assembly; Mr. Rafik Bashur, Vice-Chairman of the Lower House; the Moslem Parliamentary group, members of the Socialist Party, the Arab Renaissance Party, etc., have signed the Vienna Appeal.

The text of the Appeal is circulating in the homes, localities, factories and schools in every town and village. 80% of the lecturers and students of the Damascus Polytechnic have signed, while fifteen newspaper directors and many barristers and doctors have joined in the campaign.

On all sides the signing of the Appeal is accompanied by statements against the Turkey-Iraq Pact.

A Statement by the Djamistel Vlama (Association of Priests)

Signed by its President, Sheikh Abukheir Al Midani, the Association of Priests has published a statement condemning atomic weapons and the Turkey-Iraq Pact. This body is the most important religious organisation in Syria.

300 Trade Unions Announce their Support

The Syrian Workers' Congress, representing 300 trade unions, met on March 25 in the great amphitheatre of Damascus University. They decided unanimously to continue ever more energetically the struggle for peace and against military pacts such as the Turkey-Iraq Pact. The Congress made a unanimous demand for the banning of atomic weapons and the hydrogen bomb.

The High Modjtahed of the Lebanon

The signature campaign is developing in the Lebanon amongst all sections of the people. Two M.P.s, 65 barristers and 300 business people have signed the Appeal. The High Modjtahed (religious leader) of the Lebanon, Hossein Shareffeddin, has given his support to the campaign against the preparations for atomic war and has signed the Vienna Appeal.

A Statement By the Egyptian Peace Comittee

The attempts to involve the Arab countries as well as the other countries of the Near and Middle East in military alliances are meeting with strong popular opposition in Egypt. On several occasions the government has declared its hostility to such alliances which divide the nations and aggravate tension in the world.

In response to the demand of the Egyptian people, the Peace Committee made an important statement at its recent meeting, as follows:

'The National Committee welcomes the attitude of the peoples of the Near and Middle East to the Turkey-Iraq Pact. The Committee is sure that the vigilance of the peoples is a guarantee that they will fight against any attempt to create pacts, blocs and military bases in the countries of this region.'

The Committee especially stresses the joint Nehru-Abdel Nasser statement which says in particular: 'It is a great duty to exert every effort to ban war and create an atmosphere of world peace. International differences must be settled by negotiation. Military blocs aggravate international tension. The armaments race is no guarantee of peace for any country. Atomic energy must be used for peace and above all for the advancement of the underdeveloped areas.'

While giving its support to this joint statement, the Committee asks the Egyptian Government to recognise the People's Republic of China and to oppose intervention by foreign forces in her territorial waters. The Committee condemns the preparations for atomic war and calls for the destruction of existing stocks of atomic weapons.

In Jordan 74 well-known People launch the Appeal

A statement by 74 M.P.s, religious leaders, barristers, doctors and others has been published calling on the people of Jordan to sign the Vienna Appeal against the preparations for atomic war.

The campaign is making good headway.

ALL POLITICAL TRENDS IN LEBANON CONDEMN FOREIGN INTERFERENCE

A National Congress against the Turkey-Iraq Pact was held in Beirut on March 10 with the participation of all the political and social organisations of the Lebanon.

The following organisations were represented: the Progressive Socialist Party, the Arab Nationalists, the Destour (Constitutional) Party, the Moslem Scouts, the Communist Party, the National Group Party, the Arab Renaissance Party, the National Peace Committee, the Society of Lebanese Industrialists, the Lebanese Women's League, the trade unions and the students.

In addition, others of the 150 delegates present were individuals without party affiliations.

The theme of the meeting was one of the most important problems at present facing the peoples of the Near and Middle East — the Turkey-Iraq Pact.

Among the important decisions unanimously adopted by the Congress were the following:

- To support the Charter of the First Lebanese National Congress (1943), dealing with the Lebanon's task in the struggle to safeguard the independence and solidarity of the Arab countries.
- To ask the Lebanese government to state frankly that it will not join in the Turkey-Iraq Pact or any other foreign military pact, this in order to safeguard the independence and sovereignty of the Lebanon and to save it from further foreign occupation.

A Noble Task

Every day and in every part of the world, hundreds of thousands of men and women are showing by their acts their ardent support of the cause of peace.

In Tokio and Paris, in Buenos Aires and Sydney, in Cape Town and Peking, in the ricefields of Viet Nam and the forests of Canada, in the villages of Scandinavia and the countryside of Latin America, from door to door, on the street corners, men and women of all conditions and opinions are collecting signatures for the Appeal against the preparations for atomic war launched by the World Council of Peace.

In certain parts of the world the preparations for atomic war are being accompanied by systematic efforts to sow confusion and disseminate falsehoods or to create an atmosphere of suspicion and fatalism favourable to this end. The signature collector knows that, as a result, he has a preliminary task to do before he can collect an appreciable number of signatures — namely to explain the situation, showing clearly and simply the seriousness of the threat which faces mankind and how it is possible for the peoples to avert this danger if they express unanimously and categorically their indignant opposition to the crime which is being prepared.

But however misleading may be the arguments which are used to try and justify the preparation of a war which would know no frontiers and which would entail infinite destruction, each and every one of them can be refuted. One only has to make an objective analysis of them to see immediately that they are specious, contradictory and feeble. Signature collectors must therefore be ready to answer any questions in such a way as to remove all doubts and expose all falsehoods.

Conditions must be created that will enable signature collectors to make direct contact with the whole population of their neighbourhood, their village or their factory. It is essential for every single man and woman to hear an explanation of the reasons which prompted the World Council of Peace to launch the Vienna Appeal.

The signature collector knows that his most effective weapon is persuasion. He knows, too, that a first refusal perhaps only means that his explanations have not been clear enough. By persevering in explanation and discussion the truth will win in the end.

The mission of the signature collectors is great and noble in that it gives the peoples an opportunity to express their will to live without the permanent danger of suffering, poverty and death. The questions and answers we give here have been compiled with the aim of making their task easier.

1 Why does the World Council of Peace state: 'Today, certain governments are preparing to let loose atomic war?'

On December 17 and 18, 1954, the Council of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation met in Paris and approved a report presented by its military staff. This report plans the use of atomic weapons in the event of war. By adopting it, the N.A.T.O. Council authorised the general staffs to take all the necessary military measures — e.g. equipment of armies, training, etc. — to prepare for atomic war.

The N.A.T.O. Council is composed of members of the governments of the following countries: the United States, Great Britain, France, Canada, Italy, Belgium, Holland, Luxemburg, Denmark, Norway, Iceland, Portugal, Greece and Turkey. No minister can take such an important decision without his government's approval. This means that these governments have officially decided to prepare for atomic war.

These preparations, accompanied by open threats to use force, are leading to an atomic war.

Questions a

2 What would an atomic war mean?

Up till now there has been no war waged with atomic weapons on both sides. It is therefore difficult to foresee the full effects of an atomic conflict.

However, in August 1945 two atomic bombs were dropped, on Hiroshima and Nagasaki. Since that time, new atomic weapons have been developed. Japanese fishermen ninety miles away from the Bikini test explosion on March 1st, 1954, were gravely injured by the radioactive effects of the H bomb. One has since died.

During the Second World War Great Britain was the target for hundreds of air raids; the hundreds of thousands of bombs dropped day and night throughout these years caused enormous damage and killed 70,000 people.

One single atomic bomb on Hiroshima practically wiped out the city and annihilated 200,000 human beings at one blow. Today, responsible scientists tell us, the H bomb can cause destruction 1,000 to 2,000 times greater that that of the bomb dropped on Hiroshima. It can destroy everything without exception in a circle twelve to twenty miles across, and cause death in a circle 120 miles across.

This means that, in an atomic war, whole peoples could be wiped out indiscriminately, cities levelled to the ground and small countries transformed into radioactive deserts. An atomic war would be a war of extermination.

That is why the decision to prepare for atomic war is extremely grave. It demands immediate action from all peoples.

3 Does the danger of atomic war threaten all countries?

The N.A.T.O. Council's decision to use atomic weapons sets up a general principle. Thus the danger which it gives rise to is general, not confined to any one area.

It hangs over Europe. Any war there would be likely to become a world war; this would be an atomic war. The full force of the danger becomes clear when this N.A.T.O. decision is set alongside the attempts to rearm Germany, that is, to set up a new Wehrmacht in which former Hitler generals would be armed with atomic weapons.

But it goes far, very far, beyond Europe. Some governments in the Atlantic Pact at the same time belong to other military pacts, particularly in the countries of Asia and the Pacific. They maintain armed forces and many military bases there. So the principle of atomic war which they have adopted applies just as much to other parts of the world. The very real threats to use atomic weapons in the Far East confirm this.

The countries of Latin America and Africa possess the raw materials needed for the manufacture of nuclear weapons. There are military bases and dumps on their territories. They could thus be plunged into the midst of an atomic war against their will.

The atomic threat can also be used to bring greater blackmail and pressure to bear on countries struggling to win or defend their independence.

Not even the neutral countries could escape the danger from the widespread destructive effects of atomic weapons.

4 Is the World Council's campaign biassed against certain governments?

The World Council works for peace. It does not defend or attack any particular government. Its principle is: non-interference in the internal affairs of countries.

But in working for peace it cannot be indifferent to any acts which raise the fundamental questions of peace or war. Its duty is to support any moves for peace, whatever government proposes them, and to oppose any actions likely to lead to war.

The present campaign has been launched to meet a very real danger which arises from the official plans of certain governments to prepare atomic war. The World Council calls on the peoples to oppose such plans and preparations irrespective of what government or system they may prefer.

Clearly, so long as atomic weapons exist, there will be a danger of atomic war. The World Council therefore says: destroy all stocks of atomic weapons and stop their manufacture. This applies, without distinction, to every country which has got them.

5 Does not both sides having atomic weapons guarantee that they won't be used?

The idea behind this question is this: Atomic attack means atomic retaliation; anyone using atomic weapons therefore invites destruction; no one would be mad enough to do so.

It is true that atomic weapons have enormous destructive power. But this very fact is an encouragement to aggression, not an obstacle. For an aggressor might think that by striking first he could gain a decisive advantage.

Modern history shows that, like Hitler, all adventurers have struck the first blow because they thought themselves the stronger — and also that they got involved in war and catastrophe on a scale that they had never expected. In the atomic age, such calculations can have even more disastrous results.

The idea that a huge stockpile of atomic weapons would guarantee security is also unfounded. Arms races have always led to war; the atomic arms race can only lead to a war of extermination. Once more the peoples would be the victims.

6 Why does the World Council demand particularly the abolition of atomic weapons?

Because atomic weapons are the most dangerous, and threaten the greatest number of people. An aggressor always uses the weapons that can do the most damage. Today this means atomic weapons, so the threat to use them is the main danger.

At the same time as calling for banning atomic weapons, the World Council has always supported disarmament. It has made specific proposals to this effect to the United Nations Organisation. It still maintains these proposals and has called on the people to support them.

Today, the banning of atomic weapons is an essential condition for reducing international tension and would be a decisive step towards general disarmament. It would make possible the full use of the vast power of atomic energy for peaceful purposes and human happiness.

7 Shouldn't banning war be the first step?

The World Council wants the elimination of war as a means of settling international differences. It is profoundly convinced that all differences between nations can be settled by peaceful means: that is what it exists for.

For this reason the World Council has always based its action on practical proposals to prevent recourse to war. The campaigns to end the wars in Korea and Indo-China and for the great powers to settle their differences through peaceful negotiations are examples of this.

So is the present campaign to abolish atomic weapons. It seeks to eliminate the gravest and most immediate danger, that of a war of extermination.

One can have different views on the best way of making war impossible; but no one can be unaware of the need, first of all and before it is too late, to prevent atomic war.

8 Can the use of atomic weapons be prevented?

There are precedents to show that it is possible to ban particular weapons. In the Geneva Convention of 1925, for example, the powers pledged themselves not to use poison gas. This was respected during the Second World War; none of the belligerents dared face the outburst of anger that would certainly have been provoked by the use of gas.

An agreement now to abolish atomic weapons would carry an even more powerful sanction, for it would be backed by the clearly expressed will of the people.

The successes already obtained by the growing pressure of public opinion show that such an agreement is possible.

The strength of opinion expressed through the Stockholm Appeal put a stop to threats to use atomic weapons in Korea.

The signature campaign for a Five Power Peace Pact established the idea of negotiations in the minds of the people: it led to the Berlin and Geneva meetings of the great powers to discuss the peaceful settlement of their differences. Public opinion was respected. The wars in Korea and Indo-China, which might have developed into atomic wars, were stopped.

9 What good is a signature?

A signature is a conscious, individual act. By signing an appeal, a man or woman shows his or her personal support for it. Obviously, one signature by itself will not prevent the outbreak of atomic war. But small streams come together to make great rivers — and hundreds of millions of signatures mount and mount; they become an irresistible flood, with all the significance and power of a universal demand. No authority — not a government or a parliament — can ignore so clear and definite an expression of public opinion.

The World Council's campaign makes it possible to express the general revulsion against atomic weapons with enough force to bring about their abolition.

In this immense task every signature counts.

Asian Peoples Determined to Consolidate Friendship and Extend Peace Zone

More than 300 delegates from 13 Asian countries took part in the proceedings of the Conference of Asian Countries which opened in New Delhi on April 6. This conference was organised by an international committee composed of representatives from India, Japan, the Soviet Union, Ceylon, the People's Republic of China and Syria.

Speaking at a press conference prior to the meeting, Mrs. Rameshwari Nehru, Chairman of the Indian delegation, said that the threat of thermonuclear weapons, colonialism and discrimination against Asian immigrants were among the problems which the Conference was likely to deal with. Later, other points were proposed by various delegations so that finally the agenda for the Conference was as follows:

1) The banning of weapons of mass destruction and the establishment of a control to ensure observation of this measure; the peaceful use of atomic energy.

2) The colonial system and foreign interference in the internal affairs of the countries of Asia.

3) The danger to the countries of Asia involved in the creation of military pacts and bases in Asia.

4) The restoration to the People's Republic of China of its rightful seat in the United Nations Organisation.

5) The peaceful reunification of Korea.

6) The normalisation of diplomatic relations among the countries of Asia.

7) The establishment of trade relations between the states of Asia on a footing of equal rights and mutual advantage, etc.

Our next issue will contain detailed information on this important conference and the decisions reached by it.

Demonstration in Tokyo

Two thousand five hundred people took part in a meeting held in Tokyo on March 17, the anniversary of the day on which the world learned the fate of the 23 Japanese fishermen stricken by radioactive ash from the Bikini hydrogen bomb test. The speakers included Mr. Tetsu Katayama M.P., former Prime Minister and member of the Right Wing Socialist Party; Professor Yoshitaro Hirano, General Secretary of the Japanese Peace Committee; Professor Kaoru Yasui, General Secretary of the National Council against the A and H bombs, and others.

A recording of Professor Joliot-Curie's speech at the Vienna meeting of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace was played at the meeting.

Mr. Shinzo Suzuki greeted the participants on behalf of the victims of the Bikini tests and expressed their gratitude for the help that everyone has given them and their anger against those who are preparing for atomic war.

Mr. Jyukichi Uno, actor, Miss Setsu Asakura, artist, and Mr. Fukuo Kishibe, author of many fairy tales, spoke on the Vienna Appeal. In the course of the meeting it was announced that more than a quarter of the Japanese people had signed against weapons of mass destruction.

Preparations for the International Conference in Hiroshima

The preparatory committee for the International Conference for the banning of the atomic and hydrogen bombs, which is to be held in Tokyo on August 6, held its first meeting in Tokyo on March 2nd. The meeting was attended by representatives of the National Council against the A and H bombs, the trade unions and religious organisations.

It was decided to invite 50 representatives from abroad to the conference and to open it on the day of the day of the tenth anniversary of the atomic bombing of Hiroshima. The Conference has the aim of calling on the peoples of the entire world to put up a yet more resolute struggle against the preparations for atomic war.

The Signature Campaign in India

The signature campaign against atomic weapons is proceeding in the principal towns of India.

Calcutta. — A public meeting was held in Calcutta on March 10 organised by the West Bengal Peace Committee and the participants adopted a resolution expressing deep concern over the recent declarations of certain statesmen on the use of atomic weapons. The resolution also called on the people of West Bengal to sign the Vienna Appeal.

Madras. — The Madras Peace Committee has set itself the aim of collecting half-a-million signatures to the Vienna Appeal. The signature campaign was launched at a public meeting in Madras City on March 5.

The peace council of Ramnad District, Madras State, met on March 6 with a plan for the collection of 200,000 signatures.

Punjab. — In the East Punjab, a public meeting was held in Amritsar under the auspices of the city peace committee. A number of eminent figures spoke, condemning atomic war preparations and supporting the Appeal of the World Council of Peace.

Hyderabad. — The campaign is developing rapidly among all sections of the people and important personalities have already gone on record against atomic war. For example, 67 members of the Legislative Assembly of Hyderabad State have signed the Vienna Appeal.

The First Signatures in Chile

The signature collection began throughout Chile on Sunday, April 3rd and was officially opened at a public meeting in one of the capital's biggest theatres.

The first signatories include well-known representatives of political parties, trade unions and intellectual circles, such as Mr. Rafael Gumucio, M.P., president of the National Falange, a Catholic party; Mr. Eugenio Gonzalez, Senator and leader of the Popular Socialist Party; Mr. Luis Bossay, president of the Radical Party; Mr. Salvador Allende, Vice-President of the Senate; Mr. Baltazar Castro, President of the Chamber of Deputies; Mr. Pablo Neruda, writer; Mr. Benedicto Chuaqui, president of the Writers' Union; Mr. Humberto Martinez, Senator, president of the Democratic Party; Mr. Clotario Blest, president of the Chilean T.U.C.; and Mr. Luis Quinteros, Socialist Senator. These persons set up a Sponsoring Committee for the campaign.

The Peace Movement made careful preparations for the campaign. Following the Vienna meeting of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace, Mr. Volodia Teitelboim, Chile's representative at the meeting, Mr. Allende and Mr. Juan Acevedo M.P. spoke at many meetings and conferences to report back on the decisions of the Bureau. Mr. Allende and Mr. Acevedo visited the regions of Arica, Iquique and Antofagasta in the northern part of the country and spoke to thousands of miners in the course of a fortnight. On his return to Santiago, Mr. Allende undertook another tour of 30 to 40 meetings and conferences.

Moreover, the Movement was concerned to show how the Vienna Appeal meets the immediate preoccupations of the Chilean people and particularly stressed the danger of the thermonuclear tests that the American and British authorities intend to carry out in the Antarctic.

Viet Nam Peace Movement's Plan of Work for 1955

At its recent extended session in Hanoi the Viet Nam Peace Committee adopted a programme of work for 1955.

Among the 14 points of the programme are: to see to it that the Geneva agreements are strictly applied; to promote a vast signature campaign for the Vienna Appeal; to stand with the peoples of Europe in their struggle against German rearmament; to popularise the Five Principles; to oppose military pacts and foreign interference in the internal affairs of nations.

The signature collection for the Appeal against the preparations for atomic war was launched at a mass demonstration in Hanoi on March 10. More than 500 representatives of democratic parties, mass organisations and religious bodies attended the demonstration and were the first to sign the Appeal.

Mr. Nguyen Dang Hu, representing the workers of Hanoi, was the first to sign the Appeal. He stated that the workers had been sorely tried during the war and that they will never allow their peaceful life to be interfered with.

In Germany Women, Young People and Peasants Carry on Struggle against Paris Agreements

The Presiding Committee of the Peace Committee of the German Federal Republic has examined the situation arising from the ratification of the Paris Agreements by the Federal Parliament and adopted a statement from which we take the following extracts:

'Just as E.D.C. was foiled, the agreements on rearming the Federal Republic and incorporating it in a system of military alliances will be thwarted by the peoples' resistance. The struggle against these agreements goes on . . .

'At meetings and demonstrations throughout Germany and by adopting resolutions, our people will express their will to build a united, independent Germany outside any military alliance through free, general, all-German elections. In this way we shall prevent Germans from being armed against other Germans and our country from becoming the battlefield in an atomic war'.

Young People find basis for Common Action

On March 19 and 20 a Congress of German Youth against Remilitarisation, attended by 2,500 young people from all over Germany, including nearly 2,000 from the Federal Republic, was held in Berlin. Leading Christian members of the youth sections of the West German trade unions, members of the 'Falcons' (Socialist youth), members of the West German Union of Youth and the Free German Youth from the German Democratic Republic, well-known sportsmen — all found a common basis of agreement in the rejection of the Paris Agreements for the remilitarisation of West Germany, in spite of their differences on other questions.

In a solemn pledge, the Congress calls on the young people of Germany to act to prevent the agreements from hurling them into war and to work for the unity of Germany.

A small poster put out by the Peace Committee of the German Federal Republic. It opposes the stationing of atomic cannon in West Germany.

A majority of the 800 participants in a Y.M.C.A. meeting at Recklinghausen went on record against military service.

In Hanover, 500 young people took part in a public debate attended by Mr. Kopf, Prime Minister of Lower Saxony. In a very animated discussion the young people demanded joint discussions with the young people of the German Democratic Republic. Mr. Kopf pledged his active support for such discussions.

In Munich on March 13 the Bavarian trade union youth and the Federation of Trade Unions inaugurated a travelling exhibition on the theme: 'Germany's fate is in our hands'. Visitors to the exhibition, which opposes rearmament, are asked to go on record against the Paris Agreements and for the peaceful reunification of the country by signing the German Manifesto.

The delegates to the annual general meeting of the Socialist youth organisation, the 'Falcons', at Hildesheim and the participants in the youth conference of the engineers' trade union in Darmstadt rejected rearmament and military service and announced their determination to work for a peaceful agreement.

Appeal to all Women and Girls

The Presiding Committee of the West German Women's Peace Movement has issued an appeal to all women and girls calling on them to take part in the great common struggle against the London and Paris Agreements and not to relax their efforts until Germany has been united and general disarmament and the banning of atomic weapons have been obtained.

The Peasants

At Wernigerrode in the district of Magdeburg, several hundred peasants from both parts of Germany met to discuss the struggle against remilitarisation.

An appeal was issued to German peasants calling on them to work together with the patriotic forces of Germany against the implementation of the Paris Agreements. 'The policy of remilitarising Germany', says the Appeal, 'has already done great harm to the peasants of West Germany. The ratification of the Paris Agreements threatens even greater harm to German agriculture.'

Charleroi Engineers Send Message to Frankfurt Engineers

Several hundred workers of the Herstal division of A.C.E.C., an important Charleroi steelworks, have written to the engineers of Frankfurt in the German Federal Republic.

In their letter they recall their hostility to German militarism and conclude:

'These workers are at your side in the fight you are conducting and want to give you their support if it is needed. An exchange of views would be desirable with a view to developing the activity in our factory.'

At its recent annual congress, the National Federation of Belgian Ex-servicemen, which is a member of the World Federation of Ex-servicemen, adopted a resolution expressing 'ex-servicemen's anxiety at German rearmament and the possible use of weapons of mass destruction'.

In a resolution adopted at their recent congress, the Belgian Socialist Young Guard recall 'the positions adopted at the national congress in October: opposition to German rearmament; support for German Socialist youth; hostility to Chiang Kai-shek's regime; and the admission to U.N.O. of the People's Republic of China'.

Appeal for a European Workers' Conference

Following on a series of proposals emanating from factories in the North of France and taken up in other countries, and the meeting of a preparatory committee in Berlin, a European Workers' Conference will be held in Leipzig from April 22—24.

The appeal issued to the workers of Europe on the conference explains its aims in the following words:

'With anxiety you see international tension growing and gravely threatening you and your families. Your many actions in defence of your wages, your work and your rights are an expression of your preoccupation with the maintenance of peace and the improvement of your living standards. War budgets are becoming bigger and bigger. The armaments race is being speeded up . . . The Western powers rely above all on the German militarists who have unleashed war twice already. It is now intended to rearm them, though there is no doubt that war would be waged with weapons of mass destruction. The H bomb would blindly strike the workers down, making no distinctions.'

After bringing out the fact that all European workers have common interests, the appeal shows the great power the workers represent when united. It calls for a conference of workers and trade unionists of all tendencies and from every country in Europe to consolidate this unity — a conference to oppose German militarism, to defend the workers' living standards and rights, for prosperity and peace.

The appeal asks the workers to popularise the appeal and is signed by German, French, Czechoslovak, Polish, Italian, Swedish, Austrian and Danish workers.

Important Demonstration against Hydrogen Bomb in London

On Sunday, March 20, 5,000 people answered the call of the British Peace Committee to gather in Trafalgar Square, London, to protest against the British Government's decision to manufacture the hydrogen bomb.

This demonstration was the result of two weeks of intensive work by the national and local peace committees: 190,000 leaflets were distributed, 200 posters displayed at London Underground railway stations and a further 1,500 posters produced for local parades and the meeting itself.

The demonstration was addressed by Mr. R. Barrett, general secretary of the National Amalgamated Stevedores' and Dockers' union; Professor J. D. Bernal F.R.S., Vice-President of the World Council of Peace; Mr. John Burns, President of the Fire Brigades' Union; Councillor Edward Dixon, President of Coventry Trades Council; Mrs. Barbara Drake, well-known member of the Labour Party for 50 years; Mr. Theodore Harris, leading member of the Society of Friends; Mr. Harry Pollitt, general secretary of the Communist Party; and Miss Raymonde-Hawkins, member of the Sussex County Council.

A resolution adopted by the meeting called for support for the Appeal of the World Council of Peace.

After the meeting, in a procession a mile long, the 5,000 participants marched to the Cenotaph, where a wreath was laid, bearing the message 'In this atomic age Remembrance requires us to deepen our resolve that all shall live in peace.' The march took place in complete silence and its solemnity communicated itself to the thousands of bystanders who watched this moving ceremony.

Austria: Success of 'Chaplin Peace Fund' Competitions

The various competitions organised in Austria by the Charlie Chaplin Peace Fund Committee have had great success. The idea was born some months ago when the famous film actor and director decided to divide among the cities of London, Paris and Vienna the money he received as part of his International Peace Prize, stipulating that the money should be devoted to 'works inspired by a spirit of peace and understanding between the peoples'.

The number of participants shows the great interest which met the Chaplin Fund competitions. There were 440 entrants for the general competition on the question 'Why I stand for peace' and 234 in the literary competition on the theme 'Peace and understanding between the peoples'. Many composers and amateur photographers took part in the competitions for the best song on the theme 'Love of country and the desire for peace' and for the photo which best expressed the idea of 'Work, country and peace'. Moreover, 37 sports organisations submitted to the jury the names of those they consider to deserve the prize for the sportsman who through his activity has made an important contribution to the establishment of friendly relations between the peoples.

The various juries are composed of eminent intellectuals, writers, critics, artists and composers. The names of the prizewinners will be published shortly and the prizes will be awarded in May.

ROSAURA REVUELTAS, 'Salt of the Earth' Star, says:

Rosaura Revueltas as she appears in the film 'Salt of the Earth'.

'We cannot remain indifferent to the atomic threat'

The face of Rosaura Revueltas, the great Mexican actress, is already familiar to cinema goers in many countries. Those who have seen 'Salt of the Earth', that powerful film made in the United States, have had occasion to admire the gift of expression which enables her, in the principal role, to reflect the life and character of an ordinary woman. It is natural that Rosaura Revueltas, with her feeling for what is preoccupying the people, should oppose with all the passion of an artist the attempts that are being made to hurl mankind into atomic madness. Here is an extract from an interesting statement she has made on this subject:

'It is fine and reassuring to think that the people are beginning to take into their own hands an affair that so directly concerns them, and to see that never in history has there been such a wide, universal movement, and for such a noble aim, as the present one for the maintenance of peace. This must be seen as the true stamp of our civilisation, as the finest manifestation that man is determined to be free of the gloom of forest and cave to walk with firm stride across the fields of our vast world, without fear of being asked what country he belongs to.

'For many peoples the light is still wavering, but the dawn is near at hand, pregnant with life and prospects of happiness. In every town, village and hamlet, on every hill and road and ocean, in the mines, gazing excitedly through the microscope or devouring a book, kneeling on the granite floors of temples, there are people — people with simple, honest and human hearts — who want to live, to live a litte better if possible, but who are carrying the burden of a great anxiety and living in fear of a great catastrophe. American mothers, Chinese mothers, mothers of Great Britain, Russia, France, Japan, Germany and Spain... feel the sore and torturing memory of the dear ones they have lost pale into insignificance before their awful fear that this terrible nightmare could be repeated. Out of this fear and anguish and the sacred desire to save life the Peace Movement and all of us can and must weld the great force that can ward off mass death...

'What is needed is a real will for peace. There are millions of people who want peace but who think that it is useless to do anything, that there is nothing to fear or that fate will decide.

'This is where our work lies, in every corner of the world. We must organise those who are afraid, awake the sleepers and stimulate the pessimists. To this task we must all devote ourselves entirely.'

HOMAGE to ANDERSEN

The anniversary day of Andersen's birth, April 2, was commemorated in a variety of ways in many countries: radio and television broadcasts, lectures, films, articles, recitals, new editions of his works, essay competitions in the schools and so on.

The official celebrations in Denmark itself included a television broadcast from the house in Odense in which the great storyteller was born; the King of Denmark took part in the broadcast and read a message, while the British actor Michael Redgrave read two of Andersen's tales. There was also a procession of 5,000 children through the streets of Copenhagen; a great meeting in the Oddfellows Hall; and recitals by various artists in different parts of the town. Two great films were also presented for the first time: a documentary on Andersen's life by Jörgen Roos and a puppet film in colour based on the tale The Little Tin Soldier, made by the Norwegian director Ivo Caprino.

Then the Norden associations, which work for the development of the cultural, economic and social community of the Scandinavian countries, have announced an essay competition among Swedish, Finnish and Norwegian schoolchildren from 12 to 16 years of age on the following subject: 'Which of Andersen's tales do you prefer and why?' The prizewinners will visit Denmark for a week in the summer.

In the Soviet Union many events are being held in honour of Andersen. Lectures on his life and works are being given in the palaces of culture, clubs and libraries. The children's theatres are putting on various plays based on his tales and in the Pioneer Clubs special days have been appointed for the commemoration. On April 1st the Soviet Peace Committee, the Writers' Union and V.O.K.S. organised a well attended memorial meeting at the central children's theatre.

Germany Celebrates Schiller's Anniversary

The commemoration of the cultural anniversaries recommended by the World Council of Peace is going ahead in a number of countries. In Germany, in particular, important events in honour of Schiller will be held in Weimar from May 8-15 and well-known persons from Great Britain, Sweden, the Soviet Union, France, Czechoslovakia, Italy, Belgium, Poland and Norway have been invited to take part.

There will be a very varied programme, including concerts, plays — Wilhelm Tell and Wallenstein by the Weimar National Theatre, Don Carlos and Intrigue and Love by the Berlin Theatre, Marie Stuart by the Stuttgart Theatre, The Parasite by the Leipzig Theatre — memorial meetings, an international book sale, scientific discussions between German and foreign students at the German Students' Meeting at Jena, a carnival, a torchlight procession, and so on. Throughout the week visits to different parts of Weimar which have links with classical German literature will be organised.

Schiller will also be commemorated in other countries.

In Bulgaria, for example, there will be a memorial meeting in the National Theatre in Sofia on May 14, followed by a performance of Don Carlos. Memorial meetings have also been organised in various towns in the provinces.

In Rumania, the principal theatres will put on Don Carlos, The Robbers and Intrigue and Love.

Scrolls for the World Assembly

Proposal by the American artist Anton Refregier

Anton Refregier, the well-known American artist, has written from New York to the World Council of Peace with a proposal addressed to all artists who are friends of peace throughout the world.

In order that artists may contribute to the World Assembly through their art, Anton Refregier proposes that scrolls should be circulated to the painters and black-and-white artists of various countries. On these they would treat the theme of peace in the way they considered most appropriate.

An engraving on the theme of peace by the American painter Anton Refregier. It symbolises the beating of swords into ploughshares.

The scrolls would therefore illustrate the art of the different peoples, thereby symbolising international unity in the struggle for peace. They would be used to decorate the hall of the World Assembly in Helsinki and could then be exhibited in different parts of the world.

The first artists consulted on this proposal gave it their unqualified support. There is no doubt that it will receive the same welcome from all artists who defend the cause of peace and brotherhood between the peoples.

In order to facilitate the work and so that it may be ready by the time of the Assembly, it is proposed that one of the scrolls should go to the United States and Great Britain, another to Japan, China, India and the other countries of Asia, a third to France, Italy, Germany and Belgium, and others to the Soviet Union and the Eastern European countries, the Arab countries and Latin America.

London Sees Japanese Panels Condemning Atomic War

A great number of people, including many artists and intellectuals, have visited the exhibition of paintings by the Japanese artists, Toshiko Akamatsu and her husband Iri Maruki, which was held in London from March 26 to April 7. These 'Hiroshima Panels' depict the horrors of the atomic bomb raid on that city in 1945 and were presented by Artists for Peace, a grouping of artists with greatly differing political and aesthetic views, but united in their opposition to weapons of mass destruction.

The sculptor Sir Jacob Epstein inaugurated the exhibition which was also sponsored by other eminent persons in the field of art: Ruskin Spear A.R.A.; Carel Weight R.B.A.; Stanley Spencer C.B.E., R.A.; Leslie Hurry, a specialist in stage decoration; John Berger, art critic; the Welsh painter Josef Herman; and Denis Matthews R.A.

An exhibition of the same panels has been sponsored in Coventry by the City Council and the Anti-Hydrogen Bomb League.

The great effect that the exhibition has had once again shows the British people's anxiety before the atomic threat and their desire to put up a vigorous opposition to the use of these terror weapons.

Science for Peace

Annual General Meeting Considers Effects of Nuclear Weapons

Science for Peace was established at a national conference of scientists held in London in January 1952 and is open to all natural and social scientists, engineers and technical assistants. Its purpose is 'to unite scientists in actions towards removing the danger of a third world war and ensuring that science can be fully used for constructive purposes'.

It held its Annual General Meeting in London on March 26 with Professor F.G. Gregory F.R.S. in the chair. The meeting was followed by a public conference: 'Nuclear explosions — their long-term effects'.

The meteorological and biological aspects of this problem were dealt with by Professor P.A. Sheppard, who spoke on 'Nuclear Explosions and the Weather'; by Dr. J.H. Fremlin, who dealt with the suject of 'Radioactive Rain'; and by Dr. A. Ryle, who gave an account of the Japanese scientific reports on the biological effects of atomic explosions.

The second part of the conference was on the question 'Atoms for Peace — not War', the opening speaker being Dr. E.H.S. Burhop on the subject 'The Problem of Abolition and Control'.

The great American scientist Albert Einstein sent a message to the conference.

Paul Robeson Invited to Great Britain by Sportsmen, Theatrical Workers and Cine Technicians

The great American singer Paul Robeson has announced that he has accepted an invitation to appear at a series of concerts in Great Britain. The invitation was sent by Mr. Dave Curtis, General Secretary of the British Worker's Sports Association, for the Silver Jubilee Anniversary of the B.W.S.A. which is associated with the Trade Union Congress and the Labour Party. It was also signed by Mr. Tom O'Brien, General Secretary of the National Association of Theatrical and Kine Employees, and Mr. George Elvin, General Secretary of the Association of Cine Technicians. The invitation also carried with it the request for Mr. Robeson to appear on May 1st at a concert in the Adelphi Theatre in London, sponsored by Reynolds News, official organ of the British Co-operative Movement.

In replying to the communication, Mr. Robeson said: 'Nothing gives me greater pleasure than to accept your invitation. I have a deep interest in all sports developments... Since my days as an All-American football player at Rutgers University I have had a continuing interest in sports. Particularly am I pleased that the Adelphi Theatre concert is to aid the International Fund, the purpose of which is to assist and encourage the visit of British workers' teams and cultural groups to other countries. Such exchange undoubtedly helps to promote friendship and understanding among peoples.'

Mr. Robeson mentioned in his reply that the Silver Jubilee Anniversary coincides with his own thirtieth anniversary as a singer and actor and that many friends in the United States have indicated that they will mark this occasion in many ways throughout the year.

He again called attention to the fact that since 1950, the U.S. State Department has continued its refusal to renew his passport and that a suit is now pending in the Federal Court.

'However,' said Mr. Robeson, 'I consider this invitation of such importance that I am exploring all available avenues in order to fulfil these engagements. To me, the invitation is significant evidence of the united desire of the majority of the British people to have me continue my long personal association with them. This is very heartening. I look forward to the time when a similar united expression takes place in these United States to guarantee for all people the right to travel without arbitrary restrictions.'

The Signature Campaign in Argentine

On March 5, the opening day of the campaign in Argentine, ten teams of collectors started collecting door-to-door in the Paternal district of Buenos Aires. March 19 and 20 were observed as special collecting days. Seventeen teams went out and one of them announced with enthusiasm that even soldiers did not refuse to sign.

This fact deserves mention because it shows the growing success of the campaign in Argentine. And good news of decisive experiences is coming in from many districts of the capital.

In the Central district ten teams collected 1,217 signatures on March 19 and 20. In a cafe one of the regular customers went from table to table collecting. He got 60 signatures, including the orchestra.

A team in the Almagro South district stated that out of 30 houses visited, only three people refused to sign.

Of course, everyone collects signatures in his or her own circle. A doctor has so far collected 120 among his patients and neighbours; a Protestant milliner collects among her clients; a bus conductor collects signatures among his passengers; a worker in a refrigerating factory of the town of Eva Peron, formerly La Plata, has collected 60 signatures among his workmates; a sales-girl in a big shop in Buenos Aires got those of the 30 girls working at the same counter, and so on.

The local peace committees are intensifying their publicity work. For example, the Santa Fe Provincial Peace Council has sent more than 3,000 letters to organisations and personalities asking them to join in the campaign and has taken steps to ensure a big attendance at the first conference in the northern region of the province.

The peace committee of the Mataderos district has issued 10,000 sticky-backs against the thermonuclear tests it is planned to hold in the Antarctic. In this district the young people are playing an active part in the campaign and have set up a number of committees.

A Good Idea

This information on the campaign in Argentine was sent to us by a correspondent who says in his letter that he is going to send in news for the Bulletin every week.

At a house meeting in Villa Crespo a new peace committee was formed; it decided to take part in the collection of signatures and enthusiastically welcomed the proposal to send a delegate to the World Assembly in Helsinki. It should be stressed that many local peace committees have been set up in the course of the campaign, both in Buenos Aires and in the provinces: three in the Liniers district of the capital; another in the garage of the Central District Transport Corporation; a third committee has been set up in Barrio Once; seven in the department of San Cristobal in the province of Santa Fe; one has been set up by the book-keepers of Rosario; a regional council has been formed in Ianus and a factory committee at Vicente Lopez in the province of Buenos Aires; and one each at Rivadavia, Eray Luis Beltran and Godoy Cruz in the province of Mendoza.

As a result of the campaign the Peace Council of Entre Rios has begun to function and it has set up committees in the towns of Diamante and Concordia.

The campaign has met with a great response among the people and new circles have given their support to the Vienna Appeal. In a parish near the town of Eva Peron it was signed by the priest and 180 of his congregation. It has also been signed by the director of the newspaper El Litoral of Santa Fe, by a number of industrialists of the same city and the leader of the tobacco workers' trade union. At Ramos Mejia in the province of Buenos Aires a group of women got Socialist and Radical women to take part in the campaign, together with priests and tradesmen.

The Appeal has also been supported by many branch leaders of the Peronista Party and by personalities and members of the Radical Party. A local peace committee of the province of Buenos Aires states that members of Catholic Action are participating in the campaign. A leader of this organisation has personally distributed the Appeal and has had it published in the local organ of Catholic Action.

'Atomic Weapons and International Law'

A pamphlet by Professor Heinrich Brandweiner

The German Peace Council has just published a pamphlet by Professor Heinrich Brandweiner, President of the Austrian Peace Council, member of the German Academy of Sciences and Professor of Canon Law at Graz University. The pamphlet is entitled 'Atomic Weapons and International Law' and is a legal exposition of the problems of atomic war. The Stockholm and Vienna Appeals are reproduced on the first page. A high scientific level is maintained throughout but the pamphlet can be understood by anyone.

Using scientific arguments, Professor Brandweiner shows that the use of atomic weapons in the event of war is a violation of international law. Similarly, he proves that the Bikini hydrogen bomb tests were a triple violation of international law. His detailed criticism of the theories of eminent American lawyers which justify the use of atomic weapons by the United Nations in the event of war — theories which have no basis in law — will also arouse great interest.

Round the World with the Vienna Appeal . . .

Geneva

Many trade union organisations have endorsed the Vienna Appeal or have passed resolutions which support its aims.

At their general meetings, the workers of the Similor, Hispano, Gardy, Charmilles and Nationale engineering factories have gone on record for the banning of thermonuclear weapons.

Committees of persons representing all circles are being organised to collect signatures in the various districts of the city. The young members of the Free Youth are distinguishing themselves in the collection of signatures; they have already got more than 2,000.

Toronto

The National Executive Committee of the Canadian Workers' Benevolent Society (membership 14,000) has enthusiastically welcomed the Vienna Appeal. It asks all its supporters and all honest people to sign.

Stockholm

The Stockholm Municipal Worker's Union has unanimously decided to support the Vienna Appeal.

Two young people, Sylvia Nilsson and Anders Blomkvist, have collected 700 signatures between them.

Montevideo

In Montevideo on March 11 the Uruguayan Peace Council held an extended meeting which was attended by representative of trade unions and a variety of organisations, some of which do not support the Movement. The trade union representatives stated that the collection of signatures against atomic war had successfully begun in the factories.

An appeal adopted at the end of the meeting asks the people of Uruguay to sign the Vienna Appeal and decisions were taken which will ensure that Uruguay is worthily represented at the World Assembly in Helsinki.

Luxemburg

The signature campaign was opened at the beginning of April by the Luxemburg Peace Movement together with other forces for peace. During March the aims of the campaign had been popularised through meetings, posters and articles in the press.

Subscription lists are being circulated to cover the costs of the delegation to the World Assembly.

Oslo

The Oslo section of the Sheet-Metal Workers' Union has sent to the president of the Parliament a letter which says;

'We oppose the putting of atomic weapons into the hands of German military men. Atomic energy must be used for peaceful purposes and not for war. The only solution, therefore, is that the use of atomic weapons be banned.'

Warsaw

At meetings and demonstrations in Poland, workers and peasants, teachers and students are demanding the banning of atomic and thermonuclear weapons and the destruction of all stocks of these weapons. In the voivode of Bydgoszcz, for example more than 2,000 such meetings were held in the towns and villages.

A delegation has handed to the Dutch Government a letter signed by 200 doctors, artists, priests and writers. The letter asks the Government to go on record at the United Nations for the banning of all atomic weapons and the stopping of all atomic bomb tests.

The world campaign against the preparations for atomic war

Questions and Answers

STATEMENT OF THE BUREAU OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

In every country in the world, the Appeal of the World Council of Peace in favour of the destruction of atomic weapons and the stopping of their manufacture is rousing the conscience of all who are horrified at the prospect of a war of extermination. It meets the hopes of those who confidently believe that the peoples can prevent atomic slaughter.

We greet the many organisations and well-known public figures, indeed all, who, in various ways, are protesting against the preparation of atomic war.

The danger of atomic war has become more definite. Statesmen are freely threatening to use thermonuclear weapons. Governments which as yet do not possess them have decided to make them or are considering their manufacture. Attempts are being made to justify employment of these frightful weapons or to present their existence as a guarantee of peace, whereas in fact they increase the danger of aggression and can bring mankind only death and destruction.

The signature campaign is the means whereby the universal detestation of atomic weapons can so express itself as to induce all governments possessing them to agree to their abolition under strict control, an agreement which would constitute an important step toward general disarmament.

The peoples can make their voices heard to such effect that no government will dare face their disapproval.

Vienna, March 13, 1955.

The world campaign against the preparations for atomic war

Questions and Answers

At THE PRESENT TIME A GREAT CAMPAIGN IS BEING conducted against the preparations for atomic war. It expresses the growing revulsion against atomic weapons in every country and in all circles. It is based on the following Appeal, launched in Vienna on January 19 by the Bureau of the World Council of Peace:

Today, certain governments are preparing to let loose atomic war.

They are trying to make the peoples accept it as inevitable.

The use of atomic weapons would result in a war of extermination.

We declare that any government that lets loose atomic war will forfeit the trust of its people and find itself condemned by every people of the world.

Now and in the future, we shall oppose those who organise atomic war.

We demand the destruction of all stocks of atomic weapons wherever they may be and the immediate stopping of their manufacture.

In every country, men and women are being asked to sign this Appeal — to defend their children, their future, the security of their country, the wellbeing of mankind.

1 Why does the World Council of Peace state: 'Today, certain governments are preparing to let loose atomic war?'

On December 17 and 18, 1954, the Council of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation met in Paris and approved a report presented by its military staff. This report plans the use of atomic weapons in the event of war. By adopting it, the N.A.T.O. Council authorised the general staffs to take all the necessary military measures — e.g. equipment of armies, training, etc. — to prepare for atomic war.

The N.A.T.O. Council is composed of members of the governments of the following countries: the United States, Great Britain, France, Canada, Italy, Belgium, Holland, Luxemburg, Denmark, Norway, Iceland, Portugal, Greece and Turkey. No minister can take such an important decision without his government's approval. This means that these governments have officially decided to prepare for atomic war.

These preparations, accompanied by open threats to use force, are leading to an atomic war.

2 What would an atomic war mean?

Up till now there has been no war waged with atomic weapons on both sides. It is therefore difficult to foresee the full effects of an atomic conflict.

However, in August 1945 two atomic bombs were dropped, on Hiroshima and Nagasaki. Since that time, new atomic weapons have been developed. Japanese fishermen ninety miles away from the Bikini test explosion on March 1st, 1954, were gravely injured by the radioactive effects of the H bomb. One has since died.

During the Second World War Great Britain was the target for hundreds of air raids; the hundreds of thousands of bombs dropped day and night throughout these years caused enormous damage and killed 70,000 people.

One single atomic bomb on Hiroshima practically wiped out the city and annihilated 200,000 human beings at one blow. Today, responsible scientists tell us, the H bomb can cause destruction 1,000 to 2,000 times greater that that of the bomb dropped on Hiroshima. It can destroy everything without exception in a circle twelve to twenty miles across, and cause death in a circle 120 miles across.

This means that, in an atomic war, whole peoples could be wiped out indiscriminately, cities levelled to the ground and small countries transformed into radioactive deserts. An atomic war would be a war of extermination.

That is why the decision to prepare for atomic war is extremely grave. It demands immediate action from all peoples.

3 Does the danger of atomic war threaten all countries?

The N.A.T.O. Council's decision to use atomic weapons sets up a general principle. Thus the danger which it gives rise to is general, not confined to any one area.

It hangs over Europe. Any war there would be likely to become a world war; this would be an atomic war. The full force of the danger becomes clear when this N.A.T.O. decision is set alongside the attempts to rearm Germany, that is, to set up a new Wehrmacht in which former Hitler generals would be armed with atomic weapons.

But it goes far, very far, beyond Europe. Some governments in the Atlantic Pact at the same time belong to other military pacts, particularly in the countries of Asia and the Pacific. They maintain armed forces and many military bases there. So the principle of atomic war which they have adopted, applies just as much to other parts of the world. The very real threats to use atomic weapons in the Far East confirm this.

The countries of Latin America and Africa possess the raw materials needed for the manufacture of nuclear weapons. There are military bases and dumps on their territoires. They could thus be plunged into the midst of an atomic war against their will.

The atomic threat can also be used to bring greater blackmail and pressure to bear on countries struggling to win or defend their independence.

Not even the neutral countries could escape the danger from the widespread destructive effects of atomic weapons.

4 Is the World Council's campaign biassed against certain governments?

The World Council works for peace. It does not defend or attack any particular government. Its principle is: non-interference in the internal affairs of countries.

But in working for peace it cannot be indifferent to any acts which raise the fundamental questions of peace or war. Its duty is to support any moves for peace, whatever government proposes them, and to oppose any actions likely to lead to war.

The present campaign has been launched to meet a very real danger which arises from the official plans of certain governments to prepare atomic war. The World Council calls on the peoples to oppose such plans and preparations irrespective of what government or system they may prefer.

Clearly, so long as atomic weapons exist, there will be a danger of atomic war. The World Council therefore says: destroy all stocks of atomic weapons and stop their manufacture. This applies, without distinction, to every country which has got them.

5 Does not both sides having atomic weapons guarantee that they won't be used?

The idea behind this question is this: Atomic attack means atomic retaliation; anyone using atomic weapons therefore invites destruction; no one would be mad enough to do so.

It is true that atomic weapons have enormous destructive power. But this very fact is an encouragement to aggression, not an obstacle. For an aggressor might think that by striking first he could gain a decisive advantage.

Modern history shows that, like Hitler, all adventurers have struck the first blow because they thought themselves the stronger — and also that they got involved in war and catastrophe on a scale that they had never expected. In the atomic age, such calculations can have even more disastrous results.

The idea that a huge stockpile of atomic weapons would guarantee security is also unfounded. Arms races have always led to war; the atomic arms race can only lead to a war of extermination. Once more the peoples would be the victims.

6 Why does the World Council demand particularly the abolition of atomic weapons?

Because atomic weapons are the most dangerous, and threaten the greatest number of people. An aggressor always uses the weapons that can do the most damage. Today this means atomic weapons, so the threat to use them is the main danger.

At the same time as calling for banning atomic weapons, the World Council has always supported disarmament. It has made specific proposals to this effect to the United Nations Organisation. It still maintains these proposals and has called on the people to support them.

Today, the banning of atomic weapons is an essential condition for reducing international tension and would be a decisive step towards general disarmament. It would make possible the full use of the vast power of atomic energy for peaceful purposes and human happiness.

7 Shouldn't banning war be the first step?

The World Council wants the elimination of war as a means of settling international differences. It is profoundly convinced that all differences between nations can be settled by peaceful means: that is what it exists for.

For this reason the World Council has always based its action on practical proposals to prevent recourse to war. The campaigns to end the wars in Korea and Indo-China and for the great powers to settle their differences through peaceful negotiations examples of this.

So is the present campaign to abolish atomic weapons. It seeks to eliminate the gravest and most immediate danger, that of a war of extermination.

One can have different views on the best way of making war impossible; but no one can be unaware of the need, first of all and before it is too late, to prevent atomic war.

8 Can the use of atomic weapons be prevented?

There are precedents to show that it is possible to ban particular weapons. In the Geneva Convention of 1925, for example, the powers pledged themselves not to use poison gas. This was respected during the Second World War; none of the belligerents dared face the outburst of anger that would certainly have been provoked by the use of gas.

An agreement now to abolish atomic weapons would carry an even more powerful sanction, for it would be backed by the clearly expressed will of the people.

The successes already obtained by the growing pressure show that such an agreement is possible.

The strength of opinion expressed through the Stockholm Appeal put a stop to threats to use atomic weapons in Korea. The signature campaign for a Five Power Peace Pact established the idea of negotiations in the minds of the people: it led to the Berlin and Geneva meetings of the great powers to discuss the peaceful settlement of their differences. Public opinion was respected. The wars in Korea and Indo-China, which might have developed into atomic wars, were stopped.

9 What good is a signature?

A signature is a conscious, individual act. By signing an appeal, a man or woman shows his or her personal support for it. Obviously, one signature by itself will not prevent the outbreak of atomic war. But small streams come together to make great rivers — and hundreds of millions of signatures mount and mount; they become an irresistible flood, with all the significance and power of a universal demand. No authority — not a government nor a parliament — can ignore so clear and definite an expression of public opinion.

The World Council's campaign makes it possible to express the general revulsion against atomic weapons with enough force to bring about their abolition.

In this immense task every signature counts.

MANKIND MUST CHOOSE

With the title 'Mankind Must Choose', the eminent physicist, Dr. E. H. S. Burhop, has just written a pamphlet on 'What the atomic war plans mean to you'. Starting off with a telling exposure of the dangerous decisions of the N.A.T.O. Council last December, Dr. Burhop exposes the dishonesty of some of the main arguments put forward by those who defend the use of atomic weapons. He shows how close the powers have come to a possible basis of agreement on disarmament, and how the possibilites of agreement are wrecked by the N.A.T.O. decisions; he shows clearly what the peoples have to expect if these weapons are used in war, and he shows how they have it in their power to change these decisions and to ensure that atomic war is not allowed to start.

This pamphlet will bring more people to understand that every man must take his place in the struggle, since he is faced with this choice: either the use of atomic energy in a war of mass destruction or the use of atomic energy for the well-being and security of mankind.

This pamphlet is published by the Secretariat of the World Council of Peace and is available now.

Numéro spécial sur le péril atomique

AVRIL 1955 — MENSUEL — 6e ANNEE — No 4 PRIX : 2 FRANCS

L'heure H a-t-elle sonné pour le monde ?

L'ENERGIE nucléaire, grande découverte de notre époque va-t-elle servir au bonheur des hommes ou à leur perte ?

La question se pose à l'heure présente de façon particulièrement grave et décisive.

Depuis novembre dernier, l'opinion mondiale est avertie par de hautes autorités scientifiques que les expériences atomiques répandent à la surface du globe une radioactivité de plus en plus grande, capable d'altérer profondément nos climats et de causer chez les êtres humains de graves troubles génétiques. Notamment, les futures générations humaines pourront subir de profondes modifications à caractère monstrueux.

Voilà la menace ! Devant ces perspectives d'horreur, qui ne voit la mesquinerie criminelle de ceux qui prétendent encore rechercher contre l'adversaire des « situations de force » alors même que celles-ci conduiront inévitablement à un massacre généralisé ?

Combien misérable apparaît l'argument selon lequel aucun adversaire n'osera employer contre l'autre l'arme nouvelle, comme ce fut le cas, ajoute-t-on, des gaz asphyxiants à la guerre précédente.

C'est oublier que l'efficacité stratégique de l'arme thermonucléaire est jugée décisive par les milieux autorisés, ce qui ne fut jamais le cas des gaz toxiques.

Non, on n'empêchera pas la guerre atomique en se refusant simplement à la croire possible.

Dans un récent passé, l'Appel de Stockholm a empêché par son retentissement mondial, l'utilisation de l'arme atomique en Corée.

Il faut qu'à nouveau tous les hommes conscients, indistinctement menacés, s'unissent contre le péril.

A coup sûr, l'heure H a sonné pour le monde : c'est pour chacun, celle du choix et des responsabilités.

Il faut définitivement désavouer la bombe H comme première contribution importante au désarmement général.

Dix ans après, la bombe A tait encore des victimes à Nagasaki et Hiroshima

IL y a encore actuellement au Japon 200.000 personnes qui souffrent du « mal atomique ».

A Hiroshima, d'octobre 1953 à octobre 1954, quatorze personnes âgées de 12 à 68 ans, sont décédées de maladies atomiques : leucémie aiguë, leucémie myélique, anémie pernicieuse et autres maladies de la moelle.

Ces maladies sont incurables et peuvent se révéler des années après la période dite « dangereuse ».

LES ENFANTS

Depuis le jour néfaste d'août 1945 où une bombe atomique américaine a été lancée sur Nagasaki, sur sept nouveau-nés de cette ville, un est anormal, selon les statistiques qui viennent d'être publiées. En neuf ans, 30.150 enfants sont nés à Nagasaki sur lesquels 4.282 sont anormaux. Il y a eu 471 morts-nés et 181 cas d'avortements. En outre, 1.046 enfants sont nés avec une ossature ou un système nerveux déficients, ou encore des défauts de la peau ou des muscles ; 429 enfants sont nés avec des déformations des organes de l'odorat et de l'ouïe ; 254 avec les lèvres ou la langue déformées, 59 avec le palais fendu, 243 avec des déformations d'organes internes ; 47 avec le cerveau insuffisamment développé ; 25 sans cerveau et 8 sans yeux et sans orbites.

La durée de la vie diminue

L'hebdomadaire « Newsweek » du 7 mars 1955 écrit :

« Les autorités atomiques cachent une histoire brûlante : à cause des radiations, les survivants japonais des bombes A semblent vieillir prématurément. Des milliers de certificats de décès de survivants d'Hiroshima montrent que leur durée de vie serait moins longue que celle de la moyenne des Japonais (presque soixante ans)... »

Et ce n'était qu'une « petite » bombe A...

Récit d'un rescapé

Le professeur Yo Ming-Cheh, professeur à l'Université de Pékin, raconte :

« J'étais étudiant à l'Université des Arts et des Sciences d'Hiroshima en 1945, j'avais été retenu par la guerre et je ne pouvais pas retourner en Chine... » Il travaillait dans une pièce sombre du laboratoire, bâtiment de béton armé, le matin de cette journée fatale du 6 août où la bombe atomique a été lancée.

« Je courus dans la rue, la ville était un enfer. Partout gisaient des morts ou des mourants, leurs vêtements brûlés, leur peau carbonisée par une chaleur de 2.000 degrés engendrée par la bombe. Le feu a fait rage pendant cinq jours et cinq nuits. La ville jadis si belle a été transformée en un amas de ruines. »

... Et ce n'était qu'une petite bombe A !

UNE OMBRE qui donne à réfléchir

A 500 mètres du centre de l'explosion de la bombe atomique à Hiroshima, se trouve une banque, dont les marches sont entourées d'une simple barrière. Si l'on regarde à l'intérieur, on aperçoit l'ombre d'un être humain.

Apparemment, un homme était assis sur les marches et méditait, la tête entre les mains, le coude sur son genou.

La lueur fulgurante dégagée par l'explosion dans cette direction, a gravé l'ombre de cet homme sur les marches ; naturellement, il a été anéanti sur-le-champ, par suite de la radio-activité intense, mais l'ombre noire est toujours là, méditant...

(Extrait de la préface du Dr. Arata Osada, professeur à l'Université d'Hiroshima pour « Les enfants de la bombe atomique. »)

Trouvera-t-on un jour VOTRE ombre sur le mur de votre maison ?

Danger dans le ciel !

IL y a quelques semaines, les journaux ont annoncé qu'un nuage atomique avait traversé l'Ecosse. Venant des régions des Etats-Unis où, durant ces derniers temps, ont eu lieu une longue série d'explosions expérimentales, une masse de particules radioactives a donc traversé une grande partie du continent américain, franchi l'Atlantique, survolé l'Ecosse et s'est rapprochée de nos régions.

L'opinion britannique s'est émue, de même que les milieux scientifiques. Le passage de cette menace dans le ciel européen faisait soudain surgir cette vérité extraordinaire, difficilement assimilable pour nos esprits formés dans l'ère pré-atomique : pour n'importe quel être vivant sur la terre, toute explosion nucléaire où qu'elle se produise est un danger.

Les ravages qui seraient provoqués par une bombe H dans un rayon de quelques centaines de kilomètres sont connus. Des Japonais en ont fait, il y a un an, la tragique expérience.

Ceux qu'à plus long terme subiraient les hommes de n'importe qu'elle région du globe ont été évoqués récemment par plusieurs savants, et nous avons cité dans un numéro précédent la déclaration de M. Charles-Noël Martin, que l'on peut résumer comme suit : « Il arrivera un moment où, par suite de l'accumulation des effets des explosions nucléaires, les conditions qui permettent l'existence de la vie sur la terre disparaîtront. »

La folie des hommes serait-elle à ce point démesurée qu'il faille attendre la preuve statistique ? La raison ne viendra-t-elle qu'avec, par exemple, l'augmentation du nombre de naissances d'enfants anormaux ?

Nous n'en sommes pas là. La passivité du public disparaît progressivement. Le mécontentement grandit en Amérique même. Mais, comprenons-le bien : le nuage d'Ecosse est un avertissement ; c'est maintenant que, sous la pression de l'opinion publique alertée et décidée à se faire entendre, les gouvernements doivent se sentir obligés de consacrer toute leur énergie à négocier d'urgence un accord général sur l'interdiction des armes nucléaires.

professeur adjoint à l'Institut des Maladies Infectieuses de Tokyo

En tant que Japonais qui à trois reprises ai souffert des armes atomiques, et aussi en qualité de professeur en médecine ayant participé aux enquêtes sur les effets de la bombe A, j'adresse mes salutations cordiales aux amis belges qui luttent contre les armes atomiques et pour la Paix dans le monde.

Un rapide bilan d'un petit essai d'explosion atomique

LE 1er mars, le « Fukuryu Maru », bateau de pêche japonais, se trouvait à 71 miles (114 km.) de l'Atoll de Bikini, en dehors et bien loin de la zone dite « dangereuse », en vue des essais d'explosion atomique.

N'empêche que les vingt-trois hommes qui se trouvaient à bord furent tous atteints de lésions atomiques (brûlures, leucocémie, etc.), graves, incurables, voire mortelles.

Le 23 septembre 1954, M. Kuhoyama, opérateur-radio à bord du bateau de pêche, décédait à l'hôpital universitaire de Tokyo des suites des blessures atomiques.

Deux cent trente tonnes de poisson ont, à la même époque, dû être rejetées à la mer parce que révélées hautement radioactives, et d'avril à novembre 1954, soit sept à huit mois après l'événement, en moyenne 50 tonnes de thon par mois durent être rejetées !

Du point de vue commerce et industrie, les pertes dues à l'explosion furent estimées à quelque 15 millions de dollars (750 millions de francs belges).

Du 16 au 20 mai 1954, l'eau de pluie qui tomba sur le Japon était dangereusement radioactive (contrôle universitaire).

L'air était dangereusement radioactif et une autopsie pratiquée sur les corps de deux personnes décédées à cette époque révéla une radioactivité extraordinaire sur leurs poumons (examens effectués par des professeurs d'université).

Du fait de l'eau de pluie, tous les produits agricoles de la récolte de l'été 1954, depuis les choux et les oignons jusqu'au riz et au thé, renfermaient une haute teneur radioactive (recherches effectuées par les services techniques du Ministère de l'Agriculture du Japon).

A noter que les effets de la radioactivité sont héréditaires et cumulatifs !

Le Bureau météorologique américain déclare officiellement que le mauvais temps n'est pas dû aux explosions atomiques. Mais l'article commence ainsi :

(« U.S. News and World Report », 4 mars 1955.)

« La complexité des phénomènes physiques mis en jeu lors d'une explosion de bombe à fission ou de bombe thermonucléaire dépasse largement les possibilités actuelles d'en calculer théoriquement les effets avec précision. » Ainsi s'exprime M. Charles-Noël Martin au début d'une note présentée à l'Académie des Sciences de France par M. Louis de Broglie. Il n'en estime pas moins que certains effets sont à l'échelle du globe terrestre et « risquent d'entraîner, en s'accumulant, des conséquences particulièrement graves, sinon dramatiques ».

Les effets climatiques seraient les suivants : interception partielle du rayonnement solaire ; chutes localisées de pluies diluviennes au passage des fragments du champignons porteurs de centres de condensation d'acide nitrique, d'ions radioactifs et de poussières ; régimes des vents modifiés par le déséquilibre local du processus d'évaporation et de variation de température moyenne.

CHARLES NOEL MARTIN
(dans un rapport présenté à l'Académie Française des Sciences.)

« Depuis que les bombes nucléaires explosent, voici dix ans, c'est la terre qui sert de laboratoire et tout le règne vivant, y compris l'homme, qui sert de cobaye. Les conséquences s'étageront sur des années, des générations. »

(L'Express, 27 nov. 1954.)

Les heures ne compteront plus

Nous citons le journal américain U.S. News and World Report du 25 février 1955 :

Les armes atomiques ne seront pas utilisées " en soutien " des forces terrestres ; c'est le contraire qui sera le but... " Notre objectif ", déclare un général américain, " sera principalement homicide ; et le principal instrument d'homicide sera l'explosion atomique "...

Faut-il voir là un moyen de " défendre la civilisation " ? Citons encore :

" La " compression du temps " signifie que les heures compteront comme des mois de la deuxième guerre mondiale, les minutes comme des jours ; elle signifie que l'on pourra infliger plus de pertes et de dégâts en une semaine que durant des années de guerre classique... "

Et comme il est prévu que la guerre atomique future serait... " si étendue qu'elle prendra cinq ans et coûtera des millions de dollars... " un simple calcul nous montre que, dans les milieux où l'on fait ces prévisions, on envisage, pour la prochaine guerre, au moins 500 fois plus de dégâts et de pertes que durant la dernière. Autant dire qu'il ne resterait plus grand monde sur terre, pour se plaindre de ce qu'on ait dépensé des milliards de dollars !

Hier et demain

Personne, pensent certains, n'osera déclencher la guerre atomique, dont les conséquences inimaginables feraient reculer les plus agressifs.

A cela, Jules Moch répond dans « La Folie des Hommes » :

« Réfléchissons et considérons un passé hideux : Hitler et les gardes-chiourme des camps de la mort, des chambres à gaz et des fours crématoires eussent-ils, au nom de la morale, hésité à recourir à un tel anéantissement de l'homme, s'ils l'avaient possédé et s'ils avaient eu la certitude de pouvoir, grâce à lui, étendre leur domination à l'univers ? »

Et pouvons-nous affirmer qu'il n'y aura jamais, qu'il n'y a pas déjà, peut-être, un nouvel Hitler ?

Il y a déjà, hélas, des généraux que cette perspective ne semble pas effrayer. Le général français Chassin, chef des forces aériennes en Extrême-Orient à l'époque de la guerre d'Indochine, écrit : « L'emploi de la bombe H n'a rien de plus immoral que celui de lances-flammes, des rockets, des bombes incendiaires, des torpilles acoustiques ou des mines à retardement. »

The Times (22 décembre 1954)
Interwiew de Foster Dulles :

« Il a exposé que la politique militaire en cours inclurait graduellement l'utilisation des armes atomiques pour des buts tactiques de même que la poudre à canon a supplanté l'arbalète...

La question de l'emploi ou du non-emploi des armes de destruction massive se pose dans toute guerre et — a avancé M. Dulles — n'implique pas de distinction entre le pouvoir de destruction des armes atomiques et celui des armes anciennes ».

A propos des mesures de protection

Dans l'état actuel de la science médicale, on ne peut guérir à aucun degré de la maladie atomique. On peut simplement affaiblir les effets de la radio-activité sur le corps humain. La " maladie atomique " se manifeste par les effets suivants : diminution des globules blancs, apparition de cancers, maladies de la peau, manque de défense de l'organisme contre les microbes, effets sur la descendance.

" ...Au terme de cette étude de la défense contre les attaques thermonucléaires, nous aboutissons aux conclusions suivantes :

Aucune défense passive, aucun éparpillement de la population, aucun abri non profondément enterré, ne protège efficacement contre celles-ci... "

Jules Moch dans
" La Folie des hommes ".

Le directeur de la Défense passive, M. Val Paterson, conseillait récemment aux New-Yorkais (qui sont 8 millions) de se tenir prêts à évacuer la ville ; pour quiconque est au courant des problèmes de la circulation à New-York, c'est évidemment une absurdité. M. Paterson a également laissé entendre que la solution du problème se trouvait dans la prière : " Il faut prier ", a-t-il déclaré à ses compatriotes.

" Aucune mesure efficace ne peut être prise en Hollande contre la bombe atomique, a déclaré le Ministre de la Défense au Parlement hollandais. "

(N. Y. Herald Tribune, 12 mars 1955.)

" Nous devrons nous enterrer dans des trous, niveler nos villes que des lacs remplaceront ", a écrit un savant américain prévoyant les conséquences des bombardements atomiques. Et le docteur Lapp semble savoir ce dont il parle : il a été directeur du bureau des recherches au ministère de la Défense des Etats-Unis.

Des armes atomiques sont déjà disponibles en Europe pour les Forces de l'OTAN

Dans un article du « New York Times » du 19 novembre 1954, intitulé « L'O.T.A.N. a jeté les dés pour la défense atomique », M. Hanson W. Baldwin décrit les armes atomiques disponibles, en plus des « bombes thermo-nucléaires dont la puissance explosive est de millions de tonnes de T.N.T. » Il déclare :

« Des armes atomiques d'une puissance moindre descendant jusqu'à 12 ou 14 kilotonnes (mille tonnes de T.N.T.) sont prêtes en Europe et à la périphérie de l'Europe depuis déjà assez longtemps.

A terre, la 49me division aérienne américaine, stationnée en Angleterre et équipée de F-84 Republic Thunderjets et de bombardiers légers B-45, est chargée depuis longtemps d'apporter le soutien atomique aux forces de terre de l'O.T.A.N. »

Il présente ensuite la liste suivante de ce qui est disponible en Europe :

Cinq groupes d'artillerie de six canons de 280 mm. (canons atomiques) — portée 30 km.

Plusieurs groupes d'artillerie de canons lance-fusées de 762 mm. — portée 30 km.

Engins guidés à vitesse supersonique « Corporal » — portée 160 km.

Deux escadrilles d'engins aériens guidés ou avions sans pilote. — portée 800 km.

LE PERIL ATOMIQUE SOULEVE LA REPROBATION UNIVERSELLE

Déclaration du bureau du Conseil Mondial de la Paix

DANS tous les pays, l'Appel du Conseil Mondial pour obtenir la destruction des armes atomiques et l'arrêt de leur fabrication éveille la conscience de tous ceux qu'angoisse la perspective d'une guerre d'extermination. Il répond aux espoirs de ceux qui ont confiance dans les peuples pour empêcher les massacres atomiques.

Nous saluons toutes les organisations, toutes les personnalités, tous ceux qui, sous de multiples formes, se prononcent contre la préparation de la guerre atomique.

Le danger de la guerre atomique s'est encore précisé. Des hommes d'Etat brandissent la menace de l'utilisation des armes thermo-nucléaires. Des gouvernements qui ne les possèdaient pas encore ont décidé ou envisagent leur fabrication. On tente de justifier l'emploi de ces armes monstrueuses ou de présenter leur existence comme un gage de paix, alors qu'elles renforcent le risque d'agression et ne peuvent apporter aux hommes que la destruction et la mort.

La campagne de signatures permet à la réprobation universelle contre les armes atomiques de s'exprimer avec assez de force pour obtenir de tous les gouvernements qui les possèdent un accord sur leur abolition rigoureusement contrôlée, lequel serait un pas important vers le désarmement général.

Les peuples ont la possibilité de se faire entendre assez haut pour qu'aucun gouvernement n'ose braver leur réprobation.

Vienne, le 13 mars 1955.

Prenant la parole à Lyon, au cours d'une réunion, le cardinal Gerbier, après avoir parlé de la menace que représentait la bombe atomique, a conclu :

« Ah ! puissent tous les hommes, tous les chrétiens d'être d'accord pour stigmatiser semblable aberration et travailler à créer cette unanimité de l'opinion internationale qui sera seule susceptible de réaliser l'union de tous les chefs de peuples contre la guerre et contre l'utilisation d'un procédé de destruction qui déshonorerait l'humanité. »

APPEL
contre le péril atomique

Les expériences sur la bombe H et la course aux armements atomiques font courir à l'humanité un danger qui s'aggrave chaque jour.

L'usage de ces armes conduirait à une guerre d'extermination.

A l'appel du Conseil Mondial de la Paix partout dans le monde les peuples mènent campagne contre le péril atomique.

La Belgique, traditionnel champ de bataille, se doit de participer à cette action universelle.

Nous demandons à chaque citoyen, aux autorités scientifiques, syndicales, religieuses et politiques de prendre leurs responsabilités, de faire entendre leur voix.

Nous demandons aux députés et sénateurs, au gouvernement de notre pays de prendre des initiatives internationales pour :

— l'arrêt immédiat des expériences atomiques ;
— l'arrêt dans tous les pays de la fabrication des armes d'extermination et la destruction des stocks ;
— la recherche du désarmement.

Chacun de nous peut et doit agir contre le péril atomique.

Chacun de nous achètera la carte à 1 franc, qui lance un cri d'alarme contre ce péril.

Le peuple belge se joindra à l'action universelle engagée pour la sauvegarde de l'humanité !

A nos lecteurs

Ce numéro spécial vous aura convaincu, si vous ne l'étiez déjà, de la nécessité d'agir contre le péril atomique. Vous pouvez aussi faire quelque chose :

— En nous envoyant une déclaration d'une personnalité de votre entourage, responsable d'organisation approuvant l'Appel publié dans cette page.

— En faisant connaître ce numéro spécial autour de vous. En nous envoyant un timbre à 2 francs par numéro ou un billet de vingt francs pour onze numéros.

D'avance, merci.

LES CINEASTES SIGNENT PARMI LES PREMIERS

Les cinéastes, ces créateurs infatigables qui donnent vie à l'art le plus populaire, sont naturellement sensibles au danger qui pèse sur les hommes et sur la culture qu'ils contribuent à diffuser.

Il ne faut donc pas s'étonner si des réalisateurs et des acteurs de cinéma les plus connus figurent parmi les premiers signataires de l'Appel contre la préparation de la guerre atomique. Ce sont notamment :

Luchino Visconti, le remarquable réalisateur de « La terre tremble » et de « Senso » ; Gérard Philipe, l'inoubliable « Fanfan la Tulipe » et interprète de tant de films à succès ; Rosaura Revueltas, la grande actrice mexicaine, interprète du « Sel de la terre » ; Sergueï Guerassimov, le réalisateur de films d'une aussi haute valeur que « Fleur de Pierre », et le « Médecin de village » ; Alberto Cavalcanti, auteur, entre autres productions de qualité, du « Chant de la Mer », primé récemment ; et d'autres producteurs en renom, comme Joris Ivens, Yves Montand, Aldo Vergani, Simone Signoret, Luciano Emmer...

UN APPEL DE SAVANTS AMERICAINS

Le 6 mars, la Fédération des Savants américains a publié une déclaration dans laquelle elle avertit solennellement le monde que la poursuite des expériences atomiques et thermonucléaires est susceptible de porter un immense préjudice à la race humaine.

« Nous pouvons approcher d'un point où nous n'aurons plus la certitude de ne pas transformer le monde entier en un laboratoire et de ne pas faire de toutes les choses vivantes des objets d'expérience », déclare-t-elle.

« Nous ne pouvons renoncer à faire un nouvel effort pour que quelque chose soit fait au sujet de la menace grandissante pour l'humanité que constitue la continuation incontrôlée de la course aux armements nucléaires. »

LE PARTI SOCIALISTE FRANÇAIS CONTRE LES EXPERIENCES

En conclusion d'une récente résolution, les dirigeants socialistes français déclarent :

« Le comité directeur et le groupe parlementaire demandent enfin que, sans attendre les accords nécessaires sur le désarmement, le gouvernement français prenne les initiatives diplomatiques qui conviennent pour obtenir, par un accord international, l'interdiction rapide de toutes les explosions thermo-nucléaires. »

75 % DES ITALIENS CONTRE L'EMPLOI DES ARMES NUCLEAIRES

Selon un sondage de l'opinion publique italienne, effectué sous des auspices semi-officiels, 75 % des personnes interrogées se sont déclarées opposées à l'emploi des bombes A et H en cas d'attaque de l'Europe occidentale au moyen des armes classiques. La plupart ont maintenu leur opposition pour le cas où l'usage de ces bombes serait le seul moyen d'éviter l'invasion de l'Italie.

LES ANCIENS COMBATTANTS DE BELGIQUE

Extrait de la résolution du dernier congrès de la F.N.C. :

« Les anciens combattants soulignent l'inquiétude des anciens combattants devant le réarmement de l'Allemagne ainsi que devant l'emploi éventuel des armes de destruction massive. »

UN JOURNAL DE WASHINGTON DEMANDE L'INTERDICTION DE LA BOMBE H

Le « Washington Post » vient de lancer un appel en faveur de l'interdiction de la bombe à hydrogène.

Les Etats-Unis devraient proposer d'interdire tout nouvel essai d'armes thermonucléaires et suggérer un système de détection pour s'assurer que l'interdiction est assurée.

LE « POURQUOI PAS ? »

Dans son premier numéro d'avril, l'hebdomadaire bruxellois demande l'arrêt des expériences atomiques en faisant appel à l'opinion mondiale pour qu'elle agisse.

Edit. resp. : Rose Michaut, 12, r. des Visitandines, Bruxelles.

Pour une assemblée mondiale de la Paix

LA menace d'une guerre atomique pèse désormais sur chaque pays, sur chaque maison, sur chaque homme.

Au lieu de mettre l'énergie atomique au service de l'humanité, on amasse des armes monstrueuses ; au lieu de désarmer, on crée de nouveaux blocs militaires ; au lieu de négocier et de s'entendre, on menace et on excite à la haine.

Mais par la menace et la force, on va vers la guerre et non vers la paix.

Le réarmement de l'Allemagne, la situation créée à Taïwan (Formose), les interventions contre l'indépendance des peuples aggravent partout les discordes et l'anxiété. A poursuivre dans cette voie, il n'y aurait plus de sécurité pour personne.

Tous les hommes en sont excédés. Ils repoussent avec horreur l'idée de massacres atomiques.

L'abolition des armes nucléaires, le désarmement général, la sécurité pour tous et le respect de la souveraineté et des droits de chaque nation doivent être exigés avec l'énergie que les peuples peuvent mettre à protéger leur propre vie.

Dans cet esprit et pour ces buts, le Conseil Mondial de la Paix invite les représentants des forces pacifiques de tous les pays à se réunir le 22 mai à Helsinki dans une Assemblée Mondiale pour y débattre librement des questions urgentes de l'action pour la paix.

Prepared by the Reference Department

From the moment the danger first became known the peoples have persistently opposed the preparation of atomic war.

Everywhere this opposition, which takes different forms in different countries, is rapidly gaining ground among different sections of society and all trends of opinion. After the thermonuclear test at Bikini last year, a wave of protest and indignation arose everywhere, particularly in Japan, in Italy among the Roman Catholics, among scientists in France, at the Conferences of the major trade unions in Great Britain, and also in the U.S.A.

But this movement acquired an even greater strength following the decisions taken on December 18, 1954 by the N.A.T.O. Council which took certain decisions leading directly to the preparation of atomic war. It was the new situation created by these decisions which led the Bureau of the World Council of Peace, on January 19, 1955 to make its appeal to the peoples for a world signature campaign to avert the grave danger.

In this short collection we are giving the positions taken up by some of the most important international organisations and some national organisations in some cases before and in some cases after the N.A.T.O. decisions. Such statements made by varied and responsible organisations show clearly that the struggle against the preparations for an atomic war is becoming universal.

I

INTERNATIONAL ORGANISATIONS WHICH WENT ON RECORD
AFTER THE N.A.T.O. COUNCIL DECISIONS

World Federation of Trade Unions

'The World Federation of Trade Unions wholeheartedly supports the decision taken by the Bureau of the World Council of Peace at its last meeting in Vienna, and the document it adopted condemning those who are pressing for an atomic war.

'In particular the World Federation of Trade Unions gives its full support to the appeal against preparations for an atomic war...

'The World Federation of Trade Unions is convinced that the workers of the whole world, whether or not they belong to an organisation affiliated to the W.F.T.U., will throw their full weight behind this campaign against preparations for an atomic war and sign this appeal in their millions.

'It calls on them to organise, in the most varied forms, the collection of signatures in all enterprises and to make every effort in support of this appeal.

'It also urges them, and above all the workers and trade unions of all European countries, to take the lead in the struggle against the Paris agreements which are aimed at making German militarism touch off an atomic war.

'The World Federation of Trade Unions reminds all trade unionists, all workers, that every step towards war is always accompanied by measures to lower the living standards of the working people and whittle away their trade union rights and democratic freedoms.

'The fight of the workers for better living and working conditions and their struggle for peace, collective security and the lessening of international tensions, and against preparations for a new war and the militarisation of the economy are indivisible.

'In face of the grave and acute dangers threatening the world and the policy which means for the people poverty and an atomic war which could wipe out entire countries, the W.F.T.U. is convinced that all workers, whatever their nationality, trade union affiliation, political opinion or religious belief, will strengthen their unity and fight with determination. In this way they will make a decisive contribution to the action of the people for peace, freedom and a better life.'

Women's International Democratic Federation

Statement in support of the decisions of the World Council of Peace

'The Council of the Women's International Democratic Federation is aware of the immediate danger created by the decisions of certain governments to prepare and regularise the unleashing of atomic war throughout the world.

'It is the duty of every woman to redouble her efforts to protect her home and children and to ensure the happiness of the rising generation.

'Only a powerful protest movement by the peoples can avert this grave danger and thwart the plans of those that want to unleash atomic war.

'That is why the Women's International Democratic Federation gives its full support to the resolutions adopted by the Bureau of the World Council of Peace at its Vienna meeting on January 19, 1955, and calls on women to unite and strengthen the opposition movement of the peoples by signing and by asking people to sign the powerful Appeal against the preparations for atomic war.'

(Council of the W.I.D.F., Geneva, February 9 - 13, 1955)

World Federation of Democratic Youth

Statement by the Secretary of the W.F.D.Y.

The Secretariat of the W.F.D.Y. made the following statement on January 28, 1955:

'The World Federation of Democratic Youth declares on behalf of its 95 million members that it approves the resolutions of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace on the struggle against the remilitarisation of Western Germany and on the organisation of a great campaign against the preparations for atomic war.

'The World Federation of Democratic Youth asks all local, national and international youth organisations, their leaders and all those who are responsible for the lives and future of young people to support this movement.'

The Secretariat of the W.F.D.Y. has decided to call a meeting of its Executive Committee in Berlin on February 25-28 to discuss the tasks of youth organisations in the struggle against the danger of an atomic war.

#

International Federation of Resistance Fighters

Resolution of the Bureau at its Warsaw meeting, January 23-24, 1955

'In view of the fact that the events which have taken place since the Vienna Congress have aggravated and brought nearer the risk of the use of atomic weapons, thus putting our countries in danger of total destruction,

'The Bureau of the International Federation of Resistance Fighters considers it necessary to recall that the resistance fighters and deportees had stated at the Vienna Congress that "the use of such weapons would mean putting into effect in an even more extreme way the criminal Nazi practice of exterminating millions of men and women, old folk and children in gas chambers and incinerators" and that in consequence "it was appropriate to examine in every country the possibilities for the affiliated organisations of the International Federation to start a campaign for the banning of weapons of mass destruction along with all resistance fighters and deportees."

'It therefore welcomes the initiative of the Bureau of the World Council of Peace in issuing an appeal demanding the banning and destruction of atomic weapons. It considers that it is urgent and indispensable to invite member organisations, to give every possible support to the signature campaign for the Appeal of the World Council of Peace, while continuing energetically to oppose the Paris agreements for the remilitarisation of Western Germany, and to make an urgent appeal to the resistance fighters and deportees of their country to this end.'

International Organisation of Journalists

At the end of January 1955, the Secretariat of the International Organisation of Journalists published an Appeal calling on all journalists actively to oppose the danger of the use of atomic and hydrogen bombs. The Appeal states in part:

'The whole of worldpublic opinion, the whole of progressive mankind, are disturbed by the N.A.T.O. decisions which in practice permit the use of atomic and hydrogen bombs.

'This disquiet is well founded. The peoples have not forgotten the tragedy of Hiroshima. In ever-increasing numbers the people of every continent are warning against the danger of the use of weapons of mass destruction.

'Honest journalists cannot hold aloof from the general struggle. In these days journalists bear a great responsibility to the peoples of the world and to their own conscience. Every journalist who does not want war has the duty of informing public opinion sincerely and truthfully on the growing danger.

'At this decisive hour in our history, the International Organisation of Journalists calls on all representatives of the press to speak out against the unleashing of a new war, against the use of atomic and hydrogen weapons in the interest of all mankind!'

The World Conference of Buddhist Associations

The World Conference of Buddhist Associations, held in Burma in December 1954 and attended by Buddhists from 29 countries including India, Japan, Burma, Pakistan, Ceylon, Indonesia, Siam, the Philippines, and even France and Germany, adopted a resolution which 'calls on the governments and the peoples of the whole world to work for the banning of the manufacture and use of atomic and hydrogen bombs and other weapons of mass destruction.'

Asian Lawyers

The Conference of Asian Lawyers which was held at Calcutta on January 30, 1955 and attended by delegates from China, Burma, India, Pakistan, etc., adopted a resolution demanding 'the banning of atomic and hydrogen bombs and the stopping of experiments with them.'

II

A NUMBER OF OTHER INTERNATIONAL ORGANISATIONS AND ASSOCIATIONS HAD MADE THEIR POSITION CLEAR BEFORE THE DECISIONS OF THE N.A.T.O. COUNCIL.

World Council of Churches

The Assembly of the World Council of Churches, held in August 1954 at Evanston in the United States, adopted a declaration which demanded, among other things:

'The prohibition of all weapons of mass destruction; including atomic and hydrogen bombs, with provision for international inspection and control such as would safeguard the security of all nations, together with the drastic reduction of all other armaments.'

World Federation of United Nations Associations

At its fortieth meeting in Geneva from May 15-18, 1954, the Executive Committee of the World Federation of United Nations Associations passed the following resolution:

'The Executive Committee of the World Federation of United Nations Associations.-

'aware that the perfecting of ever more devastating weapons of mass destruction is a threat to the very existence of civilisation,

'and considering that the manufacture of atomic and hydrogen bombs, bacteriological weapons and other weapons of mass destruction now represents in itself an important cause of mistrust and fear between the nations, thereby aggravating international tension even more,

'asks all governments, and particularly the governments of the great powers, to draw up plans for:

'- the speediest possible reduction of all conventional armed forces, the banning of the use and production of atomic and hydrogen bombs, bacteriological weapons and other means of mass destruction and, simultaneously, the adoption of an effective system of international control and inspection for the implementation of these measures; and

'- the use of the resources freed by disarmament for peaceful developments in the economic, social and cultural spheres, paying special heed to the needs of underdeveloped countries,

'and urges all peoples to press this policy on their governments, their M.P.'s and their representatives in the various public bodies.'

Four months later, in September, the Assembly of the World Federation of United Nations Associations made the following demands in a resolution on disarmament and the banning of atomic and bacteriological weapons:

'That the use and production of nuclear weapons and other contrivances for mass destruction should be prohibited by a convention which would become binding with the setting up of an inspecting body capable of discharging its duties...

'That in the meantime, and in order to create a favourable atmosphere, the nations concerned desist from any explosions of nuclear weapons likely to endanger life or property, taking all necessary precautions to this end, and that they make moreover a statement to this effect.'

International Red Cross

A resolution adopted on May 6, 1954

by the Council of Governors of the International Red Cross, says:

'All the nations of the world must reach agreement for the absolute banning of atomic and bacteriological weapons and of poison gas, and must take effective measures to protect the peoples against the danger and destruction arising from the testing of atomic weapons.'

International Co-operative Alliance

A resolution adopted by the 19th Congress of the International Co-operative Alliance, held in Paris from September 6-9, 1954, appeals to the governments of all countries to limit their armaments and develop trade, and points out that it views

'...with the gravest concern the menace to peace arising from intensive competition in the invention and adoption of ever deadlier and more destructive methods of warfare; and the growing danger to the common people, carrying on their peaceful occupations, caused by experiments and exercises with such methods of warfare.'

#

Women's International League for Peace and Freedom

At its meeting in Copenhagen after the Bikini explosions, this organisation issued a statement in which it said:

'In view of the possible apocalyptic effects which the latest nuclear arms experiments forecast, the W.I.L.P.F. believes that the United Nations should take steps immediately to outlaw the use and further development of fission and fusion bombs and other weapons of mass destruction.

'The W.I.L.P.F. takes the position that nations should at once initiate a plan for total world disarmament, which would necessitate the following steps:

'An immediate stand-still in the production of atomic and other weapons of mass destruction as well as of all other weapons...'

International Liaison Committee of Organisations for Peace

At its Conference from August 24 to 29, 1954 I.L.O.O.P. passed a resolution from which we take the following passage:

'The sufferings caused by the atomic bombs dropped in 1945 and the H bomb tests have shown the incalculable effect of atomic weapons. Such tests should be banned and agreement should immediately be sought to abolish the use of weapons of this nature.'

Inter-Parliamentary Union

In a resolution adopted at the 43rd Inter-Parliamentary Conference, held in Vienna from August 27 to September 2, the Inter-Parliamentary Union

'calls on the Parliaments of the world to use their influence to get all governments, and particularly those of the countries principally interested, to establish contact with each other with a view to placing all atomic weapons and everything that has to do with nuclear energy under the effective surveillance and control of the United Nations and to envisaging the methods and means of banning the use and manufacture of atomic weapons - all this within the framework of a general programme for the reduction of armaments.'

III

A large number of national organisations of every kind have denounced the danger represented by atomic and thermonuclear weapons. We shall mention only a few.

Japanese Women's Organisations

In October 1954, the leaders of the main organisations of Japanese women issued an 'Appeal to the Women of the Whole World' on behalf of all their members. The Appeal ends as follows:

'The Japanese have been baptised three times by atomic and hydrogen weapons. We, as the only unfortunate victims of these weapons, cannot but appeal to every thinking soul in the world for the prohibition of the production, testing and practical use of such cruel weapons as hydrogen bombs. We demand the immediate stopping of the experiments on the high seas, which threaten the lives, the trade and the food of peaceful and innocent citizens. We do not only speak for the safety and happiness of the Japanese people, but in order to save all humanity from destruction and to build a really peaceful and prosperous world.

'We beg you to convey to your organisation and to the organisations affiliated to yours, our strong desire for the prohibition of atomic and hydrogen weapons and for world peace. We urge you to appeal to them because it is only with the support and co-operation of the women of the whole world that we can create worldwide public protest against these terrible weapons and against war.'

General Council of Trade Unions of Japan

The General Council of Trade Unions of Japan requests the Government to take the following measures:

'To make representations to the U.S. Government regarding the prohibition of the testing, manufacture and possession of atomic and hydrogen bombs.

'To take measures to make all mankind realise that their lives are in peril.'

Council of Government and Public Service Workers Unions of Japan

The Council of Government and Public Service Workers Unions of Japan, which has a membership of nearly two millions, has demanded the immediate banning of the manufacture, use and testing of atomic and hydrogen bombs, together with the establishment of an international control of these weapons.

(World Trade Union News, February 1-15, 1955)

Amalgamated Engineering Union

At its Annual Congress at the beginning of May 1954, the Amalgamated Engineering Union - one of the most powerful unions in Great Britian - unanimously passed a resolution inviting the nine million trade unionists of Great Britain to demand the banning of the hydrogen bomb.

The Association of Supervisory Staffs, Executives and Technicians of Great Britain

The leaders of the Association of Supervisory Staffs, Executives and Technicians asked that the members of the T.U.C. should begin to take action against the hydrogen bomb.

In a resolution, they expressed their fear of the destructive power of the hydrogen bomb.

(Reuter, May 6, 1954)

The British T.U.C. Annual Congress

The Annual Congress of the T.U.C. adopted a resolution on the atom and hydrogen bombs submitted by the Association of Scientific Workers. The resolution demands that negotiations be opened to prepare for a conference between Great Britain, the Soviet Union, the United States, China and France to secure the universal abolition of all atomic and thermonuclear weapons under an effective system of international control.

The resolution was presented by Professor Powell, Nobel Prize Winner.

(Le Monde, September 10, 1954)

German Association for Peace

The Conference of the German Association for Peace (Federal Republic), held in Duisburg on January 16, 1955, adopted a statement which says:

'We are on the threshold of the atomic age, which means that the future of each one of us is being decided by a new political and social reality. Either atomic energy will be put at the service of the peaceful development of mankind and its prosperity, or the fission of the atom will remain an instrument of the outdated policy of military force. In the latter case, a war would be inevitable and the decisions of the last session of the N.A.T.O. Council make it quite clear that any new war would be an atomic war. That would mean the end of the countries involved in it, including Germany.'

Congress of Argentine Peasants

The Forty-second Annual Congress of the Argentine Agricultural Federation, which was held on September 20 last, unanimously approved a resolution for the banning of atomic weapons and all weapons of mass destruction. The peasant delegates showed their determination to free mankind from the atomic threat.

In a public statement, the Argentine Federation of Agricultural Co-operatives took up a firm stand against the testing of atomic weapons and the threats to use them.

American Congregational Churches

At their annual conference in New Haven on June 28, 1954, the representatives of 6,000 Congregational churches from all over the United States denounced the thoughtless statements by public figures demanding that the atom and hydrogen bombs be used in current war.

N O T E

The texts that we have assembled here give only an incomplete picture of the movements existing at the present time.

Particularly from January onwards, as people became aware of the gravity of the NATO decisions and of the threat of an atomic war, various organisations, groupings and trends of opinion have been expressing their opposition.

Great movements are developing in countries like Italy, where hundreds of thousands of signatures have already been collected and where the biggest popular organisations are actively supporting the campaign; France, where an energetic campaign is simultaneously being carried on against German rearmament; India and other Asian countries; Brazil and Argentine; Canada and the Near and Middle East.

The movement against the threat of an atomic war and for the collection of signatures is now in full swing and is particularly strong in the Soviet Union, China and the other People's Democracies.

As the fragmentary information which we have at our disposal shows, the peoples are more and more forcefully expressing their determination to achieve the banning and destruction of weapons of mass extermination.

INTRODUCTION

Certain politicians still dare deny that Formosa (Taiwan) and the Pen-Hu Islands (Pescadores) belong to the People's Republic of China; there are others who claim that the question is not settled, that it is in abeyance. But the majority of reasonable and sensible people state honestly that there can be no possible dispute and that these island territories are rightfully an integral part of People's China.

From the historical standpoint:

It was China which, at the beginning of the third century, discovered Formosa and the archipelagoes in the Formosa Straits containing more than sixty islands. During the reign of Wu, navigation started between continental China and Mi-Chu, as Formosa was then called. (The name of 'Ilha Formosa', which means island of beauty, was given to the island by the Portuguese who, in common with the Spaniards, tried on several occasions to annex the island).

In the year 605, the reigning emperor of the Chinese Such dynasty began sending his representatives to the island and at the end of the 13th century the reigning emperor of the Yuan dynasty sent soldiers to Formosa. During the same period Chinese government bodies were established in the Pescadores. In reality, it was at that time that Formosa and the Pescadores officially became part of China.

Trading and other relations developed thereafter uninterruptedly between the islands and the Chinese mainland.

During the 16th century, the reigning emperor of the Ming dynasty was prompted by the threat of Japanese and Dutch invasion to strengthen the military defences considerably and in so doing he consolidated Chinese possession of these territories. Later on, in 1885 to be precise, Formosa became one of China's 23 provinces.

Formosa extends over an area of about 22,000 square miles; its population is at present about eight millions, of whom the overwhelming majority are of Chinese origin.

From the legal standpoint:

Japan annexed Formosa in 1895 and this occupation was recognised by the Shimonoseki Treaty signed by the Chinese government of the decadent Manchu dynasty. Some international law specialists have tried to make this treaty a basis for contesting the right of People's China to Formosa. A discussion on these lines has taken place in the London Times for example. Here is what Mr.A.T. D'Eye wrote in the February 9 issue in a polemic with the well-known lawyer Dr. Schwarzenberger:

'Dr. Schwarzenberger omits one vital but all-important fact; a fact which attacks and destroys the foundation of his whole argument, i.e., that China had ceded Formosa to Japan by the Treaty of Shimonoseki. On December 8, 1941, China formally proclaimed itself in a state of war with Japan. At the same time it solemnly declared the the abrogation of all treaties, including the Treaty of Shimonoseki, between China and Japan. By so doing, from the point of view of international law, China recovered its sovereign rights over Formosa...'

This argument, which derives from an incontestable fact, is undoubtedly valid. To it must be added the fact that when Japan surrendered at the end of the Second World War she renounced all rights and claims to the island.

From the political standpoint:

The great powers gave commitments and took decisions on this question which are of such decisive political import that for all people of good faith discussion on the matter is rendered superfluous.

On December 1, 1945, the Cairo Conference between the heads of the United States, British and Chinese governments made a Declaration which said:

'....that all territories Japan had stolen from the Chinese such as Manchuria, Formosa and the Pescadores, shall be restored to the Republic of China.'

This statement was subsequently endorsed by the Soviet Union.

Finally, there was the ultimatum to Japan issued from Potsdam by the great powers, which included the categorical statement that "The terms of the Cairo Declaration shall be carried out."

In fact, Manchuria was returned to China by the decisions of Cairo and Potsdam and no one would dare contest her right to it. Why then should it be otherwise with Formosa and the Pescadores? It is thus contrary to solemn international agreements that that can happen.

To come to the more recent events which have led to the present tense situation, it is appropriate to recall a few concrete facts.

On January 5, 1950 President Truman found another opportunity for confirming, as his eminent predecessor had done, that Formosa belonged to China. He stated in particular that the United States had no intention of sending their armed forces to intervene in the Chinese conflict and that the United States Government did not wish to become involved in the Chinese civil war.

The then Secretary of State, Dean Acheson remarked during the same period that no one, not even a lawyer could dispute the fact that Formosa was a Chinese province.

But just a few months later, on June 27, 1950, Truman decided to send the American Seventh Fleet into the Formosa area to defend it from 'communist' attacks and to prevent Chiang Kai-shek's military formations from making attacks on the mainland. This act was described as the 'neutralisation' of Formosa.

On February 23, 1953, the new President of the United States, in his 'State of the Union' speech, announced the 'deneutralisation' of Formosa, while keeping the Seventh Fleet in the area. In practice, this meant encouraging the Kuomintang forces to indulge in all sorts of actions against the People's Republic with American arms and aircraft and under the protection of the American armed forces.

Finally, on December 2, 1954, the Mutual Security Treaty was signed between the United States and Chiang Kai-shek. This treaty means direct intervention by the United States government in the internal affairs of China and the dê facto occupation of Formosa by the Americans.

Since then there have been more and more hostile acts every day. Based on Formosa and the islands lying off the coast, sorties, both major and minor, are a daily occurrence. Chinese towns have been bombed, with considerable loss of life, by many aircraft. They exceeded two thousand sorties a month. Armed groups have been landed on the mainland to blow up bridges, roads and factories. This was verified over a long period without a break.

On January 18, 1955 the People's Republic undertook the re-establishment of the sovereign rights of the Chinese state over these territories by taking possession of Yi-Kiang-Chan in the north of the Tachen archipelago and only 19 miles from the coast. It was one of the islands used as a base for raids against the continent and sheltered the American diversion centre. 'Western Enterprise'.

We have given the concrete facts relevant to the present situation in this part of the world, a situation liable to place peace in grave danger, as the following material shows.

RECENT DEVELOPMENTS IN THE FORMOSA (TAIWAN) QUESTION

JOINT DECLARATION OF ALL DEMOCRATIC PARTIES AND PEOPLE' S ORGANISATIONS OF THE PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

Signed by the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Committee and by all the democratic parties and people's organisations, a declaration on Formosa (Taiwan) was published on August 22, 1954 from which we give the following extracts:

'To safeguard the security and territorial integrity of the motherland and the peace of Asia and the world, the Chinese people are determined to liberate Taiwan. Taiwan is an inseperable part of Chinese territory. Its occupation by the United States cannot be tolerated; and it is equally intolerable to have it placed under United Nations trusteeship. To liberate Taiwan and to eliminate the traitorous Chiang Kai-shek group is an exercise of China's sovereignty. It is China's own internal affair, and we will brook no interference by any foreign countries. If any foreign aggressors dare to prevent the Chinese people from liberating Taiwan, they thereby interfere in China's internal affairs, infringe on China's sovereignty and violate her territorial integrity; they must therefore take all the grave consequences of such aggressive action.'

SPECIAL POWERS GRANTED TO PRESIDENT EISENHOWER FOR MILITARY INTERVENTION

President Eisenhower sent a message to Congress on January 24, 1955 asking for the power to intervene if necessary by means of American armed forces in the Formosa (Taiwan) region and in the straits. (For the text of the President's message, see the previous issue of Documentary Material.)

The powers asked for were granted by the House of Representatives on January 25, and by the Senate on January 29.

The first effects of this grant of special powers was the large-scale movement of sea and air forces for the 'evacuation' of the Tachen islands. This American intervention is considered by the government of the People's Republic of China and by other governments as an act of open aggression against People's China.

THE VIEW OF MR. ATTLEE

Commenting on the question of Formosa (Taiwan) in the House of Commons on January 26, the leader of the Labour Party said:

'It is, of course, clear that in this matter of Formosa and the islands there is an intervention in a civil war. It is clearly an action by the United States, and not an action of the United Nations. But in view of the need for preventing hostilities and trying to get some peaceful arrangement, is it not clear that the right thing would be that China should occupy her proper position in the United Nations?'

A few days afterwards, on January 31, Mr. Attlee developed his views in an article in the Daily Herald:

'The Labour Party starts from the broad proposition that Formosa was recognised by the Allied Powers after the war as an integral part of China.

'It is clear that the Peking Government won the civil war against Chiang Kai-shek. It would then have occupied Formosa but for the intervention of the United States Fleet.

'The American action, taken at the same time as the United Nations action in Korea (in 1950), had nothing to do with the United Nations, but was dictated by the American policy of security.

'Since that time, the forces of Chiang Kai-shek have constantly attacked the Chinese mainland.

'But it seems to me quite unreasonable that, under the shelter of American forces, the Chiang Party should be able to carry on a civil war...

'It is, of course, obvious, as we have urged so often, that occupation of a seat on the Security Council of the United Nations should be given to the People's Republic of China.

'As long as that seat is occupied by the puppet Government of Chiang Kai-shek, negotitaions are bound to be difficult.'

THE NATURE OF THE SECURITY COUNCIL'S INVITATION TO THE PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

On February 1, the New Zealand delegate presented a proposal for the Security Council agenda dealing with the military operations in the area of certain islands near the Chinese coast and stating that a representative of Chiank Kai-Shek should be present to discuss this question.

The Soviet delegate, Mr. Sobolev, also presented a resolution inviting representatives of the government of the People's Republic of China to take part in the discussion on the question: 'In connection with the agressive acts of the United States of America against the People's Republic of China in the area of Taiwan and other Chinese islands.'

This proposal stated that the Kuomintang representative should be excluded from the Security Council meeting.

The members of the Security Council decided by a majority vote to place these two proposals on the agenda, but to give priority to the New Zealand proposal. Thus the invitation to the People's Republic of China was in fact formulated on the basis of the New Zealand proposal. And the New Zealand proposal took no account of the real responsibilities for a situation created by foreign intervention in a question which the government of the People's Republic of China considers to be of a strictly internal nature.

MR. MOLOTOV'S STATEMENT TO THE BRITISH AMBASSADOR

The Soviet Foreign Minister received Sir William Hayter, British Ambassador to the U.S.S.R., on January 28, 1955. On being informed of the move made by New Zealand, Mr. Molotov replied:

'As regards the statement of the British Ambassador, as well as Sir Anthony Eden's recent statement in the House of Commons, the question has been completely circumvented of the real reasons of tension in the area of Taiwan, which is an integral part of the national territory of China, as has already been pointed out in Cairo and the Potsdam declarations signed also by the Governments of Britain and the United States.

'At the same time it is perfectly clear that these causes reside in the gross interference of the United States in the internal affairs of China, the endeavour to separate Taiwan from China.

'The aforementioned actions of the United States represent aggression against the Chinese People's Republic which has every right to Taiwan and the Pescadores.

'On the other hand, the actions of the United States, and the Chiang Kai-shek clique which is being encouraged by it, lead to an intensification of international tension in the Far East and are full of menace of a new war.

'If the United States were to stop its aggressive actions in the area of Taiwan, this would facilitate the easing of international tension.'

At the same time Mr. Molotov drew the attention of the British Ambassador to the fact that if Britain were not supporting the United States in her aggressive actions in this area the United States would not have decided to undertake such actions.

In conclusion, Mr. Molotov told Sir William Hayter that the statement made by the Ambassador would be considered by the Soviet Government.

Mr. Chou En-lai's reply to the invitation from the United Nations' Secretary General, Mr. Dag Hammarskjold

(extracts)

'The United States aggression against China's territory of Taiwan has all along been the source of tension in the Far East. Recently, after it concluded the so-called "Mutual Security Treaty" with the traitorous Chiang Kai-shek, clique, the United States dispatched additional large units of naval and air forces to the area of Taiwan and the Taiwan Straits and openly made war threats and war provocations against the Chinese people in preparation for an extension of aggression against China, thereby further aggravating the tension in the Far East. In order to ease the tension in the Far East, eliminate the threat to the security of China, and put an end to the United States aggression, the Government of the People's Republic of China fully supports the resolution submitted by the representative of the Soviet Union in the United Nations Security Council concerning the "acts of aggression by the United States of America against the People's Republic of China in the area of Taiwan and other islands of China."

'Taiwan, the Penghu Islands and other coastal islands are all inalienable parts of China's territory. The Chinese people's exercise of their own sover reign rights in liberating their own territory is entirely a matter of China's internal affairs and has never caused international tension, nor can it threaten international peace and security. But the representative of New Zealand proposed that the United Nations Security Council consider the "hostilities in the area of certain islands off the coast of the mainland of China" between the People's Republic of China and the traitorous Chiang Kai-shek clique. This is obviously to intervene in China's internal affairs and to cover up the acts of aggression by the United States against China, and is therefore in direct violation of the fundamental principles of the United Nations Charter.

'What is especially intolerable is the fact that the People's Republic of China, representing the 600 million Chinese people, is up to now still deprived of its legitimate position and rights in the United Nations, while the representatives of a small handful of remnants of the traitorous Chiang Kai-shek clique, repudiated long ago by the Chinese people, continue to usurp the position of representing China in the United Nations. Such an extremely unjustified situation makes it impossible for the representative of the People's Republic of China to take part in discussions of questions concerning China in the United Nations.

'Therefore, the Government of the People's Republic of China cannot send a representative to take part in the discussion of the New Zealand proposal in response to the invitation of the United Nations Security Council.

'The Government of the People's Republic of China holds that only for the purpose of discussing the resolution of the Soviet Union and only when the representative of the Chiang Kai-shek clique has been driven out from the Security Council and the representative of the People's Republic of China is to attend in the name of China, can the People's Republic of China agree to send a representative to take part in the discussions of the Security Council.

'All genuine international efforts to ease and to eliminate the tension created by the United States in this area and in other areas of the Far East will receive the support of the People's Republic of China.'

An explanation by Sir Anthony Eden on the status of Formosa (Taiwan)

In the House of Commons on February 4, Sir Anthony Eden gave the following reply to a written question from Mr. Shinwell (Labour):

'Formosa and the Pescadores were ceded to Japan by China in the Shimino-seki Treaty of 1895. In the Cairo Declaration of November, 1943, the allies stated that it was their purpose "that all the territories which Japan has stolen from the Chinese such as .... Formosa and the Pescadores, shall be restored to the Republic of China ...." This declaration was a statement of intention that Formosa should be retroceded to China after the war. This retrocession has in fact never taken place because of the difficulties arising from the existence of two entities claiming to represent China, and the difference among the Powers as to the status of these entities.

'The Potsdam Declaration of July, 1945, laid down as one of the conditions for the Japanese peace that the terms of the Cairo Declaration should be carried out. In September, 1945, the administration of Formosa was taken over from the Japanese by Chinese forces at the direction of the Supreme Commander of the Allied Powers; but this was not a cession, nor did it in itself involve any change of sovereignty. The arrangements made with Chiang Kai-shek put him there on a basis of military occupation pending further arrangements, and did not of themselves constitute the territory Chinese.'

The interview given by Mr. Khrushchev to the American journalists W.R. Hearst, Kingsbury Smith and F. Connif

Mr. Khrushchev, in the course of an interview he gave recently to the three American journalists, made the following observations on the question of Formosa (Taiwan):

'The declaration that Taiwan and the other Chinese islands were non-Chinese territory was at variance with existing international agreements and historical facts. This could not be called anything but perfidy. Could China really recognise that the United States had the right to claim Taiwan or could she agree that Taiwan was necessary to secure the defence of the United States? If one considered the distance between the Chinese mainland and Taiwan on the one hand, and between the United States and Taiwan on the other, it would become clear that no comparison was possible. In his opinion the current actions of the United States in the area of Taiwan were a disgrace to the American people. No sensible people, irrespective of their political views, would ever justify a conflict caused by the policy of the United States. As for future developments in that area, they would depend on the United States itself. Could China really recognise that the United States or its puppet, the scoundrel Chiang Kai-shek, had the right to Taiwan?...

'The Soviet people were shocked by the actions of the U.S. Government. They had known and respected Eisenhower as their partner in the war against Hitler. They failed to understand the United States policy on the question of Taiwan and felt that the American people themselves hardly understood this policy. The United States was carrying on unprecedented activity in the Far East and artificially complicating the situation, evidently under the influence of the most reactionary elements.

'If America showed common sense in this question, it would be possible, with the participation of other countries interested in the preservation of peace, to prevent a conflict in the Far East.'

(Pravda, 11.2.1955)

TWO STATEMENTS BY MR. FOSTER DULLES

Speaking on February 7, 1955 at the meeting of the U.S. Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Secretary of State Mr. Foster Dulles said:

'To summarise, what the treaty would accomplish is this:

'It would give the Chinese Communists notice, beyond any possibility of misinterpretation, that the United States would regard an armed attack directed against Taiwan and the Pescadores as a danger to its own peace and safety and would act to meet the danger - such action to be in accordance with our Constitutional processes.

'It would provide firm reassurance to the Republic of China and to the world that Taiwan and the Pescadores are not a subject for barter as part of some Far Eastern "deal" with the Chinese Communists.

'Taken in conjonction with the treaties which have already been concluded by the United States... this treaty rounds out the Western Pacific security system.

'It would be theoretically preferable if that round-out were accomplished by a multilateral regional pact. This may come as a future development. However, that is not practical at the present time, and in the meantime we need to act within the limits of the practical.

'After the treaty was signed, there took place an exchange of notes, dated Dec.10, 1954, between the Chinese Minister for Foreign Affairs and myself. These were designed to insure that our two Governments will act in harmony and concert in relation to the present troubled state of affairs in that area. It was agreed that offensive military operations by either party from the territories held by the Republic of China would be undertaken only as a matter of joint understanding, because unilateral action of an offensive character by one party might throw heavy burdens upon the other party. Therefore, neither will act in disregard of the other.

Mr. Foster Dulles made a speech to the Foreign Policy Association on February 16, in which he made the position of his government even clearer. We give the following extracts:

'It has been suggested that Nationalist China should go further and surrender to the Chinese Communists the coastal positions which the Communists need to stage their announced attack on Formosa.

'It is doubtful that this would serve either the cause of peace or the cause of freedom.

'The Chinese Communists have been the initiators of violence in this area. They have already formally declared their intention to take Formosa by force. If the Chinese Nationalists now oblige by making it easier for the Chinese Communists to conquer Formosa, will they be less apt to do so? I doubt it.

'The United States has no commitment and no purpose to defend the coastal positions as such. The basic purpose is to assure that Formosa and the Pescadores will not be forcibly taken over by the Chinese Communists.'.

'We sincerely hope that this decision (to reject the Security Council's invitation, Ed.) of the Chinese Communists is not irrevocable and that they will abide by the principles of the United Nations rather than challenge by force the defensive obligations of this country. In any event, we believe that their attitude toward the United Nations Security Council has not ended the responsibility of that body which, by the Charter, has the "primary responsibility for the maintenance of international peace and security."."

'If the non-Communist Asians ever come to feel that their Western allies are disposed to retreat whenever Communism threatens the peace, then the entire area could quickly become indefensible.'

(New York Herald Tribune, 17.2.1955)

THE OPINION OF THE SOVIET PRIME MINISTER, MR. BULGANIN

In his speech to the Supreme Soviet on February 9, 1955, the Chairman of the Council of Ministers of the U.S.S.R., Mr. Bulganin, said the following about the Formosa (Taiwan) question:

'In Asia too, they (the United States, Ed.) are knocking together military blocs, and are organising military provocations against the People's Republic of China and interfering in her internal affairs.

'The American Government has embarked on the dangerous course of aggravating the situation in the Taiwan area. It has been reinforcing its military, naval and air forces there, and continues to pursue a policy of provoking war. Disregarding the legitimate rights of the People's Republic of China and trampling international agreements underfoot, the United States has seized the Island of Taiwan - Chinese territory from time immemorial - and has made it a hotbed of war provocation in the Far East.

'The stand taken by the United Nations Organisation in this matter is astonishing. To this day it has not condemned the aggressive actions of the United States against China, has not demanded of the United States the immediate withdrawal of its armed forces from Taiwan, and the restoration of the lawful rights of the People's Republic of China.

'The policy of the Chinese Government in this matter has our full approval and support. The People's Republic of China enjoys the sympathy of the Soviet peoples and of all progressive mankind, because it is waging a struggle for a just cause, for the honour and independence of its country. In this noble cause the Chinese people can count on the help of their true friend - the great Soviet people.'

(Isvestia, 10.2.1955)

A TEN-POWER CONFERENCE PROPOSED BY THE U.S.S.R

On February 4, the Soviet Foreign Minister Mr. Molotov made a statement on behalf of the Soviet Government to the British ambassador, Sir William Hayter, in which he recalled the reasons which made it impossible to discuss the question of Formosa (Taiwan) in the Security Council and went on to put the following proposal:

'Aiming at the consolidation of peace and reducing international tension in the Far East, the Soviet Government considers that under the circumstances it would be expedient to try to explore other ways facilitating a settlement of the question concerning the situation in the above area.

'In the opinion of the Soviet Government it would be expedient if the countries particularly interested in normalising the situation that has arisen in the area of Taiwan and other Chinese islands would discuss this matter at a conference,

'Besides the People's Republic of China and the United States, Britain, the U.S.S.R., France, India, Burma, Indonesia, Pakistan and Ceylon could take part in such a conference.

'The initiative in this matter could, in our opinion, be taken by Britain, the Soviet Union and India, if the Government of Britain and the Government of India agree to this step.

'Such an initiative would accord with the wishes expressed by Mr. Eden concerning the need for joint efforts by Britain and the U.S.S.R. to solve outstanding international problems.

'As regards the time and venue of the conference the Soviet Government holds that the conference could be convened in Shanghai or New Delhi in February this year.

'The Soviet Government expresses the hope that the Government of Great Britain will examine these considerations of the Soviet Government and give its opinion.'

(Tass, 13.2.1955)

On the same day Mr. Molotov handed a similar statement to Mr. P. Kaul, the Indian chargé d'affaires.

Statement by the British Foreign Minister on the Soviet Proposal for a Ten-Power Conference

The Foreign Office issued the following statement on February 13, as a comment on the Soviet proposal:

'Her Majesty's Government have received from the Soviet Government a proposal for the summoning of a conference to consider the situation that has arisen in the area of Formosa and the islands off the coast of China. H.M. Government have given the proposal serious examination. It was discussed with the Commonwealth Prime Ministers in London, and the United States Government were informed. Pending further exploration of the proposal, H.M. Government made certain observations to the Soviet Government.

'Their first comment related to the composition of the conference which, as proposed by Mr.Molotov, does not appear to be representative. In particular, they note that the Chinese Nationalist authorities in Formosa are to be excluded. Her Majesty's Government are convinced that a conference that did not include both of the two parties most directly concerned could not have a useful result. Their second comment was that the position of the United Nations should not be overlooked. In the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, it is desirable that any meeting for the discussion of the situation in the area of the coastal islands and Formosa should be organised in a form acceptable to the United Nations.'

(The Times, 14.2.1955)

MR. NEHRU'S POSITION

Before leaving London to return to India, Mr.Nehru, the Indian Prime Minister, commented on the Soviet proposal for a Ten-Power conference on Formosa. Concerning India's attitude to the proposal he said:

'Certainly we have not rejected it. It was addressed to us, too.'

'We have pointed out that while the conference is desirable and will have to be held some time or other, it requires a great deal of preparation beforehand, and if I may say so, informal approaches before the formal conference is held...'

Asked for his comments on the world situation, he said:

'I think I am on the whole more hopeful. The main reason for this hope is the success of the Geneva Conference last year.

'I think we should be able to find some way out of the present difficulties in the Far East.'

He spoke in a similar vein to journalists at Orly aerodrome near Paris, saying that the proposal was a good one which should be taken up.

At Cairo, where he met the Egyptian Prime Minister, Col. Nasser, he made these observations:

'Nonrecognition of Communist China by the United Nations and "other nations" was blinking at the "patent fact" that China has a strong and stable government controlling hundreds of millions of human beings, the Indian leader said. This policy makes it difficult to settle Asian problems around a conference table as they ultimately must be settled, he added.'

(New York Times, 17.2.1955)

A Statement by the President of the Indian Republic, Mr.Rajendra Prasad

'President Rajendra Prasad opened the budget session of the Indian Parliament with a warning that "the threat of war again darkens the future of humanity."

'The President pointed to the Formosa crisis as "the most serious of the present moment" which he said he hoped would "be solved peacefully and by negotiation."

'"My Government recognises only one government of China and considers that the claims (on Formosa) of this republic are justified," he said.'

(New York Herald Tribune, February 22, 1955)

PRESS REACTIONS

The question of Formosa occupies a prominent place in the news and comments appearing in the international press.

We are limiting ourselves here to giving only a few comments taken from the press of the countries which are most involved in this question at the present time.

Comments by the People's Daily (Peking)

Referring to the various moves which had been made, and in the first place to that of the New Zealand delegate at the United Nations, the People's Daily wrote on January 29:

'For the Chinese people a cease-fire would mean that it must submit to the United States' threats to war, tolerate the division of China by the United States and allow the United States to draw its lines of defence across Chinese territory by using it as a military base and as a springboard for extending its aggression against China and unleashing a new war.

'Neither the United Nations nor any country has any right to interfere in the question of the liberation of Formosa which is essentially within China's internal jurisdiction. The liberation of Chinese territory, Taiwan included, by the Chinese people derives from the exercise of its sovereign rights. So long as there is no armed interference from outside, no international tension will ever result.'

On February 5, i.e. after Chou En-Lai's reply to the UNO Secretary-General, the same paper wrote:

'The Soviet proposal is genuinely aimed at eliminating tension and the war menace created by the United States in the Taiwan area whereas the New Zealand proposal is obviously for the purpose of intervening in China's internal affairs and violating the U.N. Charter.

'The Chinese people, in exercising their sovereign rights and liberating their territory, which is a domestic affair, never has created and never could create international tension. The tense situation in the Taiwan area results from the United States seizure of Taiwan and interference in China's domestic affairs.

'At the latest Security Council meeting, however, the proposal of the delegate of the Soviet Union to drive out the representative of the traitorous Chiang Kai-shek clique was again rejected. The Chinese people will not tolerate this. The United Nations Security Council must drive out the representative of the traitorous Chiang Kai-shek clique, which has been repudiated by the Chinese people, and have the reprsentative of the Government of the People's Republic of China speak on behalf of China in the discussions concerning the Soviet proposal. Only thus can the discussions of the Security Council be conducive to the easing of tension in the Taiwan area. This is the firm, just stand of the Chinese people.

It is fully in accord with the desires of all peace-loving people and those who sincerely wish the relaxation of Far Eastern tension.

'In line with their consistent stand to work for the relaxation of Far Eastern tension, the Chinese people will support all genuine international efforts to ease and eliminate the tension created by the United States in the Taiwan area and in other areas in the Far East.'

Walter Lippman in the New York Herald Tribune

On February 8, 1955 the New York Herald Tribune published an article by the well-known columnist Walter Lippman. This article gives the position of certain sections of American opinion and does perhaps constitute the index of the contradictions existing between different circles in America. We give here two short extracts from this article as follows:

'On the one hand, there is the decision not to support an attempt by Chiang to return to the mainland. This decision carries with it the unavoidable conclusion that Chiang's government in Formosa is not the government of China, and that it is not entitled to the Chinese seat in the United Nations.

'On the other hand, there is the desire to keep Formosa out of Red Chinese control, and the assumption that the only way to do this is by supporting the Chinese government in Formosa.

'Chou En-Lai's hopes are based on the belief that the Chinese in Formosa can be induced to come over to his side. We are not sure that they cannot be induced to do that. It is not a comfortable situation and that is why everyone who is serious about this business feels that he is standing on very uncertain ground.

'We have staked a lot on the reliability of Chiang's regime. Yet in deciding, as our own vital interests require, against supporting his return to the mainland, we have done what is most likely to sow fatal doubts within his regime. To offset these doubts, to preserve the morale of the Chinese of Formosa, we have felt compelled to become entangled in the Chinese civil war on the offshore islands. So we find ourselves unable to draw a clear line or to take an intelligible position that can command the support of world opinion.'

Comment in the British Press

A leading British weekly, the New Statesman and Nation, in its editorial of February 5, thus defines the responsibility for the situation which has been created in the Far East:

'The British people is convinced - and in our view rightly convinced - that the main responsibility for the Formosa crisis lies in Washington, not in Peking. If the Seventh Fleet becomes involved in hostilities, no one will be able to persuade the average Englishman that the U.S. has not brought this on itself by its blindness and folly in intervening in the Chinese civil war and seeking to reverse the Asian revolution. Maybe Mr.Eisenhower and Mr.Dulles now see the folly of the "liberation" policy which they trumpeted so loudly when they first took office. Maybe they regret their decision, two years ago, to reverse Mr.Truman's policy and actively assist Chiang Kai-shek in his subversive operations on the Chinese mainland. It is even possible that the whole of this aggressive American strategy was a piece of irresponsible bluff, undertaken not with any serious hope of restoring Chiang to power but merely in order to appease the China Lobby, and that the purpose of the present diplomatic and naval manoeuvres is to provide a smoke-screen under which Chiang's forces can be withdrawn to Formosa and confined there.

As for the British daily press, the Times makes this comment on Mr.Dulles' speech of February 16:

'Certainly Mr. Dulles did nothing to reduce the dangers over Formosa. What is most regrettable is that he should still oppose so strongly any Chinese Nationalist withdrawals from the offshore islands opposite Formosa. As though acknowledging the doubts among America's own allies, he says that the United States does not propose to defend these islands "as such". It is hard to read any practical meaning into the qualification. As such, or not as such, the islands remain islands, the guns remain guns, and the dangers remain dangers. Mr. Dulles is chiefly concerned with the defence of Formosa, and many are with him there. But, even on the score of defence, it is surely better to put a hundred miles of sea between the two sides than leave provocative and exposed outposts on China's doorstep.'

A Pravda Editorial

On February 14, on the occasion of the fifth anniversary of the Sino-Soviet Treaty of friendship, alliance and mutual assistance, Pravda published an Editorial from which we quote the following:

'Recently, the United States armed forces have increased their military provocations in the area of Taiwan and the other islands which they have criminally seized and which are an integral part of China. In this connection the position of the United Nations Organisation cannot but arouse amazement in that up till now it has not condemned American acts of aggression against China, nor requested the United States to withdraw its armed forces immediately from Taiwan and other Chinese islands which they have seized , nor demanded the restitution to the People's Republic of China of its legitimate rights.

'The endeavours to intimidate the Chinese people by cynical military demonstrations by the American armed forces in the area of the Taiwan Straits are doomed to complete failure. Is it possible to intimidate a people which has won its freedom after many years of bitter armed struggle, and inflicted serious defeats on the imperialists? There is nothing timid about the Chinese people; they are firm in their determination and they are fully aware of their strength. No one will ever succeed in wounding their national interests with impunity...

'The Soviet Union's position on Taiwan is clear and well-known. The Soviet Union considers that the question of Taiwan is an internal Chinese question and that the United States' acts of invasion and their threats of war are acts of aggression. The Soviet government has submitted to the Security Council for its examination the question of United States aggression against the People's Republic of China. Within the last few days it has proposed the holding of a conference of the countries particularly interested in the settlement of the situation created in the Taiwan area.

'The policy of the government of the People's Republic of China, which is defending its sovereignty and its national honour against the aggressor, arouses the sympathy of the Soviet people and of all progressive mankind.'

STATEMENT

BY PROFESSOR F. JOLIOT-CURIE

PRESIDENT OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

We still have present in our hearts the emotion we felt when the extent of the damage wreaked by the atom bombs on Hiroshima and Nagasaki became known. That was in August 1945, and every year since then we have learned that the effects of the dropping of these two bombs are still coming to light. The list of victims and their sufferings is not closed.

The problem of the banning of weapons of mass destruction had already been raised in 1945, and at their meeting in Moscow in December of that year the the Foreign Ministers Mr. Bevin, Mr. Byrnes and Mr. Molotov demanded that a special committee to study this problem should be created alongside the Security Council of the United Nations.

The committee was created. Negotiations that proved difficult were entered into and pursued. New factors arose one after another: the disappearance of the atomic monopoly, the perfecting and testing of thermonuclear bombs thousands of times more powerful than the Hiroshima bomb.

A further wave of anxiety arose out of the terrible consequences of the explosion in the Pacific on March 1, 1954. Fishermen who were some hundred miles away from the scene of the explosion were all stricken and one of them has died. The repeated warnings of scientists competent in the matter were dramatically confirmed. A new anxiety arose but hope began to revive through the apparition of certain signs of a relaxation of international tension, in relation both to the ending of wars going on and to the successful conclusion of the negotiations in the important Disarmament Commission of the United Nations.

It cannot be denied that, in the sum total of factors that succeeded in preventing the use of the atomic weapon in Asia and in bringing about a certain easing of international tension, a role of the first importance was played by the mass consultation that took place in all social circles through the launching of the Stockholm Appeal.

Everyone was asked for his opinion; all the questions were raised; all the answers given were thoroughly criticised. And the conscience of the peoples was so strongly revealed that the most responsible and powerful political leaders had to recognise the power of public opinion in the question of the use of atomic weapons.

Disarmament seemed possible; the negotiated settlement of political problems appeared over the horizon; the peoples began to hope for a stable peace and to see the promise of happiness . . . It is precisely at this moment that acts are committed which put everything back into the melting-pot; the rearmament of Germany, and the decisions of the N.A.T.O. Council on the use of nuclear weapons. As if the principle of the use of these weapons had been admitted.

Clearly, these acts, which are part and parcel of the policy of 'positions of strength', are diametrically opposed to the success of the negotiations going on in the United Nations Organisation and are a threat to peace.

As to the Atlantic Council's extremely grave decision, which implicitly admits the legalisation of the atomic weapon — if there has not yet been a strong reaction on the part of public opinion, it is because the operation has been skilfully conducted. Public opinion was 'softened up' by carefully prepared statements by military leaders and the decisions themselves were presented in a diplomatic and technical form which makes it difficult to appreciate their full consequences.

Today, when a great number of atomic weapons have been produced and when even more powerful weapons have been perfected and tested — with what tragic results — an attempt is being made to override the censure of public opinion and to lead it, by stages, to accept the possible use of tactical atomic weapons, then strategic atom bombs, and finally thermonuclear bombs. It would appear that henceforth discussion should only bear on how nuclear weapons should be used, whereas the first and only problem is the very principle of the use of these weapons.

In short, these recent decisions of the Atlantic Council are the final touch to the preparations for the unleashing of atomic war, preparations which bear within themselves — and I am weighing my words — the possible annihilation of the human race.

The people will not thus passively allow themselves to be dragged down to cllective suicide. For that is what is involved. Once nuclear war began, it would be waged with the full range of existing weapons. Think of the deserts that are Hiroshima and Nagasaki. Think of the unfortunate victims in the Pacific who were some hundred miles away from the explosion on March 1, 1954. Tell yourself that nowhere will you be safe and that effective civil defence is an illusion. Understand that the nuclear bombing of any target in the world will sow immediate or delayed death even in places very far away.

The problem that is raised is not that of the level — General Staff, Minister, or meeting of Ministers, with or without veto — at which atomic war will be decided on. The problem is: will mankind accept the ruins and destruction, the death of hundreds of millions of living beings, wretchedness for the survivors and the probable birth of freaks, and even the possible annihilation of all life on our planet?

SESSION OF THE BUREAU OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

and APPEALS

Vienna, January 17—19, 1955

DECLARATION OF THE BUREAU OF THE WORLD COUNCIL OF PEACE

At the outset of 1955, two threats to the peace of the world have become definite: the remilitarisation of Germany and the steps taken to prepare and justify atomic war. These threats come just at the moment when new prospects of peace are opening before the peoples. It is now a matter of the acts of responsible governments, and no longer only the declarations of politicians and generals.

These acts deliberately flout the desires of the peoples concerned and world opinion.

The remilitarisation of Germany, and the obstacles placed by S.E.A.T.O. in the way of a peaceful solution of the problems of Asia, underline the exceptional gravity of the measures adopted by the Council of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

These measures are designed to regularise atomic war, which has been condemned by the conscience of mankind and is contrary to international law, and persuade public opinion to accept it as a necessity. They can lead to the automatic unleashing of atomic war in Asia as well as in Europe. From now on, they threaten with this peril every country on every continent.

The remilitarisation of Germany and the regularisation of atomic war are closely linked. They are the fruits of a single policy founded on the division of the world into two blocs, the drive for positions of strength and recourse to war in prosecuting international differences.

The peoples know from experience that this policy can lead only to economic chaos, poverty and war. The World Peace Movement calls upon them to appreciate the magnitude of the new dangers and to avert them by all means in their power.

The concerted action of the peoples can end the policy of blocs. It can oblige the governments to negotiate, to disarm and to use nuclear energy solely for peaceful purposes.

Mankind will not passively allow itself to be led toward the disasters of atomic war.

The problem is not to calculate at what staff or government level atomic war may be decided on, nor to draw distinctions between so-called tactical and strategic weapons. The task is to reject the destruction, oppression and suffering that it entails, to ensure to all the peoples of the world their independence and the right to develop their own wealth, and take together the path towards security and prosperity.

It is to fulfil this task that the appeal to maintain the struggle against the remilitarisation of Germany and the appeal to organise a great signature campaign to stop the use of atomic weapons have been issued.

It is to this same end that the call has been issued for a great World Assembly that, on May 22nd, 1955 in Helsinki, shall bring together representatives of all tendencies and organisations for peace.

Vienna, January 19, 1955

APPEAL TO THE PEOPLES OF EUROPE

The peoples of Europe refuse to accept the Wehrmacht.

They oppose the revival — a bare ten years after the end of the war — of the army which brought death and destruction down upon all Europe.

They are revolted by the idea that atomic weapons should be put at the disposal of Hitler's former generals.

The peoples will never accept this crime.

The ratification of the Wehrmacht treaties is far from being achieved.

In London and Paris, when the parliaments voted on the ratification, not even one half the members supported them. The governments, like the parliaments, have been obliged openly to acknowledge the hostility of the peoples concerned. But they are resolved to override the opposition of the peoples of Europe, and in particular the growing opposition of the German people themselves.

The peoples cannot be bound by decisions adopted by parliaments against their will.

Today, the governments that signed the London and Paris agreements can no longer cover up the tragic consequences of the creation of a new Wehrmacht: the remilitarisation of Western Germany would result in the setting up of armed forces in Eastern Germany. It would speed up the arms race. It would make the peaceful reunification of Germany impossible for years to come and would prevent any possibility of the collective organisation of European security.

The World Council of Peace calls on the men and women of every country to put all their strength, all their determination and all their courage into preventing the ratification and implementation of the London and Paris agreements.

It calls on all the men and women who have been waging such a magnificent struggle against the rearmament of Germany, and on all those also who are today becoming aware of the imminent danger which it involves, to join and multiply their efforts to oppose the revival of German militarism and to organise the security of Europe with participation of a peace-loving Germany.

Europe, supported by all the peoples of the world, will not let a new Wehrmacht be thrust upon her.

Vienna, January 19, 1955

APPEAL AGAINST THE PREPARATIONS FOR ATOMIC WAR

Today, certain governments are preparing to let loose atomic war.

They are trynig to make the peoples accept it as inevitable.

The use of atomic weapons would result in a war of extermination.

We declare that any government that lets loose atomic war will forfeit the trust of its people and find itself condemned by every people of the world.

Now and in the future, we shall oppose those who organise atomic war.

We demand the destruction of all stocks of atomic weapons wherever they may be and the immediate stopping of their manufacture.

he fell seriously sick and his state required his being moved to a hospital, but the direction of the prison refused to do it.

Here are four examples, which prove that the terror has increased. Among the imprisoned of Western Germany, there are young christians, trade unionists, sportsmen, members of the FDJ, communists, non organized people, workers, employees, that is to say, from all sections of the youth.

We are convinced, that the broadest sections of youth and the most different personalities will participate and lend their support to this work, for the release of young Germans.

This menace is in the first place directed against the Soviet Union, against whom Franco sent a "Blue Division" to his friend Hitler, but it is also directed against neighbouring peoples, such as France and Italy who are hostile to the European Defence Community. In this respect, the arrogant words of the officials of Madrid correspond exactly to the arrogant speaches of the Bonn revanchists.

The Franco regime has attempted to raise an impassable wall between Spanish youth and their brothers, but police and fascist measures cannot drown the voice of Spanish youth. There have been a thousand proofs that this new generation, like their predecessors is animated by a patriotic spirit, a love of freedom, and a determination to change their lives of misery.

The recent demonstration of Madrid students, instigated by the Francoists against the occupation of Gibraltar by the British, was transformed into a patriotic demonstration against the transformation of the whole of Spain into a Gibraltar, into an American strategic base. Defying the forces of repression, the Madrid students demanded the independence of their fatherland.

During the great number of actions which took place throughout the whole country, young people alongside their elders, demanded better living conditions, reductions in the overwhelming amounts expended on war, and police, and for an end to this regime in which enormous fortunes are amassed on the atrocious misery of the majority of the population.

Like wild animals at bay, enraged by the peoples opposition, the Franco dictatorship has intensified its terror. 32 patriots in the Ocana prison, await trial and the death sentence is demanded for several of them; executions have taken place and Lopez Raimundo who was only saved from death by a powerful campaign, remains in prison, threatened by the hangmen.

The solidarity of young people of the world is more necessary and urgent than ever before! On this 14th of April the courageous Anti-Franco youth of Spain must feel the full support of the whole world!

It is under the slogan of the broadest unity that this Day is prepared for by all the honest young people who act together against this menace to peace, this offence to democracy.

On the 4th of April a Conference will take place in Great Britain on the initiative of the Youth Committee of Aif to Spain, which has the support of many organisations and personalities, some of whom are labour councillors, and M.P.s. In France, a great wave of protest is rising against the repression of Spanish Republicans, and against the persecution of young Castagnier because he was a delegate to the Bucharest Festival.

Convinced of the necessity for co-operation of all who are against Franco, the Secretariat of the WFDY has decided to suggest to the International Union of Socialist Youth that they should join in making the 14th of April a more powerful demonstration than ever before. This example will be followed on a national and local scale, and will stimulate the unity of all young Anti-Francoists.

The unity of Spanish youth and young people of the whole world will triumph in this as in all the fields of our struggle for life and happiness!
